TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE SIR FRANCIS WALSINGHAM

Knight, Principall Secretarie to her Maieſtie, Chancellor of the Duchie of Lancaſter, and one of her Maieſties moſt honourable Priuie Councell.

IGHT Honorable, I do remember that being a youth, and one of her Maieſties ſcholars at Weſtminſter that fruitfull nurſerie, it was my happe to viſit the chamber of M. Richard Hakluyt my coſin, a Gentleman of the Middle Temple, well knowen vnto you, at a time when I found lying open vpon his boord certeine bookes of Coſmographie, with an vniuerſall Mappe: he ſeeing me ſomewhat curious in the view therof, began to inſtruct my ignorance, by ſhewing me the diuiſion of the earth into three parts after the olde account, and then according to the latter, & better diſtribution, into more: he pointed with his wand to all the knowen Seas, Gulfs, Bayes, Straights, Capes, Riuers, Empires, Kingdomes, Dukedomes, and Territories of ech part, with declaration alſo of their ſpeciall commodities, & particular wants, which by the benefit of traffike, & entercourſe of merchants, are plentifully ſupplied. From the Mappe he brought me to the Bible, and turning to the 107 Pſalme, directed mee to the 23 & 24 verſes, where I read, that they which go downe to the ſea in ſhips, and occupy by the great waters, they ſee the works of the Lord, and his woonders in the deepe, &c. Which words of the Prophet together with my couſins diſcourſe (things of high and rare delight to my yong nature) tooke in me ſo deepe an impreſſion, that I conſtantly reſolued, if euer I were preferred to the Vniuerſity, where better time, and more conuenient place might be miniſtred for theſe ſtudies, I would by Gods aſſiſtance proſecute that knowledge and kinde of literature, the doores whereof (after a ſort) were ſo happily opened before me.

According to which my reſolution, when, not long after, I was remoued to Chriſt-church in Oxford, my exerciſes of duety firſt performed, I fell to my intended courſe, and by degrees read ouer whatſoeuer printed or written diſcoueries and voyages I found extant either in the Greeke, Latine, Italian, Spaniſh, Portugall, French, or Engliſh languages, and in my publike lectures was the firſt, that produced and ſhewed both the olde imperfectly compoſed, and the new lately reformed Mappes, Globes, Spheares, and other inſtruments of this Art for demonſtration in the common ſchooles, to the ſingular pleaſure, and generall contentment of my auditory. In continuance of time, and by reaſon principally of my inſight in this ſtudy, I grew familiarly acquainted with the chiefeſt Captaines at ſea, the greateſt Merchants, and the beſt Mariners of our nation: by which meanes hauing gotten ſomewhat more then common knowledge, I paſſed at length the narrow ſeas into France with ſir Edward Staffford, her Maieſties carefull and diſcreet Ligier, where during my fiue yeeres aboad with him in his dangerous and charg eable reſidencie in her Highnes ſeruice, I both heard in ſpeech, and read in books other nations miraculouſly extolled for their diſcoueries and notable enterpriſes by ſea, but the Engliſh of all others for their ſluggiſh ſecurity, and continuall neglect of the like attempts e-ſpecially in ſo long and happy a time of peace, either ignominiouſly reported, or exceedingly condemned: which ſingular opportunity, if ſome other people our neighbors had beene bleſſed with, their proteſtations are often and vehement, they would farre otherwiſe haue vſed. And that the trueth and euidence heerof may better appeare, theſe are the very words of Popiliniere in his booke called L'Admiral de France, and printed at Paris. Fol. 73. pag. 1,2. The occaſion of his ſpeech is the commendation of the Rhodians, who being (as we are) Iſlanders, were excellent in nauigation, whereupon he woondereth much that the Engliſh ſhould not ſurpaſſe in that qualitie, in this ſort: Ce qui m'a fait autreſſois rechercher les occaſions, qui empeſchent, que les Anglois, qui ont d'eſprit, de moyens, & valeur aſſez, pour s'aquerir vn grand hõneur parmi tous les Chreſtiens, ne ſe font plus valoir ſur l'element qui leur eſt, & doit eſtre plus naturel qu'à autres peuples: qui leur doiuent ceder en la ſtructure, accommodement & police de nauires: comme i'ay veu en pluſieurs endroits parmi eux. Thus both hearing, and reading the obloquie of our nation, and finding few or none of our owne men able to replie heerin: and further, not ſeeing any man to haue care to recõmend to the world, the induſtrious labors, and painefull trauels of our countrey men: for ſtopping the mouthes of the reprochers, my ſelfe being the laſt winter returned from France with the honorable the Lady Sheffield, for her paſſing good behauior highly eſteemed in all the French court, determined notwithſtanding all difficulties, to vndertake the burden of that worke wherin all others pretended either ignorance, or lacke of leaſure, or want of ſufficient argument, whereas (to ſpeake truely) the huge toile, and the ſmall profit to inſue, were the chiefe cauſes of the refuſall. I call the worke a burden, in conſideration that theſe voyages lay ſo diſperſed, ſcattered, and hidden in ſeuerall huckſters hands, that I now woonder at my ſelfe, to ſee how I was able to endure the delayes, curioſity, and backwardneſſe of many from whom I was to receiue my originals: ſo that I haue iuſt cauſe to make that complaint of the maliciouſnes of diuers in our time, which Plinie made of the men of his age: At nos elaborata ijs abſcondere atq; ſupprimere cupimus, & fraudare vitam etiam alienis bonis, &c.

Plinius. lib. 25. cap. 1. Naturalis hiſtoriæ.

To harpe no longer vpon this ſtring, & to ſpeake a word of that iuſt commendation which our nation doe indeed deſerue: it can not be denied, but as in all former ages, they haue bene men full of actiuity, ſtirrers abroad, and ſearchers of the remote parts of the world, ſo in this moſt famous and peerleſſe gouernement of her moſt excellent Maieſty, her ſubiects through the ſpeciall aſſiſtance, and bleſſing of God, in ſearching the moſt oppoſite corners and quarters of the world, and to ſpeake plainly, in compaſſing the vaſte globe of the earth more then once, haue excelled all the nations and people of the earth. For, which of the kings of this land before her Maieſty, had theyr banners euer ſeene in the Caſpian ſea? which of them hath euer dealt with the Emperor of Perſia, as her Maieſty hath done, and obteined for her merchants large & louing priuileges? who euer ſaw before this regiment, an Engliſh Ligier in the ſtately porch of the Grand Signor at Conſtantinople? who euer found Engliſh Conſuls & Agents at Tripolis in Syria, at Aleppo, at Babylon, at Balſara, and which is more, who euer heard of Engliſhman at Goa before now? what Engliſh ſhippes did heeretofore euer anker in the mighty riuer of Plate? paſſe and repaſſe the vnpaſſable (in former opinion) ſtraight of Magellan, range along the coaſt of Chili, Peru, and all the backſide of Noua Hiſpania, further then any Chriſtian euer paſſed, trauers the mighty bredth of the South ſea, land vpon the Luzones in deſpight of the enemy, enter into alliance, amity, and traffike with the princes of the Moluccaes, & the Iſle of Iaua, double the famous Cape of Bona Speranza, ariue at the Iſle of Santa Helena, & laſt of al returne home moſt richly ladẽ with the cõmodities modities of China, as the subiects of this now florishing monarchy haue done?

Lucius Florus in the very end of his historie de gestis Romanorum recordeth as a wonderfull miracle, that the Seres, (which I take to be the people of Cathay, or China) sent Ambassadors to Rome, to intreate kindship, as moued with the fame of the maiesty of the Romane Empire. And haue not we as good cause to admire, that the Kings of the Moluccaes, and Iaua maior, haue desired the fauour of her maiestie, and the commerce & traffike of her people? Is it not as strage that the borne naturalles of Japan, and the Philippinaes are here to be seene, agreeing with our climate, speaking our language, and informing vs of the state of their Easterne habitations? For mine owne part, I take it as a pledge of Gods further fauour both vnto vs and them: to them especially, vnto whose doores I doubt not in time shalbe by vs caried the incomparable treasure of the trueth of Christianity, and of the Gospell, vvhile vve vse and exercise common trade with their marchants. I must confesse to haue read in the excellent history intituled Origines of Ioannes Goropius, a testimonie of king Henrie the viij. a prince of noble memory, vvhose intention vvas once, if death had not preuented him, to haue done some singular thing in this case: vvhose vvords speaking of his dealing to that end with himselfe, he being a stranger, & his history rare, I thought good in this place verbatim to record: Ante viginti & plus eo annos ab Henrico Kneuetto Equite Anglo nomine Regis Henrici arram accepi, qua conuenerat, Regio sumptu me totam Asiam, quoad Turcorum & Persarum Regum commendationes, & legationes admitterentur, peragraturum. Ab his enim duobus Asiæ principibus facile se impetraturum sperabat, vt non solum tutò mihi per ipsorum fines liceret ire, sed vt commendatione etiam ipsorum ad confinia quoque daretur penetrare. Sumptus quidem non exiguus erat futurus, sed tanta erat principi cognoscendi auiditas, vt nullis pecunijs ad hoc iter necessarijs se diceret parsurum. O Dignum Regia Maiestate animum, O me fœlicem, si Deus non ante & Kneuettum & Regem abstulisset, quam reuersus ab hac peregrinatione fuissem, &c. But as the purpose of Dauid the king to builde a house and temple to God was accepted, although Salomon performed it: so I make no question, but that the zeale in this matter of the aforesaid most renowmed prince may seeme no lesse worthy (in his kinde) of acceptation, although reserued for the person of our Salomon her gratious Maiesty, whome I feare not to pronounce to haue receiued the same Heroicall spirit, and most honorable disposition, as an inheritance from her famous father.

Ioa. Goropij Becani origines lib. 5. pag. 494.

Now wheras I haue alwayes noted your wisdome to haue had a speciall care of the honor of her Maiesty, the good reputation of our country, & the aduancing of nauigation, the very walles of this our Island, as the oracle is reported to haue spoken of the sea forces of Athens: and whereas I acknowledge in all dutifull sort how honorably both by your letter and speech I haue bene animated in this and other my trauels, I see my selfe bound to make presentment of this worke to your selfe, as the fruits of your owne incouragements, & the manifestation both of my vnfained seruice to my prince and country, and of my particular duty to your honour: which I haue done with the lesse suspition either of not satisfying the world, or of not answering your owne expectation, in that according to your order, it hath passed the sight, and partly also the censure of the learned phisitian M. Doctor Iames, a man many wayes very notably qualified.

Plutarch in the life of Themistocles.

And thus beseeching God, the giuer of all true honor & wisdome to increase both these blessings in you, with continuance of health, strength, happinesse, and whatsoeuer good thing els your selfe can wish, I humbly take my leaue. London the 17 of Nouember.

Your honors most humble alwayes to be commanded RICHARD HAKLVYT.

Richard Hakluyt to the fauourable Reader.

I Haue thought it very requisite for thy further instruction and direction in this historie (Good Reader) to acquaint thee briefly with the Methode and order which I haue vsed in the whole course thereof: and by the way also to let thee vnderstand by whose friendly aide in this my trauell I haue bene furthered: acknowledging that ancient speach to be no lesse true then ingenuous, that the offence is great, Non agnoscere per quos profeceris, not to speake of them by whom a man in his indeuours is assisted.

Concerning my proceeding therefore in this present worke, it hath bene this. Whatsoeuer testimonie I haue found in any authour of authoritie appertaining to my argument, either stranger or naturall, I haue recorded the same word for word, with his particular name and page of booke where it is extant. If the same were not reduced into our common language, I haue first expressed it in the same termes wherein it is originally written, whether it were a Latine, Italian, Spanish or Portingall discourse, or whatsoeuer els, and thereunto in the next roome haue annexed the signification and translation of the wordes in English. And to the ende that those men which were the paynefull and personall trauellers might reape that good opinion and iust commendation which they haue deserued, and further, that euery man might answere for himselfe, iustifie his reports, and stand accountable for his owne doings, I haue referred euery voyage to his Author, which both in person hath performed, and in writing hath left the same: for I am not ignorant of Ptolomies assertion, that Peregrinationis historia, and not those wearie volumes bearing the titles of vniuersall Cosmographie which some me that I could name haue published as their owne, beyng in deed most vntruly and vnprofitablie ramassed and hurled together, is that which must bring vs to the certayne and full discouerie of the world.

Moreouer, I meddle in this worke with the Nauigations onely of our owne nation: And albeit I alleage in a few places (as the matter and occasion required) some strangers as witnesses of the things done, yet are they none but such as either faythfully remember, or sufficiently confirme the trauels of our owne people: of whom (to speake trueth) I haue receiued more light in some respects, then all our owne Historians could afoord me in this case, Bale, Foxe, and Eden onely excepted.

And it is a thing withall principally to be considered, that I stand not vpon any action performed neere home, nor in any part of Europe commonly frequented by our shipping, as for example: Not vpon that victorious exploit not long since atchieued in our narow Seas against that monstrous Spanish army vnder the valiant and prouident conduct of the right honourable the lord Charles Howard high Admirall of England: Not vpon the good seruices of our two woorthie Generals in their late Portugall expedition: Not vpon the two most fortunate attempts of our famous Chieftaine Sir Frauncis Drake, the one in the Baie of Cales vpon a great part of the enimies chiefest shippes, the other neere the Islands vpon the great Carrack of the East India, the first (though peraduenture not the last) of that imployment, that euer discharged Molucca spices in English portes: these (albeit singular and happy voyages of our renowmed countrymen) I omit, as things distinct and without the compasse of my prescribed limites, beyng neither of remote length and spaciousnesse, neither of search and discouerie of strange coasts, the chiefe subiect of this my labour.

Thus much in breuitie shall serue thee for the generall order. Particularlie I haue disposed and digested the whole worke into 3. partes, or as it were Classes, not without my reasons. In the first I haue martialled all our voyages of any moment that haue bene performed to the South and Southeast parts of the world, by which I chiefly meane that part of Asia which is neerest, and of the rest hithermost towards vs: For I find that the oldest trauels as well of the ancient Britains, as of the English, were ordinarie to Iudea which is in Asia, termed by them the Holy land, principally for deuotions sake according to the time, although I read in Ioseph Bengorion a very authenticall Hebrew author, a testimonie of the passing of 20000. Britains valiant souldiours, to the siege and fearefull sacking of Ierusalem vnder the conduct of Vespasian and Titus the Romane Emperour, a thing in deed of all the rest most ancient. But of latter dayes I see our men haue pierced further into the East, haue passed downe the mightie riuer Euphrates, haue sayled from Balsara through the Persian gulfe to the Citie of Ormuz, and from thence to Chaul and Goa in the East India, which passages written by the parties themselues are herein to be read. To these I haue added the Nauigations of the English made for the parts of Africa, and either within or without the streights of Gibraltar: within, to Constantinople in Romania, to Alexandria, and Cayro in Egypt, to Tunez, to Goletta, to Malta, to Algier, and to Tripolis in Barbary: without, to Santa Cruz, to Asafi, to the citie of Marocco, to the Riuer of Senega, to the Isles of

Cape

Cape Verde, to Guinea, to Benyn, and round about the dreadfull Cape of Bona Speranza, as farre as Goa.

The north, and Northeasterne voyages of our nation I haue produced in the second place, because our accesse to those quarters of the world is later and not so auncient as the former: and yet some of our trauailes that way be of more antiquitie by many hundred yeeres, then those that haue bene made to the westerne coastes of America. Vnder this title thou shalt first finde the old northerne Nauigations of our Brittish Kings, as of Arthur, of Malgo, of Edgar Pacificus the Saxon Monarch, with that also of Nicholaus de Linna vnder the north pole: next to them in consequence, the discoueries of the bay of Saint Nicholas, of Colgoiene, of Pechora, of the Isles of Vaigats, of Noua Zembla, and of the Sea eastwards towardes the riuer of Ob: after this, the opening by sea of the great Dukedome, and Empire of Russia, with the notable and strange iourney of Master Ienkinson to Beghar in Bactria. Whereunto thou maist adde sixe of our voyages eleuen hundred verstes vp against the streame of Dwina to the towne of Vologda: thence one hundred, and foure score verstes by land to Teraslaue standing vpon the mighty riuer of Volga: there hence aboue two thousand and fiue hundred verstes downe the streame to the ancient marte Towne of Astracan, and so to the manifolde mouthes of Volga, and from thence also by ship ouer the Caspian sea into Media, and further then that also with Camels vnto Georgia, Armenia, Hyrcania, Gillan, and the cheefest Cities of the Empire of Persia: wherein the Companie of Moscouie Marchants to the perpetuall honor of their Citie, and societie, haue performed more then any one, yea then all the nations of Europe besides: which thing is also acknowledged by the most learned Cosmographers, and Historiographers of Christendome, with whose honorable testimonies of the action, not many for number, but sufficient for authoritie I haue concluded this second part.

Touching the westerne Nauigations, and trauailes of ours, they succeede naturallie in the third and last roome, forasmuch as in order and course those coastes, and quarters came last of all to our knowledge and experience. Herein thou shalt reade the attempt by Sea of the sonne of one of the Princes of Northwales, in sayling and searching towards the west more then 400. yeeres since: the offer made by Christopher Columbus that renowned Genouoys to the most sage Prince of noble memorie King Henrie the 7. with his prompt and cheerefull acceptation thereof, and the occasion whereupon it became fruitlesse, and at that time of no great effect to this kingdome: then followe the letters Patentes of the foresaid noble Prince giuen to Iohn Cabot a Venetian and his 3. sonnes, to discouer & conquer in his name, and vnder his Banners vnknowen Regions: who with that royall incouragement & contribution of the king himselfe, and some assistance in charges of English Marchants departed ‖ with 5. sailes from the Port of Bristoll accompained with 300. Englishmen, and first of any Christians found out that mightie and large tract of lande and Sea, from the circle Arcticke as farre as Florida, as appeareth in the discourse thereof. The triumphant raigne of King Henry the 8. yelded some prosecution of this discouerie: for the 3. voyages performed, and the 4. intended for all Asia by his Maiesties selfe, do approoue and confirme the same. Then in processe of yeeres ariseth the first English trade to Brasill, the first passing of some of our nation in the ordinarie Spanish fleetes to the west Indies, and the huge Citie of Mexico in Noua Hispania. Then immediatlye ensue 3. voyages made by M. Iohn Hawkins now Knight, then Esquire, to Hispaniola, and the gulfe of Mexico: vpon which depende sixe verie excellent discourses of our men, whereof some for 1 yeer 16. whole yeeres inhabited in New Spaine, and ranged the whole Countrie, wherein are disclosed the cheefest secretes of the west India, which may in time turne to our no smal aduantage. The next leaues thou turnest, do yeelde thee the first valiant enterprise of Sir Francis Drake vpon Nombre de Dios, the mules laden with treasure which he surprised, and the house called the Cruzes, which his fire consumed: and therewith is ioyned an action more venterous then happie of Iohn Oxnam of Plimmouth written, and confessed by a Spanyard, which with his companie passed ouer the streight Isthme of Darien, and building certaine pinnesses on the west shoare, was the first Englishman that entered the South sea. To passe ouer Master Frobisher and his actions, which I haue also newly though briefely printed, and as it were reuiued, whatsoeuer Master Iohn Danis hath performed in continuing that discouery, which Master Frobisher began for the nothwest passage, I haue faithfully at large communicated it with thee, that so the great good hope, & singular probabilities & almost certaintie therof, which by his industry haue risen, may be knowen generally of all men, that some may yet still prosecute so noble an action. Sir Humfrey Gilbert, that courageous Knight, and very expert in the mysteries of Nauigation amongst the rest is not forgotten: his learned reasons & arguments for the proofe of the passage before named, together with his last more commendable resolution then fortunate successe, are here both to be read. The continuance of the historie, produceth the beginnings, and proceedings of the two English Colonies planted in Virginia at the charges of sir Walter Raleigh, whose entrance vpon those newe inhabitations had bene happie, if it had ben as seriously followed, as it was cheerefully vndertaken. I could not omit in this parte the two voyages made not long since to the Southwest, whereof I thinke the Spanyard hath had some knowledge, and felt some blowes: the one of Master Edward Fenton, and his consort Master Luke Warde: the other of Master Robert Withrington, and his hardie consort Master Christopher Lister as farre as 44. degrees of southerly latitude, set out at the direction and charge of the right honorable the Earle of Cumberland, both which in diuers respectes may yelde both profite and pleasure to the reader, being carefully perused.

For the conclusion of all, the memorable voyage of Master Thomas Candish into the South sea, and from thence about the globe of the earth doth satisfie mee, and I doubt not but will fully content thee: which as in time it is later then that of Sir Frauncis Drake, so in relation of the Philippinaes, Iapan, China, and the Isle of S. Helena it is more particular, and exact: and therfore the want of the first made by Sir Frauncis Drake will be the lesse: wherein I must confesse to haue taken more then ordinarie paines, meaning to haue inserted it in this worke: but being of late (contrary to my expectation) seriously delt withall, not to anticipate or preuent another mans paines and charge in drawing all the seruices of that worthie Knight into one volume, I haue yeelded vnto those my freindes which pressed me in the matter, referring the further knowledge of his proceedinges, to those intended discourses.

Now for the other part of my promise, I must craue thy further patience frendly reader, and some longer sustence from the worke it selfe, in acquainting thee with those vertuous gentlemen, and others which partly for their priuate affection to my selfe, but chiefely for their deuotion to the furtherance of this my trauaile, haue yelded me their seuerall good assistances: for I accompt him vnworthy of future fauours, that is not thankefull for former benefites. In respect of a generall incouragement in this laborious trauaile, it were grosse ingratitude in mee to forget, and wilfull malicious nes not to confesse that man, whose onely name doth carrie with it sufficient estimation and loue, and that is Master Edward Dier, of whom I will speake thus much in few wordes, that both my selfe and my intentions herein by his frendly meanes haue bene made knowne to those, who in sundrie particulars haue much steeded me. More specially in my first part, Master Richard Staper Marchant of London, hath furnished me with diuers thinges touching the trade of Turkie, and other places in the East. Master William Burrough, Clarke of her Maiesties nauie, and Master Anthonie Ienkinson, both gentlemen of great experience, and obseruations in the north Regions, haue much pleasured me in the second part. In the third and last besides myne owne extreeme trauaile in the histories of the Spanyards, my cheefest light hath bene receiued from Sir Iohn Hawkins, Sir Walter Raleigh, and my kinseman Master Richard Hakluyt of the middle Temple.

And whereas in the course of this history often mention is made of many beastes, birds, fishes, serpents, plants, fruits, hearkes, rootes, apparell, armour, boates, and such other rare and strange curiosities, which wise men take great pleasure to reade of, but much more contentment to see: herein I my selfe to my singuler delight haue bene as it were rauished in beholding all the premisses gathered together with no small cost, and preserued with no litle diligence, in the excellent Cabinets of my very worshipfull and learned friends M. Richard Garthe, one of the Clearkes of the pettie Bags, and M. William Cope Gentleman Vssier to the right Honourable and most prudent Counseller (the Seneca of our common wealth,) the Lord Burleigh, high Treasourer of England.

Nowe, because peraduenture it would bee expected as necessarie, that the descriptions of so many parts of the world would farre more easily be conceiued of the Readers, by adding Geographicall, and Hydrographicall tables thereunto, thou art by the way to be admonished that I haue contented my selfe with inserting into the worke one of the best generall mappes of the world onely, vntill the comming out of a very large and most exact terrestriall Globe, collected and reformed according to the newest, secretest, and latest discoueries, both Spanish, Portugall, and English, composed by M. Emmerie Mollineux of Lambeth, a rare Gentleman in his profession, being therein for diuers yeeres, greatly supported by the purse and liberalitie of the worshipfull marchant M. William Sanderson.

The excellent newe Globe of M. Mullineux.

This being the summe of those things which I thought good to admonish thee of (good Reader) it remaineth that thou take the profite and pleasure of the worke: which I wish to bee as great to thee, as my paines and labour haue bene in bringing these rawe fruits vnto this ripenesse, and in reducing these loose papers into this order. Farewell.

DI MARC' ANTONIO PIGAFETA GENTIL'HVOMO VICENTINO.

IGnota mi starei, con poco honore
Sepolta nell' oscure, antiche carte,
S'alcun de figli miei con ſtesa et arte
Non hauesse hor scoperto il mio splendore.
Ramusio pria pieno d'ardente amore
Manifesto le mie piu riche parte,
Che son là doue il Maragnon diparte,
E doue il Negro allaga, e'l Gange scorre.
Hakluyto poi senza verun riſguardo
Di fatica o di danno accalt' hà insieme,
Ciò c' hà potuto hauer da Typhi Ingleſi.
Onde vedraſſi e doue bella ſguardo,
V la Duuina agghiaccia, e l'Obi freme,
Et altri membri miei non ben paleſi.

In eximium opus R. Hakluyti de Anglorum ad diſiunctiſſimas regiones nauigationibus Guilielmi Camdeni Hexaſtichon.

THE FIRST PART OF THE principall voyages, trauailes and diſcoueries of the Engliſh nation, made to the South and Southeaſt quarters of the world, with the letters, priuiledges, diſcourſes and treatiſes appertaining thereunto.

THE trauaile of Helena.

HELENA Flauia Auguſta, ſereniſsimi Coeli Britannici Regis Hæres, & vnica filia, Magni Cõſtantini Cæſaris mater, incomparabili decõre, fide, religione, bonitate, ac magnificentiâ piâ, Euſebio etiam teſte, per totum reſplenduit orbem: Inter omnes ætatis ſuæ fœminas, nulla inueniebatur eâ in liberalibus artib[illegible] doctior, nulla in inſtrumentis muſicis peritior, aut in linguis nationum copioſior. Innatam habebat ingenij claritudinem, oris facundiam, ac morum ornatiſſimam compoſitionem: Hebraicè, Græcè, & Latinè erudita. Carnerat pater alia ſobole (inquit Virumnius) quę Regni ſolio potiretur. Illam propterea his inſtrui fecit per optimos præceptores, vt cò commodius Regni tractaret negotia. Vnde ob incredibilem eius pulchritudinem, atque alias eximias animi & corporis dotes, Conſtantius Clorus Cæſar illam duxit in vxorem, atque ex eâ filium in Britanniâ genuit Conſtantinum Magnum. Sed eo tandem Eboraci defuncto, cum Annâ illâ Euangelicâ, in ſanctâ viduitate perdurauit ad vltimum vitę diem, tota Chriſtianę Religioni dedita. Sunt enim Authores, qui narrent per iſtam, ceſſante perſecutione, pacem Eccleſijs datam: Ad tantam cœleſtis Philoſophiæ cognitionem eam ferunt poſt agnitum Euangelium peruenisſe, vt olim multos ediderit libros, & carmina quædam Græca, quæ hucuſque à Pontico ſupereſſe perhibentur. Viſionibus admonita Hieroſolymam petijt, & omnia ſaluatoris loca perluſtrauit. Romæ tandem octogenaria fœliciter in Chriſto quieuit. 15. Calendas Septembris, filio adhuc ſuperſtite, Anno ſalutis humanæ 337. Regnante apud Britannos Octauio. Huius corpus non minimâ nunc curâ venetijs ſeruatur.

¶ The ſame in Engliſh.

HElena Flauia Auguſta, the heire and onely daughter of Coelus ſometime the moſt excellent king of Britaine, the mother of the Emperour Conſtantine the great, by reaſon of her ſingular beautie, faith, religion, gyftes & godly Paietie (according to the teſtimonie of Euſebius) was famous in all the world. Amongſt all the women of her time, there was none either in the liberal Arts more learned, or in inſtruments of muſicke more ſkilfull, or in the diuers languages of nations more abundant then herſelfe. She had a naturall quickues or excellencie of wit, eloquence of ſpeach, and a moſt notable grace in all her behauiour. She was ſeene in the Hebrue, Greeke and Latine tongues.

Her father (as Virumnius reporteth) had no other childe to ſucceede in the kingdome after him but her, and therefore cauſed her to be inſtructed in theſe things by the beſt teachers, that thereby ſhee might the better in time gouerne the Realme: ſo that by reaſon of her paſſing beautie, and other her excellent gifts of body and minde, Conſtantius Chlorus the Emperour married her, and had by her a sonne called Constantine the great, while hee remained in Britaine. Who at length deceasing at Yorke, this Helena (no otherwise then Anna of whome mention is made in the newe Testament) continued a vertuous, and holy widow to the ende of her life.

There are some writers which doe affirme, that persecution ceased, and peace was graunted to the Christian Churches by her good meanes.

After the light and knowledge of the Gospel, she grewe so skilfull in diuinitie, that shee wrote and composed diuers bookes, and certaine Greeke verses also, which (as Ponticus reporteth) are yet extant. Being warned by some visions shee went to Ierusalem, and visited all the places there, which Christ had frequented. She liued to the age of fourescore yeeres, and then died at Rome the 15. day of August, in the yeere of our redemption 337. Octauius being then King of Britaine, and her sonne Constantine the Emperour then also liuing, and her body is to this day very carefully preserued at Venice.

The life and trauels of Constantine the great, Emperour and King of Britaine.

FLauius Constantinus cognomento Magnus post Genitorem Cõstantium Britannorum Rex, ac Romanorum Cæsar Augustus, ex Britannica matre in Britannia natus, & in Britannia creatus Imperator, patriam natalem magnificæ suæ gloriæ participem fecit. Profligatis Alemanis, Hispanis, & Francis, eorumque Regibus pro spectaculo bestijs obiectis, Galliam subiectam tenuit: Tres Helenæ matris auunculos Britannos, Leolinum, Traherum, & Marium, quos cæteris semper fidentiores habuerat in suis fortunis, Italis à Maxentij tyrannide fœlicitèr liberatis, in Senatorũ ordinem Romæ promouit. Innumeræ in eo (vt Eutropius habet) claruêre tam animi, quam corporis virtutes, dum appetentissimus esset gloriæ militaris, successu semper in bellis prospero. Inter literas tam Græcas quàm Latinas, à Christianissima matre Helena Christi fidem edoctus, eos honorabat præcipuè, qui in Philosophia Christiana vitam reclinassent. Vnde ab Oceani finibus nempè Britannis incipiens, ope fretus diuina, Religionis curam in medijs superstitionum tenebris cœpit, ab Occiduis ad Indos, innumeras ad æternæ spem vitæ erigens gentes. Animum diuinis exercendo studijs, noctes trahebat insomnes, & quæsita scribendi diuerticula per otium frequentabat: Imperium oratione, ac Sanctis operationibus continendum ratus, Egregius Christianæ disciplinæ præco, filios ac proceres docuit, pietatem diuitijs omnibus, atque adeò ipsi anteferre totius mundi Monarchiæ. Falsorum Deorum euersor, Imaginum cultus per Græciam, ℰ Ægyptum, Persiam, Asiam, & vniuersam ditionẽ Romanam, repetitis abrogat legibus, iubens per edicta Christũ coli, Euangelium prædicari sacrum, Ministris honores, & alimenta dari, atque idolorum vbique destrui templa. Et vt fidei forma cunctis videretur, Euangelium Iesu Christi ante se semper ferri fecit, & Biblia sacra ad omnes prouincias destinari, diademaque Monarchicum primus Britannis Regibus dedit: Ecclesijs infinita præstitit, agros, annonam, stipem egenis, ægris, viduis, ac orphanis, pro quibusque vt pater sollicitus. Eusebium, Lactantium, & similes, familiarissimos habuit, & hanc ad Deum orationem indies ipsis in eius vita testibus fudit. Vnum te Deum esse nouimus, vnum te Regem intelligimus, appellamus adiutorem, nobis abs te victoria cecidit, ex te Aduersarium fudimus, &c. Pro delicijs habuit, vt Sextus Aurelianus tradit, literarum studia colere, bonas artes fouere, legere, scribere, meditari: composuit Græcè & Latinè multos libros & Epistolas. E vita Nicomediæ discessit Senex, ætatis suæ Anno 66. & Imperij 32. à Christi verò incarnatione 339. Constantinopoli sepultus, Octauio in Britannijs regnante. Eius vitam in quatuor libris Eusebius Cæsarienſis Græcè scripsit, & Ioannes Portesius Gallus in Latinum transtulit sermonem.

¶ The same in English.

FLauius Constantine, synamed the great, King of the Britaines after his father, and Emperour of the Romanes, borne in Britaine of Helena his mother, and there created Emperour, made his natiue countrie partaker of his singular glorie, and renoume.

Hauing conquered and put to slight the Almanes, Spaniards, Frenchmen, and their Kings for a spectacle throwne out to wilde beastes, he held France it selfe as subiect vnto him: and hauing happily deliuered the Italians from the tyrannie of Maxentius, hee preferred 3. of his mothers vncles, all Britaines, namely Leoline, Trahere, and Marius, whom in all his actions he had found more faithfull vnto him then any others, to be of the order of the Romane Senators.

Eutropius reporteth, that he infinitely excelled in the vertues both of the minde and body also, and that hauing a pleasure in the practise of warre, and in the iust commendation of Martiall prowesse, proweſſe, he neuer pitched fielde but his ſucceſſe in the battell was alwayes victorious. His mother Helena hauing inſtructed him in the faith of Chriſt, although hee made much of all men that were learned in the Greeke and Latine tongues, yet he perfourmed ſpeciall honor to thoſe that ſpent their time in the ſtudie of Diuinitie, which he called Chriſtian Philoſophie: ſo that beginning at the furtheſt part of the Ocean ſea, which then was taken to be his owne natiue ſoyle of Britaine, and truſting in the aſſiſtance of God, when the darkenes of ſuperſtition was moſt thicke, then hee vndertooke a care of Religion, ſtirring vp innumerable nations from the Weſt as farre as India it ſelfe, to the hope of eternall life.

Hee paſſed many nightes without ſleepe, hauing his minde occupied in diuine ſtudies: and whenſoeuer his leaſure from greater affaires did permit him, his vacant times ſhould be ſpent in the vſe of writing & other good exerciſes, aſſuring himſelfe that his kingdoms & Empire were to be continued & ſtrengthened to him by prayer and holy workes: and oftentimes taking vpon him as it were ỳ perſon of a notable preacher of Chriſtian diſcipline, he would teach his children and nobilitie, that godlines was to be preferred before riches, yea, before ỳ Monarchie of all ỳ world.

He ouerthrew the falſe gods of the Heathens, and by many lawes often reuiued, he abrogated the worſhipping of Images in all the countreis of Greece, Ægypt, Perſia, Aſia, and the whole Romane Empire, commanding Chriſt onely by his Edicts to be worſhipped, the ſacred Goſpell to be preached, the Miniſters thereof to be honoured and relieued, and the temples of Idoles euery where to be deſtroyed.

Whitherſoeuer he went hee cauſed the booke of the Goſpell of Chriſt to be ſtill caried before him, that thereby it might appeare to be a forme of faith to all men, and to apperteine generally to all nations.

He was the firſt that appointed an Imperiall Diademe, or Crowne to the Kings of Britaine.

He was moſt beneficiall to all Churches, beſtowing vpon them lands and fields, and vpon the poore, ſicke perſons, widowes and orphanes, corne and wood, being as carefull of them as if hee had bene their naturall father.

He vſed learned men moſt familiarly, as Euſebius, Lactantius and others, and they are witneſſes that this was his vſuall prayer to God. O Lord we know thee to be the onely God, we are ſure that thou art the onely King, and we call vpon thee as our helper: through thee we haue gotten the victorie, and by thee we haue ouerthrowen the enemie.

Sextus Aurelius reporteth, that it was his greateſt delight to imbrace the ſtudie of learning, to fauour good Arts, to reade, write and meditate, and that he compoſed many bookes, and Epiſtles both in the Greeke and Latine tongues.

He died at Nicomedia, being then 66. yeres of age, in the 32 yere of his reigne, and in the 339. yeere after the Incarnation of Chriſt, and was buried at Conſtantinople, Octauius being then King of Britaine: whoſe life Euſebius biſhop of Cæſarea hath written in Greeke in 4. bookes, which afterwards were tranſlated into the Latine tongue by Iohn Portes a French man.

The life and trauailes of Pelagius, borne in Wales.

PElagius Cambrius ex ea Britanniæ parte oriundus, famati illius Collegij Bannochorenſis a Ceſtria non procul, præpoſitus erat, in quo Chriſtianorum philoſophorum, duo millia ac centum, ad plebis in Chriſto cõmoditatem militabant, manuum ſuarum laboribus, iuxta Pauli doctrinam victitantes. Poſtquam plures exhibitos, pro Chriſtiana Repub. labores, vir eruditione inſignis, & tum Græcè, tum Latinè peritus, vt Tertullianus alter, quorundam Clericorum laceſſitus iniurijs, grauatim tulit, ac tandem a fide defecit.

Peragratis igitur deinceps Gallijs, in Aegyptum, & Syriam aliaſque orientis Regiones demum peruenit. Vbi ex earum partiũ Monacho præſul ordinatus, ſui nominis hæreſim fabricabat: aſſerens hominem ſine peccato naſci, ac ſolo voluntatis imperio ſine gratia ſaluari poſſe, vt ita nefarius baptiſmum ac fidem tolleret. Cum his & conſimilibus impoſtricis doctrinæ fecibus in patriam ſuam reuerſus, omnem illam Regionem, Iuliano & Cæleſtino Pſeudoepiſcopis fautoribus, conſpurcabat. Verum ante lapſum ſuum ſtudia tractabat honeſtiſſima, vt poſt Gennadium Bedam, & honorium alij ferunt authores, compoſuitque multos libros ad Chriſtianam vtilitatem. At poſtquam eſt Hereticus publicatus, multo plures edidit hæreſi ſuccurrentes, & ex diametro cum vera pietate pugnantes, vnde erat a ſuis Britannis in exilium pulſus, vt in Epiſtola ad Martinum quintum Valdenus habet. Claruit anno poſt Chriſtum incarnatum, 390. ſub Maximo Britannorum Rege.

¶ The same in English.

PElagius, borne in that part of Britaine which is called Wales, was head or gouernour of the famous Colledge of Bangor, not farre from Chester, wherein liued a Societie of 2100. Diuines, or Students of Christian philosophie, applying themselues to the profite of the Christian people, and liuing by the labours of their owne handes, according to Pauls doctrine. He was a man excellently learned, and skilfull both in the Greeke and Latine tongues, and as it were another Tertullian, after his long and great trauailes for the good of the Christian Common wealth, seeing himselfe abused, and iniuriously dealt withall by some of the Clergie of that time, he tooke the matter so grieuously, that at the last he relapsed from the faith.

Whereupon he left Wales, and went into France, and hauing gone through France, he went therehence into Egypt, Syria, & other Countries of the East, and being made Priest by a certaine Bonke of those partes, he there hatched his heresie, which according to his name was called the heresie of the Pelagians: which was, that man was borne without sinne, and might be saued by the power of his owne wil without grace, that so the miserable man might take away faith and baptisme. With this and the like dregges of false doctrine, he returned againe into Wales, and there by the meanes of the two false Prelates Iulian and Celestine, who fauoured his heresie, hee infected the whole Countrey with it. But before his fall and Apostasie from the faith, he exercised himselfe in the best studies, as Gennadius, Beda, Honorius, and other authours doe report him, and wrote many bookes seruing not a little to Christian vtilitie: but being once fallen into his heresie, he wrote many more erroneous bookes, then he did before honest, and sincere: whereupon at the last his owne Countreymen banished him, as Walden testifieth in his Epistle to Pope Martin the fift. He florished in the yeere after the Incarnation, 390. Maximus being then King of Britane.

The life and trauailes of Iohn Erigena.

IOannes Erigena Britannus natione, in Meneuia vrbe, seu ad fanum Dauidis, & patricio genitore natus, dum Anglos Daci crudeles bellis ac rapinis molestarent, ac omnia illic essent tumultibus plena, longam ipse peregrinationem Athenas vsq; suscepit, annosq; quamplures, literis Græcis, Chaldaicis, & Arabicis insudauit: omnia illic inuisit Philosophorum loca, ac studia, imo & ipsum oraculum Solis, quod Aesculapius sibi construxerat. Inueniens tandem quod longo quæsierat labore in Italiam & Galliam est reuersus vbi ob insignem eruditionem, Carolo Caluo, & postea Ludouico Balbo acceptus, Dionisij Areopagitæ libros de cœlesti Hierarchia, ex Constantinopoli tunc missos Latinos fecit, Anno. Dom. 858. Profectus postea in Britanniam, Alphredi Anglorum Regis, & suorum liberorum factus est præceptor, atque ipso mox ad hortante, inter ocia literaria e Græco transtulit in tres linguas, scilicet Chaldaicam, Arabicam, & Latinam, Aristotelis moralia, de secretis secretorum, seu recto regimine Principum, opus certe exquisitum. In Malmsburiensi cœnobio tandem, quo recreationis gratia se contulerat, inter legendum a quibusdam discipulis maleuolis interimebatur, An. Christi, 884.

¶ The same in English.

IOhn Erigene a Britane, descended of honourable parents, and borne in the Towne of S. Dauid in Wales, seeing the Englishmen to be oppressed with the warres and rapines of the cruel Danes, and all the land in a hurlie burlie, he in the meane time vndertooke a long iourney, euen as farre as Athens, and there spent many yeeres in the studie of the Greeke, Chaldie, and Arabian tongues: he there frequented all the places and schooles of the Philosophers, and the oracle also of the Sunne, which Æsculapius had built vnto him selfe. And hauing found at length that which he had with long trauell searched, he returned againe into Italie, and France, where for his singuler learning, he was much fauoured of the two Kings Charles and Lewes, and in his being there, he translated into Latine the bookes of Dionysius Areopagita concerning the Heauenly Hierarchie, which were sent from Constantinople in the yeere 858. After this he came backe againe into his owne Countrey, and was schoolemaster vnto Alphred then King of England, and to his sonnes: and vpon his request, at his times of leasure, he translated Aristotles Morales of the Secrets of Secrets, or of the right gouernement of Princes, out of Greeke into these three tongues, Chaldie, Arabian, and Latine, which he did very exquisitely. At the last, being in the Abbie of Malmsburie, whither he went for his recreation, and there according to his manner disputing, and reading to the Students, some of them misliking and hating him, rose against him, and slue him in the yeere of Christ, 884.

The

The trauailes of Andrewe Whiteman, alias Leucander, Centur. 2.

ANdræas Leucander alias Whiteman (iuxta Lelandum) Monachus, & Abbas Rameſienſis Cœnobij tertius fuit. Hic bonis artibus ſtudio quodam incredibili noctes atque dies inuigilabat, & operæ præcium ingens inde retulit. Acceſſit præterea & ardens quoddam deſiderium, ea proprijs & apertis oculis videndi loca, in quibus Seruator Chriſtus redemptionis noſtri miſteria omnia conſummauit, quorum prius ſola nomina ex ſcripturarum lectione nouerat: vnde & ſacram Hieroſolymorum vrbem, miraculorum, prædicationis, ac paſsionis eius teſtem inuiſit, atque domum rediens factus eſt Abbas. ANdrewe Leucander, otherwiſe called Whiteman (as Leland reporteth) was by profeſſion a Monke, and the third Abbat of the Abbie of Ramſie: he was exceedingly giuen to the ſtudie of good artes, taking paines therein day & night, and profited greatly thereby. And amongſt all other things, he had an incredible deſire to ſee thoſe places with his eyes, wherein Chriſt our Sauiour perfourmed and wrought all the myſteries of our Redemption, the names of whiche places he onely knewe before by the reading of the Scriptures. Whereupon he began his iourney, and went to Jeruſalem a witneſſe of the miracles, preaching and paſſion of Chriſt, and being againe returned into his Countrey, he was made the aforeſaide Abbat. He floriſhed in the yeere of Chriſt, 1020. vnder Canutus the Dane.

WIlliam the Prior of the Canons Regular in the Church of Jeruſalem, called the Lords Sepulchre, was an Engliſhman borne, and of a vertuous and good behauiour.

After that the Citie of Tyre was restored againe to the Christian faith, Guimunde the Patriarke of Ierusalem made him the first Archbishop of Tyre, in the yeere 1128. Which Tyre is a very ancient Citie, the Metropolis of all Phenicia, and hath bene accompted the chiefest Prouince of Syria, both for fruitfull commodities and multitude of inhabitants. This William hauing in his life written many Bookes and Epistles, died at last in the yeere 1130. hauing bene Archebishop the space of two yeeres, and was buried in the Church of Tyre.

THis Robert Ketenensis, was called an Englishman by syname, as he was by birth: who after some time spent in the foundacions of humanitie, and in the elements of good Artes in the Uniuersities of England, determined to trauaile to the partes beyond sea: and so trauayled through France, Italie, Dalmatia, and Greece, and came at last into Asia, where her liued in great danger of his life among the cruell Sarracens, but yet learned perfectly the Arabian tongue. Afterwards he returned by sea into Spaine, and there about the riuer Iberus, gaue him self wholy to the studie of Astrologie, with one Hermannus a Dalmatian, who had accompanied him in his long voyage. He flourished in the yeere 1143 Steuen being then King of England, and was buried at Papilona.

The worthy voyage of Richard the first, King of England into Asia, for the recouery of Ierusalem out of the handes of the Saracens, drawen out of the booke of Actes and Monuments of the Church of England, written by M. Iohn Foxe.

KIng Richard the first of that name, for his great valoure and courage synamed Cœur de Lion, the sõne of Henry the second, after the death of his father remembring the rebellions that he had vnduetifully raised against him, sought for absolution of his trespasse, and in part of satisfaction for the same, agreed with Philip the French King to take his voyage with him for the recouerie of Christes patrimonie, which they called the Holy land: wherevpon the said King Richard immediatly after his Coronation, to prepare himselfe the better towardes his iourney, vsed diuers meanes to take vp sommes of money, and exacted a tenth of the whole Realme, the Christians to make threescore and ten thousand poundes, and the Iewes which then dwelt in the Realme threescore thousand.

Hauing thus gotten sufficient money for the exploit, hee sent certaine Earles and Barons to Philip the French king in the time of his Parliament at S. Denis, to put him in minde of his promise made for the recouerie of Christs holy patrimonie out of the Saracens hands: To whome he sent word againe in the moneth of December, that he had bound himselfe by solemne othe, deposing vpon the Euangelists, that he the yeere next following, about the time of Easter, had certainely prefixed to addresse himselfe toward that iourney, requiring him likewise not to faile, but to be ready at the terme aboue limitted, appointing also the place where both the Kings shoulde meete together.

In the yere therefore 1190. King Richard hauing committed the gouernment of this Realme in his absence to the bishop of Elye then Chancelour of England, aduaunced forwarde his iourney, and came to Turon to meete with Philip the French king, and after that went to Vizeliace, where the French king & he ioyning together, for the more continuance of their iourney, assured themselues by solemne othe, swearing fidelitie one to the other: the forme of whose oth was this.

That either of them should defend and maintaine the honour of the other, and beare true fidelitie vnto him, of life, members & worldly honour, and that neither of them should faile one the other in their affaires: but the French king should ayde the King of England in defending his lande and dominions, as he would himselfe defend his owne Citie of Paris if it were besieged: and that Richard King of England likewise should ayde the French king in defending his land and Dominions, no otherwise then he would defend his owne Citie of Roan if it were besieged, &c.

Concerning the lawes and ordinances appointed by King Richarde for his Nauie, the forme thereof was this.

The discipline and orders of the king.

1. That whoso killed any person on shipboard, should be tyed with him that was slaine, and throwen into the sea.

2. And if he killed him on the land, he should in like maner be tyed with the partie slaine, and be buried with him in the earth.

3. He that shalbe conuicted by lawfull witnes to draw out his knife or weapon to the intent to strike any man, or that hath striken any to the drawing of blood, shall loose his hand.

4. Also he that striketh any person with his hand without effusion of blood, shalbe plunged three times in the sea.

5. Item, who so speaketh any opprobrious or contumelious wordes in reuiling or cursing one another, for so oftentimes as he hath reuiled, shall pay so many ounces of siluer.

6. Item, a thiefe or felon that hath stollen being lawfully cõuicted, shal haue his head shorne, and boyling pitch powred vpon his head, and feathers of downe strawed vpon the same, whereby he may be knowen, and so at the first landing place they shall come to, there to be cast vp.

These things thus ordered, King Richard sending his Nauie by the Spanish seas, and by the Streits of Gibraltare, betweene Spaine and Africa, to meete him at Marsilia, hee himselfe went as is said to Vizeliace to the French king. Which two kings from thence went to Lions, where the bridge ouer the flood Rhodanus for presse of people brake, and many both men and women were drowned: by occasion whereof the two kings for the combiance of their traines, were constrained to dilleuer themselues for time of their iourney, appointing both to meete together in Sicily: and so Philip the French king tooke his way to Genua, and king Richard to Marsilia, where he remained 8. dayes, appointing there his Nauie to meete him. From thence crossing ouer to Genua where the French king was, passed forward by the coastes of Italy, and entred into Tiber not farre from Rome.

King Richard staying in Marsilia 8. dayes for his Nauie which came not, hee there hired 20. Gallies, and 10. great barkes to shippe ouer his men, and so came to Naples, and so partly by horse and wagon, & partly by the sea, passing to Falernum, came to Calabria, where after that he had heard that his ships were arriued at Messana in Sicily, he made the more speed, and so the 23. of September entred Messana with such a noyse of Trumpets and Shalmes, with such a route and shewe, that it was to the great wonderment and terrour both of the Frenchmen, and of all other that did heare and behold the sight.

To the said towne of Messana the French king was come before the 16. of the same moneth of September, and had taken vp the Pallace of Tancredus king of Sicily for his lodging: to whom king Richard after his arriuall eftsoones resorted, and when the two kings had communed together, immediatly the French king tooke shipping and entred the seas, thinking to saile towardes the land of Ierusalem: but after he was out of the hauen, the winde rising contrary against him, returned him backe againe to Messana. Then king Richard (whose lodging was prepared in the suburbs without the Citie) after he had resorted againe and talked with the French king, and also had sent to Tancredus king of Sicily for deliuerance of Ioane his sister (who had bene sometimes Queene of Sicily, and had obtained her to be sent vnto him, the last day of September passed ouer the flood del Fare, and there getting a strong hold called de la Baguare, or le Bamare, and there placing his sister with a sufficient garrison, he returned againe to Messana.

The 2. of October king Richard wan an other strong hold called Monasterium Griffonum, situated in the midst of the riuer del Fare, betweene Messana & Calabria, from whence the Monks being expulsed, he reposed there all his store and prouision of victuals, which came from England or other places.

The Citizens of Messana seeing that the king of England had wonne the castle and Iland de la Baguare, and also the Monasterie of the Griffons, and doubting least the king would extende his power further to inuade their Citie, & get if he could the whole Isle of Sicily, began to stirre against the Kings armie, and to shut the Englishmen out of the gates, and kept their walles against them. The Englishmen seeing that, made to the gates, and by force would haue broken them open, insomuch that the King riding amongst them with his staffe, and breaking diuers of their heads, could not asswage their fiercenes, such was the rage of the Englishmen against the citizens of Messana. The King seeing the furie of his people to be such, that he could not stay them, tooke boate, and went to the pallace of King Tancred, to talke of the matter with the French King, in which meane time the matter was so taken vp by the wise handling of the auncients of the citie, that both parts laying downe their armour, went home in peace.

The fourth day of the saide moneth of October, came to King Richard the Archbishop of Messana with two other Archbishops also with the French King, and sundry other Earles, Barons, and Bishops, to intreate of peace, who as they were together consulting, and had almost concluded vpon the peace, the citizens of Messana issuing out of the towne, some went vp vpon ỹ mountaines, some with open force inuaded ỹ mansion or lodging of Hugh Brune an English Captaine. The noice whereof comming to the eares of the King, he suddenly breaking off talke with the French King and the rest, departed from them, and comming to his men, commaunded them forthwith to arme themselus. Who then with certaine of his souldiers making vp to the toppe of the mountaine (which seemed to passe their power to climbe) there put the Citizens to flight, chasing them downe the mountaines, vnto the very gates of the citie, whom also certaine of the Kings seruants pursued into the citie, of whome fiue valiant souldiers & twentie of the Kings seruants were slaine, the French King looking vpon, and not once willing to rescue them, contrary to his othe, and league before made with the King of England: for the French King with his men being there present, rode in the middest of them safely, and without any harme to and fro, and might well haue eased the Kings partie, more then he, if it had so liked him.

This being knowen to the English host howe their fellowes were slaine, and the Frenchmen permitted in the citie, and that they were excluded and the gates barred against them, being also stopped from buying of victuall, & other things, they vpon great indignation gathered themselues in armes, hast open the gates, and scaled the wals, and so winning the citie, set vp their flags with the English armes vpon the wals: which when the French King did see, he was mightely offended, requiring the King of England that the Armes of France might also be set vp, & ioyned with his: but King Richard to that would in no case agree, notwithstanding to satisfie his minde, he was contented to take downe his Armes, and to commit the custodie of the citie to the Hospitallaries and Templaries of Ierusalem, til the time that Tancred king of Sicily and he should agree together vpon conditions.

These things being done the fift and sixt day of October, it followed then vpon the eight day of the same, that peace was concluded among the kings. In which peace, first king Richard, & Philip the French king renewed againe their othe and league before made, concerning their mutuall aide and societie, during the time of that peregrination.

Secondly, peace also was concluded betweene king Richard and Tancred king of Sicily aforesaid, with conditions, that the daughter of Tancrede in case king Richard should die without issue, should be maried to Arthur Duke of Britaine the kings nephew & next heire to his crown, whereof a formall charte was drawen, and letters sent thereof to Pope Clement being dated the ninth of Nouember.

From this time vntill Februarie the next yeere, these two kings kept still at Messana, either for lacke of winde and weather, or for the repairing of their shippes. And in the aforesayde Februarie, in the yeere 1191. King Richard sent ouer his gallies to Naples, there to meete his mother Elinore, and Berengaria the daughter of Zanctius king of Nauarre, whome he was purposed to marry, who by that time were come to Brundusium, vnder the conduct of Philip Earle of Flanders, and so proceeding vnto Naples, they founde the kings shippes wherein they sayled to Messana.

In this meane space, king Richard shewed himselfe exceeding bounteous and liberall to all men: to the French king first he gaue diuers shippes, vpon others likewise he bestowed riche rewardes, and of his treasure and goods, he distributed largely to his souldiers and seruants about him, of whome it was reported, that he distributed more in one moneth, then any of his predecessors did in a whole yeere: by reason whereof he purchased great loue and fauour, which not onely redounded to the aduancement of his fame, but also to his singular vse and profite, as the sequele afterward proued.

The first day of March following, he left the Citie of Messana, where the French King was,

and went to Cathneia, a Citie where Tancredus king of Sicily then lay, where he was honorably receiued, and there remained with king Tancredus three dayes and three nightes. On the fourth day when he ſhould depart, the aforeſaid Tancredus offred him many rich preſents in gold and ſiluer, and precious ſilkes, whereof king Richard would receiue nothing, but one little ring for a token of his good will: for the which king Richard gaue againe vnto him a riche ſword. At length when king Richard ſhould take his leaue, king Tancred would not let him ſo depart, but needes would giue him 4. great ſhippes, and 15. gallies, and furthermore he himſelfe would needes accompanie him the ſpace of two dayes iourney, to a place called Tauernium.

Then the next morning when they ſhould take their leaue, Tancredus declared vnto him the meſſage, which the French King a little before had ſent vnto him by the Duke of Burgundie, the contents whereof was this: That the King of England was a falſe Traytour, and would neuer keepe the peace that was betweene them: and if the ſaid Tancredus would warre againſt him, or ſecretly by night would inuade him, he with all his power would aſſiſt him, to the deſtruction of him and all his armie. To whom Richard the King proteſted againe, that he was no traytour, nor neuer was: and as touching the peace begunne betwixt them, the ſame ſhould neuer be broken through him: neither could he beleeue that the French King being his good lord, and his ſworne Compartner in that voyage, would vtter any ſuch wordes by him. Which when Tancredus heard, he bringeth forth the letters of the French King, ſent to him by the Duke of Burgundie, affirming moreouer, that if the Duke of Burgundie would denie the bringing of the ſaid letters, he was ready to trye it with him by any of his Dukes. King Richard receauing the letters, and muſing not a little vpon the ſame, returneth againe to Meſſana. The ſame day that King Richard departed, the French king came to Tauernium to ſpeake with Tancred, and there abode with him that night, and on the morrowe returned to Meſſana againe.

From that time King Richard moued in ſtomacke againſt King Philip, neuer ſhewed any gentle countenance of peace & amitie, as he before was wont: whereat the French king greatly marueiling, and enquiring earneſtly what ſhould be the cauſe thereof, word was ſent him againe by Philip Earle of Flanders from King Richard, what wordes he had ſent to the king of Sicily, and for teſtimonie thereof the letters were ſhewed, which he wrote by the Duke of Burgundie to the King of Sicily: which when the French King vnderſtood, firſt he helde his peace as guilty in his conſcience, not knowing well what to anſwere. At length turning his tale to another matter, he began to quarrell with King Richard, pretending as though he ſought cauſes to breake with him, and to maligne him: and therefore he forged (ſaid he) theſe lies vpon him, and all becauſe he by that meanes would auoide to marrie with Aliſe his ſiſter, according as he had promiſed. Adding moreouer that if he would ſo doe, and would not marrie the ſaid Aliſe his ſiſter according to his othe, he would be an enemie to him, and to his, while he liued.

To this King Richard ſaid againe, that he could by no meanes marry that woman, forſomuch as his father had carnall copulation with her, and alſo had by her a ſonne: for proofe whereof he had there preſently to bring forth diuers & ſundry witneſſes to the Kings face, to teſtifie with him.

In concluſion, though counſell and perſwaſion of diuers about the French King, agreement at laſt was made, ſo that King Philip did acquite King Richard from this bond of marrying his ſiſter, and King Richard againe ſhould be bound to pay to him euery yeere for the ſpace of fiue yeeres, two thouſand markes, with certaine other conditions beſides, not greatly materiall for this place. And thus peace being betweene them concluded the 28. day of the ſaide moneth of March, the French King launching out of the Hauen of Meſſana, the 22. day after in the Eaſter weeke, came with his armie to the ſiege of Achon.

After the departure of the French King from Meſſana, King Richard with his armie yet remaining behind, arriued Queene Alinor the Kings mother, bringing with her Bernegera the king of Nauars daughter, to be eſpouſed to King Richard: which being done, King Richard in Aprill following, about the 10. day of the ſaid moneth, departed from the Hauen of Meſſana with 150. great ſhippes, and 53. great gallies well manned and appointed, tooke his iourney toward Achon: who being vpon the Seas on good Friday about the 9. houre, roſe a mightie South-winde with a tempeſt, which diſſeuered and ſcattered all his Nauie, ſome to one place, and ſome to another. The King with a fewe ſhippes was driuen to the Ile of Creta, and there before the Hauen of Rhodes caſt anker. The ſhippes that caried the Kings ſiſter, Queene of Sicily, and Bernegera the king of Nauars daughter, with 2. ſhippes were driuen to the Ile of Cyprus.

The Nauie of King Richard.

The king making great mone for the ſhippes of his ſiſter, and Bernegera his wife that ſhould be, not knowing where they were become, after the tempeſt was ouerblowen, ſent forth his Gallies diligently to ſeeke the reſt of his Nauie diſperſed, but eſpecially the ſhippe wherein his ſiſter sister was, and the mayden whom he should marrie, who at length were found safe and merrie at the porte of Lymsem in the Ile of Cyprus, notwithstanding the two other shippes, which were in their companie before in the same hauen, were drowned with diuers of the Kings seruants and men of worship, among whom was M. Roger, called Malus Catulus, the Kings Vicechancelour, who was found with the Kings seale hanging about his necke.

The king of Cyprus, was then Isakius (called also the Emperour of the Gryffons) who tooke and imprisoned all Englishmen, which by shipwracke were cast vpon his land, also inueigled into his hands the goods and prises of them which were found drowned about his coastes, neither would suffer the shippes wherein the two Ladies were to enter within the porte.

The tydings of this being brought to King Richard, he in great wrath gathering his galleies and shippes together, boordeth the land of Cyprus, where he first in gentle wise signifieth to king Isakius, how he with his Englishmen, comming as strangers to the supportation of the holy land, were by distresse of weather driuen vpon his bounds, and therefore with all humble petition besought him in Gods behalfe, and for reuerence of the holy Crosse, to let goe such prisoners of his as he had in captiuitie, & to restore againe ỹ goods of them that were drowned, which he detayned in his hands, to be employed for the behoofe of their soules. And this the king once, twise, and thrise desired of the Emperour: but he proudly answering againe, sent the king worde, that he neither would let the captiues goe, nor render the goods of them which were drowned.

When king Richard heard this, how light the Emperour Isakius made of his so humble and honest petition, and howe that nothing could be gotten without violent force, eftsoones giueth commandement throughout all his hoste to put themselues in armour and followe him, to reuenge the iniuries receiued of that proude and cruell king of Cyprus, willing them to put their trust in God, and not to misdoubt but that the Lorde would stand with them, and giue them the victorie. The Emperour in the meane time with his people stood warding the Sea coastes, where the Englishmen should arriue, with swordes, billes, and launces, and such other weapons as they had, setting boordes, stooles, and chestes before them as a wall: few of them were harnessed, and for the most part all vnexpert and vnskilfull in the feates of warre.

Then king Richard with his souldiers issuing out of their ships, first set his bowe men before, who with their shot made a way for others to followe. The Englishmen thus winning the land vpon them, so fiercely prested vpon the Gryffons, that after long fighting and many blowes, at last the Emperour was put to flight, whom king Richard valiantly pursued, and slue many, and diuers he tooke aliue, and had gone neere also to take the Emperour, had not the night come on and parted the battell. And thus king Richard with much spoile, and great victorie, returning to the porte Towne of Lymsem, which the Townes men had left for feare, found there great abundance of corne, wine, oyle and victuals.

The day after the victorie gotten, Ioanna the Kings sister, and Bernegera the mayden, entred the Porte and Towne of Lymsem, with 50. great ships, and 14. galliots: so that all the whole Nauie there meeting together, were 254. tall shippes, and aboue three score galliots. Then Isakius the Emperour, seeing no way for him to escape by Sea, the same night pitched his tents fiue miles off from the English army, sweating that the third day after, he would surely giue battell to king Richard: but he preuenting him before, suddenly the same morning before the day of battell should be, setteth vpon the tentes of the Gryffons early in the morning, they being vnawares and a sleepe, and made of them a great slaughter, insomuch that the Emperour was faine to runne away naked, leauing his tents and pauilions to the Englishmen, full of horses and riche treasure, also with the Imperiall standerd, the lower part whereof with a costly streamer was couered, and wrought all with gold.

King Richard returning with victorie and triumph to his sister, and Bernegera shortly after in the moneth of May next following, and the 12. day of the said moneth, married the said Bernegera daughter of Rancon, king of Nauarre, in the yle of Cyprus at Lymsem.

The king of Cyprus seeing himselfe outmatched, was driuen at length to yeelde himselfe with conditions to giue king Richard 20000. markes in gold for amends of such spoyles as he had gotten of them that were drowned, also to restore all the captiues againe to the King: and furthermore, he in his owne person to attende vpon the King to the land of Ierusalem in Gods seruice and his, with 400. horsemen, and 500. footemen: in pledge whereof he would giue to his hands his castles, and his onely daughter, and would hold his kingdome of him.

This done, and the Emperour sweating fidelitie to king Richard before Guido king of Ierusalem, and the prince of Antioche (who were come thither to king Richard a little before) peace was taken, and Isakius committed to the warde of certaine keepers. Notwithstanding shortly after

ter he breaking from his keepers, was againe at defiance with the King: whereupon king Richard besetting the Iland of Cyprus round about with shippes and gallies, did in such sort preuaile, that the Subiects of the land were constrained to yeelde themselues to the King, and at last the daughter of the Emperour, and the Emperour himselfe, whom king Richard caused to be kept in fetters of gold and siluer, and to be sent to the citie of Tripolis.

These things thus done, and all set in order touching the possession of the Ile of Cyprus, the keeping whereof he committed to Radulphe sonne of Godfrye Lord Chamberlaine, being then the first day of June vpon the sift of the saide moneth, king Richard departed from the Ile of Cyprus, with his shippes and gallies toward the siege of Achon, and on the next morowe came to Tyrus, where by procurement of the French King he was restrained by the Citizens to enter. The next day after, which was the sixt day of June, crossing the seas, he met with a great barke fraught with souldiers and men of warre to the number of a thousand and fiue hundred, which pretending to be Frenchmen, and setting foorth their flagge with the French Armes, were in deede Sarracens, secretly sent with wilde fire and certaine barrels of vnknowen serpents to the defense of the towne of Achon, which King Richard at length perceiuing, eftsoones set vpon them and so vanquished them, of whome the most were drowned and some taken aliue: which being once knowen in the citie of Achon, as it was a great discomfort to them, so it was a great helpe to the Christians for winning the citie.

The next day after which was the seuenth of June, King Richard came to Achon, which at that time had bene long besieged by the Christians. After whose comming it was not long, but the Pagans within the citie, seeing their wals to be vndermined and towers ouerthrowen, were driuen by composition to escape with life and limme, to surrender the citie to the two kings.

K. Richard arriued at Achon.

Another great helpe to the Christians in winning the citie, was this. In the said city of Achon there was a secrete Christian among the Sarracens, who in time of the siege thereof, vsed at sundry times to cast ouer the wals into the campe of the Christians, certaine bils written in Hebrue, Greeke, and Latine, wherein he disclosed to the Christians from time to time, the doings and counsels of the enemies, aduertising them how and what way they should worke, and what to beware, and alwaies his letters began thus. In nomine Patris, & Filij, & Spiritus sancti, Amen. By reason whereof the Christians were much aduantaged in their proceedings: but this was a great heauines vnto them, that neither he would vtter his name, nor when the citie was got did they euer vnderstand who he was.

To make of a long siege a short narration. Vpon the twelfth day of July the yeere aforesaid, the Princes and Captaines of the Pagans, vpon agreement resorted to the tent of the Templaries to commune with the two kings touching peace, and giuing vp of their citie: the forme of which peace was thus.

The forme of peace concluded betweene the Kings and the Princes of Achon.

1 That the Kings should haue the citie of Achon freely and fully deliuered vnto them, with all which was therein.

2 That 500. captiues of the Christians should be restored to them, which were in Achon.

3 That the holy crosse should be to them rendred, and a thousand Christian captiues with two hundreth horsemen, whosoeuer they themselues would chose out of all them which were in the power of the Saladine.

4 That they would giue vnto the Kings two hundreth thousand Bysants, so that they themselues should remaine as pledges in the Kings hands, for the performance hereof, that if in fortie daies the aforesaide couenantes were not accomplished, they shoulde abide the Kings mercie touching life and limme.

These couenantes being agreed vpon, the Kings sent their souldiers and seruants into the citie to take a hundreth of the richest and best of the citie, to close them vp in towers vnder strong keeping, and the residue they committed to be kept in houses and in streetes, ministring vnto them according to their necessities: to whome notwithstanding this they permitted, that so many of them as would be baptized and receiue the faith of Christ, should be free to goe whither they would: whereupon many there were of the Pagans, which for feare of death pretended to be baptized, but afterward so soone as they could, reuolted againe to the Saladine: for the which it was afterward commanded by the Kings, that none of them should be baptized against their wils.

The thirteenth day of the saide moneth of July, King Philip of France, and King Richard, after they had obtained the possession of Achon, deuided betweene them all things therein contained as well the people as golde and siluer, with all other furniture whatsoeuer was remaining in the citie: who in deuiding the spoile, were so good caruers to themselues that the Knights and Barons had but litle to their share, whereupon they began to shewe themselues somewhat discontented ted, which being knowen of the Kings they sent them answere that their wils should be satisfied.

The twentieth day of July, King Richard speaking with the French King, desired him that they two with their armies, would binde themselues by othe to remaine there still in the land of Ierusalem the space of 3. yeeres, for the winning and recouering againe of those countreys: but hee said he would sweare no such othe, and so the next day after King Richard with his wife and sister entreth into the Citie of Achon, and there placed himselfe in the Kings pallace: The French king remayning in the houses of the Templaries, where he continued till the ende of that moneth.

About the beginning of the moneth of August, Philip the French king after that hee and King Richard had made agreement betweene Guido and Conradus the Marques, about the kingdome of Ierusalem, went from Achon to Tyrus, notwithstanding king Richard and all the Princes of the Christian armie with great intreatie desired him to tary, shewing what a shame it were for him to come so farre, and now to leaue vndone that for which he came, and on the 3. day of August departed from Tyrus, leauing the halfe part of the Citie of Achon, in the hands of the aforesaide Conradus Marques.

The French Kings shamefull returne home.

After his departure the Pagans refused to keepe their couenants made, who neither would restore the holy Crosse nor the money, nor their captiues, sending word to King Richard, that if he beheaded the pledges left with him at Achon, they would choppe off the heads of such captiues of the Christians as were in their handes.

Shortly after this the Saladine sending great gifts to king Richard, requested the time limitted for beheading of the captiues to be proroged, but the king refused to take his gifts, and to graunt his request, whereupon the Saladine caused all the Christian captiues within his possession forthwith to beheaded, which was the 28. of August: which albeit king Richard vnderstoode, yet would not be preuent the time before limitted for the execution of his prisoners, being the 20. day of August: vpon which day hee caused the prisoners of the Saracens openly in the sight of the Saladines armie to loose their heads: the number of whom came to two thousand and fiue hundreth, saue only that certaine of the principall of them hee reserued for purposes and considerations, especially to make exchange for the holy Crosse, and certaine other of the Christian captiues.

The captiues of the Sarracens slaine by King Richard.

After this king Richard purposed to besiege the Citie of Ioppe, where by the way betweene Achon and Ioppe, neere to a towne called Assur, Saladine with a great multitude of his Saracens came fiercely against the kings rereward, but though Gods mercifull grace in the same battail, the kings warriers acquited themselues so well, that the Saladine was put to flight, whome the Christians pursued the space of 3. miles, and lost that same day many of his Nobles & Captaines, in such sort (as it was thought) that the Saladine was not put to such confusion 40. yeeres before, and but one Christian Captaine called Iames Auernus in that conflict was ouerthrowen.

A notable victory against the Saladine.

From thence king Richard proceeding further went to Ioppe, and then to Ascalon, where hee found first the Citie of Ioppe forsaken of the Saracens, who durst not abide the kings comming: Ascalon, the Saladine threw downe to the ground, & likewise forsooke the whole lande of Syria, through all which land the King had free passage without resistance: neither durst the Saracene Prince encounter after that with K. Richard. Of all which his atcheuances the said K. Richard sent his letters of certificate as wel into England, as also to the Abbot of Clara valle in France, well hoping ỳ he God willing should be able to make his repaire againe to them by Easter next.

King Richard in possession of Syria.

Many other famous acts were done in this voyage by these two Kings, and moe should haue bene, had not they falling into discorde disseuered themselues, by reason whereof Philip the French king returned home againe within short space: who being returned againe eftsoones inuaded the Countrey of Normandie, exciting also John the brother of king Richard, to take on him the kingdome of England in his brothers absence: who then made league vpon the same with the French king, and did homage vnto him, which was about the fourth yeere of king Richarde. Who then being in Syria, and hearing thereof, made peace with the Turkes for three yeeres: and not long after, king Richard the next spring following returned also, who in his returne driuen by distresse of weather about the parts of Histria, in a towne called Synaca, was there taken by Lympold, Duke of the same countrey, and so solde to the Emperour for sixtie thousand Markes: who for no small ioy thereof, writeth to Philip the French king, these letters here following.

King Richard returneth from Palestina.

The letter of the Emperour to Philip the French king, concerning the taking of King Richard.

HEnricus Dei gratiâ Romanorum Imperator, & semper Augustus. Dilecto & speciali amico suo, Philippo illustri Francorum Regi salutem, & sinceræ dilectionis affectum. Quoniam Imperatoria

toria Celsitudo non dubitat Regalem Magnificentiam tuam latiorem effici, de vniuersis quibus omnipotentia creatoris nostri nos ipsos, & Romanum Imperium honorauerit, & exaltauerit nobilitati tuæ tenore præsentium declarare duximus, quod inimicus Imperij nostri, & turbator Regni tui Rex Angliæ, quum esset in transeundo mare ad partes suas reuersurus, accidit vt ventus rupta naui sua, in qua ipse erat, induceret eum in partes Histriæ ad locum qui est inter Aquileiam, & Venetias. Vbi Rex, Dei permissione passus naufragium cum paucis euasit.

Quidam itaque fidelis noster Comes, Maynardus de Grooxce, & populus regionis illius, audito quod in terra erat, & considerato diligentius, qualem, Nominatus Rex in terra promissionis, proditionem & traditionem, & perditionis suæ cumulum exercuerat, insecuti sunt, intendentes eum captiuare. Ipso autem Rege in fugam conuerso, ceperunt de suis octo milites: Postmodum processit Rex ad Burgum in Archiepiscopatu Salseburgensi, qui vocatur Frisorum, vbi Fridericus de Betesow, Rege cum tribus tantum versus Austriam properante, noctu sex milites de suis cœpit: Dilectus autem Consanguineus noster Lympoldus Dux Austriæ, obseruata strata sæpè, dictum Regem iuxta Denam in villa vicinori, in domo despecta captiuauit.

Cum itaq; in nostra nunc habeatur Potestate, & ipse semper tua molestauit, & turbationis operam præstiterit, ea quæ præmisimus, nobilitati tuæ insinuare curauimus: scientes ea dilectioni tuæ beneplacita existere, animo tuo vberrimam importare lætitiam. Datum apud Ritheountum 5. Kalendas Ianua.

King Richard being thus traiterously taken, and sold to the Emperour by the Duke of Austridge for 60000. markes, was there kept in custodie a yeere and 3. moneths.

In some stories it is affirmed, that King Richard returning out of Asia, came to Italy with prosperous winde, where he desired of the Pope to be absolued of an othe made against his will and could not obteine it: and so setting out from thence towards England, passing by the Countrey of Conradus the Marques, whose death (he being slaine a litle before) was falsly imputed by the French King to the King of Englande, there traiterously was taken (as is aforesaide) by Limpoldus duke of Austridge.

Albeit in another storie I finde the matter more credibly set forth: which saith thus. That king Richard slewe the brother of this Limpoldus, playing with him at Chesse in the French Kings Court: and Limpoldus taking his vantage, was more cruel against him and deliuered him (as is saide) to the Emperour. In whose custodie he was detcined during the time aboue mentioned, a yeere & 3. moneths. During which time of the Kings endurance, the French King in the meane season stirred warre in Normandie: and Earle John the Kings brother, made stirre and inuaded England, but the Barons and bishops of the land mightily withstood him.

At length it was so agreed and concluded with the Emperour, that King Richard should be released for a hundreth and foure thousand pound: of which money part should remaine to the Duke of Austridge, the rest should be the Emperours. The summe of which money was here gathered and made in England of Chalices, Crosses, shrines, candlesticks and other Church plate, also with publike contribution of Friers, Abbots, and other subiects of the Realme: whereof part was presently paid, and for the residue remayning, hostages and pledges were taken, which was about the fift yeere of his reigne: and then it was obteined of the Pope, that Priestes might celebrate with Chalices of latten and tinne.

At what time this aforesaide money was payd, and the hostages giuen for the ransome of the King, I haue an olde historie which saith, that the aforesaid Duke of Austridge was shortly after plagued by God, with 5. sundry plagues. The first iudgment of God vpon the Duke of Austria.

First, with the burning of his chiefe Townes.

2. With drowning of tenne thousand of his men in a floud happening no man can tell how.

3. By turning all the eares of his corne fielde into wormes.

4. By taking away almost all the Nobles of his land by death.

5. By breaking his owne legge falling from his horse, which legge hee was compelled to cut off with his owne hands, and afterwardes died of the same: who then at his death is reported to forgiue King Richard 50000. marks, and sent home the hostages that were with him. And further a certaine booke intituled Eulogium, declareth that ꝑ said Limpoldus duke of Austridge fell in displeasure with the bishop of Rome and died excommunicate the next yeere after, Anno 1196.

But thus as you haue heard, Richard the King was ransomed & deliuered from the courtous captiuitie of the Emperour, and returning home made an ende of his voyage for Asia, which was both honourable to himselfe and to all Christian States, but to the Sarracens the enemies of Christianitie, terrible and dishonourable.

This Historie of King Richards voyage to Ierusalem, is very excellently and largely written in Latine by Guilielmus Neobrigensis our owne countreyman.

BAldwinus Deuonius, tenui loco Excestriæ natus, vir ore facundus, exactus Philosophus, & ad omne studiorum genus per illos dies aptissimus inueniebatur, Scholarum rector primùm erat: tum postea Archidiaconus, eruditione ac sapientia in omni negotio celebris: fuit præterea Cistercienſis Monachus, & Abbas Fordensis Cœnobij, magnus suorum æstimatione, ac vniuersæ eorum societati quasi Antesignanus: fuit deinde Wigornienſis præsul, fuit & mortuo demum Richardo Cantuariorum Archiepiscopus, ac totius Angliæ primas. Cui muneri Baldwinus sollicitè inuigilans, egregium se pastorem exhibuit, dominicum semen, quantum patiebatur eius temporis iniquitas, vbique locorum spargens. Richardus Anglorum Rex, acceptis tunc Regni insignijs, summo studio classem, ac omnia ad Hierosolymitarum bellum gerendum necessaria parauit. Secutus est illico Regem in Syriam, & Palestinam vsque Baldwinus, vt esset in tam Sancto (vt ipse putabat itinere) laborum, dolorum, ac periculorum particeps. Præfuit Cantuariensi Ecclesiæ ferè 6. annis, & Richardum Regem in Syriam secutus, anno Salutis nostræ 1190. Tyri vitam finiuit, vbi & sepultus est.

BAldwine a Deuonshire man borne in Exeter of meane parentage, was a very eloquent man, an exact Philosopher, and in those dayes very excellent in all kinde of studies. He was first of all a Scholemaster: afterwards he became an Archdeacon, very famous for his learning & wisedome in all his doings. He was also a Cistercian Monke and Abbot of Foorde Monasterie, and the chiefe of all those that were of his order: he grewe after this to be bishop of Worcester, and at last after the death of King Richard he was promoted and made Archebishop of Canterburie, and Primate of all England. In the discharge of which place hee being very vigilant, shewed himselfe a worthy Pastor, sowing the seede of Gods word in euery place as farre foorth as the iniquitie of that time permitted. In his time King Richard with all indeuour prepared a Fleete and all things necessarie for waging of warre against the Infidels at Ierusalem, taking with him the Standerd and Ensignes of the kingdome. This Baldwine eftsoones followed the King into Syria and Palestina, as one desirous to be partaker of his trauailes, paines, and perils in so holy a voyage. He was Archbishop of Canterburie almost sixe yeeres: but hauing followed the King into Syria, in the yeere 1190. he died at Tyre where he was also buried.

An annotation concerning the trauailes of the said Baldwine, taken out of Ponticus Virunnius, in his Itinerarium Cambriæ, lib. 2. Cap. 14. Fol. 229.

INter primos Thomæ Becketi, successor hic secundus, audita saluatoris & salutiferæ Crucis iniuria nostris (proh dolor) diebus per Saladinum irrogata, cruce signatus, in eiusdem obsequijs, tam remotis finibus quam propinquis, prædicationis officium viriliter assumpsit. Et postmodum iter accipiens, nauigioque fungens apud Marsiliam, transcurso tandem Pelagi profundo, in portu Tyrensi incolumis applicuit: & inde ad exercitum nostrum obsidentem pariter & obsessum Aconem transiuit: vbi multos ex nostris inueniens, & ferè cunctos principum defectu, in summa desolatione iam positos, & desperatione, alios quidem longa expectatione fatigatos, alios fame & inopia grauiter afflictos, quosdam verò aeris inclementia distemperatos, diem fœlicitèr in terra sacra clausurus extremum, singulos pro posse vinculo charitatis amplectens, sumptibus & impensis, verbis, & vitæ meritis confirmauit.

THis Baldwine being the second successour vnto Thomas Becket, after he had hard the wrong which was done to our Sauiour, and the signe of the Crosse by Saladine the Sultan of Egypt, taking vpon him the Lords Character, hee couragiously perfourmed his office of preaching in the obedience thereof, as well in farre distant Countreis as at home. And afterwardes taking his iourney and imbarking himselfe at Marsillis, hauing at length passed the Leuant Sea arriued safely in the Hauen of Tyrus, and from thence went ouer to Achon vnto our armie, besieging the Towne, and yet (as it were) besieged it selfe. Where finding many of our Countreymen, and almost all men remayning in wonderfull pensiuenes, and dispaire through the withdrawing of the the Princes, ſome of them tired with long expectation, others grieuouſly afflicted with hunger and pouertie, and others diſtempered with the heate of the weather, being ready happily to ende his dayes in the Holy land, embracing euery one accoꝛding to his abilitie in the bond of loue, hee ayded them at his coſtes and charges, and ſtrengthened them with his woꝛdes and good examples of life.

RIchard ſyrnamed Canonicus an obſeruant Frier of Trinitie Church in London, was in great loue with the ſtudies of good Arts and tooke paines in them and learned them. And at laſt by his continuall endeuour and long exerciſe therein, he grew to be ſuch an Oratour and Poet, as few were in that age liuing, by reaſon whereof he grew in fauour with Richard then King of England, and vndertooke that long voyage with him into Paleſtina & Syria againſt the Turkes. From whence being returned againe into England, hee faithfully deſcribed both in Verſe and proſe all ſuch things as he had ſeene in the Cities, fields and tents of the ſouldiers, where he was preſent, and omitted not to note the behauiour, forme, and proportion of body in the foreſaid King, giuing to his notable worke this moſt apt name for the title, The Iournall of King Richard. Hee flouriſhed in the yeere of our Redemption 1200. vnder Iohn King of England.

The trauailes of Guilielmus Peregrinus.

WIlliam the Pilgrime, a very excellent Poet in thoſe dayes and an Engliſhman borne, was of great fame, being much giuen to good letters, (as many then were) and beſtowed his good time in the beſt kinde of ſtudies. Hee vnderſtanding of the preparation of King Richarde againſt the Sarracens, prepared himſelfe alſo for the ſame voyage, not onely as a Souldiour, but as a Pilgrime alſo. He ſawe thoſe things which happened in the Spaniſh ſeas, and which were done in Syria and Paleſtina againſt the Sultan the King of Babylon, and the treacherous Sarracens. All which things he wrote and expreſſed them as it were in liuely colours, as if they had bene ſtill in doing before his eyes: And handled the ſame Argument in Heroical verſe which the forenamed Richard Canonicus did. And hauing finished his worke he dedicated it to Hubert Archbishop of Canterburie, and to Stephen Turneham a most expert Captaine of the warres, giuing it this Title, The Expedition of King Richard. And I doubt not but that so good a Poet as hee was published many other things, but whether they be extant yea or no, I know not: but this I know, that he was a man well accompted of, and flourished in the yeere after the birth of Christ 1200. vnder King John.

HVbertus Walterus Sarisburiensis Episcopus, vir probus, ingenioque ac pietate clarus, inter præcipuos vnus eorum erat, qui post Richardum Regem expugnandorum Saracenorum gratia in Syriam proficiscebantur. Cum ex Palestina rediens, audiret in Sicilia, quod idem Richardus in inimicorũ manus incidisset, omisso itinere incepto, ad eum cursim diuertebat: Quem & ille statim, in Angliam misit, vt illic Regij Senatus authoritate, indicto pro eius redemptione tributo pecuniam colligeret, quod & industrius fecit ac Regem liberauit. Inde Cantuariorum Archiepiscopus factus, post eius mortem Ioanni illius fratri ac successori, paria fidelitatis officia præstitit. Longa enim oratione, toti Anglorum nationi persuasit, quod vir prouidus, præstans, fortis, genere nobilissimus, & imperio dignissimus esset: quo salutatus a populo fuit, atque in Regem coronatus. HVbert Walter bishop of Sarisburie a vertuous man, and famous for his good wit and pietie, was one of the chiefest of them that followed King Richard into Syria going against the Sarracens. As he returned from Palestina & came in his iourney into Silicia, he there hard of the ill fortune of the King being fallen into his enemies handes, and thereupon leauing his iourney homewards, he went presently and in all haste to the place where the King was captiued, whom the King immediatly vpon his comming sent into England, that by the authoritie of the Council, a tribute might be collected for his redemption: which this Hubert performed with great diligence, and deliuered the King. After this hee was made Archbishop of Canterburie, and after the death of King Richard he shewed the like dueties of fidelitie and trust to his brother Iohn that succeeded him. For by a long Oration he perswaded the whole Nation of the Englishmen, that he was a very circumspect man, vertuous, valiant, borne of Noble parentage, and most worthy of the Crowne. Whereupon he was so receiued of all the people and crowned King. He wrote certaine bookes, and died at the last with very great griefe of minde, in the yeere 1205. hauing bene Archbishop the space of 11. yeeres 8. moneths and fiue dayes, by reason of the ciuill discords abroade, whereby all things went topsie turuie, and in the raigne of King Iohn.

Where at length it was concluded, that the King according to his vowe ſhould take his iourney into Aſia, and the time thereof was also prefixed, which should be after the feast of S. Iohn Baptist the next yeere ensuing.

At which time William Longespee a worthie warriour, with the bishop of Worcester and certaine other great men in the Realme of England (mooued with the example of the French men) prepared themselues likewise to the same iourney.

It fell out in this enterprise, that about the beginning of October the French king assaulted and tooke Damiata, being the principall fort or hold of the Sarracens in all Egypt, Anno 1249. and hauing fortified the Citie with an able garrison left with the Duke of Burgundie, he remooued his tents from thence to goe Eastward. In whose armie followed William Longespee, accompanied with a piked number of English warriours retayning vnto him. But such was the disdaine of the Frenchmen against this William Longespee & the Englishmen that they could not abide them, but flouted them after an opprobrious maner with English tailes, insomuch that the French king himselfe had much adoe to keepe peace betweene them.

A fort wonne by the Englishmen.

The originall cause of this grudge betweene them beganne thus. There was not farre from Alexandria in Egypt a strong fort or castle replenished with great Ladies and riche treasure of the Sarracens: which holde it chanced the saide William Longespee with his companie of English souldiers to get, more by politique dexteritie then by open force of armes, wherewith hee and his retinue were greatly enriched. When the Frenchmen had knowledge hereof (they not being made priuie hereto) began to conceiue an heart burning against the English souldiers, and could not speake well of them after that.

A rich bootie also gotten by the Englishmen.

It happened againe not long after, that the saide William had intelligence of a companie of riche marchants among the Sarracens going to a certaine Faire about the parts of Alexandria, hauing their camels, asses and mules, richly loden with silkes, precious iewels, spices, golde, and siluer, with Cart loads of other wares, beside victuall and other furniture, whereof the souldiers then stood in great neede: he hauing secret knowledge hereof, gathered all the power of Englishmen vnto him that he could, and so by night falling vpon the Marchants, some he slew with their guides and conducters, some he tooke, some he put to flight: the Carts with the driuers, and with the oxen, camels, asses, and mules, with the whole cariage and victuals he tooke and brought with him, loosing in all the skirmish but one souldier and 8. of his seruitors: of whom notwithstanding some he brought home wounded to be cured.

The enuie of the Frenchmen to our English.

This being knowen in the Campe, forth came the French men which all this while loytered in their pauillions, and meeting this cariage by the way, tooke all the foresaide praye whole to themselues, rating the said William and the Englishmen for aduenturing and plluing out of the Campe without leaue or knowledge of their Generall, contrary to the discipline of warre. William said againe he had done nothing but he would answere to it, whose purpose was to haue the spoyle deuided to the behoofe of the whole armie.

William Longespee iustly forsaketh the French King.

When this would not serue, hee being sore grieued in his minde so cowardly to be spoyled of that, which hee so aduenturously had trauailed for, went to the King to complaine: But when no reason nor complaint would serue by reason of the proude Earle of Artoys the kings brother, which vpon spight and disdaine stoode against him, he bidding the King farewell saide hee would serue him no longer: and so William de Longespee with the rest of his companie breaking from the French hoste went to Achon. Vpon whose departure the Earle of Artoys saide, Now is the armie of Frenchmen wel ridde of these tailed people, which words spoken in great despight were ill taken of many good men that heard them.

But not long after when the keeper of Cayro and Babylonia, bearing a good mind to the Christian Religion, and being offended also with the Soldan, promised to deliuer the same to the French King, instructing him what course was best for him to take to accomplish it, the King hereupon in all haste sent for Willam Longespee, promising him a full redresse of all his iniuries before receiued: who at the Kings request came to him againe, and so ioyned with the French power.

After this it happened that the French King passing with his armie towardes Cayro aforesayde came to the great riuer Nilus, on the further part whereof the Soldan had pitched himselfe to withstand his comming ouer: there was at this time a Sarracen lately conuerted to Christ, seruing the Earle Robert the French Kings brother, who told him of the absence of the Soldan from his tents, and of a shallow foord in the riuer where they might easily passe ouer. Whereupon the saide Earle Robert & the Master of the Temple with a great power, esteemed to the third part of the Armie passed ouer the Riuer, after whom followed W. Longespee with his band of English souldiers. These being ioyned together on y other side of the water, encountred the same day with the Sarracens remaining in the tents & put them to the worst. Which victory being gotten, the French Earle ſurpriſed with pride and triumph, as though he had conquered the whole earth, would needes forward, deuiding himſelfe from the maine hoſte, thinking to winne the ſpurres alone. To whome certaine ſage men of the Temple, giuing him contrary counſell, aduiſed him not to doe ſo, but rather to returne and take their whole company with them, and ſo ſhould they be more ſure againſt all deceites and dangers, which might be layd priuily for them. The maner of that people (they ſayd) they better knewe, and had more experience thereof then he: alleaging moreouer their wearied bodies, their tired horſes, their famiſhed ſouldiers, and the inſufficiencie alſo of their number, which was not able to withſtand the multitude of the enemies, eſpecially at this preſent hunt, in which the aduerſaries did well ſee the whole ſtate of their dominion now to conſiſt either in winning all, or loſing all.

French

Which when the proude Earle did heare, being inflated with no leſſe arrogancie then ignorance, with opprobrious taunts reuiled them, calling them cowardly baſtards, and betrayers of the whole countrey, obiecting vnto them the common report of many, which ſayd, that the land of the holy croſſe might ſoone be wonne to Chriſtendome, were it not for rebellious Templaries, with the Hoſpitalaries, and their followers.

To theſe contumelious rebukes, when the maſter of the Temple anſwered againe for him and his fellowes, bidding them diſplay his enſigne when he would, and where he durſt, they were as ready to follow him, as he to goe before them, then began William de Longeſpee the worthy knight to ſpeake, deſiring the Earle to giue eare to thoſe men of experience, who had better knowledge of thoſe countries and people then had he, commending alſo their counſell to be diſcreete and wholeſome, and ſo turning to the maſter of the Temple, began with gentle words to mitigate him likewiſe. The knight had not halfe ended his talke, when the Earle taking his words out of his mouth, began to fume and ſweare, crying out of thoſe cowardly Engliſhmen with tailes: What a pure armie (ſayd he) ſhould we haue here, if theſe tailes and tailed people were purged from it, with other like words of villany, and much diſdayne: whereunto the Engliſh knight anſwering againe, well, Earle Robert (ſayd he) whereſoeuer you dare ſet your foote, my ſtep ſhall goe as farre as yours, and (as I beleeue) we goe this day where you ſhall not dare to come neere the taile of my horſe, as in deede in the euent it prooued true: for Earle Robert would needes ſet forward, weening to get all the glory to himſelfe before the comming of the hoſte, and firſt inuaded a litle village or caſtle, which was not farre of, called Manſor. The countrey Boores and Pagans in the villages, ſeeing the Chriſtians comming, ranne out with ſuch a maine crye and howte, that it came to the Soldans hearing, who was neerer then our men did thinke. In the meane time, the Chriſtians inuading and entring into the munition incircumſpectly, were pelted and paſhed with ſtones by them which ſtood aboue, whereby a great number of our men were loſt, and the armie ſore maymed, and almoſt in deſpaire.

Then immediatly vpon the ſame, commeth the Soldan with all his maine power, which ſeeing the Chriſtian armie to be deuided, and the brother ſeparated from the brother, had that which he long wiſhed for, and ſo incloſing them round about, that none ſhould eſcape, had with them a cruell fight.

Then the earle began to repent him of his heady raſhnes, but it was too late, who then ſeeing William the Engliſh knight doughtily fighting in the chief hunt of the enemies, cried vnto him moſt cowardly to flie, ſeeing God (ſaith he) doth fight againſt vs: To whome the Knight anſwering againe, God forbid (ſayth he) that my fathers ſonne ſhould runne away from the face of a Sarracen. The Earle then turning his horſe, fled away, thinking to auoid by the ſwiftnes of his horſe, and ſo taking the riuer Thafnis, oppreſſed with harneſſe, was there ſunken and drowned.

The cowardly fight of Earle Robert.

Thus the Earle being gone the Frenchmen began to diſpaire and ſcatter. Then William de Longeſpee bearing all the force of the enemies, ſtoode againſt them as long as he could, wounding and ſlaying many a Sarracen, till at length his horſe being killed, and his legges maimed, he could no longer ſtande, who yet notwithſtanding as he was downe, mangled their feete and legges, and did the Sarracens much ſorrow, till at laſt after many blowes & wounds, being ſtoned of the Sarracens, he yeelded his life. And after the death of him, the Sarracens ſetting vpon the reſidue of the armie, whome they had compaſſed on euery ſide, deuoured and deſtroied them all, inſomuch that ſcarſe one man remained aliue, ſauing two Templaries, one Hoſpitaler, and one poore raſcall ſouldier, which brought tidings hereof to the King.

The valiant ende of William Longeſpee.

And thus by the impudent and fooliſh hardines of that French Earle, the Frenchmen were diſcomfited, and that valiant Engliſh Knight ouermatched, to the griefe of all Chriſtian people, the glorie of the Sarracens, and the vtter deſtruction and ruine of the whole French armie, as afterwards it appeared.

The

The voyage of Prince Edward the sonne of King Henry the third into Asia, in the yeere 1270.

ABout the yeere of our Lord, 1267. Octobonus the Popes Legat being in England, prince Edward the sonne of King Henry, and diuers other Noble men of England tooke vpon them the crosse vpon S. Iohns day the Baptist, by the said Legates hands at Northhampton, to the reliefe of the Holy lande, and the subuersion of the enemies of the crosse of Christ. For which purpose, and for the better furnishing of the prince towards the iourney, there was granted him a subsidie throughout all the Realme, and in the moneth of May, in the yeere of our Lord, 1270. he began to set forward.

At Michelmas following, he with his companie came to Eguemortes, which is from Marsillia eight leagues westward, and there taking ship againe (hauing a merrie & prosperous wind) within ten daies arriued at Tunez, where he was with great ioy welcommed, and intertained of the Christian princes that there were to this purpose assembled, as of Philip the French King, whose father Lodouicus died a litle before, of Carolus the King of Sicilia, and the two Kings of Nauarre, and Arragon, and as this Lord Edward came thither for his father the King of England, thither came also Henry the sonne of the King of Almaine for his father, who at his returne from the voyage, was slaine in a Chappell at Viterbium.

When prince Edward demaunded of these Kings and princes what was to be done, they answered him againe, and said, the prince of this citie and the prouince adioyning to the same, hath bene accustomed to pay tribute vnto the king of Sicily euery yeere: and now for that the same hath bene for the space of seuen yeeres vnpaied and more, therefore we thought good to make inuasion vpon him. But the King knowing the same tribute to be but iustly demanded, hath now according to our owne desire satisfied for the time past, and also paid his tribute before hand.

Then said he, My Lords, what is this to the purpose? are we not here all assembled, and haue take vpon vs the Lords Character to fight against the infidels & enemies of Christ: what meane you then to conclude a peace with them. God forbid we should do so, for now ꝑ land is plaine and hard, so that we may approch ꝑ holy city Ierusalem. Then said they, now haue we made a league with them, neither is it lawful for vs to breake the same. But let vs returne againe to Sicilia, and when the winter is past we may well take shipping to Acra. But this counsel nothing at all liked him, neither did he shewe himselfe wel pleased therewith: but after he had made them a princely banket, he went into his closet or priuy chamber from amongst them, neither would be partaker of any of that wicked money which they had taken. They notwithstanding continuing their purpose, at the next merry wind tooke shipping, and for want of ships left 200. of their men a shoare, crying out, and piteously lamenting for the peril and hazard of death that they were in: wherewith prince Edward being somewhat mooued to compassion, came backe againe to the land, and receiued and stowed them in his owne ships, being the last that went aboord.

Within seuen daies after, they arriued in the kingdome of Sicilia, ouer against the citie Trapes, casting their ankers a league from thence within the sea, for that their shippes were of great burden, and throughly fraught: and from the hauen of the citie, they sent out barges and boates to receiue and bring such of the Nobilitie to land as would, but their horses for the most part, and all their armour they kept still within boord.

At length towards the euening, the sea began to be rough, & increased to a great tempest and a mighty: insomuch that their ships were beaten one against anothers sides, and drowned there was of them at that tempest lying at anker more then 120. with all their armour and munition, with innumerable soules besides, and that wicked money also which they had taken before, likewise perished, and was lost.

But the tempest hurt not so much as one ship of prince Edwards, who had in number 13. nor yet had one man lost thereby, for that (as it may be presupposed) he consented not to the wicked counsell of the rest.

When in the morning the princes and kings came to the sea side, and saw al their ships drowned, and saw their men and horses in great number cast vpon the land drowned, they had ful heauie hearts, as well they might, for of all their ships and mariners, which were in number 1500. besides the common souldiers, there was no more saued then the mariners of one onely ship, and they in this wise.

There was in that ship a good and wise Matrone, a Countesse or an Earles wife, perceiuing the tempest to grow, & fearing her selfe, called to her the M. of the ship, & asked him whether in attempting tempting to the ſhoare it were not poſſible to ſaue themſelues: he anſwered, þ to ſaue þ ſhip it was impoſſible, howbeit þ men that were therin by Gods helpe he doubted not. Then ſaid the Counteſſe, for the ſhippe force no whit, ſaue the ſoules therein, and haue to thee double the value of the ſhippe: who immediatly hoyſing the ſailes with all force, ranne the ſhippe aground ſo neere the ſhoare as was poſſible, ſo that with the vehemencie of the weather and force he came withall, braſt the ſhip and ſaued all that was within the ſame, as the Maſter had ſhewed, and ſayd before.

Then the Kings and Princes (altering their purpoſe after this ſo great a ſhipwracke) returned home againe euery one vnto their owne lands. Onely Edward the ſonne of the King of England, remained behind with his men and ſhips, which the Lord had ſaued and preſerued.

Then Prince Edwarde renouating his purpoſe, tooke ſhipping againe, and within fifteene dayes after Eaſter arriued he at Acra, and went aland, taking with him a thouſand of the beſt ſouldiers and moſt expert, and taried there a whole moneth, refreſhing both his men and horſes, and that in this ſpace he might learne and knowe the ſecrets of the land. After this he tooke with him ſixe or ſeuen thouſand ſouldiers, and marched forward twentye miles from Acra, and tooke Nazareth, and thoſe that he founde there he ſlewe, and afterward returned againe to Acra. But their enemies following after them, thinking to haue ſet vpon them at ſome ſtreight or other aduantage, were eſpied by the Prince, and returning againe vpon them gaue a charge, and ſlewe many of them, and the reſt they put to flight.

Nazareth taken by the Prince.

After this, about Midſommer when the Prince had vnderſtanding that the Sarracens began to gather at Cakowe which was forty miles from Acra, he marching thither ſet vpon them very earely in the morning, and ſlewe of them more then a thouſand, the reſt he put to flight, and tooke riche ſpoiles, marching forward till they came to a Caſtle named Caſtrum peregrinorum, ſituate vpon the ſea coaſt, & taried there that night, & the next day they returned againe toward Acra.

A victorie againſt the Sarracens, wherein 1000. of them were ſlaine.

In the meane ſeaſon the King of Ieruſalem ſent vnto the Noble men of Cyprus, deſiring them to come with ſpeede to ayde the Chriſtians, but they would not come, ſaying they would keepe their owne land, and goe no further. Then Prince Edward ſent vnto them, deſiring that at his requeſt they would come and ioyne in ayde with him: who immediatly thereupon came vnto him with great preparation and furniture for the warres, ſaying, that at his commandement they were bound to doe no leſſe, for that his predeceſſors were ſometimes the gouernours of that their land, and that they ought alwaies to ſhewe their fidelitie to the Kings of England.

The Princes of Cyprus acknowledge obedience to the kings of England.

Then the Chriſtians being herewith animated, made a thirde voyage or roade, and came as farre as the forte called Vincula ſancti Petri, and to S. Georgius, and when they had ſlaine certaine there, not finding any to make reſiſtance againſt them, they retired againe from whence they came: when thus the fame of Prince Edward grewe amongſt his enemies, and that they began to ſtand in doubt of him, they deuiſed among themſelues how by ſome pollicie they might circumuent him and betray him. Whereupon the great Prince and Admirall of Ioppa ſent vnto him, faining himſelfe vnder great deceite willing to become a Chriſtian, and that he would draw with him a great number beſides, ſo that they might be honourably intertained and vſed of the Chriſtians. This talke pleaſed the Prince well, and perſwaded him to finiſh the thing he had ſo well begun by writing againe, who alſo by the ſame meſſenger ſent and wrote backe vnto him diuers times about the ſame matter, whereby no miſtruſt ſhould ſpring.

This meſſenger (ſayth mine Author) was one ex caute nutritis, one of the ſtonie hearted, that neither feared God, nor dreaded death.

The fift time when this meſſenger came, and was of the Princes ſeruants ſearched according to the manner and cuſtome what weapon and armour he had about him, as alſo his purſe, that not ſo much as a knife could be ſeene about him, he was had vp into the Princes chamber, & after his reuerence done, he pulled out certaine letters, which he deliuered the Prince from his lorde, as he had done others before. This was about eight daies after Whitſontide, vpon a Tueſday, ſomewhat before night, at which time the Prince was layd vpon his bed bare headed, in his Jerkin, for the great heate and intemperature of the weather.

When the Prince had read the letters, it appeared by them that vpon the Saterday next following, his lorde would be there ready to accompliſh all that he had written and promiſed. The report of theſe newes by the Prince to the ſtanders by, liked them well, who drewe ſomewhat backe to conſult thereof amongeſt themſelues. In the meane time, the Meſſenger kneeling, and making his obeiſance to the Prince (queſtioning further with him) put his hand to his belt, as though he would haue pulled out ſome ſecrete letters, and ſuddenly he pulled out an inuenomed knife, thinking to haue ſtroken the Prince into the belly therwith as he laye: but the Prince lifting vp his hand to defend the blowe, was ſtriken a great wound into the arme, and being about to fetch another stroke at him, the prince againe with his foote tooke him such a blowe, that he felde him to the ground: with that the prince gate him by the hand, and with such violence wasted the knife from him, that he hurt himselfe there with on the forehead, and immediatly thrust the same into the belly of the Messenger and striker, and slew him.

The princes seruants being in the next chamber not farre off, hearing the buskling, came with great haste running in, and finding the Messenger lying dead in the floore, one of them tooke vp a stoole, and beate out his braines: whereat the prince was wroth for that he stroke a dead man, and one that was killed before.

But the rumour of this accident as it was strange, so it went soone thorowout all the Court, and from thence among the common people, for which they were very heauy, and greatly discouraged. To him came also the Captaine of the Temple, and brought him a costly and precious drinke against poison, least the venome of the knife should penetrate the liuely bloode, and in blaming wise sayde vnto him: did I not tell your Grace before, of the deceite and subtiltie of this people? Notwithstanding, sayde he, let your Grace take a good heart, you shall not die of this wound, my life for yours. But straight way the Surgions and Physitions were sent for, and the prince was dressed, and within fewe dayes after, the wound began to putrifie, and the flesh to looke dead and blacke: whereupon they that were about the prince, began to mutter among themselues, and were very sad and heauy.

Which thing he himself perceiuing, said vnto them: why mutter you thus among your selues? what see you in me, can I not be healed? tell me the trueth, be ye not afraid. Whereupon one said vnto him, and like your Grace you may be healed, we mistrust not, but yet it will be very painefull for you to suffer. May suffering (sayd he againe) restore health? yea sayth the other, on paine of loosing my heade. Then sayd the prince, I commit my selfe vnto you, doe with me what you thinke good.

Then sayd one of the Physitians, is there any of your Nobles in whome your Grace reposeth speciall trust? to whome the prince answered yea, naming certaine of the Noble men that stoode about him. Then said the Physitian to the two, whome the prince first named, the Lorde Edmund, and the Lord Iohn Voysye. And doe you also faithfully loue your Lorde and Prince? Who answered both, yea vndoubtedly. Then sayth he, take you away this Gentlewoman and Ladie (meaning his wife) and let her not see her Lorde and husband, till such time as I will you thereunto. Whereupon they tooke her from the princes presence, crying out, and wringing her hands. Then sayd they vnto her, be you contented good Ladie and Madame, it is better that one woman should weepe a little while, then that all the Realme of England should weepe a great season.

Then on the morrow they cut out all the dead and inuenomed flesh out of the princes arme, and threw it from them, and said vnto him: how cheereth your Grace, we promise you within these fifteene dayes you shall shew your selfe abroad (if God permit) vpon your horsebacke, whole and well as euer you were. And according to the promise he made the prince, it came to passe, to the no little comfort and admiration of all his subiects.

When the great Souldan heard hereof, and that the prince was yet aliue, he could scarsely beleeue the same, and sending vnto him three of his Nobles and princes, excused himselfe by them, calling his gods to witnes that the same was done neither by him nor his consent. Which princes and Messengers standing a loofe off from the Kings sonne, worshipping him, fell flat vpon the ground: you (sayd the prince) doe reuerence me, but yet you loue me not. But they vnderstood him not, because he spake in English vnto them, speaking by an Interpretor: neuertheless he honorably intertained them, and sent them away in peace.

Thus when prince Edward had beene eighteene monethes in Acra, he tooke shipping about the Assumption of our Lady, as we call it, returning homeward, and after seuen weekes he arriued in Sicilia at Trapes, and from thence traueled through the mids of Apulia, till he came to Rome, where he was of the Pope honorably intertained.

From thence he came into France, whose fame and noble prowes was there much buted among the common people, and enuied of the Nobilitie, especially of the Earle of Chalons, who thought to haue intrapped him and his companye, as may appeare in the storie: but prince Edward continued foorth his iourney to Paris, and was there of the French King honorably intertained: and after certaine daies he went thence into Gascoyne, where he taried till that he heard of the death of the King his father, at which time he came home, and was crowned King of England, in the yeere of our Lord, 1274.

RObert Turneham Franciſcan, a notable profeſſor of Diuinitie, was with great dignitie Prior of the College of his Order in the famous Mart Towne of Lynne, ſituate vpon the riuer of Iſis in Norfolke. Prince Edward ſurnamed the Long, the ſonne of Henrie the third, prepared his warlike voyage againſt the Sarracens dwelling in Syria, in the yeere of our Lorde, 1268. For the which expedition ſome earneſt preacher was ſought to ſtirre vp ꝑ peoples mindes in the cauſe of religion. And this Turneham ſeemed to the Prince moſt worthy to performe that office: ſo that he being appointed as it were a ſtandard bearer, went into Syria with the Engliſh armie, and performed his duetie with good commendation. He floriſhed in the yeere of Chriſt 1280. ſetting forth diuers workes vnder the ſame King Edward the firſt of that name after the Conqueſt.

IOhn Mandeuil Knight, borne in the towne of S. Albons, was ſo well giuen to the ſtudie of learning from his childhood, that he ſeemed to plant a good part of his felicitie in the ſame: for he ſuppoſed that the bondue of his birth would nothing auaile him, except he could render the ſame more honourable by his knowledge in good letters. Hauing therefore well grounded him ſelfe in religion by reading the Scriptures, he applied his ſtudies to the arte of Phyſicke, a profeſſion worthy a noble wit: but amongſt other things, he was rauiſhed with a mightie deſire to ſee the greater partes of the world, as Aſia and Africa. Hauing therefore prouided all things neceſſarie for his iourney, he departed from his countrey in the yeere of Chriſt, 1332, and as another Vlyſſes returned home, after the ſpace of 34. yeeres, and was then knowen to a very fewe. In the time of his trauaile he was in Scythia, the greater and leſſe Armenia, Egypt, both Lybias, Arabia, Syria, Media, Meſopotamia, Perſia, Chaldæa, Greece, Illyrium, Tartarie, and diuers other kingdomes kingdomes of the world: and hauing gotten by this meanes the knowledge of the languages, least so many and great varieties, and things miraculous, whereof himselfe had bene an eie witnes, should perish in obliuion, he committed his whole trauell of 33. yeeres to writing in three diuers tongues, English, French and Latine. Being arriued againe in England, and hauing seene the wickednes of that age, he gaue out this speach: In our time (sayd he) it may be spoken more truely then of olde, that vertue is gone, the Church is vnder foote, the Clergie is in errour, the deuill raigneth, and Simonie beareth the sway, &c.

He died at Leege, in the yeere 1372. the 17. day of Nouember, being there buried in the Abbie of the Order of the Guilielmites.

The Tombe and Epitaph of Sir Iohn Mandeuil, in the citie of Leege, spoken of by Ortelius, in his booke called Itinerarium Belgiæ, in this sort.

Fol. 15. 16. MAgna & populosa Leodij suburbia, ad collium radices, in quorum iugis multa sunt, & pulcherrima monasteria, inter quæ magnificum illud, ac nobile D. Laurentio dicatum, ab Raginardo Episcopo. Est in hac quoque regione, vel suburbijs Leodij, Guilielmitarum Cœnobium, in quo Epitaphium hoc Ioannis à Mandeuille, excepimus.

Epitaphium. Hic iacet vir nobilis, D. Ioannes de Mandeuille, aliter dictus ad Barbam, Miles, Dominus de Campdi, natus de Anglia, Medicinæ professor, deuotissimus, orator, & bonorum largissimus pauperibus erogator, qui toto quasi orbe lustrato, Leodij diem vitæ suæ clausit extremum. Anno Dom. 1371. Mensis Nouembris, Die 17.

Hæc in lapide: in quo cælata viri armati imago, Leonem calcantis, barba bifurcata, ad caput manus benedicens, & vernacula hæc verba: Vos qui passez sor mi, pour l'amour deix prayes por mi. Clipeus erat vacuus, in quo olim fuisse dicebant laminam æream, & eius in ea itidem cælata insignia, Leonem videlicet argenteum, cui ad pectus lunula rubea in campo cæruleo, quem Limbus ambiret denticulatus ex auro. Eius nobis ostendebant, & cultros, ephipiáque, & calcaria quibus vsum fuisse asserebant, in peragrando toto ferè terrarum orbe, vt clarius testatur eius Itinerarium, quod typis etiam excusum passim habetur.

Commendatio breuis terræ Hieroſolimitanæ.

CVm terra Hieroſolimitana, terra promiſſionis filiorũ Dei, dignior cũctis mundi terris ſit habẽda multis ex cauſis, & præcipuè illâ, quod Deus conditor cœli & mundi, ipſam tanti dignatus fuit æſtimare, vt in eo proprium filium ſaluatorem mundi Chriſtum exhibuerit generi humano per incarnationem ex intemerata Virgine, & per eius conuerſationem humillimã in eadem, ac per doloroſam mortis ſuæ conſummationem ibidem, atque indè per eius admirandam reſurrectionem, ac aſcenſionem in cœlum, & poſtremò quia creditur illic in fine ſeculi reuerſurus, & omnia iudicaturus: certum eſt, quòd ab omnibus qui Chriſtiano nomine à Chriſto dicuntur, ſit tanquam à ſuis proprijs hæredibus diligenda, & pro cuiuſque poteſtate ac modulo honoranda. A principibus quidem, & potentibus vt ipſam conentur de infidelium manibus recuperare, qui eam iam pridem à nobis, noſtris exigentibus meritis, abſtulerunt, & per annos heu plurimos poſſederunt: a mediocribus autem & valentibus, vt per peregrinationem deuotam loca tam pia, & veſtigia Chriſti ac diſcipulorum tam Sancta, principaliter in remiſſionem viſitent delictorum. Ab impotentibus verò, & impeditis, quatenus ſupradictos vel hortentur, vel in aliquo modo iuuent, ſeu certè fideles fundant orationes. Verum quia iam noſtris temporibus verius quàm olim dici poteſt, Loquitur ſecundum tempora in quibus vixit.

Virtus, Eccleſia, Clerus, damon, ſymonia, Ceſſat, calcatur, errat, regnat, dominatur, ecce iuſto Dei iudicio, credita eſt terra tam inclyta, & ſacroſancta impiorum manibus Saracenorũ, quod non eſt abſq; dolore pijs mentibus audiendum, & recolendum. EGO Ioannes Mandeuill militaris ordinis ſaltem gerens nomen, natus & educatus in terra Angliæ, in villa sancti Albani,ducebar in Addolescentia mea tali inspiratione,vt quamuis non per potentiam, nec per vires proprias poslem prælatam terram suis hæredibus recuperare, item tamen per aliquod temporis spacium peregrinari ibidem, & salutarem aliquantulum de propinquo. Vnde in anno ab Incarnatione Domini 1322. imposui me nauigationi Marsilienſis maris & vsque in hoc temporis, Anni 1355. scilicet,per 33.annos in transmarinis partibus mansi, peregrinatus sum,ambulaui,& circuiui multas,ac diuersas patrias, regiones,prouincias,& insulas, Turciam, Armeniam maiorem,& minorem,Ægyptum,Lybiam bassam & altam,Syriam,Arabiam,Persiam,Chaldeam,Æthiopię partem magnam,Tartariam, Amazoniã,Indiam minorem, & mediam,ac partem magnam de maiori, & in istis, & circum istas regiones,multas insulas,Ciuitates,vrbes,castra,villas,& loca,vbi habitant variæ gentes, aspectuum, morum,legum, ac rituum diuersorum : Attamen quia summo desiderio in terra promissionis eram,ipsam diligentius per loca vestigiorum filij Dei perlustrare curaui,& diutius in illa steti. Quapropter & in hac prima parte huius operis iter tam peregrinandi, quam nauigandi,à partibus Angliæ ad ipsam describo,& loca notabiliter sancta, quæ intra eandem sunt breuiter cõmemoro & diligenter, quatenus peregrinis tam in itinere quam in prouentione valeat hæc descriptio in aliquo deseruire.

Ioannis Mandiuilli peregrinatio,per tres & triginta annos continuata.

Iter ab Anglia tam per terras quam per aquas vsq; in Constantinopolim.

QVi de Hybernia,Anglia,Scotia, Noruegia, aut Gallia iter arripit ad partes Hierosolymitanas potest saltem vsq; ad Imperialem Græciæ Ciuitatem Cõstantinopolim eligere sibi modum proficiscendi,siue per terras,siue per aquas. Et si peregrinando eligit transigere viam, tendat per Coloniam Agrippinam, & sic per Almaniam in Hungariam ad Montlusant Ciuitatem,sedem Regni Hungariæ.Et est Rex Hungarię multum potẽs istis temporibus.Nam tenet & Sclauoniam,& magnam partem Regni Comannorum, & Hungariam,& partem Regni Russiæ. Oportet vt peregrinus in finibus Hungariæ transeat magnum Danubij flumen, & vadat in Belgradum; Hoc flumen oritur inter Montana Almaniæ, & currens versus Orientem, recipit in se 40. flumina antequam finiatur in mare. De Belgrade intratur terra Bulgariæ,& transitur per Pontem petrinum fluuij Marroy,& per terram Pyncenars, & tunc intratur Græcia,in Ciuitates,Sternes,Asmopapc,& Andrinopolis,& sic in Constantinopolim, vbi communiter est sedes Imperatoris Græciæ. Qui autem viam eligit per aquas versus Constantinopolim nauigare, accipiat sibi portum, prout voluerit, propinquum siue remotum, Marsiliæ, Pisi, Ianuæ,Venetijs,Romæ,Neapoli,vel alibi : sicque transeat Tusciam, Campaniam,Italiam,Corsicam, Sardiniam,vsque in Siciliam,quæ diuiditur ab Italia per brachium maris non magnum. In Sicilia est mons Ætna iugiter ardens,qui ibidem appellatur Mons Gibelle, & præter illum habentur ibi loca Golthan vbi sunt septem leucæ quasi semper ignem spirantes: secundum diuersitatem colorum harum flammarum estimant Incolæ annum fertilem fore, vel sterilem, siccum vel humidum, calidum, vel frigidum : hæc loca vocant caminos Infernales, & à finibus Italiæ vsque ad ista loca sunt 25.miliaria. Sunt autem in Sicilia aliqua Pomeria in quibus inueniuntur frondes, flores, & fructus per totum annum, etiam in profunda hyeme. Regnum Siciliæ est bona, & grandis insula habens in circuitu ferè leucas 300. Et ne quis erret, vel de facili reprehendat quoties scribo leucam, intelligendum est de leuca Lombardica,quæ aliquantò maior est Geometrica; & quoties pono numerum,sub intelligatur fere,vel circiter,siue citra, & dietam intendo ponere,de 10. De vrbe Constantinopoli,& reliquijs ibidem contentis.

COnstantinopolis pulchra est Ciuitas, & nobilis, triangularis in forma, firmiterque murata,cuius duę partes includũtur mari Hellesponto,quòd plurimi modò appellant brachium

ſancti Georgij,& aliqui Buke,Troia vetus.Verſus locum vbi hoc brachium exit de mari eſt lata terræ planities,in quà antiquitus ſtetit Troia Ciuitas de qua apud Poetas mira leguntur,ſed nunc valdè modica apparent veſtigia Ciuitatis. In Conſtantinopoli habentur multa mirabilia, ac inſuper multæ ſanctorum venerandæ relliquię, ac ſuper omnia, precioſiſſima Crux Chriſti, ſeu maior pars illius,& tunica inconſutilis, cum ſpongia & arundine,& vno clauorum,& dimidia parte coronæ ſpineæ,cuius altera medietas ſeruatur in Capella Regis Franciæ,Pariſijs.Nam & ego indignus diligenter pluribus vicibus reſpexi partem vtramque : dabatur quoque mihi de illa Pariſijs vnica ſpina, quam vſque nunc precioſe conſeruo, & eſt ipſa ſpina non lignea ſed velut de iuncis marinis rigida,& pũgitiua. Eccleſia Cõſtantinopolitana in honorem ſanctę Sophiæ,id eſt,ineffabilis Dei ſapientiæ dedicata dicitur,& nobiliſſima vniuerſarum mundi Eccleſiarum,tam in ſchemate artificioſi operis,quàm in ſeruatis ibi ſacroſanctis Relliquijs : nam & continet corpus ſanctæ Annæ matris noſtræ Dominæ tranſlatum illuc per Reginam Helenam ab Hieroſolymis: & corpus S.Lucæ Euangeliſtæ tranſlatum de Bethania Iudeæ; Et Corpus beati Ioannis Chryſoſtomi ipſius Ciuitatis Epiſcopi, cum multis alijs relıquijs precioſis; quoniam eſt ibi vas grande cum huiuſmodi reliquijs velut marmoreum de Petra Enhydros; quod iugiter de ſeipſo defudans aquam, ſemel in anno inuenitur ſuo ſudore repletum. Ante hanc Eccleſiam, ſuper columnam marmoream habetur de ære aurato opere fuſorio, magna imago Iuſtiniani quondam Imperatoris ſuper equum ſedentis : fuit autem primitus in manu imaginis fabricata ſphæra rotunda,quæ iam diu è manu ſua ſibi cecidit,in ſignum quòd Imperator multarum terrarum dominium perdidit. Namque ſolebat eſſe Dominus, Romanorum, Gtæcorum,Aſiæ,Syrię,Iudeæ,Ægypti,Arabiæ,& Perſiæ,at nunc ſolum retinet Cręciam,cum aliquibus terris Greciæ adiacentibus, ſicut Caliſtrum, Cholchos, Ortigo, Tylbriam, Minos, Flexon,Melos,Carpates, Lemnon, Thraciam,& Macedoniam totam : Suntq; ſub eo Caypoplij,& alti Pyntenardi,ac maxima pars Commannorum. Porrò imago tenet manum eleuatam & extentam in orientem,velut in ſignum cominationis ad Orientales infideles. De prædicta terra Thraciæ fuit Philoſophus Ariſtoteles oriundus in Ciuitate Stageres, & eſt ibi in loco tumba eius velut altare, vbi & ſingulis annis certo diè celebratur à populo feſtum illius, ac ſi fuiſſet ſanctus.Temporibus ergò magnorum conſiliorum conueniunt illuc ſapientes terræ,reputantes ſibi per inſpirationem immitti conſilium optimum de agendis. Item ad diuiſionem Thraciæ & Macedoniæ ſunt duo mirabiliter alti montes,vnus Olympus, alter Athos,cuius vltimi vmbra oriente ſole apparet ad 76. miliaria, vſque in inſulam Lemnon. In horum cacumine montium ventus non currit, nec aer mouetur, quod frequentèr probatum eſt per ingenium Aſtronomorum, qui quandoque aſcendentes ſcripſerunt literas in puluere,quas ſequenti anno inuenerunt quaſi recentèr ſcriptas, & quia eſt ibi purus aer ſine mixtione elementi aquæ,neceſſe eſt vt aſcendentes habeant ſecum ſpongias aquæ plenas pro anhelitus reſpiratione : In prædicta autem ſanctæ ſophiæ Eccleſia, (ſicut ibidem dicitur,) voluit olim quidam Imperator corpus cuiuſdam ſui defuncti ſepelire cognati: cuius cum foderetur ſepulchrum, ventum eſt ad mauſoleum antiquum in quo ſuper incineratum corpus iacebat diſcus auri puri,& erat ſculptum in eo literis Græcis, Hebraicis, & Latinis ſic. Ieſus Chriſtus naſcetur de Virgine, & ego credo in eum. Et erat ſimul inſcripta data defuncti ſecundum modum illius temporis, quæ continebat duo millia annorum ante incarnationem ipſius Chriſti de Maria Virgine. Seruatur quoque hodierno tempore eadem patina in Theſaurario eiuſdem Eccleſiæ, & dicitur illud corpus fuiſſe Hermetis ſapientis. Omnes quidem,terrarum,regionum,& inſularum homines, qui iſti Greco obediunt Imperatori ſunt Chriſtiani, & baptizati, tamen variant ſinguli in aliquo articulo fidem ſuam a noſtra vera fide Catholica & diuerſificant in multis ſuos ritus à ritibus Romanæ Eccleſiæ, quia iamdiu omiſerunt obedire Pontifici Romano, dicentes,quoniam beatus Petrus Apoſtolus habuit ſedem in Antiochia, quamuis paſſus fuit in Roma : Idcirco patriarcha Antiochenus habet in illis Orientalibus partibus ſimilem poteſtatem,quàm Pontifex Romanus in iſtis Occidentalibus. Imperator etiam Conſtantinopolitanus creat eorum patriarcham, & inſtituit pro ſua voluntate Archiepiſcopos, & Epiſcopos, & confert dignitates,& beneficia, ſimiliter inuenta occaſione deſtituit,deponit,& priuat.

Via tam per terras quam per aquas à Conſtantinopoli vſque "Acharon.

"Vel Achon.

A Conſtantinopoli qui voluerit ire pedes, tranſibit ſtatim nauigio Brachium Sancti Georgij quod ſatis eſt ſtrictum, ibique ad Ruphinal quod eſt forte caſtrum, inde ad Puluereal,& hinc ad caſtrũ Synopolũ. Ex tunc intrat Capadociam, terram latam ſed plenam altis montibus, deinde Turciam ad portum Theueron, & ad Ciuitatem ita dictam, nunc munitam firmis turribus, ac muris, per quam transit fluuius Reglay. Postea transitur sub Alpibus Noyremont, & per valles de Mallenbrinis in districto Rupium, ac per villam Doronarum, & alias villas adiacentes flluuijs Reglay, & Granconiæ, sicque peruenitur ad Antiochiam minorem super Reglay, quæ vocatur nobilior Ciuitas Syriæ: Notandum autem quòd Regnum olim dictum Syria, modò communiter vocatur Suria. Ista verò Antiochia, est magna, pulchra, ac firma, licet quandoque maior, pulchrior, ac firmior fuerit. Tunc autem transitur per Ciuitates Laonsam, Gibellam, Tortusiam, Toruplam, & Berythum super mare vbi sanctus Georgius fertur occidisse Draconem. Hinc pergitur in Ciuitatem nunc dictam Acon, quondam Ptolomaidem, antiquitùs Acharon, quæ tempore quo eam vltimò Christiani tenebant circa annũ incarnationis Domini 1280. erat Ciuitas valdè fortis, sed modò apparent eius magnæ ruinæ. Porrò a Constantinopoli poterit peregrinus faciliùs versus Hierosolymorũ partes per mare nauigare quã per terras peregrinare prædictas, si deus illi propitius fuerit, & mare fidẽ cõseruauerit. Qui ergò a Cõstantinopoli iter trãsire nauigando disponit, tendat ad Ciuitatem "Myrnam vbi nunc ossa Sancti Nicholai venerantur, & sic procedendo per multa maritima loca veniet ad Insulam Sio vbi crescit gummi mastix lucidum: Inde ad Insulam Pathmos Sancti Ioannis Euangelistæ, & ad Ephesum vbi idem noscitur sepultus: hanc totam minorem Asiam tenent nunc pessimi Turci, & eam appellant minorem Turciam. Post Ephesum nauigatur per plures Insulas vsq; Pateram Ciuitatem, vndè oriundus fuit beatus Nicholaus, ac per Myrrheam vbi stetit Ephesus, vbi nascuntur fortia vina valdè, deinde ad Insulam Cretæ, hinc Coos postea Lango, vndè Hypocrates Medicus dicitur natus: tuncq; ad grandem Insulam Rhodum: & sciendũ quod a Constantinopoli vsq; Rhodũ, per mare dicuntur ducẽtæ octuaginta leucæ. Hanc insulam totam tenent, & gubernant Christiani Hospitalarij nunc tẽporis, quæ quondam Colosse dicebatur: nam & multi Saracenorum adhuc eam sic appellant, vnde & Epistola, quam beatus Paulus ad habitatores huius Insulæ scripsit, intitulabatur ad Colossenses. Ab hoc loco nauigando in Cyprum, aspicitur absorptio Ciuitatis Sathaliæ, quæ sicut olim Sodoma dicitur perijsse, propter vnicum crimen contra naturam a quodam Iuuene petulante commissum. Sciendum quod a Rhodo ad Cyprum feruntur plenè quingentæ quinquaginta leucæ: Cyprus magna, & pulchra est Insula habeus Archiepiscopatũ, cum quinque Episcopatibus suffraganeis: Illuc Famogosta, est vnus de principalibus portibus mundi, in quo ferè omnium mercatores conueniunt nationum, tam Christianorum, quam multorum Paganorum, & similiter apud portum Limechon. Est ibi & Abbatia ordinis sancti Benedicti, in monte sanctæ Crucis, vbi dicitur saluati latronis seruari crux, qui in eadem cruce audiuit à Christo, Hodiè mecum eris in Paradiso. Corpus etiam sancti Hylarionis seruatur ibi, in castro Damers quod Rex Cypri facit diligentissimè custodiri: Vltrà modum fortia vina nascuntur in Cypro, quæ primo rubra, post annum albescunt, & quo vetustiora, eo albiora, ac magis odorifera, ac fortia efficiuntur. Vlteriùs pauciſſimæ villæ, aut Ciuitates sunt Christianorum, sed ferè omnia Saraceni possident infideles: et proh dolor, ab Anno 1200. incarnationis Domini aut circà, pacificè tenuerunt. Qui autem a Cypro prosperè legit spacia maris, poterit in duobus naturalibus diebus peruenire in portum Ioppæ, qui Iaffe nunc nuncupatur, & proximus est a Ierusalem, distans 16, tantum leucas, hoc est dieta cum dimidia. Et sciendum quod circa medium, inter Cyprum, & Iaffe est portus Tyri quondam munitissimæ Ciuitatis, hanc dum vltimo Saraceni à Christianis ceperunt turpissimè destruxerunt, custodientes iam curiosè portum, timore Christianorum. Iste portus non vocatur modò Tyrus, sed Sur, Nam & ab illa parte est ibi introitus terræ Suriæ. Ante istam Ciuitatem Tyrum habetur quidam lapis, super quem dominus noster Iesus Christus sedendo suis discipulis vel populis prædicauit. Vnde, & Christiani olim super hunc locum constructerunt Ecclesiam in nomine Saluatoris. Peregrinus vero qui ab hoc loco vult peregrinari, morosè sciat, quod ad octo leucas à Tyro in orientem est Sarepta Sydoniorum, vbi olim Elias Propheta filium viduæ suscitauit a morte. Itemq; sciat, quod a Tyro in vnica dieta pergere potest in Achon, siue Acharon supra scripta. Circa Acon versùs mare, ad 120. stadia, quorum 16. leucam constituunt, est mons Carmeli, vbi morabatur præfatus Elias, & super alium montem Villa Saffra vbi sanctus Iacobus, & Ioannes germani Apostoli nascebantur, & in quorum natiuitatis loco pulchra habetur Ecclesia. Item propè Acon ad ripam dictam Beleon, est fossa multum vtilis, & mirabilis quæ dicitur fossa Mennon, hæc est rotunda circumferentia, cuius diameter continet prope 100. cubitos, plena alba & resplendente arena, & munda ex qua conficitur mundum & perlucidum vitrum. Pro hac arena venitur per aquas, & per terras, & exportatur manibus & vehiculis propè & procul, & quantumcunque de die exhauritur, repleta manè altero reperitur: Et est in fossa ventus grandis & iugis, qui mirabiliter arenam commouere videtur. Si quis autem vitrum de hac arena

Via à Francia aut Flandria per ſolas terras vſque Ieruſalem.

ITineribus, quæ per terras, & per mare a noſtris partibus ducunt in terram promiſſionis deſcriptis, reſtat breuiter dicendum de alia via, per quam omnino mare tranſeundum non eſt, videlicet per Almaniam, per Bohemiam, per Ptuſſiam, & hinc per terram Paganorum regni Lituaniæ, & ſic per longam, & peſſimam terram primę Tartariæ vſque in Indiam: Dico autem Tartariæ primę, quoniam de hac exijt primus Imperator totius Tartariæ, qui ſemper vocatur Grand Can, quo vix maiorem mundus habet terrenum Dominum, excepto Imperatore ſuperioris Indiæ, de quibus in ſecunda & tertia huius tractatus partibus, aliquanto eſt diffuſius narrandum. Cuncti principes huius primæ Tartariæ, quorum ſummus ſemper vocatur Bachu, & moratur in Ciuitate Horda, reddunt Imperatori Grand Can, magna tributa. Eſt autem hæc prima Tartaria terra miſera & fabuloſa, & infructuoſa: hoc enim ſcio, quòd per aliquod tempus ſteti in ea, & perambulaui Inſulas, regiones, & terras circumiacentes, ſcilicet, Ruſſię, Inflau, Craco, Latton, Reſtau, & alias nonnullas: creſcunt namque in iſta Tartaria modica blada, pauca vina, & fructuum, ac frugum parua copia, exceptis herbis pro paſtu Beſtiarum, quarum ibi eſt abundantia: nam carnibus illarum veſcuntur pro omnibus cibarijs, ius earum ſorbentes, & pro potu bibentes lac de omni genere beſtiarum. Quin etiam pauperiores manducant canes, lupos, catos, ratos, talpas, ac mures, ac huiuſmodi beſtiolas omnes: ſed nec aliquis Princeps aut prælatus comedit vltra ſemel in diè, & hoc parcè, vel parciſſimè: & ſunt homines valdè immundi, quia non niſi benè diuites vtuntur mappis, linteaminibus, aut lineis indumentis: ſed nec habent copiam lignorum, vnde & fimum boum, ac omnium beſtiarum deficcatum ad ſolem accipiunt pro ignis materia, vbi ſe calefaciunt, & coquendo coquunt. Aeſtiuo tempore, cadunt ibi frequenter tempeſtates tonitruorum, fulminũ, & grandinum, quibus domus, arbores, beſtiæ, & homines, comburuntur, euelluntur, & occiduntur. Nam & quandoque ſubrepentè oritur ibi calor immoderatus, & improuiſo frigus immoderatum. Deinque cum terra illa, ſe multum inclinet ad polum Septentrionalem, fortius ibi gelare ſolet, & frequentius, ac diutius quàm ad partes noſtras, vnde & quaſi omnes habent ibi ſtupas, in quibus manducant, & operantur. Via de Cypro vel Ieruſalem vſque in Babyloniam Ægypti.

DEſcripto ſicut potui triplicitèr itinere in terram ſanctam, reſtat videre de duabus alijs vijs, quæ incidenter ſolent contingere peregrinis: Multi namque illorum ex ſpeciali deuotione deſiderant viſitare oſſa beatiſſimæ Virginis Catharinæ in monte Sinay: Cum igitur ipſis ſit neceſſarius Soldani Babyloniæ conductus eo quod Imperator ſit, & dominus omnium illarum terrarum, quidam poſtquam perueniunt in Cyprũ tenduut primò in Babyloniam Ægypti, pro impetrando conductu ſecuro, atque indè pergentes in Sinay vadunt in Ieruſalem. Quidam verò poſtquam perfecerunt peregrinationem Hieroſolymitanam, pergunt per terras ad Soldanum pro conductu, & tum in Sinay, propter quòd vtramque viam breuiter deſcribo. De Cypro in Ægyptum itur per mare relinquendo Hieroſolymorum terram ad manum ſiniſtram, & accipitur primus portus Ægypti, dictus Damaiata: ibi quondam fuit Ciuitas valdè munita, ſed quod Chriſtiani illam, prima & altera vice ceperunt, Sarraceni vltimò deſtruxerunt, & aliam remotius à mari eiuſdem nominis Ciuitatem ædificauerunt: Hinc venitur in portum Alexandriæ Ægypti, quæ eſt Ciuitas magna, pulchra, & fortis valde, ſed abſq; aquis potabilibus. plures Ecclesiæ à tempore Christianorum, sed Sarraceni non sustinentes picturas Sanctorum omnes parietes albauerunt. De Alexandria per terras venitur in Babyloniam Ægypti, quæ etiã fundata iacet supra prædictum Nilum fluuium: Dicitur autem hæc Babylonia minor ad differentiam magnæ Babyloniæ, siue Babel, vbi Deus linguas confudit olim, quæ tendendo inter Orientem & Septentrionem distat ab ista dictas circiter 40. nec est sub potestate Soldani, sed Imperatoris Persarum, qui illam tenet in homagio ab Imperatore Cathay, dicto, Grand Can. Hęc autem Babylonia Ægypti est Ciuitas grãdis & fortis, tamen valdè prope eam est alia maior dicta Cayr, in qua vt sæpiùs residet Soldanus, quanquam Babylonia nomen per seculum diffusius est cognitum. Altera autem via peregrinorum de Hierosolymis pro conductu tendentium ad Soldanum talis esse potest. Et qui in eundo rectum iter tenet, veniet in Ciuitatem dictam, Balbes, quæ est ad finem Regni Halapiæ: Sicque expleto Deserto, intratur terra Ægypti, quam ipsi Canopat vocant, & aliqui Mersur, atque ex tunc in Babyloniam, & Cayr prætatam: In ista verò Babylonia habetur pulchra Ecclesia Mariæ virginis, in loco vbi morabatur cum filio suo, & Ioseph tempore suæ fugæ, & creditur ibi contineri corpus Virginis Barbaræ.

De Pallatio Soldani, ac numero, & nominibus præteritorum Soldanorum.

CAyr ciuitas Imperialis & Regalis est valdè munita, & grandis, decorata sede propria Sarracenorum Regni, vbi Dominus eorum Soldanus cõmuniter residere solet, in suo Calabelick, id est, castro forti, & lato, ac in euecta rupe statuto. Siquidem Soldanus eorum lingua sonat nomen similis maiestatis, quo nos in Latino dicimus Cæsarem, aut Imperatorem. Pro custodia huius Castri sunt ibidem omni tempore morantes sex millia personarũ, & pro seruiendo, dum ibi residet, ipsi Soldano, qui omnes de Curia eadem accipiunt necessaria, & donatiua. Iste Imperator Soldanus, est Rex, Dominusque quinque Regnorum magnorum: Canopat, hoc est, Ægypti; totius Iudeæ, sicut olim Dauid, & Salomon; Halapiæ, in terra Machsyriæ, cuius ciuitas Damascus olim erat principalis; Arabiæ, quod est regnum valdè protensum, & cum his possidet dominatus omnium Caliphorum: ad quod sciendum, quòd quandoque fuerunt tres Caliphorum dominatus: Ex quibus primus Caliphus qui dicebatur Chaldęorum, & Arabum, erat sedes in Ciuitate Baldac. Alter Barbarorum & Affricorum, cuius erat sedes in Maroco super Mare Hispaniæ. Tertius Aegypti: Est autem Caliphus inter eos, velut inter nos Imperator, & Papa simul, scilicet, Dominus Temporalium, & spiritualium. Exactis igitur Caliphis circa annum incarnationis Christi 1150, primus Soldanorum fuit nominatus Saracon: secundus filius eius, Saladin, qui Anno 1190. cum Turcis totam ferè terram promissionis abstulit à Christianis. Et sub quo Richardus Rex Anglię cum alijs principibus Christianis custodiebat passum Rupium, ne ille sicut proposuerat transire, profecisset vltra. Tertius Melachsala, à quo sanctus Ludouicus rex Franciæ captiuabatur in bello. Quartus Turquenã, qui Regem prædictũ redimi dimisit pro pecunia. Quintus Meleth. Sextus Melethemes. Septimus Melec dayr, sub quo Edwardus Rex Angliæ intrauit cum nostris Syriam, damnificans plurimum Sarracenos. Octauus Melec salle. Nonus Elphi, qui Anno Incarnationis Domini 1289. destruxit in illis partibus enormiter Christianos, & penitus omnes inde fugauit, atque recepit Tripolim Ciuitatem. Decimus Melethasseras: hic cepit Anno Domini 1291. in octaua paschæ Accharon, fugatis vel occisis ex ea omnibus Christianis. Exinde amissis succedentium nominibus, sextus decimus dicebatur vel dicitur Melec Mandibron: sub isto steti ego per aliquod tempus stipendiarius in guerris suis contra Bedones, qui ei tunc temporis rebellabant. Horum etiam mores, & continentiam populorum, in sequentibus declarabo: sicut veraciter fateri possum, ipse ad filiam cuiusdam sui Principis me obtulit vxorare, & magnis dotare possessionibus, dummodò Christianitati resignassem: Eumque dimisi Soldanum, quando de partibus illis recessi. Soldanus præter homines ad sua castra seruanda deputatos, potest educere quoties velit in exercitum de hominibus de ipsius stipendijs viuentibus, & ad eius iugitèr mandata paratis, 20. millia armatorum, ex sola Ægypto: Et ex Syria, & Turcia, & alijs terris, 50. millia exceptis ruralibus, & Ciuitatum comitatibus, qui sunt velut innumerabiles. Miles quidem stipendiarius recipit de Curia pro anni Tempore 121. aureos, & sub tali stipendio seruit, cum tribus equis & vno Camelo. Quadringenti, vel Quingenti horum militum ordinati sunt sub vno rectore, qui vocatur Admirabilis: Et ille solus recipit de Curia tantum, sicut omnes sibi subditi: Notandum quod nunquam extraneus Nuncius ire permittitur ad Soldanum nisi auratis indutus vestibus,

De Campo Balſami in Egypto.

EXtra hanc ciuitatem Cayr, eſt campus ſeu ager Balſami: circa quod ſciendum, quòd optimum totius mundi Balſamum in magno creſcit Indiæ deſerto, vbi Alexander Magnus dicitur quondam locutus fuiſſe arboribus Solis & Lunæ, de quo in ſequentibus aliquid eſt ſcribendum. Illo itaque Indiæ Balſamo duntaxat excepto, non eſt liquor in vniuerſo orbe, qui huic creditur comparari. Has arbores ſeu arbuſta Balſami fecit quondã quidam de Caliphis Aegypti de loco Engaddi inter mare mortuum, & Ierico, vbi Domino volente excreuerat, eradicari, & in agro prædicto plantari: Eſt tamen hoc mirandum, quod vbicunque alibi ſiue propè, ſiue remotè plantantur, quamuis fortè virent, & exurgant, non tamen fructificant. Et è contrario apparet hoc miraculoſum, quod in hoc agro Cayr non ſe permittunt coli per Sarracenos, ſed ſolummodò per Chriſtianos, vel aliter non fructificarent: Et dicunt ipſi Sarraceni hoc ſæpiùs ſe tentaſſe: ſunt autem arbuſta trium vel quatuor pedum altitudinis, velut vſque ad renes hominis, & lignum eorum aſpiciendum, ſicut vitis ſylueſtris. Folia non marceſcunt, quin priùs marceſcant fructus, cernitur ad formam Cubebæ, & gummi eorum eſt Balſamum. Ipſi appellant arbores, Enochkalſe, fructum Abebifau, & liquorem gribalſe. Extrahitur verò gummi de arbuſculis per hunc modum: De lapide acuto, vel de oſſe fracto dant ſciſſuras per cortices in ligno, & ex vulneribus Balſamum lachrymatur, quod in vaſculis ſuſcipiunt, cauentes quoutpoſſunt, ne quid de illo labatur in terram. Nam ſi de ferro, vel alio metallo fieret inciſſura, liquor Balſami corrumperetur à ſua virtute. Veri Balſami virtutes ſunt magnæ quidem, & innumeroſæ: nam vix aliquis mortalium ſcire potuit omnes, quamuis inter Phyſicos quinquaginta ſcribantur. Rarò vtique Sarraceni vendunt Chriſtianis purum & verum Balſamum, quin priùs commiſceant, & falſificant ſicut ego ipſe frequenter vidi. Nam aliqui tertiam, ſeu quartam partem immiſcent terrebynthinę. Alii ramuſculos arbuſtarum, & fructus eorum coquunt in oleo, quod vendunt pro Balſamo: & quidam (quod peſſimum eſt) nil Balſami habentes, diſtillant oleum, per clauos gariophillos, & ſpicum nardum, & ſimiles odoriferas ſpecies, hoc pro Balſamo exponentes, atque aliis pluribus modis deludunt ementes. Sed & Mercatores inuicem nonnunquam ſophiſticant altera vice: probatio autem veri Balſami poteſt haberi pluribus modis, quorum aliquos hìc deſcribo. Eſt enim Citrini coloris, valdè clarum, & purum, & fortiſſimum in odoris fragrantia: ſi ergò apparet alterius quàm Citrini coloris, ſciatur non ſimplicis, ſed cuiuſcunque commixtæ ſubſtantiæ, vel ita ſpiſſum, vt non poſſit fluere, ſcitote ſophiſticatum. Item ſi poſueris modicum veri Balſami in manus palma, non poteris ſuſtinere eam linialiter in feruore ſplendentis Solis ad ſpacium recitandæ Dominicæ orationis. Item ſi in clara flamma ignis vel candelæ cereæ miſeris punctum cultelli cum gutta puri Balſami, ipſa gutta de facilè comburetur. Item ſi in ſcutella munda cum puro lacte caprino poſueris modicum veri Balſami, ſtatim miſcebit ſe, & vnietur cum lacte, ita vt Balſamum non cognoſcetur. Item è contrà, ſi poſueris verum Balſamum cum aqua Lympida, nunquam miſcebit ſe aquæ, etiamſi aquam moueris vehementer, imò Balſamum ſemper tendit ad fundum vaſis, nam eſt in ſui quanti-

Nilus suprà dictus fluuius Aegypti appellatus est alio nomine Gyon, cuius origo est à Paradiso terrestri. Hic venit currens per deserta Indiæ Maioris, hincque per meatus subterraneos transit plures terras: exiens sub Monte Aloth, inter Indiam, & Aethiopiam, & Mauritaniam intra deserta Aegypti, irrigans totam longitudinem Aegypti vsque ad Alexandriam, ibique se perdit in mare. Sole intrante signum Cancri omni anno, hoc est, ad quindenam ante Festum Natiuitatis Ioannis Baptistæ incipit paulatim fluuius crescerè, & inundare, quousque sol intret Virginem, quod est circa Festum Laurentij, atque ex tunc decrescere, & minui, donec Sole veniente in Lybram intra suos alueos se conseruet: Dúmque per inundationem nimis effluit, damnificat terræ culturas, & fit Charistia in Aegypto. Et similiter dum parùm exundat, ingruit esuries, quoniam in Aegypto rarissimè pluit, aut apparent nubes, quoniam si quandoque pluerit in æstate, terra muribus adimpletur. Terra Aegypti continet in longitudine dietas quindecim, in latitudine ferè tres, & habet triginta dietas deserti: à finibus Aegypti vsque Nubiam, duodecim sunt dietæ. Hi Nubij sunt Christiani, sed nigri, velut Aethiopes, vel Mauri.

Modicùm est maior Aquila, cristam in capite maiorem pauonis, collum habens croceum, dorsum Indicum, alas purpureas, caudam duobus coloribus, per transuersum croceo & rubeo regulatam, qui singuli colores sunt ad splendorem Solis delectabiliter videntibus resplendentes. In Aegypto multæ habentur arbores, sexcies aut septies in anno fructificantes, ibique frequenter inueniuntur in terra Smaragdi, & circa oram Nili alij lapides pretiosi. A Babylonia Aegypti, vsque ad ciuitatem Meccam, (quam Pagani ibidem appellant Iacrib, & est in magnis desertis Arabiæ) sunt triginta duæ dietę. In ea veneratur detestandum cadauer Machon siue Machometi honorabiliter & reuerenter in Templo eius, quod ibi vocatur Musket, de cuius vita aliquid infrà narrabo. Per prædicta itaque apparet, quod Imperator Sarracenorum Soldanus Babyloniæ, valdè potens est Dominus.

Caput 10.

De conductu Soldani,& via vsque in Sinay.

Prius dictum est de reuerentia Soldani, quando ad ipsum intratur exhibenda. Sciendum ergò, cùm ab eo petitur securus conductus, nemini denegare consueuit, sed datur petentibus communiter sigillum eius, in appenditione absque literis: hoc sigillum, pro vexillo in virga aut hasta dum peregrini ferunt, omnes Sarraceni videntes illud flexis genibus in terram se reuerenter inclinant, & portantibus omnem exhibent humanitatem. Verumtamen satis maior fit reuerentia literis Soldani sigillatis, quod & Admirabiles, & quicunque alij Domini, quando eis monstrantur, antequam recipiant, se multùm inclinant: Deinde ambabus manibus eas capientes ponunt super propria capita, posteà osculantur, & tandem legunt inclinati cum magna veneratione, quibus semel aut bis perlectis, offerunt se promptos ad explendum quicquid ibi iubetur, ac insuper exhibent deferenti, quicquid possint commodi, vel honoris: sed talem conductum per literas Soldani vix quisquam peregrinorum accipit, qui non in Curia illius stetit, vel notitiam apud illum habuerit. Ego autem habui in recessu meo, in quibus etiam continebatur ad omnes sibi subiectos speciale mandatum, vt me permitterent intrare, & respicere singula loca, pro mea placito voluntatis, & mihi exponerent quorumcunque locorum mysteria distincte & absque vllo velamine veritatis, ac me cum omni sodalitate mea benignè reciperent, & in cunctis rationalibus audirent, requisiti autem si necesse foret de ciuitate conducerent in ciuitatem. Habito itaque peregrinis conductu, ad Montem Sinay potest à Cayr vnam duarum incipere semitarum, vsque vallem Helim, vbi adhuc sunt duodecim fontes aquarum. Nam vna viarum est, vt pertranseat passagium maris rubri, non longè ab eodem loco, vbi olim populus Israel Duce Mose, Deo iubente, siccis pedibus transijt idem mare. Quod quidem, licèt aqua sit satis clara, dicitur ibi Rubrum propter lapillos, & arenas subrusi coloris: & continet ibi nunc temporis passus maris

Tranſmiſſoque mari, ibit ſuper hanc longè ab oris eiuſdem per dietas quatuor, atque ex tunc relinquens mare, tendit per deſerta ſex aut ſeptem dierum, vſque in vallem præfatam. Alia eſt autem via, vt de Babylonia intret Dyrcen deſerta, tendens ad quendam fontem, quem dicitur Moſes feciſſe: & hinc ad riuulum Marach, qui quondam, Moſe imponente lignum, ab amaritudine dulceſcebat, & ſic tandem in præmiſſam vallem perueniant. Et reſtat via grandis dietæ ad Montem Sinay ab hac valle. Nam à Babylonia vſque in Sinay, æſtimatur eſſe via duodecim dietarum, quamuis nonnulli citiùs perueniunt. Hoc verè ſciendum, neminem peregrinorum per hæc deſerta ſine ductore poſſe tendere, cui notæ ſunt viæ, ſed nec equi valent tranſire, præcipuè quòd non inuenirent in deſertis quid bibere. Aliquo tamen modo tranſitur per Camelos, eò quòd ſe continere poſſunt de potu duobus aut tribus diebus: Et oportet vt itinerantes ferant ſecum per viam neceſſaria ad victum proprium, & Camelorum, niſi quòd interdum fortè Cameli aliquid ſibi abrodere poſſunt circa cortices arbuſtorum, & folia ramuſculorum.

CAPVT. II.

De Monaſterio Sinay, & reliquijs beatæ Catherinæ.

MOns Sinay appellatur ibi deſertum Syn: quaſi in radice montis iſtius habetur Cœnobium Monachorum pergrande, cuius clauſura in circuitu eſt firmata muris altis, & portis ferreis, pro metu beſtiarum deſerti. Hi Monachi ſunt Arabes, & Græci, & in magno conuentu, multùm Deo deuoti: viuunt in magna abſtinentia, vtentes ſimplicibus cibariis, de lotis & dactylis, & huiuſmodi, nec vinum potantes, feſtis exceptis. Illic in Eccleſia Beatæ Virginis & matris Catherinæ ſemper lampades plurimæ ſunt ardentes, nam habetur ibi plena copia olei oliuarum. A poſteriori parte magni altaris monſtratur locus, vbi Moyſi apparuit Dominus in rubo ardente, ipſum rubum adhuc ſeruans, quem dum Monachi intrant, ſemper ſe diſcalceant gratia illius verbi, quo Deus iuſsit Moyſi ibidem, Solue calciamentum de pedibus tuis, locus enim in quo ſtas, terra ſancta eſt: hunc locum appellant Bezeleel, id eſt, vmbra Dei. Et propè altare tribus gradibus in altitudine, habetur capſa, ſeu Tumba Alabaſtri, ſanctiſsima continens oſſa Virginis. Chriſtiani qui ibidem morantur, cum magna reuerentia aduenientibus peregrinis, à Monachorum prælato, ſeu ab alio in hoc inſtituto, excipiuntur. Is quodam inſtrumento argenteo conſueuit oſſa defricare, ſiue linire, vt ex iis exeat modicũ olei, velut parumper ſudoris, quod tamen non apparet in colore ſui tanquam olei ſeu Balſami, ſed aliquantulum pluris magnitudinis. Et ex iſto traditur interdum aliquid petentibus peregrinis, ſed parùm, quia nec multùm exudat. Oſtendere ſolent & caput ipſius Catherinæ cum inuolumento ſanguinolento, & multas prætereà ſanctas, & venerabiles reliquias, quæ omnia intuitus ſum diligenter & ſæpè, oculis indignis. Habent quoque in iſta Eccleſia propriam Lampadem quilibet Monachorum, quæ imminente illius diſceſſu lumen per diuinum miraculum variat vel extinguit. Ego etiam curioſiùs ſuper vno dubio quod priùs audieram, plures interrogationes feci ab aliquibus Monachorum, vtrum ſcilicet prælato eorum decedente ſemper ſucceſſor per diuinum ſignum eligeretur: & vix tandem ab eis recepi reſponſum, quòd per vnum iſtorum miraculorum habetur ſucceſſor, videlicet in miſſa ſepulturæ defuncti omnibus Monachorum lampadibus extinctis, illius ſola Dei nutu reaccenditur, quem fieri vult prælatum, vel de cœlo inuenitur miſſus breuiculus ſuper altare, inſcriptum habens nomen prælati futuri. Intra hanc Eccleſiam nunquam muſca, vel aranea, aut huiuſmodi immundi vermiculi naſcuntur, quod ſimiliter per diuinum accidit miraculum: nam antè replebatur Eccleſia talibus immunditiis, & totus conuentus recederet ad conſtruendam Eccleſiam in alio loco. Et ecce Dei genetrix virgo beata eis viſibiliter obuiauit, iubens reuerti, & dicens nunquam Eccleſiam ſimilibus infeſtari. In cuius obuiationis loco, in aſcenſu procliuo huius montis per multos gradus conſtruxerunt Eccleſiam, ædificium excellens, in honorem eiuſdem virginis. Et aliquantò altiùs, per eiuſdem montis aſcenſum eſt vetus Capella, quam vocant Eliæ Prophetæ, & locum ſpecialiter appellant Horeb. A cuius latere in montis appendentia colitur vinea, quam nominant Ioſuæ ſchophis, de qua quidam putare volunt, quod Sanctus Ioannes Euangeliſta eam primò plantauit. In ſuperiori verò montis vertice, eſt Capella, quam dicunt Moyſis, & illic rupis ſeruans adhuc corporis eius formam impreſſam dum ſe abſcondit, veritus dominum reſpicere in facie. Locus quoq; ibi oſtenditur, in quo Deus tradidit ei decem mandata, ſiue legem proprio digito ſcriptam, & ſub rupe cauerna, in qua manſit ieiunus diebus 40. Ab hoc monte qui vocatur Moſi, reſtat via producta ad quartam Leucæ, vſque in montem qui dicitur Sanctæ Catherinæ per vallem ſpecioſam, ac multùm frigidam. Circa eius medium habetur Eccleſia, nomine 40. Martyrum conſtructa, vbi interdum veniunt Monachi cantare miſſam. Hic mons eſt satis altior Monte Moysis, in cuius vertice Angeli Dei piè creduntur attulisse, & sepeliisse corpus sanctissimæ Martyris Catharinæ cum inuolumento capitis suprà dicto. Attamen in ipso certo sepulturæ loco, licèt quandoque stetit Capella, modò non est habitaculum, sed modicus aceruus petrarum. Notandum, quòd vterque horum montium potest vocari mons Sinay, eò quòd totus circumiacens locus deserti Sin appellatur. Sur desertum inter mare Rubrum, & solitudinem Sinay. desertum Sur idem Scriptura quod & Cades. Visitatis igitur à peregrinis his sacrosanctis memorijs, & valefacto Monachis, recommendant se eorum orationibus, & meritis: túncque solet aliquid victualium offerri peregrinis, pro inchoanda via deserti Syriæ versus Ierusalem. Et sicut dixi de priori deserto, sic nec istud securè est peragrandum absque Drogemijs, id est, semitarum ductoribus, propter vastitudinem deserti.

Iter à deserto Sinay vsque ad Iudæam.

PEr istud latum & longum desertum, moratur vel potiùs vagatur maxima multitudo malorum, & incompositorum hominum, qui non manent in domibus, sed sub pellium tabernaculis, quemadmodum & olim filij Israel in eodem deserto ambulauerunt, quoniam aquæ non manent ibi diu in locis certis: & ideò mutant tabernacula sequentes aquas: non colunt terras, rarò manducant panem, sed tantùm carnes bestiarum deserti quas venantur, coquentes super petras calefactas ad Solem: fortes sunt & feroces, & velut desperati de vita propria non curantes, qui licèt non habeant arma præter lanceam, & tarchiam, & caput grandi albo linteolo inuolutum, tamen non verentur exercere guerras, & inire prœlia contra Dominum suum Soldanum: nam & ego stipendiarius in expeditione Soldani contra eos sæpiùs fui. Isti sunt quidem Arabes, sed notiori nomine appellantur Bedoyns & Acopars, & quamuis plurima mala agunt per desertum, rarò tamen nocent peregrinis beatæ Virginis Catharinæ. Itaque peregrinus qui debitum tenuit iter, veniat à finibus deserti in primam ciuitatem Iudeæ, quæ dicitur Bersebe: est vicus grandis Hebron inde miliario vergens ad Austrum: Hieronymus. Notandum, Theros Mons Dei in regione Maglaw iuxta Montem. Notandum similiter, Arabiam in deserto esse, cui iungitur Mons, & desertum Sarracenorum, quod vocatur Phaaran. Mihi autem videtur, quod duplici nomine, nunc Mons Sinay, nunc Oreb vocatur. Hieronymus. Phaaran nunc oppidum trans Oreb, iam iunctum Sarracenis, qui in solitudine vagi pererrant. Hos interfecerunt filij Israel, cùm de Monte Sinay castra mouissent. Est ergo, vt dixi, trans Iordanem contra Austrálem plagam, & distat ab Helyn, contra Orientem, itinere dierum trium. In deserto autem Phaaran, Scriptura commemorat habitasse Ismaelem, vnde & Ismaelitæ, qui nunc Sarraceni. Legimus quo que Chederlaomer percussisse eos qui erant in deserto Phaaran quod nunc dicitur Ascalon, & circa eam Regio Palestinorum. Hieronymus. Hæc Bersheba erat bona & spectabilis, vltimo tempore Christianorum, & adhuc ibi restant nonnullæ Ecclesiæ.

Ioannes Mandeuil militans contra Arabes.

Beersheba.

Hinc ad Leucas duas venitur in ciuitatem Hebron, & Hebron ab Helyn distat ad Meridianam plagam millibus circiter 39. de qua legitur, quòd primis temporibus fuerit habitatio maximorum Gigantium, Regúmque, postea à Dauidis. In hac est illa spelunca duplex, quæ seruat ossa sanctorum Patriarcharum, Abrahæ, Isaac, & Iacob, Saræ, & Rebeccæ, consistítque ad radicem montis, & habetur super istam cum propugnaculis ad modum castri constructa pulchra Ecclesia. Sarraceni appellant istam speluncam Kariackaba, custodientes locum diligenter ac reuerenter propter honorem Patriarcharum, & non permittentes quenquam Christianorum aut Iudæorum ingredi, nisi ostenderit super hæc specialem gratiam à Soldano. Nam ipsi communiter reputant tam Christianos quàm Iudæos pro canibus, & quando despectiuè eos volunt appellare, dicunt Kylp, id est, canis.

Ciuitas Hebron.

Ab Hebron incipit vallis Mambrę, quæ protenditur ferè vsq; Ierusalem: haud remotè ad Hebron est mons Mambre, & in ipso monte arbor quercus aridæ, quæ pro antiquitate sui, speciale sibi nomen meruit in mundo vniuerso, vt vocetur arbor ficca: Sarraceni autem eam dicunt Dirp: hæc creditur stetisse ante tempora Abrahæ, tamen quidam volunt putare à mundi initio, virens donec passionis Christi tempore siccaretur. Hoc autem certum est, haberi eam ab omnibus nationibus in veneratione.

Vallis Mambræ.

Quercus arida.

In quodam loco præfatæ vallis est planicies, vbi per plures fossas effodiunt homines Gambil, quod comeditur loco specierum aromaticarum, & per villas defertur venale. Sed & hoc audiui, quòd nulla ibi fossa ita valet exhauriri, si dimittatur per annum, quin inueniatur de prædicta Gambil impleta.

Gambil species Aromatis.

Ad duas leucas de Hebron, monstratur sepultura Loth filii fratris Abrahã. Itẽ de ciuitate Hebrõ per quinque leucas amoeni itineris, hoc est, in media die, venitur in Bethleem Iudeæ. Notandũ,

Arbe,

Arbe,id est,quatuor,primùm dicam de eo quod ibi tres Patriarchæ Abraham,Isac,& Iacob sepulti sunt,& Adam magnus,vt in Iudæorum libro scriptum est, licèt eum quidam conditum in loco Caluariæ suspicentur. Corruptè in nostris codicibus Arboth scribitur, alibi erat arbor cùm in Hebræis legatur Arbe,hæc est autem eadem Hebron olim Metropolis Philistinorum, ab vno filiorum Caleb sortita vocabulum. Caput 13.

De ciuitate Bethleem,& semita vsque in Ierusalem.

Bethleem Ciuitas longa sed parua, firmata est vndique fossatis fortibus: cuius modò habitatores quasi omnes sunt Christiani.In illa ad orientem honesta,& placida habetur Ecclesia: (nescio an aliquam eiusdem quantitatis viderim placentiorem,)extrinsecus habens turres saltaturas,pinnacula,& propugnacula nobili artificio fabricata,& intrinsecus 44. de marmore decoro columnas.Ad principalis autem turris dextram in descensu 16.graduum,est diuersorij locus,vbi ex intacta & benedicta Virgine nascebatur Christus homo Deus. Hic locus est multùm artificiosè operatus marmore,& generosè depictus auro & argento, varióque colore, cui propè ad tres passus est præsepe in quo reclinabatur natus Dominus, ibíque videtur puteus quidam,in quo aliqui putare volunt cecidisse stellam ductricem trium Magorum, post eius peractum officium.

Est etiam ante præsepe Domini,tumba beati Interpretis Hieronymi,& extra Ecclesiam mõstratur cathedra,in qua residere solebat.Sub clausura huius ecclesiæ ad dextram,per 18.gradus apparet fossa, quæ dicitur ossium innocentium causa Christi ab Herode impio occisorum. Hinc ad quingentos,vel citra pedes habetur alia Ecclesia nomine Sancti Nicholai, in quo scilicet loco,post recessum Magorum beata Virgo tempus sui puerperij obseruauit.Ibíque monstrantur rubra saxa albis respersa maculis, quòd simpliciores narrant saxis eueniisse de abundantia lactis virginis ab vberibus eiecti.In via Bethleem ab Helya miliario contra meridianam plagam iuxta viam quæ ducit Ebron, Christiani de Bethleem colunt circa ciuitatem multam copiam vinearum,ad potum sui ipsorum.Nam Sarraceni non colunt vineas, nec vina vendunt neque in manifesto bibunt,eò quòd liber legis Mahomet,facit super hoc prohibitionem,& interpretatur maledictionem. Taxat simplicitatem vulgi. Sarraceni non bibunt vinum in manifesto.

De Bethleem in Austrum duabus leucis habetur claustrum Sanctæ Charitatis, ibidem suo tempore Abbatissæ.A Bethleem tendendo Ierusalem inuenitur ad dimidiam leucam Ecclesia, in cuius loco Angelus dixit pastoribus,Annuncio vobis gaudium magnum, quod natus est nobis Saluator qui est Christus Dominus.Est & tumba Rachel Patriarchæ, vbi etiam coaceruata iacent 12.saxa magna,quæ quidam autumant illic tumulasse Iacob, eò quòd Beniamin duodecimus sibi filius nascebatur ibidem.Sícque venitur in Sanctam Ciuitatem Ierusalem.Notandum,Bethel vicus est 12.ab Helya ad dextram euntibus Neapoli, quæ primùm Luza vocabatur.Sed ex eo tempore quo ibat ad Ieroboam filium Nebat,vituli aurei fabricati sunt, & à decem tribubus adorata,vocata est Bethauen, id est, Domus Idoli, quæ antè vocabatur Domus Dei.Ieronymus.Sed & Ecclesia ædificata est vbi dormiuit Iacob,pergẽs Mesopotamiam,vbi & ipsi loco Bethel,id est,domus Dei nomen imposuit. Sancta Charitas. Bethel.

De Ecclesia glorioſi Sepulchri Domini in vrbe Ierusalem.

Ierusalem cum tota terra promissionis,est quasi vna de quinque prouincijs vel pluribus, quibus Regnum Syriæ distinguitur.Iungitur autem Iudæa ad Orientem Regno Arabiæ, ad meridiem Aegypto,ad Occidentem mari magno,& ad Aquilonem Regno Syriæ.Iudeæ terra per diuersa tempora à diuersis possessa fuit nationibus,Cananæorum,Iudæorum,Assyriorum, Persarum,Medorum, Macedonum,Græcorum,Romanorum,Christianorum,Sarracenorum,Barbarorum,Turcorum,& Tartarorum.Cuius rei causa meritò potest æstimari,quod non sustinuit Deus magnos peccatores longo tempore permanere in terra sibi tam placita,& tam sancta.

Itaque peregrinus veniens in Ierusalem primò expleat suam peregrinationem, ad reuerendum & sacrosanctum Domini nostri Iesu Christi sepulchrum: cuius Ecclesia est in vltima ciuitatis extremitate,ad partem aquilonarem,cum proprio sui ambitus muro ipsi ciuitati adiuncto.Ipsa verò Ecclesia est pulchra & rotundæ formæ cooperta desuper cum tegulis plumbeis, habens in Occidente turrim altam & firmam,in pauimenti Ecclesiæ medio ad figuram dimidij compassi habetur nobili opere Latonico ædificatum paruum Tabernaculum quasi 15. pedum tam longitudinis quàm latitudinis, & altitudinis miro artificio intus extráque compositum,ac multùm diligenter diuersis coloribus ornatum. Hoc itaque in Tabernaculo seu Capella, Templum Sepulchri.

la, ad latus dextrum, continetur incomparabilis thesaurus glorioſiſsimi ſepulchri, habentis octo pedes longitudinis, & quinque latitudinis. Et quoniam in toto habitaculo nulla eſt apertura præter paruum oſtium, illuſtratur accedentibus peregrinis pluribus lampadibus, (quarum ad minus vna coram ſepulchro iugiter ardere ſolet) ingreſſus.

Melech Mandybron Soldanus.

Sciendum, quòd ante breue tempus ſolebat ſepulchrum eſſe ingreſsis peregrinis acceſsibile, ad tangendum & oſculandum, ſed quia multi vel effringebant, vel conabantur ſibi effringere aliquid de petra ſepulchri, iſte Soldanus Melech Mandybron fecit illud confabricari, vt nec oſculari valeat, nec adiri, ſed tantummodo intueri. Et ob illam cauſam in ſiniſtro pariete in altitudine quinque pedum immurari effracturam petræ ſepulchri ad quantitatem capitis humani, quod tanquam pro ſepulchro ibi ab omnibus veneratur, tangitur, & oſculatur.

Mandeuillus de hoc dubitat.

Dicitur ibi quoque communiter præfatam lampadem coram ſepulchro ſingulis annis in die Sanctæ Paraſcheues, hora nona extingui, & in media nocte Paſchæ ſine humano ſtudio reaccendi. Quod (ſi ita eſt) euidens diuini beneficii miraculum eſt. Et quamuis id plurimi Chriſtiani ſimpliciter in magno pietatis merito credant, pleriſque tamen eſt in ſuſpicione. Fortè talia Sarraceni cuſtodes ſepulchri fingentes diuulgauerunt, pro augendo emolumenta tributi, quod inde reſultaret, ſeu oblationum quæ dantur.

Singulis autem annis in die cœnæ Domini in Paraſcheue, & in vigilia Paſchæ, tribus bis diebus manet Tabernaculum hoc apertum continuè, & patet omnibus Chriſtianis gentibus acceſſus, aliàs verò non per annum ſine redditione tributi. Intra Eccleſiam, propè parietem dextrum, eſt Caluariæ locus, vbi crucifixus pependit Chriſtus Dominus. Per gradus aſcenditur in hunc locum, & eſt rupis velut albi coloris, cum aliqua rubedine per loca commixta, habens ſciſſuram, quam dicunt Golgotha, in qua maior pars preciosi ſanguinis Chriſti dicitur influxiſſe: vbi & habetur altare conſtructum, ante quod conſiſtunt tumbæ Godefridi de Bullion, & aliorum Regum Chriſtianorum, qui circa annum incarnationis Domini, 1100. debellauerunt & obtinuerunt ſanctam vrbem cum tota patria ex manibus Sarracenorum, & per hoc conquiſierunt ſibi magnum nomen, vſque in finem ſæculi duraturum. Propè ipſius crucifixionis locum continetur literis Græcis hoc ſcriptum: ὁ Θεὸς βασιλεὺς ἡμῶν πρὸ αἰῶνος εἰργάσατο σωτηρίαν ἐν μέσῳ τῆς γῆς. hoc eſt dicere, Deus Rex noſter ante ſecula operatus eſt ſalutem in medio terræ. Item directè in loco, vbi crux ſancta ſtetit cum Chriſto rupi infixa, habetur hoc exaratum in ſaxo rupis: ὧδε βάσις τῆ ἁγίας τοῦ κόσμου, hoc eſt, quod vides fundamentum eſt fidei mundi.

Pſal. 74. 12.

Haud remotè ab hoc Caluariæ monte, habetur & aliud altare, vbi iacet columna flagellationis Domini, cui ſtant de propinquo & aliæ columnæ quatuor de Marmore aquam iugiter reſudantes, & (ſecundùm opinionem ſimplicium) paſſionem innocentem Chriſti deflentes. Eſt ſub iſto altari crypta, 42. graduum profunda, vbi ſancta Helena Regina reperit tres cruces, videlicet Chriſti, & latronum cum eo crucifixorũ, ac etiam clauos crucis Domini in cryptæ pariete.

Iterum taxat ignorantiam vulgi.

Regina Helena Angla.

In medio autem chori huius Eccleſiæ, eſt locus pauimenti ſtratus mirè & pulchrè, ad integrã cõpaſsi figuram, vbi depoſitũ corpus Chriſti de cruce Ioſeph ab Aramathia cum ſuis adiutoribus lauit & cõdiuit aromatibus. Itẽ infra Eccleſiam à ſeptentrionali parte oſtenditur locus, vbi Chriſtus Magdalenæ apparuit poſt ſuam reſurrectionẽ, quando eum credidit hortulanum.

Indorum Capella ſiue ſubditorum præſbiteri Ioannis.

A dextro autem latere ad ingreſſum Eccleſiæ, habentur gradus 18. ſub quibus eſt Capella Indorum, vbi ſoli peregrini de India per ſacerdotes ſuos cantant iuxta ritum ſuum Miſſas, celebrántque diuina. Miſſam faciunt quidem breuiſsimam, conficientes in principio verbis debitis ſactamentum corporis & ſanguinis Chriſti de pane & vino, ac poſteà paucis orationibus additis, totum oratione Dominica concludunt officium. Hoc autem verum eſt, quod cum maxima attentione, reuerentia, humilitate, & deuotione ſe gerunt, & continent diuinis.

Porrò illud, quod quidam peruulgauerunt, aut opinati ſunt, Iudæam aut Ieruſalem, vel Eccleſiam iſtam conſiſtere in medio totius mundi, propter prædictam ſcripturam, (in medio terræ) hoc intelligi non poteſt localiter ad menſuram corporis terræ: Nam ſi ad terræ latitudinem, quam æſtimant inter duos polos, reſpiciamus, certum eſt Iudæam non eſſe in medio, quod tunc eſſet ſub circulo Aequatoris, & eſſet ibi ſemper æquinoctium, & vtrumq; polorum ſtaret iis in horizõte. Quod vtiq; nõ eſt ita, quod exiſtẽtibus in Iudea eleuatur multùm polus arcticus.

Rurſus ſi ad terræ longitudinem ſpectemus, quæ æſtimari poteſt à Paradiſo terreſtri, ſcilicet à digniori & latiori terræ loco, verſus eius Nadir, ſcilicet, verſus locum ſibi in Sphæra terræ oppoſitum, tunc Iudæa eſſet ad Antipodes paradiſi, quod apparet ita non eſſe, quod tunc eſſet viatori de Iudæa ad Paradiſum tendentis æqua itineris menſura, ſiue tenderet verſus Orientem, ſiue verſus Occidentem. Sed hoc non eſt veriſimile nec verum, ſicut probatum conſtat per experientiam multorum. Mihi autem videtur, quod præfata Prophetæ ſcriptura, poteſt exponi, in medio terræ, id eſt, circa medium noſtri habitabilis, videlicet vt Iudæa ſit circa medium inter

Paradiſum

Paradiſum & Antipodes Paradiſi, diſtans tantum ab ipſo Paradiſo in oriente 96. gradibus, prout ego ipſe per viam orientalem tentaui: quanquam de hoc non videtur de facili plena certitudo haberi, eo quòd in longitudine cœli nullæ ſtellæ manent immobiles, ſicut in latitudine manent poli ſempèr fixi. Vel poteſt ita exponi, quòd Dauid qui erat Rex Iudeę, dixit in medio terræ, hoc eſt, in principali ciuitate terræ ſuæ Ieruſalem, quæ erat ciuitas regalis, ſiue ſacerdotalis terrę Iudeæ: vel fortè ſpiritus ſanctus, qui loquebatur per os prophetę in hoc verbo vult intelligi non corporeum aut locale, ſed totum ſpirituale, de quo intuitu nihil ad præſens eſt ſcribendum.

Caput. 15.

De tribus alijs Eccleſijs, & ſpecialiter de templo Domini.

VLtrà duo ſtadia ab Eccleſia ad Meridiem ſancti ſepulchri habetur magnũ hoſpitale ſancti Ioannis Hieroſolymitani, qui caput & fundamentum eſſe dignoſcitur ordinis hoſpitaliorum modò tenentium Rhodum inſulam: in quo recipi poſſunt omnes Chriſtiani peregrini cuiuſcunque ſint conditionis, ſeu ſtatus, vel dignitatis. Nam Saraceni pro leui cura anxij rumoris, prohibent ne apud quenquam ſuorum Chriſtianus pernoctet. Ad ſuſtentationem ædificij huius hoſpitalis, habentur in eo 124. columnæ marmoreę, & in parietibus diſtincti 54. pilarij. Satis propè hunc locum in orientem, eſt Eccleſia quę dicitur, de Domina noſtra magna: & indè non remotè alia, quæ dicitur noſtrę Dominę latinorũ, ędificata ſuper locum, vbi Maria Magdalene, & Maria Cleophę cum alijs pluribus, dum Chriſtus cruci affigebatur, flebant & dolores lamentabiles exercebant.

Item ab Eccleſia Sancti Sepulchri in orientem ad ſtadium cum dimidio habetur ædificium mirabile, ac pulchrum valdè, quod templum Domini nominatur, quod conſtructum eſt in forma rotunda, cuius circumferentiæ diameter habet 64 cubitos, & altitudo eius 126, & intrinſecus pro ſuſtentatione ædificij, multi pilarij. In medio autem templi eſt locus altior 14. gradibus, qui & ipſe columnis vndiq; eſt ſtipatus: & ſecundum quatuor mundi plagas habet templum quatuor introitus per portas Cypreſſinas artificioſè compoſitas, nobiliterq; ſculptas, & exciſas. Et ante portam aquilónarem intra templum fontem aquæ mundæ, qui quamuis olim exundabat, tamen nunc minimè fluit. In toto circuitu ædificij extrinſecus eſt valdè pro atrio latum ſpacium loci, ſtratum per totum pauimentum marmoribus. Hoc templum non ducitur ſtare in eodem loco vbi templum Dei ſtetit in tempore Chriſti, quo poſt reſurrectionem a Romanis deſtructo, iſtud longo poſt tempore Adrianus Imperator extruxit, ſed non ad formam templi prioris: prædictum tamen excelſum in medio templi locum vocant Iudæi ſanctum ſanctorum.

Sciatis itaq; quòd Sarraceni magnam exhibent huic templo reuerentiam, & honorem, ſæpius illud diſcalceati intrantes, & poſitis genibus deuotè Deum omnipotentem exorantes, nulla enim ibidem habetur imago, ſed multæ lampades relucentes. Neminem Chriſtianorum ſeu Iudæorum ingredi ſinunt hoc templum, reputantes eos indignos ad hoc, & nimium immundos, vndè niſi virtute literarũ quas habui a Soldano, nec ego fuiſſem ingreſſus. Ingrediens autem cum meis ſodalibus depoſuimus calciamenta, recogitantes cum multa cordis deuotione, nos magis id facere debere, quàm incredulos Sarracenos.

Literæ Soldani traditæ Mandeuillo.

Et verè meritò eſt iſte locus in magna reuerentia habendus: dum enim Rex Salomon primùm in illo templo per Dei iuſſionem, & Dauidis patris ſui commiſſionem ędificaſſet, exorauit præſente cuncto populo Iſrael, vt quicunque illic Deum pro iuſta cauſa rogaret audiretur; & Dominus monſtrauit ex auditionis ſignum per nebulam de cœlo emiſſam, prout narrat hiſtoria veritatis 3. Regum libro.

Porrò in eo loco vbi ſtatuerat idem Rex ante templum altare holocauſti, videlicet extra portam templi occidentalem, habetur & nunc altare, ſed non ad inſtar, nec ad vſum primi: Nam Saraceni, quaſi nihil curantes, traxerunt in eo lineas tanquam in aſtrolabio figentes in linearum centro batellum, ad cuius vmbram per lineas diſcernuntur diei horę.

Etiam in hac atrij parte apparent adhuc veſtigia portę ſpecioſę, vbi Petrus Apoſtolus, cum Euangeliſta Ioanne dixit contracto, In nomine Chriſti Ieſu Nazareni ſurge, & ſtatim conſolidabantur illi plantę.

Caput. 16.

De pluribus locis ſacris intra vrbem.

VIaturo ad dextram ſatis de propinquo habetur & alia Eccleſia, quę nunc appellatur ſchola Salomonis: rurſuſq; ad Meridiem eſt & aliud templum ſiue Eccleſia, quę vocatur Templum Salomonis, quòd olim fuit caput, & fundamentum totius ordinis Templariorum.

Templarij à templo Salomonis dicti.

A clauſtro huius tẽpli extrinſecus in Aquilonem habetur decora Eccleſia beatę Annę, in cuius loco creditur virgo Maria in eiusdem matris suę vtero fuisse genita, & concepta, parentũq; illius, scilicet, Ioachim & Annę, tumba saxea mõstratur in descensu Ecclesię, per 22. gradus, vbi & adhuc patris eius ossa putantur quiescere, sublato inde per reginam Helenam corpore sanctæ Annæ, & recondito (vt prædictum est) in Ecclesia Constantinopoli sanctæ Sophiæ.

Regina Helena, Angla.

Est & intra hanc Ecclesiam probatica piscina, vbi quondam post motionem Angeli omnes accedentes primi, a quocunq; languore sanabantur infirmi, quę tamen nunc temporis ita neglecta iacet, & deformata, vt videtur immunda cistrina. Habetur & ante Ecclesiam arbor grandis & antiqua, de qua nonnulli fabulantur, quod ad beatæ Mariæ natiuitatem principium accepit, & ortum.

Probatica piscina.

Mons Sion est excelsior locus in vrbe ad cuius radicem, est castrũ spectabile constructum per aliquem Soldanorum. In montis autem cacumine videntur multę sepulturę regum Iudeæ, videlicet Dauid, Salomonis, & quorundam de successoribus suis. Ad introitum montis habetur capella, & in illa lapis monumenti quem Ioseph de Arimathea obuoluit ad ostiũ sepulchri est valde magnus, & est ibidem aliqua pars columnæ flagellationis, ac pars mensę super quam Dominus vltimò cænauit cum Apostolis, & instituit noui Testamenti sacramentũ sui venerandi corporis, & sanguinis. Sub hac capella ad aliquos gradus monstratur locus eiusdem cęnationis, videlicet cęnaculi magni, & in eo vas aquarũ, in quo Christus lauabat pedes Apostolorum: iuxta quod vas, a Gamaliele, & alijs viris timoratis primus sepultus fuit protoMartyr Stephanus.

Mons Sion.

In eo quoq; loco intrauit post resurrectionẽ suam Dominus ianuis clausis ad discipulos dicens pax vobis, & agens alia, quę plenius Euãgelica pandit Historia, ac tandẽ in die Pentecostes ijsdem spiritũ sanctũ, in linguis igneis misit ibidem. Ab hoc mõte Sion versus ciuitatem habetur Ecclesia dedicata sancto saluatori, in quo nunc dicuntur seruari ossa S. Stephani supradicti, & sinistrũ brachium S. Ioannis Chrisostomi, cuius corpus vt dictũ est requiescit Constantinopoli.

Item ab hoc monte versus Austrum ab oppositio plateæ, est pulchra Ecclesia nostræ Domine, in cuius loco diu morabatur post ascensionem filij sui, quamuis pro parte eiusdem temporis in valle Iosaphat manserit: nam in ista defungebatur, & in illo ab Apostolis honorificè sepulta fuit. Itemque ab hoc monte in vico eundo versus vallem Iosaphat inuenitur fons aquæ dictus Natatoria Siloe, vbi cęcus natus à Christo missus lauabat oculos, & regressus est videns. Et dicunt quidam ibidem sepultum Isaiam Prophetam.

Natatoria Siloe.

Porro mons olim dictus Moria, de quo loquitur Scriptura sacra, est rupis haud longè a supradicto templo Domini in ipsius meridiè, in cuius rupis loco excelso velut eminenti sed edito Dominus noster Iesus Christus frequenter instruebat suos discipulos, & populos, magnaque miracula exhibebat, atque deprehensæ mulieri in adulterio omnia peccata dimittebat.

Iohn. 8.

Ab oppositio autem prędicti fontis natatorij habetur imago lapidea, rudi & vetusto opere sculpta, deformitèrque detrita, quæ manus Absalon nuncupatur, cuius ratio lib. 2. Regum monstratur. Vbi de propè vidi Arborem Sambucum, ad quam vel citrà cuius locum (vt dicitur) Iudas traditor per se suspensus crepuit medius, & diffusa sunt viscera eius.

Præterea à monte Sion versus Meridiem vltrà vallem ad iactum lapidis est locus Aceldema, in quo emptus ager 30. denarijs proditionis est, Et in quo sunt plures sepulturæ peregrinorum, & vestigia cellularum, de quondam illic commorantibus Heremitis.

CAPVT. 17.

De sacris locis extra muros Ciuitatis.

Vallis Iosaphat.

EXtra muros ciuitatis Ierusalem ad plagam orientalem, est vallis Iosaphat cõtigua, ac si esset fossata muris ipsius ciuitatis, & Ecclesia vbi sanctus Stephanus lapidabatur, & obdormiuit in Domino. Hinc non longè est porta ciuitatis, quę dicitur aurea, quę nunc semper obfirmata seruatur. Per hanc intrauit Christus sedens asino, & adhuc ostenditur rupis seruare vestigia animalis in tribus aut pluribus sui locis. Statim vltrà vallem Iosaphat aspicitur mons Olueti, sic dictus à pluribus, quia ibi sũt oliuarum Arbores. In planicie huius vallis decurrit riuulus dictus torrens Cedron, secus quem habetur pulchra, & honorificata Ecclesia sacrosanctę sepulturę beatę, & glorioſę matris Christi: descenditur autem in Ecclesiam per gradus 44. quòd extrinsecus est vallis inculta per fluxum fortassè torrentis, seu per alios euentus propter Antiquitatem temporis. Ibique monstratur sepulchrum eius vacuum. Habentur iuxta sepulchrum duo altaria, sub vno est fons Aquæ quę putatur exire de vno Paradisi flumine.

Mons oliuarum.

Torrens Cedron.

Satis propè ab hac Ecclesia ad rupem Gethsemane habetur capella, vbi scilicet Iudęis traditus fuit Christus à Iuda. In ipsa quoque rupe ostendebatur mihi figura impressę manus ad digitorum extensionem, quæ artificiosius humano studio sculpi non posset, quam referunt Christũ sua venerabili manu inclinando ad rupem efficisse, dum Iudæi impuras manus ad capiendum iniecerunt in eum. Hic ad iactum lapidis in meridie orauit ad suum patrem, & pro vehementi

Vltra vallem in ſupremo montis Oliueti apice diſcipulis cernentibus, Dominus noſter Ieſus Chriſtus eleuatis manibus aſcendit in cœlum, & ſuper eundem locum digna habetur Eccleſia, in qua eiuſdem Aſcenſione tale ſeruatur in rupe pauimenti indiciũ, quod ſiniſtri pedis Chriſti videtur vltimum veſtigium.

Hinc ſatis propè habetur & capella medio montis, vbi Chriſtus ſedens prædicauit octo beatitudines, vbi & creditur docuiſſe diſcipulos orationem Dominicam, ſcilicet, Pater noſter, &c. Ab eo quoq; loco non diſtat multum Eccleſia beatæ Marię Ægyptiacæ, in qua & eius tumba videtur: & haud procul inde eſt vicus Bethphage, vbi Chriſtus miſit ante paſſionis ſuæ tempus duos de diſcipulis pro aſina & pullo eius. In cliuo verò huius mõtis Oliueti verſus ciuitatem, monſtratur locus, de quo videns Dominus Ieruſalem, fleuit ſuper illam, dicens, quòd ſi cognouiſſes & tu, &c. Atq; vltrà montem in diſcenſu eius in orientem eſt villa ſiue caſtellum Bethanię, diſtans quaſi ad leucam ab vrbe vbi in domo cuiuſdam Symonis inuitatus Chriſtus condonauit omnia peccata Mariæ Magdalenę. Et in ipſo caſtello, quòd erat ſororis Marthæ, & Mariæ reſuſcitauit fratrem earum Lazarum quatriduanum mortuum. Bethania.

De Bethania in Ierico ſunt 5. leucæ, quę quondam fuit ciuitas ſpecioſa ſed iam eſt villa modica: ibi Diues Zacheus aſcendit in arborem Sycomorum, vt videret tranſeuntem Dominum, & reſtituens fraudata quadruplum, obtinuit peccatorum remiſſionem omnium. Ierico.

Item de Bethania ad flumen Iordanis eſt iter ferè octo leucarum, per montes, ac valles deuios, & deſertos. Porrò de Bethania in orientem ad 6. leucas venitur in montem magnum, vbi Chriſtus expleto 40. dierum, ac noctium ieiunio temptatus eſt à diabolo, fuitq; in eodem loco quandoq; Eccleſia, ſed modo habeturibi quaſi cœnobiũ quorũdam Chriſtianorum, qui Georgici vocantur. Sciendum enim eſt, quod vbiq; intra terrain Saracenorum, & ſimiliter multorum Paganorum inueniuntur Chriſtiani diſperſi, habitantes ſub tributo, qui licet ſint baptizati omnes, & beatiſsmam Trinitatem credentes, diuerſificantur tamen nominibus, moribus, ritibus, fide, & opinionibus: ita vt ſemper vel in multis vel in aliquibus diſſentiant à Romanæ Eccleſiæ conſuetudinibus. Chriſtiani Georgici.

Aliqui namq; eorũ dicuntur Chriſtiani Iacobitę: hij errant circa peccatorum remiſſionem, dicentes, non debere confiteri homini ſed ſoli Deo. Nec diſtat hic mons à Ierico vltra grandem leucam.

RVrſum de ciuitate ſanctę Ieruſalem verſus Occidentem itinere leucę, habetur pulchra ſatis Eccleſia, in loco vbi dicitur creuiſſe arbor crucis ſalutiferę. Arbor excelſa, digno ſtipite ſacra Chriſti mẽbra tangere. Tenetur iſtud quidẽ pro certa veritate: nam & hoc ſatis teſtatur conſtructio tãtæ, & talis Eccleſię, quãuis multa aliena, & incerta ſcripta de crucis arbore ferãtur per orbẽ. Hinc ad duas leucas eſt & alia Eccleſia, vbi obuiauerũt ſibi Maria virgo, & Elizabeth eius cognata, & ad ſalutationem Marię Chriſti baiulę exultauit Ioannes in vtero Elizabeth grauidæ. Nota.

De iſto quoque ad leucam eſt Emaus caſtellum, diſtans in ſpacio ſtadiorũ 60. ab Ieruſalem, vbi diſcipuli in cœna die reſurrectionis Domini cognouerant eum in fractione panis. Porrò ab Ieruſalem ad alium exitum, ad duo ſtadia videtur ſpelunca grandis de qua dicitur quòd tempore Coſdri Imperatoris Perſarum, fuerunt circa Ieruſalem 12. mille martyrum occiſi, quorum omnium corpora leo habitans in ſpelunca congregauit ibidem voluntate diuina, tanquam pro ſingulorum ſepultura obſequioſa. Emaus caſtellum. Coſdrus Imperator.

Item ab vrbe ad leucas duas habetur in monte tumba ſepulturæ ſancti Samuelis prophetæ, qui mons nunc vocatur exultationis vel lęticię, eò quod peregrinis ab illa parte intrãtibus reddit primum ſanctę ciuitatis aſpectum. Ab oppido autem Ierico in 30. ſtadiorum ſpacio venitur Mons exultationis.

ad Iordanis fluuij locum, vbi beatus Ioannes Baptista Christum sacri baptismatis merebatur tingere lymphis. Et in cuius reuerendi mysterij venerationem habetur ad dimidiam leucam à fluuio ædificium honestæ Ecclesiæ consecratum in nomine eiusdem venerabilis baptistæ ministri. Ab hac Ecclesia de propè vidi domum de qua patiebar mihi narrari, quòd in eodem loco olim fuerit Ieremiæ sancti habitatio prophetæ.

Iordanis descriptio.

Notandum est. Iordanis fluuius quamuis grandis non sit, bonorum tamen piscium copiam nutrit, ortum accipiens sub monte Libanon ex duobus fontibus, scilicet Ior, & Dan, quæ nomina simul mixta nomen Iordanis efficiunt. Decurrit autem per quendam locum dictum Maron, ac secus stagnum quod dicitur Mare Tyberiadis, ac subter montes Gylboe per amœnissima loca, atque in subterraneis meatibus per longum spacium se occultans tandem exit in planitie, quæ dicitur Meldam, id est, forum, quod certis temporibus ibi Nundinę exercentur, & ad extremum se iactat in mare mortuum.

Mare mortuum.

Hoc stagnum quod vocatur mare mortuũ habet longitudinis 600. ferè stadia, & latitudinis 150. & appropinquat aliqua pars huius maris ad quatuor leucas propè Ierico, videlicet ad latus camporum Engadi, ex quibus (vt suprà dictum est) eradicatæ fuerunt arbores Balsami, quæ modò sunt in agro Cayr Ægypti. Istud mare dicitur mortuum, Nota.

Cur mare mortuum dicatur.

Primò quidem quòd non viuidè currit, sed est quasi lacus.

Secundò quod amara est eius aqua, & fœtidum reddit odorem.

Tertiò quòd propter eius amaritudinem terra adiacens littori nil viride profert.

Quartò (prout dicitur) si cadat in ea bestia, vel aliud quid viuens, vix poterit plenè mori siue submergi in octo diebus, nec nutrit in se pisces aut quid simile:

Littora quoque sua variant quam sepè colorem, & sine vlla agitatione ventorum eijcit in quibusdam locis se aqua, extra proprios terminos. Per huiusmodi aquam dicitur Deus pro indicibili vitio Pentapolim submersisse, Sodomam, Gomorram, Adaman., Seboim, & Segor.

Quidam vocant hoc mare lacũ Asphaltidis, alij fluuium Dæmonũ, aut flumen Putre. Quod autem olim propheta interpretans dixit, montes Gilboe, nec ros nec pluuia veniat super vos, magis spiritualitèr quàm literalitèr videtur intelligendum. Nam ibi crescunt altissimi cedri, & arbores poma ferentes, ad capitis quantitatem humani, ex quibus valdè saporosus fit potus.

Nota.

Mare istud mortuum determinat fines terræ promissionis, & Arabiæ, Ideoq; vltra ipsum mare condidit quondam, vnus successorum Godfridi de Bollion forte & spectabile castrum, ponens illic copiosam Christianorum militiam ad terram promissionis custodiendum. Nunc verò temporis, est Soldani, & appellatur Caruth, id est mons Regalis. Sub hoc monte est villa dicta Sobal: habitat in illis partibus magna Christianorum multitudo.

Caput. 19.

De Nazareth, & Samaria.

NAzareth in prouincia Galileæ in qua nutritus, & de qua cognominatus est Dominus vniuersorum, distans ab Hierosolymis ad tres circiter dietas, erat quondã ciuitas, quæ nunc est dispersa, & rara domorum, quod vix villæ sibi competit nomen: & in loco Annunciationis, vbi Angelus ad Mariam dixit, Aue gratia plena, Dominus tecum, habebatur olim bona Ecclesia, pro qua paruum Saraceni restituerunt habitaculum, in colligendas peregrinorum offerendas.

A Nazareth redeundo per terram Galileę, transitur per Ramathaym Sophim, vbi nascebatur fidelis Samuel propheta Domini, & per Sylo, vbi locus orationis erat antequam in Ierusalem: & per Sichem magnæ vbertatis vallem, itur in prouinciam Samariæ, vbi habetur & bona ciuitas nunc dicta Neapolis, distans à sancta vrbe spacio solius dietæ, ac per fontem Iacob, super quem Iesus fatigatus ab itinere colloquebatur Samaritanæ, vbi & apparet ruina destructæ Ecclesiæ quondam illic habitæ. Et est ibi villa adhuc vocata Sychem, & in eo est mausoleum Ioseph patriarchæ filij Iacob: ad cuius ossa visitanda sub deuotione non minus peregrini Iudæi aduenerunt, quàm Christiani.

Samaria, nunc Sebaste.

Hinc satis propè est mons Garizin cum vetusto templo orationis Samaritanorum: extunc intratur Samaria, quę modò appellatur Sebaste, & est illius principalis ciuitas prouincię. In qua fuit primum terræ mandatum corpus beati Ioannis Baptistæ, inter sacra corpora Helizæi, & Abdiæ Prophetarum, vt quorum assimilibatur virtutibus in vita, corporibus iungeretur in sepultura. Hæc quoque distat ab Hierosolymis, fortassis 2. dietas.

Habetur & alius puteus aut fons intra illa montana, quem plerique similiter fontem Iacob appellant, cuius aqua secundum quatuor anni tempora variatur à suo colore, vt sit quandoq; clara, quandoque turbida, nunc viridis, & nunc rubra. Certum est autem tempore Apostolorũ, cum Samaria recepisset verbum Dei, illos fuisse conuersos, & baptizatos, in nomine Domini

Nota.

Porro à Nazareth quatuor leucis, eſt ciuitas olim dicta Naym, in 2.miliario Thabor montis contra Meridiem iuxta Endor. Ieronimus. Ante cuius portam reſuſcitauit Chriſtus defunctum filium vnicum matris ſuæ,præſentibus duabus turmis hominum copioſorum. Hinc quoque ad leucas duas,eſt ciuitas Iſrael, vbi olim morabatur peſſima regina Iezabel, quam Dei iudicio equorum vngulis conculcatam,canes ferè vſque ad caluariam comederunt.

CAPVT. 20.

De territorio Galileæ,& Samariæ,& de villa Sardenay.

ITem à Nazareth ad leucæ dimidium, monſtrantur in rupe veſtigia pedum,quæ dicuntur eſſe Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti vbi de manibus Iudæorum, ipſum de alta rupe præcipitare volentium deſiluit in iſtam. De quo ſaltu quidam intelligunt illud ſcriptum Euangelicum,Ieſus autem tranſiens per medium illorum ibat.

Ad quatuor autem leucas de Nazareth,eſt Cana Galileæ, vbi Chriſtus ad vrbanas matris preces,mutauit vndam in vinum optimum.

Ad diſtantiam quatuor leucarum à Nazareth,venitur in Thabor,montẽ ſpectabilẽ,vbi tranſfigurabatur Chriſtus, coram quibuſdam ſuis Apoſtolis, apparentibus ibidem, Moſe, & Helia, prophetis,voceq; dilapſa à magnifica Patris gloria, & videbatur Petro bonum ibi eſſe: quondam in hoc monte habebatur ciuitas, cum pluribus Eccleſijs, quarum nunc ſola reſtant veſtigia,excepto quod ille locus tranſſigurationis eſt inhabitatus, qui eſt Schola Dei nominatus. Notandum, Thabor eſt in medio Galileæ,campus mira iucunditate ſublimis, diſtans à "Diotesaria 3. milliaribus contra Orientem. Mons Thabor obſeruetur.

Item de Nazareth in tres leucas eſt villa, ſeu caſtrum Zaffara, de quo recolo me ſupradixiſſe capitè 4. Et inde venitur in Mare Galileæ,quod quamuis dicatur mare,eſt lacus aquæ dulcis longus.

Vltra centum 60.forſitan ſtadia eſt lacus,bonorum piſcium ferax & vber, qui etiam in alio loco ſui vocatur mare Tyberiadis,& in alio mare Genezareth, varians ſibi nomen,ſecundum ciuitates,& terras propinquas. Circa hoc mare Chriſtus frequentèr,& libentèr ambulaſſe videtur: hic vocauit ad ſui diſcipulatum, Petrũ,& Andream,Iacobum,& Ioannem: hic ſuper vndã ſiccis ambulabat veſtigijs, & præcipitem Petrũ filiũ tentantem, verbo increpationis releuat ne mergatur, hîc denique rediuiuus à morte repleuit diſcipulorum rete magnis piſcibus 153. Mare Tyberiadis.

Item in ciuitate Tiberiade,quæ eſt propè hoc mare habetur in veneratione menſa illius cœnæ, quam in Emaus caſtello Chriſtus cænauit, cum ab oculis commenſalium euanuit. Hic de propè monſtratur mons ille fertilis,mons ille pinguis, in quo de paucis panibus,& de pauciorib piſcibus iuſsu Chriſti fuerunt ſaturati, quinque milla hominum.

Ad initium autem prædicti maris iuxta villam Capernaum habetur fortius caſtrum totius terræ promiſſionis,in quo dicitur nata fuiſſe ſancta Anna mater virginis Mariæ.

Prædictis itaq; Chriſti veſtigijs,& terræ ſanctę locis à peregrino cum deuotione cordis & reuerentia debita viſitatis, ſi deſiderat reuerti, poſſit illud facere per Damaſcum, quæ eſt ciuitas longa,nobilis,& grandis,ac plena omnium rerum mercimonijs, cum tamen diſſat à portu maris tribus plenè dietis, per quod ſpacium itineris, cuncta traijciuntur à ſuis equis Dromedarijs, & Camelis: & putatur à pleriſque narrantibus fundata in loco vbi Cain protoplaſtorum filius Abel fratrem ſuum occidit. Damaſcus.

A Damaſco de propinquo eſt mons Seyr, ciuitas grandis firmata duplicibus muris ac populoſa nimis,in qua ſunt multi in arte Phyſica famoſi profeſſi. Item à Damaſco haud remotè diſtat caſtrum ſatis munitum,& firmum,quod Derces eſt nominatum. Habent autem in illis,& vlterioribus partibus hunc vſum: ſi quando caſtrum ab hoſtibus fuerit ſic obſeſſum, quòd Dominus eius non poſſit emittere nuncium amico ſuo remotè moranti, recipit columbam olim in caſtro, vel domo amici natam,vel educatam, quam hic ſibi per certam prouiſionem allatam detinuit incaueatam,& ſcriptas quas vult literas alligans collo columbæ, dimittit liberam volare, quæ protinus feſtinat ad locum propriæ natiuitatis. Sicque videtur cognoſci in illo caſtro quid agatur in iſto.

Cęterum peregrinus à Damaſco reuertendo, in quinque leucis venit Sardenay,quæ eſt villa

in alta rupe, cum multis Ecclesijs religiosorum Monachorum, & sanctarũ monialiũ fidei Christianæ. In quarum vna coram maiori altari in tabula lignea erat olim imago beatissimę virginis Marię non sculpta sed depicta in plano spacio. Ex hoc reditur per valles Bokar fertiles, & pro pascendis pecorum gregibus exuberantes: & intratur in montana vbi copiositas est fontium qui efluunt impetu de Libano. Ibique decurrit fluuius Sabbatayr, sic dictus quod diebus Sabbatis euidenter rapidius transit, quàm alijs sex diebus.

Peruenitur hinc ad satis altum montem, propè Tripolim ciuitatem, in qua ad præsens plures Christiani Catholicæ fidei habitant iugo infideliũ nimis oppressi. Ex hoc loco sibi deliberet peregrinus, quem sibi maris portũ accipiat ad repatriandũ, videlicet Beruth, an Sur vel Tyrũ.

Sur, vel Tyrus.

Postremò sciendum, quod terra promissionis in totali longitudine sui à Dan qui est sub Libano vsq; ad Berseba in Austrum continet circiter centum, & 80. leucas Lombardicas, & ab Hierico in totali latitudine circiter 60. Notandum, Dan est viculus in quarto à Penneade Miliario euntibus, contra Septentrionem: vsque hodiè sic vocatur terminus Iudeæ, contra Septentrionem: est etiam & fons Ior, de quo & Iordanis fluuius erumpens alterũ sortitus nomen Ior. Termini Iudeæ terræ à Bersabe incipiunt vsque ad Dan, qui vsque Peneaden terminatur, Ieronimus.

CAPVT. 21.

De secta detestabili Saracenorum, & eorum fide.

Diligentia Mandeuilli.

IAm restat vt de secta Saracenorũ aliquid scribam vel compendiosè, secundum quòd cum ijs frequenter cõlloquendo audiui, & liber Mahometi, quem Alcaron, vel Mesahaf, vel Harmè vocant, ijs præcipit, sicut illum sæpè inspexi, & studiosè perlegi.

Fides Saracenorum.

Credunt itaq; Saraceni in Deũ creatorem cœli & terræ qui fecit omnia in ijs contenta, & sine quo nihil est factum. Et expectant diem nouissimum iudicij, in quo mali cum corpore & anima descensuri sunt in infernũ perpetuò cruciandi, & boni equidem cum anima & corporè intraturi Paradisum fœlicitatis æternæ. Et hęc quidẽ fides pœnè inest omniũ mortaliũ nationibus, lingua & ratione vtentibus. Verumtamèn de qualitate Paradisi est magna diuersitas inter credentes.

Nam & Saraceni & Pagani, & omnes sectæ præter Iudæos & baptizatos Christianos sentiunt bonorum Paradisum fore terrestrem illum de quo fuit expulsus Adam propter inobedientiam protoplaustus: qui (vt putant) fluit, vel tunc fluet pluribus riuis lactis & mellis, & vbi in domibus & mansionibus nobiliter iuxta meritum vniuscuiusq; ædificatur auro, & argento & gemmis, perfruentur omnibus corporalibus delicijs, in oblectatione animę æternaliter sine fine. Illi ergò qui fide sanctæ Trinitatis carent, & Christum qui est vera lux ignorant, in tenebris ambulant. Iudęi verò & omnes baptizati rectè sentiunt Paradisum cœlestem & spiritualem, vbi quilibet secundum meritum Diuinitati vnietur, per cognitionem, & amorem. Attamen Iudæi quod contra Scripturas suas sanctæ Trinitati contradicunt, & Christo obloquuntur, qui est vera via, nesciunt quo vadunt. De baptizatis autẽ, qui firmitèr fidẽ Catholicam in humilitate cordis sub Ecclesię præceptis seruauerunt, hi soli filij sunt lucis, & in via veniendi ad cœlestẽ Pardisum quẽ Christus verbo prędicauit, & ad quẽ corpore & anima, videntibus discipulis, de facto cõscendit.

Credunt etiam Saraceni, omnia esse vera, quę Deus ore prophetarum est locutus, sed in diuersitate, quia nesciunt specificari, imò specificanti contradicerent defacili, vel negarent. Inter omnes prophetas ponunt quatuor excellentiores, quorum supremum & excellentissimũ fatentur Iesum Mariæ Virginis filiũ, quem & asserunt, sermonẽ, vel loquelam, vel spiritũ Dei, & pronunciatorẽ sententiarũ Dei, in iudicio generali futuro, & missũ à Deo ad Christianos docendos.

Tertium dant Mosi locum tanquam prolocutori Dei Misso specialiter, ad instruendos Iudęos.

Quartum volunt esse Mahomet, sanctum, & verum Dei nuncium ad seipsos missum, cum lege diuina in dicto libro plene contenta. Tenent itaq; indubitatè, quod beata Maria Iesum peperit, & cõcepit virgo manens intacta, ac libẽtèr loqui audiunt de incarnatione in ipsa facta per annunciationem Gabrielis Archangeli. Nam & Alcharõ eorum dicit, ad salutationem Angeli virginem expauisse, quòd tunc erat in partibus Galileæ incantator, Turquis nomine, qui per susceptam sibiformam Angeli plures virgines defloraverat, & beatam Virginem conueniisse Angelum, an esset Turquis. Refert quoq; eam peperisse sub palma Arbore, vbi habebatur præsepe bouis, & asinæ, & illic præ confusione puerperij, & verecundia ac dolore, fuisse in proximò desperatam, & infantulum in consolationem matris dixisse, mater ne timeas, Deus in te effudit secreta ad saluationem Mundi. Hæc & his similia multa ibi scribuntur figmenta, & isti plura inter se narrando componunt, quę hoc loco ventilanda non sunt.

Et dicit liber Iesum sanctissimum omnium Prophetarum fuisse veracem in dictis & factis, benignum, pium, iustum, & ab omni vitio penitus alienum: Sanctum quoque Ioannem Euangelistam post prædictos Prophetas fuisse alijs Sanctiorem, cuius & Euangelium fatentur

tur eſſe plenum ſalutari, ac veraci doctrina, & ipſum Sanctum Ioannem illuminaſſe cæcos, leproſos mundaſſe, ſuſcitaſſe mortuos, & in cælum volaſſe viuentem. Erat enim (prout dicit) plus quàm Propheta, & abſque omni peccato, contradicente eodem de ſeipſo, ſi dixerimus quòd peccatum non habemus, veritas in nobis non eſt: vnde & ſi quando Sarraceni tenent ſcriptum Euangelij Sancti Ioannis, aut illud beati Lucæ, miſſus eſt Angelus Gabriel, eleuant ambabus manibus pro reuerentia ſuper caput & ſuper oculos id ponentes, & oſculantur quàm ſæpè cum ſumma deuotione. Nonnulli etiam eorum in Græco, aut Latino literati conſueueuerunt cum deuotione cordis id lectitare.

Idem liber dicit Iudæos perfidos fuiſſe, quòd Ieſu eis primùm miſſo à Deo, & multa miracula facienti credere noluerunt, quódque per ipſum tota gens Iudæorum fuit dignè decepta, & meritò illuſa hoc modo. Ieſus in hora dum Iudas eum pro ſigno traditionis oſculabatur, poſuit per Metamorphoſin figuram ſuam, in ipſum Iudam, ſicque Iudæi in ambiguo lumine nocturni temporis, pro Ieſu Iudam capientes, ligantes, trahentes, deridentes, in fine crucifixerunt, putantes ſe omnia facere Ieſu, qui protinus capto & ligato Iuda, viuus aſcendit in cælum, deſcenſurus iterum viuus ad iudicium in die finali.

Et addit, Iudæos falſiſſimè vſque hodie nos Chriſtianos ſuo mendacio decipere, quo dicunt ſe Ieſu crucifixiſſe, quem non tetegerunt. Hinc errorem tenent Sarraceni obſtinati: & quoddam argumentum inire conantur. Nam ſi Deus (aiunt) permiſiſſet Ieſum, innocentem, & iuſtum ita miſerabiliter occidi, cenſuram ſuæ ſummæ iuſtitiæ minuiſſet. Sed cùm ipſi, vt ſupradictum eſt, in tenebris ambulant, idcircò ignorantes Dei iuſtitiam, ſtatuere volunt iuſtitiam, imò iniuſtitiam quam fabricant in corde ſuo, quia nos de cruce Chriſti ſcriptum nouimus, benedictum eſt lignum per quod ſit iuſtitia. Iſti tamen quod in aliquibus appropinquant veræ fidei, multi quandoque eorum inuenti ſunt conuerſi, & plures adhuc de facili conuerterentur, ſi haberent prædicatores, ſincerè eis verbum tractantes, quippe cùm iam fateantur legem Mahometi quandoque defecturam, ſicut nunc perijt lex Iudæorum, & legem Chriſtianorum vſque in finem ſeculi permanſuram.

Conuerſio Saracenorum non deſperanda.

De vita, & nomine Mahometi.

PRomiſi in ſuperioribus aliquid narrare de vita Mahometi legiſlatoris Sarracenorum, prout vidi in ſcriptis, vel audiui in partibus illis. Itaque Macho, ſiue Machon, vtrum in ſecunda ſyllaba ſcribatur N, litera, vel non idem refert: & ſi tertia ſyllaba addatur, & dicatur Machomet, vel etiam quarta, Machometus, nihil differt, quòd ſemper idem nomen repreſentat. Ipſi tamen illum ſæpius nominant Machon. Putatur autem iſtum Mahomet habuiſſe generationis ortum de Iſmael Abrahæ filio naturali de concubina Agar, vnde & vſque hodie quidam Sarracenorum dicuntur Iſmaelitæ, alij Agareni: ſed & quidam Moabitæ, & Ammonitæ, à duobus Loth filijs Moab & Amon, genitis per inceſtum de proprijs filiabus.

Hic verò Machon, circa annum incarnationis Domini ſexcenteſimum natus, in Arabia pauper erat gratis paſcens camelos, & interdum ſequens Mercatores in Aegyptum fordellos illorum proprio collo deferens pro mercede. Et quoniam tunc temporis tota Aegyptus erat Chriſtianæ fidei, didicit aliquid de fide noſtra, quòd diuertere ſolebat ad cellulam Heremitæ commorantis in deſerto. Et quodammodo fabulantur Sarraceni, quod illo quandoque ingrediente cellulam, cellulæ oſtium mutatum in ianuam valdè patentem, velut ante palatium, & gloriantur hoc primum miraculum. Qui ex tunc conquerendo ſibi pecunias, & diſcendo ſeculi actus dies eſt effectus, & prudens ab omnibus reputatus, in tantum, vt poſtmodum in terræ gubernatorem Corrozaen, (quæ eſt vna prouinciarum regni Arabiæ) aſſumeretur, ac deinde defuncto principe Codige per coniugium illius relictæ in eiuſdem prouinciæ principem eleuaretur. Erat autem ſatis formoſus, & valens, & vltra modum in verbis & factis maturus, & principalis, & ſatis diligebatur à ſuis, magis tamen metuebatur, & erat epilepticus, nemine tamen ſciente. Sed tandem ab vxore comperto contriſtabatur, ſe tali morbido nuptam, qui verſutus fefellit, & conſolabatur mœſtam figmento mendacij excogitati, dicens ſanctum Dei Archangelum Gabrielem ad colloquendum & inſpirandum ſibi, quædam arcana & diuina interdum venire, & pro virtute aut claritate veniente ſe ſubitò cadere & iacere ad intendendum inſpirationem.

Tempus Natiuitatis Mahometi.

Fabulæ Saracenorum.

Poſt hoc autem, mortuo etiam Rege Arabiæ, tanta egit per ſimulationem ſanctitatis, per donorum effuſionem, & copiam promiſsionum, quod electus eſt & aſſumptus, in totius Arabiæ Regem.

Incrementum authoritatis Mahometi.

Confirmato igitur Mahometo in regnationis ſuæ maieſtate ſuprema, tranſactis à conceptione Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti annis ſolaribus 612. in die Iouis feria quinta Hebdomadæ promulga-Tempus promulgationis Alcharani.

mulgauit præfatum detestandæ legis suæ librum, plenum perfidiæ & erroris,& à subditis tempore vitæ suæ seruari coegit,qui & vsque hodie in tanto æuo, & tot populis non sine iusto Dei iudicio colitur & seruatur, quamuis miserabile, & miserandum videtur, quòd tot animæ in illo perduntur.Erat quoque tempore regni eius,& alius Heremita in deserto Arabiæ, quem etiam quasi pro deuotione frequentare solebat, ducens secum aliquos de principibus & familia.Super quo plures eorum attendiati tractabant occidere Heremitam.Accidit tandem vna noctium, vt rex Heremitam & seipsum inebriaret, & inter loquendum ambo consopiti dormirent.Et ecce habita occasione comites gladio de latere Regis clàm extracto Heremitam interfecerunt, iterum clàm condentes cruentum gladium in vagina : ac ille euigilans virum videns occisum, magno furore succensus imposuit familiæ factum, volens omnes per iustitiam condemnari ad mortem.Cúmque coram iudicibus & sapientibus ageretur, hi omnes pari concordia,simili voce,& vno ore testabantur tam diuisim quàm coniunctim, Regem in ebrietate sua hominem occidisse,quamuis fortasis esset facti oblitus. Et in plenariam rei probationem,dixerunt ipsum reposuisse mucronem in loculo nudum intersum, sed calido cruore madentem. Quo ita inuento, ac tantis rex obrutus testificationibus, nimiùm erubuit,plenè obmutuit,& confusus recesit. Et ob hoc omnibus diebus suis vina bibere renunciauit : & in lege sua à cunctis bibi vetuit,ac vniuersis bibẽtibus,colentibus,& vendentibus maledixit.Cuius maledictio cõuertatur in caput eius,& in verticẽ ipsius iniquitas eius descẽdat,cùm de vino scriptum cõstet,quòd Deum & homines lętificet.Igitur de eo Sarraceni in sua superstitione deuoti vinum non bibunt,quanquam plures eorum quòd timent in publico non verentur in secreto.

Occasio vina interdicendi Sarracenis.

Est autem communis potus eorum dulcis,delectabilis, & nutritiuus de Casaniel confectus, de qua & Saccarum fieri solet.

Potus Sarracenorum.

Mahometus iste post mortem suam pessimam (mors enim peccatorum pesima) conditus fuit honorificè in capsa,ditissimo auro,& argento,& saxis perornata in vna ciuitate regni sui Arabiæ,vbi & pro sancto,& vero Dei nuncio incepit deuotè coli à suis per annos ducentos sexaginta,atque ex tunc circa annum Domini nongentisimum cum veneratione multa cadauer eius translatum est, in digniorem ciuitatem dictam Merchuel Iachrib, vbi iam longè latéque pro maximo sanctorum, à cordibus à diabolica fraude deceptis colitur,requiritur & adoratur.

Aliàs Mecca.

In ipsius translatione ipsa ciuitas restaurabatur,& firmabatur multò honorificentiùs,& fortiùs destructione sua,quæ per Carolum magnum Regem Francię anteà fuit plenè annihilata, dũ Ogerus dux Danorum præfatus in ea tenebatur captiuus,quem Templarij ad filios Brehir Regis Sarracenorum cum traditione vendiderant, eò quòd ipse Ogerus dictum Brehir in prœlio occiderat,iuxta Lugdunum Franciæ ciuitatem. Et si quando nationis alterius quis ad legem conuertitur Sarracenorum,dum à flamine eorum recipiendus est,dicit & facit eum Dei nuncium,& repetit sic : Lacllech ella alla Mahomet zoyzel alla beth : quod valet tantum: Non est Deus nisi vnus,& Mahomet fuit eius nuncius.

Caput 23. De colloquio Authoris cum Soldano.

Finaliter Sarraceni ponunt Iudæos malos,eò quòd legem Dei violauerunt sibi missam,& cõmissam per Mosem.Et à simili probant Christianos malos,quòd non seruant legẽ Euãgelij Christi,quam seruandam susceperint.Inest enim ijs falsa persuasio ita vt putent vnũquemq; in ea qua natus est secta posse beari,si susceptam seruauerit illibatè : ideóq; probant ab opposito se esse bonos,quia,sicut dicunt, obseruant scripta legis præcepta & ceremonias sancti libri sui à Deo sibi transmissi per beatũ nunciũ suũ Mahomet.Vnde & ego non tacebo quid mihi cõtigit.

Dominus Soldanus quodam die in castro,expulsis omnibus de camera sua,me solùm retinuit secum tanquam pro secreto habẽdo colloquio.Consuetũ enim est ijs eijcere omnes tẽpore secretorum: qui diligenter à me intetrogauit qualis esset gubernatio vitæ in terra nostra,breuiter respondebã,bona,per Dei gratiam,qui recepto hoc verbo dixit ita non esse.Sacerdotes(inquit) *vestri,qui seipsos exhibere deberent alijs in exemplũ,in malis iacent actibus, parùm curant de Templi seruitio:habitu & studijs se conformant mundo: se inebriant vino,continentiã infringentes,cum fraude negotiantes,ac prana principibus consilia ingerentes.Cõmunis quoq; populus,dum festis diebus intẽdere deberent deuotioni in templo,currit in hortis,in spectaculis,in tabernis vsq; ad crapulam,& ebrietatem,& pinguia manducans & bibens, ac in bestiarum morem,luxuriam pranam exercens. de facili remittentes. Scimus etiam eos propter peccata ſua perdidiſſe hanc terr am optimam quam tenemus, nec timemus eam amittere, quamdiu ſe taliter gubernant. Attamen non dubitamus, quin in futurum per meliorem vitæ conuerſationem merebuntur de noſtris eam manibus recuperare.

Ad hoc ego vltra confuſus & ſtupefactus, nequiui inuenire reſponſum; verebar enim obloqui veritati, quamuis ab Infidelis ore prolatæ, & vultu præ rubore demiſſo percunctatus ſum, Domine, ſalua reuerentia, qualiter poteſtis ita plenè hoc noſcere? De hominibus (ait) meis interdum mitto ad modum Mercatorũ per terras, & regiones Chriſtianorũ, cum Balſamo, gemmis, ſericis, ac aromatibus, ac per illos ſingula exploro, tam de ſtatu Imperatoris, ac Põtificum, Principum, ac Sacerdotum, quàm Prælatorum, nec non æquora, prouincias, ac diſtinctiones earum.

Perſuaſio ad non credentes terrarum diuerſitates per orbem terræ.

MIrabilis Deus mirabililia propter ſemetipſum creauit, vt ſcilicet ab intellectualibus creaturis ſuis intelligeretur, & per hoc diligeretur, atque in hoc ipſe creator, & creatura ſe mutuò fruerentur. Mirabilis eſt ergo Deus maximè in illo, quòd ipſe ſolus ſufficit ſibi: & mirabilis in altis Dominus, hoc eſt, in cælo & in cæleſtibus: ſed & mirabilis in terris, & in terreſtribus: tamen ſi verum iudicauerimus, nihil eſt mirabile, quod mirũ videri non debet, ſi ille qui omnipotens eſt, fecit quæcunque voluit in cælo & in terra. Sed ecce dum nobis contingit videre rem quam priùs non vidimus, miratur noſter animus, non quòd ſimpliciter mirum eſt, ſed quod nobis id mirum & nouum. Deus vnus, ſimplex quidem eſt, vt creaturæ cæleſtes quò Deo magis de propinquo ſunt eò ſimpliciores exiſtunt. Terreſtres autem quòd in ſitu remotiori ſint, idcircò magis diuerſæ, magis contrariæ inter ſe ſunt.

Ergo quicunque ſapiens eſt non ſtupet animo, dum in terrenis reſpicit res varias, & diuerſas, vel dum diuerſa contingunt, ſeu inueniuntur in partibus terræ diuerſis: ſed qui intellectum ſuper ſenſum non eleuant, & magis credunt oculo ſuo corporeo, quàm ſpirituali, & qui nunquam à natiuitatis ſuę loco receſſerunt, iſti vix volunt credere, ſeu poſſunt alijs vera narrantibus de mundi diuerſitatibus.

Attamen tales, ſi vellent, de facili videre poſſint ſuum errorem. Quia quicunque natus in vna ciuitate, vel patria, ſi tantummodò moueat ſe ad proximam ciuitatem, inueniet ibi procul dubio aliquam differentiam, vel diuerſitatem in idiomate linguæ, vel in modo loquendi, in moribus hominum, in occupationibus, in legibus, in conſuetudinibus, vel etiam in agrorum fructibus, in arborum frugibus, ſeu in his quæ gignuntur in terra, in aere, & in aquis.

Si ergo aliqualiter inueniri poſsit differentia in proximo, quantò maior ſit diſtantia, tantò maior differentia æſtimanda eſt in remoto, vel in remotiori, ſeu remotiſsimo loco. Vnde ego, quia in præcedente parte tractatus narrare cœpi aliqua, quæ in his, & in peregrinatione mea vſque in terram promiſsionis ſanctam vidi, de quibus etiam poteſt, & poterit conſtare multis, qui qui in partibus nostris eadem peregrinatione me præcesserunt, & secuti sunt, procedam in describendo aliqua illorum, quæ vidi & percepi in deambulatione mea, qua per graui multas alias terras, & perlegi multas vndas, vsque in multorum hoc tempus annorum, & propter insipientes, & discredentes non tacebo. Sed nec propter credentes nec sapientes satis mouebor; tamen vt diuersa Dei opera qui respicere non possunt oculo, saltem legant, vel audiant ex hoc scripto. Pauca vtique vidi horum quæ sunt, sed pauca horum quæ vidi, narrabo.

CAPVT. 25. De Armenia, Persia, & Amazonia.

DE regionibus quæ Iudeæ contiguantur, scilicet Arabia, Aegypto & Syria, statui modicum vltra narrare, relinquens hunc locum narrandi alijs peregrinis. Et festinans ad terras remotiores, Armeniam minorem, non per singulas ciuitates, sed celeriter transiens, vidi à remotis amplum castrum vocatum Del espoyer, de quo mihi sustinui dici, quod sit vastum, & à nemine habitatum, nisi à fantastica quadam Domina, seruante in medio maioris aulæ super perticam, volucrem rapacem, quæ dicitur Latinè accipiter, vel huiusmodi: quam auem, si aliquis hominum ingrediens se custodire peruigil absq; vlla somnolentia per septem continuos dies & noctes posset, ipsa Domina in fine facti apparens concederet illi quantamcunque faceret petitionem terræ, commodi, vel honoris, sed si obdormiret, periret. Huic tamen dicto parùm curaui accommodare aurem, nisi quòd communiter dicebatur, in bene transacto tempore prædicta fuisse tentata per duas personas, vnum Regem, & alterum Pastorem. Et Regi quidem quod indebitam fecit petitionem, vile successit negotium, pastori peroptimè successit negotium.

Circa fines Persiæ in terra "Sennaar, est illa quæ olim dicebatur Babylonia, nec apparet ibi aliquid, quàm ruinæ grandis & vetustæ ciuitatis, quæ ab hominibus est deserta, sed à Draconibus inhabitata, & alijs animalibus, & volucribus venenosis. Hanc terram tenet Imperator Persarum, vt suprà dixi. Etiam intra fines Persiæ, est terra, vbi sanctus Iob patiens morabatur, quæ modò dicitur terra Sues, in cuius montanis inuenitur Manna, quod venditur in Apothecis. Huic terræ Sues contiguatur Chaldæa, quæ non est magna, quamuis nobilis regio habeatur. Et ab ista intratur Amazonia.

Amazonia est modica insula, quam absque viris solæ regunt & inhabitant mulieres: cuius rei prima causa hæc fuit.

Amazonia insula.

Olim cum insula communiter à viris, & mulieribus habitabatur, Rex eius dictus Colopius cum omnibus nobilibus suis in bello contra Regnum Scithiæ occisus fuit. Audientes igitur nobilium vxores ipsius insulæ se viduatas, super his, in doloroso furore animi ad plures congressiones occiderũt & fugauerunt omnes aliarum mulierum maritos, ne scilicet sua ingenuitas subiaceret voluntati, & potestati plebis. Et tandem post reformatam inter se pacem mulieres inito consilio statuerunt se solas absque viris dominari in terra, atque ex tunc sumi sibi regimen per certam electionis formam, quæ robusta, agilis, sapiens, iuuenis, ac valens apparet in armis.

Sciendũ tamen est, extra hanc insulam flumen esse, & alias modicas insulas, quarũ vna dicitur Carmagite, de quibus licitum est ijs accersire viros, & amasios bis in anno, ita vt nulla moram trahat septem dierum naturaliũ sub pœna indubitata occisionis. Infantem masculũ nutrire licet quoadusq; per se comedat & gradiatur, tunc transmittendus est in domũ paternam. Generosæ natæ puellæ aufertur ignito cultro vber sinistrum pro scuto gerendo, degeneri dextrum, ad sagittandum de arcu Turco.

Regina cum consiliaribus & officialibus suis regit sapientèr & benè terram, & seruat omnes sibi sub districta obedientia, per leges, & pœnas, & amendas conscriptas. Et cùm circumiacentium insularum Reges contra se ad inuicem prœliari solent, tunc Regina Amazoniæ cum suis Nobilibus ab vna parte pro magno stipendio vocari solet in adiutoriũ, vbi & inuẽtæ sunt sapiẽtes in consilijs, probæ in armis, acres in conflictibus, & in omnibus Curiæ actibus bene valẽtes.

CAP.

Caput 26.

De Aethiopia, & Diamantibus, & de infima India.

Aethiopia consistit à terra Chaldæorum in Austrum, quæ distinguitur in Orientalem Aethiopiam, & Meridionalem, quarum prima in illis partibus vocatur Cush, propter hominum nigredinem, altera Mauritania. Et est ibi Regnum Saba, de quo legitur, quod Regi Salomoni Reges Arabum, & Saba, dona & tributa adduxerunt. Eóque Regina Saba venit à finibus, hoc est, à longinquis terræ partibus audire sapientiam Salomonis. Omnes in Aethiopia aquę in fluuijs & riparijs, & fontibus sapiunt Sal, propter nimium calorem. Est ibi vnus aquæ fons ita de nocte calidus, vt nemo in eo sustineat manum, & ita de die frigidus, vt bibi vix possit.

Mauritania.

Regnum Saba

Plinius.

Generaliter isti de Mauritania Aethiopes comedunt parùm, de facili inebriantur, fluxum ventris patiuntur, nec diu viuunt.

De Aethiopia intratur in Indiam mediam, nam triplex est, videlicet infima, quæ in quibusdam suis partibus est nimis frigida ad inhabitandum: Media quæ satis temperata est, & superior, quæ nimis calida. In India infima propter continuum & graue frigus generatur christallum de aqua per gelu, sicut quidam asserunt. Sed certum est ibi haberi rupes christalli, & in illis gigni optimos Diamantes, quos lingua illius vocant Hamesht.

India triplex.

Diamantes.

Est autem diamas paruus præciosus lapis, magnæ virtutis, sicut plenius describitur in lapidariis. Quidam inueniuntur in magnitudine pisi, vel etiam piso minores: alii ad quantitatem fabæ, sed nullus maior auellana, vel nuce. Et dicitur de eo in partibus illis, quod si hic qui portat sit continens, & sobrius reddit illum magnanimum & audacem, & iuuat in causis iustis certantem, conseruat substantias corporales, aufert praua somnia, depellit prauorum spirituum illusiones, sortilegia, & incantationes, ac valet contra lunaticam passionem, & dæmonis obsessionem, & venenosum quod illi appropinquauerit exsudat, & exhumescit.

Optimi Diamantes de India assimulantur in colore multùm christallo, sed sunt aliquantulum magis citrini, & pro sui duritie poliri non possunt. Inueniuntur autem ibi nonnulli subnigri ad colorem violę: Alii nascuntur in Arabia nigri, & tenuiores prædictis, alii in Macedonia, & quidam in Cypro, sed in mineriis auri, dum prima massa in minutias confringitur, interdum reperiuntur. Sciendum enim est, sæpè plures simul crescere, nec non generant, & concipiunt inuicem de rore cæli, quemadmodum & Margaritæ: quod ego pluries tentans, accepi de rupe cespitem cum diamante masculo, & femella, plantans in pratello, & frequentans, focillans madefeci de rore Maii. Et ecce in breui, paruulus ex iis gignebatur, nascebatur, & adolescebat ad debitam quantitatem: fiunt verò omnes per naturam cum pluribus angulis vt trium vel quatuor, aut quinque laterum, & nonnulli cum lateribus senis. E contra, omnes margaritæ nascuntur in forma sphærica, seu rotunda.

Experientia Mandeuilli in diamantibus.

Et notandum quòd mercatores, pro diamantibus, frequenter aliud vendunt: Nam solet commixtio fieri de christallo Crechee, de Saphiro, de Lonpes Citrino, de lapide Yri, & de paruis petris ex murium nidis. Probatio veri diamantis haberi potest his modis.

Diamantum sophisticatio.

Probatio veri diamantis.

Primò, si ita inuenitur tener, vt se poliri dimittat, non est verus.

Item si de eo non potest scindi vitrum cristallum, non est verus.

Item accipe paruum quantitatis lapidem Adamantem, qui solet sibi attrahere acum & ferrum, & pone verum diamantem super adamantem, tùncque si ministraueris adamanti acum, videbis adamantem operari nihil, vero diamante præsente, dum tamen adamas non sit diamante maior.

Item si cultellum laminæ tenuis, habentem in manubrio inclusum vel alligatum verum diamantem in mensa vel assere erexeris, protinus vt ipsi venenum appropinquabit, stabit tremulans atque sudans. Et notandum, quòd per luxuriosum, seu gulosum qui ferret diamantem amitteret virtutem ad tempus.

Terra Indiæ appellatur ab Indo ibi currente fluuio, cuius anguillæ inueniuntur quandoque vltra 20. pedes in longitudine. In media India transitur per multas insulas vsque ad mare Oceanum, in insulam Ormuz, vbi Mercatores Venetiæ sæpè tendunt; sed viri, qui assueti non sunt tantum sustinere calorem, ne exeant perpendicula de corporibus propè ad genua, ibi se contra hoc debitè inuoluunt, & ligant, nec audent ibi transire nauibus ferrum continentibus, ne teneantur de rupibus adamantum.

Terra Indiæ vnde dicta.

Insula Ormuz

A Balsara per sinum Persicũ ad Ormusium nauigantes, talibus hodie vtuntur nauigijs, sine ferreis clauis.

Hic in aliquibus Aethiopiæ partibus habitant publicè, inhonestorum vtriusque sexus hominum consuetudinem inhonestam gerentes, & in æstu meridiano refrigerandi causa exeunt circà ciuitatem ad riparias lacere, & discurrere nudis prorsus corporibus omni pudore reiecto, ex quo procul dubio inhonesta vitia sequuntur.

Est

Insula Chaua, vel Chaul forte.

Est & non longè ab ista insula regio seu insula Caua vel Chaua, quæ à primo statu multùm est minorata per mare. Hi sunt infidelissimi Paganorum. Nam quidam adorant Solem, alij Lunam, ignem, aquam, & terram, arborem, vel serpentem, vel cui de manè primò obuiant. Ibi magni mures, quos nos dicimus rattas, sunt in quantitate paruorum canum. Et quoniam per cattos capi non possunt, capiuntur per canes maiores.

Corpora mortuorum non sepeliuntur ibi, nec cadauera quælibet bestiarum operiuntur, quòd ad aeris æstum carnes in breui tempore consumuntur, nam & tota insula consistit sub zona torrida. Inde transiri potest per mare in Indiam superiorem, siue maiorem, videlicet Imperium Presbyteri Ioannis ad portum ciuitatis Zarke, quæ est elegans & bona satis. In ea habitãt plurimi Catholicæ fidei Christiani: & habentur plurimæ Abbatiæ religiosorum, quas olim Dux Danorum Ogerus constituit, vnde & vsque nunc dicuntur Ecclesiæ Dani, atque ex hoc nauigari potest in terram Lombe.

Zarke, vel Zarchia.

Terra Lombe.

Caput 27.

De foresto Piperis, & fonte iuuentutis.

Regio seu insula dicta Lombe, spatiosa quidem est, continens forestum dictum aliàs Tombar, longũ per dietas 18. In orbe vniuersõ nõ noscimus crescere piper, præterquàm in hoc foresto. In quo & habẽtur duæ ciuitates, vna Flandrina, (& illa ciuitas inhabitata est à Iudæis, & Christianis, inter quos sæpè magna seditio oritur) altera Singlant: quas quondam Danus fertur fundasse Ogerus, vocans vnam Flandrinam, nomine auiæ suæ ex parte patris sui, alteram Florentam nomine auiæ ex parte matris suæ, quæ mutato nomine nunc vocatur Singlant.

Flandrina.

Singlant.

Sciendum est autem, piper ibi crescere in hunc modum: sicut nos plantamus vites aut quercus arbores robustas, vt vitis cum fructibus se spargat, vt supportetur per ramos, sic coluntur arbusta piperis ad arbores foresti, & sparguntur per ramos, & dependent fructus vt botri. Et venit in eodem arbusto triplex piper in anno.

Piper quomodo crescat.

Primum est quod vocatur longum piper, & venit priusquam nascuntur folia in arbustis, quemadmodum nos in arbore videmus corylo in hyeme ante folia præcedere quasdam caudulas longas, quo circa initium vindemiato, nascuntur cum folijs botri piperis viridis ad similitudinem paruarum vuarum. Quod quidem circa tempus Iulii in eadem viriditate vindemiatum in æstu feruido siccatur ad Solem, vt accipiat nigredinem, & rugarum contractionem.

Piper longum

Postea exurgit piper album in granis minoribus, & in abundantia satis minori, quo tanquam pretiosiori vtuntur in partibus illis, & rarò vendunt ad partes istas.

Piper album.

Primum piper appellatur Sorbotyn, secundum Fulful, tertium verò Bauos.

Sunt autem per nemus istud fera animalia, & venenosa, sicut parui serpentes, colubri, & huiusmodi, de quibus nescio quis famam diffundit per nostras partes, quòd vindemiatores piperis tales vermes fugant per ignem: sed non est ita, imò vngunt brachia, manus, tibias, & pedes cum quodam succo herbæ dictæ Limonse, à quo citò diffugit omne venenum.

In huius foresti capite sub monte Polembo, est ciuitas dicta Polemba, & sub eodem monte fons qui dicitur Iuuentutis. Aqua huius fontis reddit odorem, & saporem quasi de omni genere aromatum, nam singulis penè horis immutat odorem, & saporem. Et quisquis per aliquos dies potat ieiuno stomacho sanatur in breui tempore, à quacunque interiori infirmitate, languore duntaxat mortis excepto: & sanè illorum qui propè sunt, & frequenter bibunt apparet per totum vitæ tempus mira iuuentus. Ego autem ter vel quater bibi, quamobrem & vsque hodiè arbitror potiùs me corporaliter valere. Putatur enim fons ille immediatè per poros subterraneos eliquari de fonte paradisi terrestris, ita quòd nulla via decurrentium super terram fluentium vitietur. In ista etiam regione, & in insulis circumquaque crescit gingiber valdè bonum, vnde & mercatores sæpè ibi tendunt de Venetia pro emendo pipere & gingibere. Gentes verò huius insulæ peruersę & stolidissimæ sunt superstitionis adorantes bouem tanquam animal beatissimum, propter eius simplicitatem mansuetudinem, patientiam, & vtilitatem.

Gingiber.

Multitudo cuiuslibet ciuitatis vel villæ vnum specialem nutrit bouem, quem postquam laborauit in aratro per sex annos immolant manducantes pariter cum maxima solemnitate. Et quicunque inde minimam minutiam comedit, reputat se sanctificatum totum.

Porrò apud Regem tenetur bos singularis, cuius custos diligentissimè vrinam in vase aureo accipit simpliciter, & de fimo in vase consimili: & quotidiè venit summus eorum prælatus, quem dicunt Archiprotoplaustum, offert personaliter in prædictis pretiosis vasis, Domino Regi de bouis vrina & fimo, atque in vrina, quam appellant Gaul, tingens manus, defricat, & perungit Regis pectus & frontem, deinde similiter de fimo in multa cordis attentione, ad finem vt

poſſint aſſequi quatuor virtutes bouis præfati.

Poſt regem cùm reuerentia accedunt, & vnguntur Barones, principes, & poſt ipſos cæteri ordinati quicunque attingere poſſint, putantes ſe ſanctificari per rem penitus non valentem, imò nimis fœtidam, & inhoneſtam.

Præterea populi iſti colunt Idola facta ad medium in forma humana, & ad medium in forma bouis. In quibus permiſſione Dei per eorum perfidiam maligni ſpiritus habitant dantes de interrogatis reſponſa. Et hijs Idolis offerunt infinita donaria quandoq;, & ſacrificant interdum proprios infantes, ipſorum ſanguine Idola reſpergentes.

Dum hic maritus moritur, vxor comburitur cum marito, niſi de illo habeat ſobolem cum quo viuere ſolet, & velit. Quæ ſibi eligit cum prole ſuperuiuere, non habebitur de cætero fide digna. Vxor cum marito combuſta.

Attamen in ſimili cauſa, ſi vir non vult cremari cum vxore mortua, non minuit ei honorem.

Et forte vinum naſcitur ibi: quòd mulieres bibunt, & non viri, vt ſic mulieribus creſcant barbæ, ſed mulieribus raduntur, & viris minimè.

Caput. 28.

De Eccleſia & corpore Sancti Thomæ Apoſtoli.

HInc in Meridiem pluribus exactis Inſulis per viam decem dietarum venitur in Regnum Mabron. Illic in ciuitate Calamiæ, ſeruatur in magno templo corpus beatiſſimi Thomæ Apoſtoli Domini noſter Ieſu Chriſti in capſa honorificata. In quo loco & martirizatus fuit, licet dicunt quidam, quod in Ediſſa ciuitate. Iſte populus non eſt multum tempus tranſactum, quin fuit totus in fidei relligione, ſed nunc eſt ad peſſimos Gentilium ritus peruerſus, nec attendit, nec veneratur relliquias ſancti corporis Apoſtoli ibidem contentas, quamuis ijs euidens, ac vtile, & mirificum præſtare ſolebat beneficium, quod infra narrabo. Regio Mabrò, vel malaber. Calamia, vel Calumè. Thomæ Apoſtoli ſepultura.

Per certas hiſtorias habetur Ducem Danorum Ogerum conquiſiuiſſe has terras, & in exaltatione ſanctarum Apoſtoli relliquiarum feciſſe fieri præfatam ſpectactilem Eccleſiam, ac intra eum reponi in nobiliſſimo loculo, gemmis, auro, argentoque decenter ornato Sanctum corpus, ac deinde poſt annorum tempus trecentorum Aſſyrios abſtuliſſe feretrum cum ipſo corpore ſancto in Ediſſam ciuitatem Meſopotamiæ, in qua & fuit martyrizatus ſecundum quoſdam, rurſumq; poſt ſexaginta & tres annos recuperatũ corpus in ſuam fuiſſe Eccleſiam reſtitutum, videlicet in Calamia, atque in eiuſdem recuperationis ſignum certum dimiſerunt iſti, & dimittunt extra ferretri loculum dependere brachium dextrum, cum manu quæ tetigiſſe creditur pia reſurgentis vulnera Chriſti. Quærendum eſt quæ ſint iſtæ hiſtoriæ.

Eadem quoque manus ſolet vſque hodie ſuæ veræ pœnitentiæ tale manifeſtare miraculum vt dum partes quælibet litigantes velint vtræque ſuas cauſas iuramento confirmare, conſcriptis hinc indè cauſis ponantur ambæ cartulæ in Apoſtoli manu. Quæ cunctis ‖ exeuntibus Eccleſiam, protinus ſub vnius horæ tempore reiecta longius falſitate, veritatem ſibi reſeruat: ſed nunc ſicut dicere cœpi iſti populi huic beneficio Dei ingrati, & diabolica illuſione excæcati mirabilitèr paganizant. ‖Interea dum exirẽt, Monachi ſuos dolos potuerunt exercere.

Nam & in hac ipſa beati Thomæ Eccleſia ſtatuerunt multa miræ magnitudinis ſimulachra, ex quibus vnum quòd maius eſt multò alijs apparet ſedens homo in alto ſolio adoperto aureis ſericis, & lapidibus præcioſis, habenſque ad collum ſuſpenſa pro ornatu multa cinctoria præcioſè gemmis, & auro contexta. Ad hoc autem Idolum adorandum confluunt peregrini à remotis partibus, & propinguis, in ſatis maiori copia, & valdè feruentiori deuotione quàm Chriſtiani, ad ſanctuum Iacobum in Galizia, quia multi eorum per totum peregrinationis iter, non audent erigere palpebras oculorum, ne fortè propter hoc deuotio intermittatur. Idolum in templo ſancti Apoſtoli erectum.

Alij de propè venientes ſuperaddunt labori itinerandi, vt ad tertium vel ad quartum paſſum ſemper cadant in genibus. Nonnulli quoque demoniaca inſpiratione ſemetipſos per viam peregrinationis lanceolis, & cultellis nunc minoribus, nunc maioribus ſauciant vulneribus per ſingula corporis loca, & dum ante Idolum perueniunt, exciſum fruſtum de carne propria proijciunt ad Idolum pro offerenda, ac plagis durioribus ſe caſtigant, & quandoque ſponteneè penitus ſe occidunt: in ſolemnitatibus verò, ſicut in dedicatione, & ſicut in thronizatione ſimulachrorum, fit conuentus populi, quaſi totius Regni. Et ducitur cum proceſſione maius Idolum per circuitum ciuitatis, in curru precioſiſſimo, modis omnibus perornato, & præcedunt in numero magno puellæ cantantes binæ, & binæ ordinatiſſimè, ſucceditque pluralitas Muſicorum cum inſtrumentis varijs ſimphonizantes, quos continuè ſubſequitur currus, cuius lateribus coniungit ſe peregrinorum exercitus, qui & venerunt de remotis.

Ibique cernitur miserabilis actus vltra modum. Nam aliqui victi vltrà modum diabolica deuotione proijciunt se sub rotis currus præcedentis, vt frangantur sibi crura, brachia, latera, dorsa, nec non & colla in reuerentiam Dei sui (vt dicunt) à quo remunerationem sperant, venire ad Paradisum terrestrem.

Occidunt se in honorem Idoli.

Et post processionem postquàm statuerunt Idolum in templo suo loco, multiplicatur coram simulachris numerus sæpè plangentium, & occidentium vltrà quam credi sit facile. Ita quod quandoque in illa vnica solemnitate inueniuntur ducenta corpora, vel plura occisorum. Et assistantes propinqui amici talium diaboli martyrum, cum magna musicorum melodia decantantes in sua lingua offerunt Idolis corpora, ac demum accenso rogo omnia corpora comburunt in honorem Idolorum, assumentes sibi singuli aliquid de ossibus aut cineribus pro reliquijs, quas putant sibi valituras contra quælibet infortunia, & tempestates. Et habetur ante templum aquæ lacus, velut seruatorium piscium, in quo proijcit populus largissimè suas oblationes, argentũ, aurũ, gemmas, cyphos, & similia, quibus ministri certis temporibus exhibentes prouident Ecclesię, ac simulachro, ac sibi ipsis abundanter. Quoddam fabulosum scriptum exiuit per partes nostras, quod in prędicta processione circumferatur cum pheretro corpus beati Thomæ, qui & in fine processionis populo communicaret proprijs manibus de Eucharistiæ sacramento, sed non est ita, & nunquam fuit.

Processio 52. diætarum in Austrum.

INde vlterius procedendo in Austrum per multas & mirabiles terras quinquaginta duarum diętarum spacio, habetur magna Insula Lamori. Illic omnes nudi incedũt, & ferè omnia sunt singulis communia, nec vtuntur priuatis clauibus siue seris, imo & omnes mulieres sunt communes omnibus & singulis viris, dummodo violentia non inferatur: sed & peior est ijs consuetudo, quod libentèr comedunt teneras carnes humanas; vnde & negotiatores adferunt eis crassos infantes venales: quod si non satis pingues afferuntur, eos saginant sicut nos vitulum, siue porcum.

Ad meridiem terræ Lamori est Insula bona, ‖Sumebor, cuius gentes reputant se nobiliores alijs, signantes se in facie certo caûterio. Isti semper guerras gerunt contra præfatas gentes nudas de Lamory.

Insula Rotonigo.

Ad modicam indè destantiam habetur Insula Rotonigo abundans in bonis pluribus: sed & in Austrum sequuntur aliæ plures regiones & Insulæ, de quibus prolixum narrare fuisset.

Iaua Insula, grandis.

Et est valde grandis regio Iaua, habens in circuitu ambitum leucarum duarum millium. Huius rex est valde potens, & imperans septem insularum vicinarum regibus. Terra ista est populosa valdè, & crescunt in ea species, & abundantia gingiberis, canella, gariofoli, nuces muscatæ, & mastix, cum aromatibus multis. Sed & quod ibi nascatur vinum, non habent: aurum & argentum est ibi in copia immensa, quòd patet in regis Iauæ palatio, cuius palatij nobilitas non est facilè scribenda.

Multa aromata in Iaua.

Cuncti gradus ascendentes ad palatij aulas, & aularum cameras, & ad thalamos Camerarum sunt solidi de argento vel auro, sed & omnis stratura pauimentorum in alijs habetur ad similitudinem scacarij, vnam quadratam argenti, alteram auri, laminis valdè crassis, & in ipsis pauimentis, sunt exsculpta gesta, & historiæ diuersæ. In principali verò aula, est plenariè expressa Dani Ducis Ogeri historia, à natiuitate ipsius, quousque in Franciam fantasticè dicatur reuersus, cum tempore Caroli magni regis Franciæ, ipse Ogerus armata manu conquisiuit Christianitati ferè omnes partes transmarinas à Ierosolymis vsque ad arbores solis & Lunæ, ac propè paradisum terrestrem.

Victoriæ Ogeri Ducis Dani.

Pro hac Regione Iaua, (quæ tangit fines Imperij Tartarię) sibi subiuganda, Imperator Grand Can multoties pugnauit, sed nunquam valuit expugnare. Hinc per mare venitur ad regnum ‖Thalamassæ, quód & ‖Panchon dicitur, in quo habetur magnus numerus bonarum ciuitatum. Intra hanc Insulam, quatuor sunt genera arborum, de quarum vna accipitur farina ad panem, de secunda mel, de tertia vinum, & de quarta pessimum venenum. Extrahitur autem farina de suis arboribus isto modò.

De Regnis Cynocephalorum, & alijs Inſulis.

PEr mare oceanum poteſt hinc veniri in Inſulam ‖Kaffa: quicunque ibi infirmari videtur ad mortem, ſuſpenditur ad arborem, antequam moriatur, vt non ab immundis terræ vermibus, ſed a cœli auibus, quas reputant Dei Angelos, comedatur. ‖Vel Caffeles.

In alia Inſula faciunt ſuos infirmos ante mortem ab eductis in hoc magnis canibus ſtrangulari, manducantes in conuiuio carnes pro optimo ferculo venationis.

Interpoſitis quoque multis Inſulis, de quibus ſubticeo gratia breuitatis, habetur Inſula ‖Mylke, & hij videntur omnium hominum crudeliſſimi; Nam quilibet particulariter pro leui & modica ſtimulatione, vulnerat, ſauciat, & occidit, proximum, vicinum & amicum: Et ſi quando diſſidentes contigerit concordari, non habebitur pax rata, niſi quiſque de alterius ſanguine biberit bonum hauſtum. ‖Vel Mekke.

Hinc nauigando per multas & diuerſas Inſulas, qui in ſingulas intrare, & moram trahere voluerit, ſtupenda multa videbit, & poterit venire in Inſulam ‖Tracoide. ‖Vel Traceda.

Illic ſunt homines abſque vllo ingenio penitus beſtiales, ſerpentibus, vermibuſque veſcentes, nec inuicem loquentes, ſed conceptus ſuos ſignis & indicijs oſtendentes. Diligunt precioſos lapides tantummodo pulchritudinis gratia, non cauſa virtutis: & ſuper omnes vnum diligunt lapidem habentem 60. colorum varietates, qui & Tracoides vocatur propter ipſos.

Intratur hinc per Oceanum in regionem Niconoram, vel Nacumeram, habentem in circuitu ſpacium mille leucarum: omnes ibi geniti homines habent capita ad formam canum, vnde & in Græco Cynocephali dicuntur. Iſti etiam incedunt nudis corporibus, excepto parui panniculi operimento, ſecretiora loca & poſteriora retro tegente. Rationabiles tamen multum ſunt hij, & plurimum virtuoſi, ac de omni forefacto rigidam iuſtitiam exercentes. Sunt ſtatura elegantes, robuſti corpore, in prælijs lanceam cum tergia lata gerentes, viriliterque, & prudenter pugnantes. Omnes pro deo adorant bouem, vnde & quilibet in fronte argenteam ſeu auream ſimilitudinem bouis defert, & ſi quem viuum in prælio ceperint, ſine vlla miſeratione manducant. Inſula Nicomora, vel Nacumera. Bouis adoratores.

Rex multum est diues & potens, ac deuotus in superstitione. Nam circa collum gestat trecẽtas orientales margaritas, quibus quotidiè antè cõmestionem orationes suas colligit, quemadmodum nos colligimus, Pater noster,&c. Ac præterea portat ad collum ‖ rubetum orientalem,nobilem,purum,pulchrum,resplendentem, & summe precioſum, ad longitudinem pedis humani,quem habet diligenter seruare,quod dum eo caret non tenetur pro Rege.

Pro isto carbunculo Grand Can Imperator, per ingenium, per insidias, per precium, & per pręliũ sæpè laborauit, sed nihil profecit. Post istam apparet insula Syllan,habens leucas de circuitu 80.quæ paucos habet homines propter multitudinem draconum,serpentum, crocodilorum in ea. Sunt autem crocodili speciales serpentes,coloris virgulati de croceo & nigro, cum quatuor cruribus, & tibijs & latis pedum vngulis. Aliqui horum habent longitudinem quinq; tensarum,aut citrà, qui dum tendunt per arenosa relinquunt signum semitæ,acsi sit ibi tractus grandis arboris truncus.

Alijs fortè Zeilan.

Crocodili.

Item in hac insula habetur mons altus, & in sui vertice satis altus & distentus & magnus aquæ lacus, de quo & stulti homines fabulantur,quòd primi parentes post eiectionem suam,illam aquam primò lacrymauerunt.In huius fundo lacus nascuntur margaritæ,& habentur semper lapides precioſi. Solentque pauperes terræ,accepta à Rege licentia,semel in anno ingredi, ac piscari gemmas,qui intrantes vngunt se succo Lymonsæ,contra hirũdines, colubros,& serpentes. Sed & de lacu effluit riuulus per montis descensum, in quo nonnunquam margaritę inueniunnur,& gemmæ: dicunt etiam ibi nullum venenatum animal nocere aduenis.

Ibi videntur leones albi in mira magnitudine boum nostrorum,& multæ diuersæ bestiæ, & aues,bestiolæ, & auiculæ aliarum specierum quàm in partibus istis. Nam ibi & in nonnullis alijs insulis vidi vnum mirum,de quo prius vix credidissem narranti, videlicet anates cum duobus capitibus.

Et sciatis quòd tam hic quam alibi mare apparet satis altius suo littore, imo qui à remotis aspicit videt suspensum quasi ad nubes. Et de hoc admiratus fuissem, nisi quod scriptum sciui mirabiles elationes maris.

De multis alijs Insulis Meridionalibus, de quibus & Plinius, & Munsterus.

‖Vel Doudeia.

VErsus meridiem hinc legendo per mare,inuenitur regio specioſa nomine ‖ Doudin: cuius rex imperat seu principatur 54.regibus in circuitu insularum.

Dum quis hic infirmatur tendit proximus ad Idolum sciscitans an morietur, & si respondit non, addit & dicere medicinam qua curabitur: si autem responderit moriturum,statim conuocatis amicis occiditur, & cum symphonia, & solemnitate comedunt eius carnes, ossa tantummodò sepelientes. In Insulis verò circumiacentibus, habentur incredibiliter diuersæ gentes.

Monophtholmoi.

Nam vna habet homines enormis magnitudinis, cum solo in medio frontis oculo,qui absque vllo condimento manducant carnes & pisces.

Ἀκέφαλοι.

Alia Insula habet homines aspectu deformes,nihil autem colli aut capitis ostendentes,vnde & Acephali nuncupantur: oculos autem habent ante ad scapulas, & in loco pectoris os apertum ad formam ferri,quo nostri caballi frænantur.

In alia Insula sunt gentes planis faciebus absque eleuatione nasorum, & palpebrarum cum paruis foraminibus oculorum,& sciſſura modica oris.Et in alia gentes cum superiore oris labio ita lato & amplo,vt,dum velint,totam faciem de illo tegant.

Alia generat homines paruæ staturę cum oris foramine sic paruo,vt per fistulas alimentum, & potum sumant,& quoniam carent lingua & dentibus,monstrant per naturalia signa conceptus. Et aliqui sunt homines debitæ quidem staturæ, & formæ, nisi quòd habent pedes equinos, quibus ita sunt præpetes, vt syluestres bestias capiant, quas comedunt, & manducant.

In alia homines sunt toti pilosi & hispidi,vsu simiarum manibus & pedibus ambulantes,& ad arbores reptantes, qui quamuis non loquuntur, apparent rationabiles, quia regem habent, & rectores.

Hermaphroditæ.

Et in alia omnes sunt claudi,qui quamuis pedes habeant,tamen ambulant super genua multum ridiculosè,imò miserabiliter, vt de passu in passum videantur casuri in terram. Et in quadam,sexum tam masculinum, quàm fœmininum habentes, qui dum masculino vtuntur generant,dum fœminino,impregnantur & pariunt. Atq;,vt in compendio multa concludam,in singulis 54.insularum inueniuntur homines,forma,statura,actibus & moribus singulis ab inuicem differentes,de quibus potest fieri descriptio, quam pertranseo gratia breuitatis, & causa incredulitatis fortè quorundam audientium.

CAPVT 34.

De palatio Imperatoris Grand Can.

PAlatium Imperatoris Grand Can, quod eſt in Caydo ciuitate, continet in circuitu proprij muralis vltrà duas leucas, & ſunt in eo aulæ quàm plures, in forma nobiles, & in materia nobiliores. Aula autem ſedis, quæ eſt maxima cæterarum, habet intrinſecus pro ſui ſuſtentatione 24. æreas columnas factas opere fuſorio, de auro puro, & omnes parietes ab intus opertas pellibus quorundam animalium, quæ vocantur Pantheres: hæ ſanguinei ſunt coloris, & ita remicantes, vt Sole deſuper relucente, vix oculus valeat humanus ſufferre ſplendorem, tantæque fragrantiæ, vt illi approximare non poſſet aer infectus, vnde & iſta opertura parietum appreciatur ſuper tegmen aurearum laminarum. Palatij Imperatoris Grand Can deſcriptio.

Namque ſtultorum aliqui Paganorum huiuſmodi adorant animalia propter colorum, odorúmque virtutem. Propoſui retrahere calamum à deſcribenda nobilitate, gubernatione, & miniſtrantiũ frequentia, atque Imperatoris magnificentia: attamen quia cœpi ego, propter incredulos, & neſcios, ac inerudibiles, non dimittam in toto. Quicunque enim nihil credunt, nihil ſciunt, neque erudiri poſſunt, Scriptura teſtante, ſi non crediderit non intelligetis. Dico ergo, & verè dico, quòd in huius aulæ capite ſit thronus, vel ſedes Imperialis, excelſus, & eminens in aſcenſu graduum quamplurium, in quo reſidere ſolet in plenaria maieſtate, in cuius throni toto corpore nihil apparet minùs nobile, auro, margaritis, gemmis, & lapidibus precioſis. Singuli gradus ſunt de ſingulis, ac inter ſe diuerſis magnis lapidibus, vtpote primus de Hæmatiſto, alius de Sardio, & alius de Chryſolito, & ſic vſque ad ſupremum gradum, qui ſinguli ad formam cuiuſque gradus ſunt circumfuſi, & cluſorio opere firmati, auro ſolido, & nihilominús per ſuperficiem auri, diſtinctè ſeminati, firmitérque incluſi lapilli cari, cum orientalibus Margaritis, ſummitas autem cum ferculo reſidentiæ in nobilitate exciſionis, & fabrifactura operis tam diuerſa eſt, & mira, vt paruitatem mei ingenij excedat, quamobrem & ei cedo, vlteriúſque procedo. Inuehitur in incredulos.

Ad Imperatoris ſiniſtram gradu vno baſsior, eſt ſedes ſuæ primæ coniugis, tota de iaſpidibus auro circumfuſis, & in ſuperficie aulæ diſtinctæ gemmulę cum granellis eodẽ ſchemate, & ſimiliter de iaſpide. Sed adhuc ſubmiſſior vno gradu eſt ſedes coniugis ſecundæ, nec non & ſub illa vxoris tertiæ. Nam tres proprias ſecum habet vxores, Odericus dicit, iſtas duas concubinas. Itèmque reſident ſub tertia coniuge nobiles mulieres de Imperatoris progenie, iuxta illuſtriam vniuſcuiuſque. Sedes primæ coniugis Imperatoris. Sedes coniugis ſecundæ.

Et notandum, quòd per totam patriam ſingulæ mulieres maritatæ, vt intelligantur maritis ſubiectæ, & vt diſcernantur à ſolutis, geſtant in capitis ſummitate ſimilitudinem pedis viri, longitudinis brachij & dimidij, quadam leui materia operatam: videlicet nobiles de ſericoſis operibus pannorum, ſeu alijs raris & pulchris pannis, & precioſis lapillis, & ignobiles iuxta ſtatum ſuum de materia communiori. Signum ſubiectionis vxorum ſuis maritis.

Ad dextram verò ſedentis Imperatoris vno gradu ſubmiſſus reſidet primogenitus eius filius, & ſub ipſo ordinatè in conſimilibus ſedibus nobiles proximi de cognitione Imperiali. Primogeniti Imperatoris filij ſedes.

Item ſuper thronum & deſuper ante ipſius throni locum, tanquam pro celato ſeu operimento in throno reſidentium, & eorum miniſtrantium, eſt extenſa ſimilitudo vitis operata in palmitibus, & pampinis, de auro puro ad extenſionem cubitorum quadraginta, per quadrum, atque per eam dependentes botri vuarum de gemmis, & granellis quinque colorum, quorum albi bi sunt de christallo & beryllo,& irisi crocei de topazio & fuluo christallo, rubei de rubetorum granis,corallo,& alibandinis,virides de Smaragdis,pyropis, & chrysolytis, nigri, de onichinis, gagetis,& gerateris.

Tempore prandij in hac aula,Imperator & Imperatrices,& quisq; de prædictis, habet mensam sibi solam,quarum vilior præualet thesauro grandi.

In solennitatibus ponitur mensa Imperatori de exquisito electro,seu de auro examinato,distincta diamantibus,& nobis ignotis incomparabilibus gemmis, quandóque de christallo perspicuo,seu croceo, circumclusa auro cum gemmis: quandóque de Hæmatisto, quandóque de ebore candido,vel rubicundo: interdum de ligno artificiosè combinato, quod descendit per flumina de Paradiso.Idem dicit Odericus.

His mensis astant Barones, & Principes pro vasallis attentè in suis officijs ministrantes,quorum nec vnus emittere verbum aliqua presumit audacia,nisi Imperatore annuente,vel ad illum loquente,illis dūtaxat exceptis,qui certis interspatijs canunt, aut recitant de principum gestis.

Et notandum,quando in hoc solio Maiestatis diebus solennibus residet Imperator,subsidere ad pedes eius notarios quatuor, qui omne quod Dominus loquitur,singuli ponunt in scriptis: nam quodcunque tunc ex ore illius egreditur, necesse est esse, vel effici,nec valet item ipse verbum suum mutare,nec reuocare,nisi magno consilio conuocato.

Vniuersa vtensilia quibus in solennitate ad has seruitur mensas, sunt de nobilibus petris auro reclusis,Cyphi de Smaragdis,vel Saphyris,topasijs, pyropis, siue gryophis: & priuatioribus diebus,de auro probato etiam in cameris,& cubiculis, nec reputatur ibi claritas argenti, nisi pro pilarijs,columnis,gradibus, & pauimentis.

Istius autem ostia aulæ, dum in ea residet, aut deambulat Imperator, multi Barones ingressum seruant intentè,& ne limen tangatur,quod hoc haberent pro augurio, & benè verberaretur,quia Imperatore præsente, nemo nisi adductus in quacunque camera, vel habitatione intromittitur,donec interrogatus iusserit Imperator.

Mandeuillus suis pedibus mensurauit aulam Imperatoris.

Latitudinem huius Basilicę æstimo ad spatium de meis pedibus centum, & longitudinem vltrà quatuor centum.In cubiculo autem Regis dormitorio,constat vnus pillarius,seu columna de auro solido & carbunculus conclusus in illo longitudinis pedis vnius, totum habitaculum de nocte perfundens lumine claro.Hic prout ego notaui, non est plenè rubeus,sed subrufus,quasi coloris Hæmatistini.Porrò in vna aularum, circà medium palatii, est alius excelsus ascensus,Oderictus dicit pigma,super quem dum placet,stat,vel residet Imperator, ditissimè etiam operatus,ex auro,gemmis,baccis,margaritis,& lapidibus raris,& in quatuor angulis,imagines quatuor serpentum de auro puro.

Huius per tria latera dependent retia seu cortinæ de cordulis sericis, in quibus ad singulos nodos,grossa margarita habetur innexa,quibus cortinis tegitur officina:in eius concauitate tenetur tumba quadrata,in qua conueniunt conductus omnium potuum, qui bibuntur in Curia, & innumera vasorum genera,quibus potus omnibus ministratur.

Præterea,iuxta palatii ambitum,habetur grandis parci spaciamentum, diuersi generis arboribus repletum,fructus ferentibus varios,& nobis inuisos, & in parte media, aula super excelsum collem de tam mira & pulchra structura, vt eius nobilitas de facili ad præsens, non possit describi.Et vndique,per collis gyrum aquæ fossatum profundum, & latum vltrà quod pons vnicus ducit ad collem.Atque ex duobus montis lateribus, stagnum cum diuersorum copia piscium, & volucrum indomitarum, vt aucarum, annatum, cignorum, ciconiarum, ardearum,& collectorum in magna pluralitate, nec non & per parcum, multæ syluestres bestiæ,& bestiolæ quatenùs per aulæ fenestras possit Dominus pro solatio respicere volucrum aucupationes, bestiarum venationes,& piscium captiones.

Palatium instar magni oppidi.

Et hoc proculdubio sciendum,quòd in nostris partibus rara sint oppida cum pluribus mansionibus,quàm in isto palatio continentur.

Tota æstate moratur in India terra frigidissima,in hyeme in Cambalu.Odericus.

Pro India intelligit Septentrionalem Asiæ partem.

Præter palatium hoc in Caydo,habet Imperator similitèr tria: vnum in ciuitate Sadus, versus Septentrionem,vbi competens est frigus, ibi moratur in æstate. Cambalu,vbi competens calor,ibi moratur hyeme.Tertium in ciuitate Iongh, in quo & in isto Caydo, vt sæpiùs seruat sedem, eò quòd in istis est aer magis temperatus,quamuis semper calidus videtur Nostratibus.

Sadus.

CAPVT 35.

De quatuor solennitatibus,quas Magnus Can celebrat in anno.

SCiatis quòd ego,mesque sodales, pro fama magnificentiæ huius Imperatoris, tradidimus nos stipendiarios esse in guerris, contra Regem Mangi prænominatum. Et fuimus

apud ipſum 15. menſibus, & certè inuenimus multò maiorem partem hominum, in mediam partem nobis non fuiſſe relatam: hominum (exceptis cuſtodibus beſtiarum & volucrum,) qui intra palatium certa gerunt miniſteria eſt numerus decem cuman.

Mandeuillus per ſpacium 15. menſium militauit Grand Can.

Nota. Traxi moram in Cambalu tribus annis: fratres noſtri locum habent in Curia ſua ſpecialiter, & feſtis diebus ſtatutis dant benedictionem, Odericus. Et quoniam Imperator habet ſatis plures quàm decem mille Elephantes edomitos, & velut vltrà numerum alias beſtias, (quarũ quædam tenentur in caueis, ſtabulis mirabilibus, vel catenis,) nec nõ & aues rapaces, & accipitres, falcones, oſtrones, gryfandos gentiles, Laueroys, & Satyros, ſed & auiculas loquentes, & papingos, & ſimiles, aliáſque cantantes: reputatur numerus hominum de iſtis curam & laborem gerentium, vltrà ſex cuman, & prætereà iugiter ad Curiam equites cum plenarijs armaturis, quinque cuman, & de peditibus cum prœliandi armaturis, cuman decem. Sed & omnes de natione quacunque mundi venientes, qui petunt deſcribi pro Curia recipiuntur. Sic enim iuſſit Imperator.

Vixit in Cambalu tribus annis.

Sex cuman famulorum.
Quinque Cuman equitum.
Decem Cuman peditum.

Habet & medicos Paganos viginti, & totidem Phyſicos, atque ſine his Medicos Chriſtianos ducentos, & totidem Phyſicos, quoniam iſte Grand Can maiorem gerit confidentiam in Medicis Chriſtianis, quàm in ſuæ propriæ nationis medicis.

Medici Chriſtiani 200. in aula Grand Can.

Hoc ergò firmiter ſcias, quod de Curia Regis accipiunt neceſſaria ſua iugitèr vltrà triginta cuman hominum, præter expenſas animalium & volucrum, cùm tamen in feſtis maioribus ſint homines propè in duplo tanti. Nec valet hic Dominus defectum vllum pati pecuniæ, eò quòd in terra ſua non currit moneta de argento, vel auro, alióue metallo, ſed tantùm de corio vel papyro: horum enim forma denariorum ſigno Imperatoris impreſſorum preciatur minoris aut maioris valoris, ſecundùm diuerſitatem impreſſionis, qui per viſitationem, detriti vel rupti, cùm ad Regis theſaurarios deferuntur, protinùs dantur pro illis noui.

Vnus Cuman continet decem millia, vt in cap. 33.
Moneta de corio vel papyro.

Quatèr in anno celebrat Imperator feſtiuitates ſolennes.

Quatuor feſta.

Primam de die propriæ Natiuitatis.

Secundam de die ſuæ primæ præſentationis in eorum Templo, quod appellant Moſeath, vbi & fit ijs, neſcio quod genus circumciſionis.

Circumciſio quædam.

Tertiam in thronizatione ſui Idoli in Templo.

Quartam de die quo Idolum cœpit dare reſponſum, ſeu facere diabolica mira. Plures enim in anno non tenet ſolennitates, niſi ſi quando nuptias filij aut filiæ celebrat.

Itaque in iſtis ſolennitatibus eſt populi multitudo abſque numero, omnes tamen in ordine debito, & ſinguli intendentes proprio miniſterio: nam ad hoc ordinandum, & diſponendum, electa ſunt quatuor Baronum nobilium genera, ex quibus nonnulli ſunt Reges, & alij Equites potentes, Duces, & Marchiones, omnes induti holoſericis, quibus inſerti cũ certa diſſeminatione ſunt vbique precioſi lapides, miræ virtutis, & aurifigia ſpecioſa, vt ſi quis in his partibus vnum de talibus haberet mutatorijs, dici non poſſet pauper imò prædiues. Et habet quodlibet millenariorum in his veſtibus colorem ſibi proprium: primum viridem, ſecundum vermiculum, tertium croceum, quartum purpureum, ſeu indicum. Ergo in die ſolenni, dum de mane Maieſtatis thronum conſcenderit, veniunt ſe præſentare hoc modo Regi.

Deſcriptio pomparum ſolennium.

Ante primum millenarium procedit copioſa ſymphonia dulcis chordarum, ſicut de violis, cytharis, lyris, & pſalterijs, non autem de tubis aut tympanis: & præcedunt Barones per tranſuerſum Aulæ coram reſidente Domino ordinatè bini, & bini ſub ſilentio, ferentes ambabus manibus ante pectus tabulam de Iaſpide, ebore, chriſtallo, pyropo, vel Hæmatiſto, & ante faciem throni inclinant ſe Imperatori profundè.

Illiſque pertranſeuntibus, ſuccedit ſimili modo millenarius ſecundus, & tertius, atque quartus, nec auditur à quoquam vnicum verbum. Hac præſentatione cum debita maturitate perfecta, reſident in baſſo à latere throni ad proprias menſas, multi Philoſophi, ſeu Artiſtæ, ſicut de Aſtronomia, Geomantia, Pyromantia, Hydromantia, Chiromantia, Necromantia, auguriis, ac aruſpiciis, & huiuſmodi, tenentes coram inſtrumenta ſuæ artis, alii Aſtrolabium, & Sphæras de auro, alii in aureis vaſis arenam, prunas ardentes, aquam, vinum, oleum, & caluarias mortuorum, loquentes & reſpondentes, nec non de auro horologia ad minùs duo: & ad cunctas horas ſecundum curſum horrologiorum innuunt Philoſophi ſeruis ſibi ad hoc deputatis, vt faciant præſtari auditum per aulam, quorum vnus aut duo conſcendentes ſcallum, alta voce proclamant, audite, auſcultate, & omnibus intendentibus dicit Philoſophorum vnus: Quilibet nunc faciat reuerentiam Imperatori, qui eſt filius Dei excelſi, Dominus & ſuperior omnium Dominorum mundi, quia ecce hæc eſt hora. Et mox ſinguli in aula inclinato corpore & capite ſe inclinant maieſtati manẽtes accliui, donec idem Philoſophus dicat, leuate. Atque protinùs ſuper hoc factum, Muſici ſuis inſtrumentis, ſuauem perſonant melodiam.

Poſteà

Posteà ad aliquantam moram simili modo dicit alius Philosophorum, minimus digitus in aure: & ecce hoc omnes faciunt, donec dicat, sufficit: sic in aliam horam, seu moram dicit, manus vestra super os, & posteà manus super caput. Atque in hunc modum iuxta temporis cursum imponunt facienda signa diuersa. hinuunt in eis latère magna mysteria, & quodlibet horum factorum melodia terminat Musicorum. Et sciatis me quandoque in tempore opportuno ab eis interrogasse de his signis, qui responderunt quòd inclinare caput Domino ad illius horæ momentum, foret confirmatio omnibus diebus vitæ suæ, ad obediendum ipsi & fidelitatem obseruandam imperio, nec posse corrumpi promissionibus siue donis, quódque digitum in auricula imponere, obturatio est auditus contra omnia Imperatori, & Imperio contraria. Et sic de singulis factis singula mysteria confingentes decipiunt audientes: horum itaque fraudulento ingenio, iste Grand Can festiuatus, non nisi ad talium iudicium parari permittit cibaria, aut fieri indumenta pro suo corpore.

Mandeuilli interrogatio.

Dum autem est visum Curiæ gubernatoribus satis de prædictis auditum, faciunt proclamatores silentium imperari, & incipit fieri offerenda Imperatori hoc modo. Intrant omnes qui sunt de cognatione Imperatoris Barones adornati nobilissimè pro cuiusque decentia balteis, & indumentis, quorum primus cum resonante symphonia præmittit ad oblationem quotquot valet de dextrarijs albis, & inclinans ante thronum pertransit, atque per eundem modum singuli Baronum offerentes aliquid dignum iocale inclinant transeuntes, silentio firmè seruato.

Offerēda Imperatori facta.

Post hos intrantes simili modo prælati & Abbates, de iurisdictionibus & religionibus Paganorum offerunt singuli pro suo statu se reuerenter inclinantes maiestati, & maior prælatorum benedicit Regi, & suis ac Curiæ quadam suæ legis oratione.

Benedictio prælati.

Deinde introducuntur elephantes, leones, pardi, simiæ, marmotæ, & diuersę bestiæ, quarum ductores singuli transeuntes inclinant reuerenter, & intentè. Postremò afferuntur aquilæ, struthiones, gryphandi, accipitres, & papingi, cum diuersis auibus & auiculis, nec non serpentes ac pisces, quorum portitores inclinant profundè, quoniam dicunt omnes terrenas creaturas debere adorationem Imperatori Grand Can filio Dei excelsi: & his perfectis, Musicæ Camenæ persoluunt debita plenè.

Deplorat Paganorum tenebras.

Nos igitur intendamus hoc loco quæso quomodo veraciter Pagani in tenebris ambulant: diabolica inuolutione mens eorum obtenebrata non videt quomodò, cùm Imperator sit homo mortalis nuper natus, & similiter sicut illi infirmitate circundatus, atque in breui cum ipsis moriturus, quem etiam non dubitant sub Deo, clamant eum non Deum, sed Dei filium, vbi vtique prorsus ignorant illū non esse laudandū, nec adorandū, sed eum non intēdunt alium filium, filium increatum & connaturalem, qui & ipsos & eum creauit, solum superlaudabilem in secula.

Infignis Mandeuilli pietas, & desiderium conuersionis Paganorum.

Et hoc alto corde considerantes, laudemus, adoremus, glorificemus & superexaltemus totis viribus Deum, qui nos filios lucis esse voluit, & salutis, nasci, baptizari, educari, erudiri sub sinceritate fidei Christianæ, excluso schismate & errore, atque sub instituto sacrosanctæ matris Ecclesiæ, in qua sola penè ab omni circumferentia orbis terra fides, quæ saluat, & per dilectionem operatur nunc remansit.

Et oremus instantèr pro ipsis Paganis, vt agnita veritatis luce videre possint quò ambulant, vt perueniant ad Iesum Christum coæqualem Dei filium, atque in ipso, & per ipsum laudare & adorare solum vnum verum Deum.

Caput 36.

De ludis & præstigijs in suo festo, & de suo comitatu.

Semel in die comedunt.

CElebrato post hoc prandio satis morosè, quia nunquam est vltrà semel edendum in die, de quo & eius administratione nunc longum est scribere, adsunt gesticulatores, mira visu, suauiáq; auditu pedibus, manibus, brachijs, humeris, capitibus, & toto corpore, ac ad singulos gestus, correspōdētes debito vocis sono. Et semper finē horū mirabiliū cantilena subsequitur musicorū. Ex hoc ioculatores præstò sunt, & Magi, qui suis incantationibus prēstāt prēstigia multa.

Inprimis faciunt videri Solem & Lunam, oriendo, descendendo consuetum diei intra Basilicam peragere cursum, cum tanta nimierate splendoris, vt vix se inuicem homines valeant recognoscere præfulgore, dicentes & mentientes, Solem & Lunam cæli hanc mittere reuerentiam Imperatori.

Hinc pari ludo comparent speciosæ puellæ ducere semitas & choreas, nobili gestu nobilissimum ferre poculum lactis equarum in aureis vasis, de quo, ponentes se in genibus, tradunt potum dominis & dominabus.

Tunc portantur & milites in equis, & armis quoq; pleni atque parati, qui feruentibus sonipedibus se inuicem cuspidibus ad fragorem magnum configentes lanceas comminuunt, & fragmenta per mensas, & pauimenta discurrunt. Ac deindè fantasticè venantur per aulam, cum

canibus & papionibus, ad ceruos, lupos, vrſos, & apros, ad lepores, & marmotas. Quæ ſingula cùm ad horam paſcant vana delectatione ſenſus corporeos, miſeriam tamen inferunt piæ menti, quòd tot & tanti homines, neglecta prorſus animi ſalute, his diabolicis operationibus ſe dederunt in toto. Nam certò non ita ſine dæmonum conſolatione & familiaritate præmiſſa confingi dicerem.

Nota: à Cambalu ad viginti dietas, eſt pulchrum nemus girans octo dietas in circuitu, in quo ſunt omnia genera animalium: cuſtodes habet circa eum. Triennio vel quadriennio viſitat illud Imperator, & cum multa gente nemus circumdat, canes emittuntur & aues, cum multo clamore, & feras congregant in medio nemoris, ad planiciem ſibi ſitam. Tunc Imperator priùs iacit quinque ſagittas, poſteà alij: tunc Imperator dicit, Eya, hoc eſt, mina beſtijs, & ſicut quilibet capit ſagittam ſuam ſignatam, percuſſam, aliis recedentibus ad ſua loca. Odericus. Pulchrum nemus octo dietarum in circuitu.

Prætereà ante Imperatoris menſam eriguntur latæ tabulæ aureæ cum ſculptis, ac ſi viuerent, imaginibus gallorum, pauonum ac diuerſarum volucrum artificioſè, quas præſtigiator facit pro libitu ſine apprehenſione manus ire, tripudiare, chorizare, tremere, compugnare, bibere, manducare, ſed & cantare: quod quidem inter cætera mihi videbatur mirabilius & aſpectu delectabilius. Nullus iſtud plenè intueri potuit, niſi qui erat in throno vel circà: & me oportet hoc loco fateri ſtultitiam propriam, quòd hac delectatione tractus, magnam adhibui apud Artiſtam diligentiam, verbis blandis, & quibuſcunque munuſculis, ac melioribus promiſsis, quod de tali mihi traderet artem, qui ſagax ſimul & fallax inprimis, ſpem meam trahebat ſponſionum funibus: ſed ad vltimum penitùs abſcindebat, dicens ſe vouiſſe Deo immortali, ne cuiquam doceret niſi proprio filio ſeniori, ac per hoc me Deus ab illo malo conſeruauit inuitum, & gratias nunc reddentem. Mandeuilli curioſitas.

Certum eſt illic homines eſſe ſubtiles ad quaſdam humanas artes, & ingenioſos ad fraudes ſuper omnes, quas noui mundi partes, vnde & inter ſe dicunt prouerbium, ſe ſolos videre duobus oculis, & Chriſtianos vno, cæteros autem homines cæcos: ſed mentitur iniquitas ſibi, quoniam ipſi vident ſolo oculo terrena & tranſitoria, & nos Chriſtiani duobus, quia cum terrenis videmus ſpiritualia, & manſura: percuſſit enim "Naas, id eſt, humani generis hoſtis cum illis fœdus, vt erueret omnibus oculos dextros, ſcilicet ſpirituales. Hoc eorum dictum in nouis Chinæ hiſtoriis refertur. Inſignis ſententia. "1. Sam. 11. 2.

Cùm itaque narrata de præmiſsis debeant ſufficere, quando Imperator Grand Can de vno quatuor palatiorum ad aliud tranſire velit, vel fortè gratia viſitationis aut ardui negotii per Imperium de Regno ad Regnum tendit per comitatus, quatuor exercitibus antè & retrò, & ex ambobus lateribus.

Primus exercitus præcedit perſonam Regis per vnam de ſuis dietis, vt ſemper in hoſpitium, de quo receſsit exercitus Rex intret nocte ſequenti, & eſt hic primus comitatus deſcriptus, & ſtatutus de numero quinquaginta cuman virorum, hoc eſt, quingentorum millium, ſempérque præuiſum, & prouiſum eſt, vt inueniant neceſſaria in locis, vbi habent quieſcere, vel tardare ſiue in hoſpitiis, ſiue in tentoriis.

Secundus & tertius comitatus ſunt eiuſdem numeri virorum cum primo, quorum vnus ad dextram tendit Imperatoris, alius ad ſiniſtram in diſtantia ab ipſo ad trium vel duarum leucarum.

Quartus autem qui maior eſt omnibus, ſubſequitur Imperatorem quaſi ad ſpatium iactus baliſtæ. Et adhuc ſciendum eſt, quòd perſonę horum comitatuum ſunt ſigillatim, & ſummatim omnes deſcriptæ, vt dum vna moritur vel recedit, protinùs alia inſcribatur, & numerus non minuatur. Ipſe verò Imperator tendit reſidens in cella ſeu camera ædificata ſuper currum grandem forma, fortem robore, nobilem in ſtructura, eſt cella de ligno Aloes optimi odoris, & parietes cellæ operti in quibuſdam locis laminis aureis, quæ & ipſæ diſtinguuntur gemmis variis, & margaritis. Cella ſeu camera ædificata ſuper currum.

Eſt autem currus quatuor rotarum duntaxat, quem trahunt quatuor Elephantes ad hoc curioſè inſtructi, cum quatuor hippis albis equæ doctis & ipſi cooperti ditiſsimis tegumentis, ac præter aurigas nobiliter indutos, qui currum cautiſsimè ducunt, adſunt & quatuor de maioribus palatij Dominis, indè ad vehiculum habentes ingem curam, de minatione eius, & ne vltimo exercitu appropriet infra iactum (vt dixi) ſagittæ. Ipſe autem interdum pro ſodalitate iubet ſecum aſcendere quam vult perſonam, ſed minimè vltrà duos. In cellæ quoque culmine, quod aperiri valet & claudi, aſtant in pertica quatuor grifandi, vel oſtiones. Odericus: duodecim Girfalcones, vt ſi fortè Imperator in aere aquilam, vulturum, ardeam, vel collectorem cerneret, citò dimitteret iſtorum duas aut plures ad aucupandum. Quatuor Elephantes & quatuor equæ albæ trahentes currum Imperatoris.

Nota, per Dromedarios, & curſores, & veloces, qui de hoſpitio ad hoſpitium permutantur, ſcit de remotis noua. Curſor enim appropinquans cornu ſonat, & tunc alius præparat, & vlteriùs Hæc hodiè vſque narrantur in hiſtorijs Chinarum.

ùs currit. Odericus. Sciendúmque tam primogenitum Regis, quàm singulas de tribus vxoribus ducere similem apparatum in itinerando post ipsum, scilicet cum quatuor comitatibus, antè, & retrò, & à lateribus, sed in valdè minori numero personarum pro placito, & in singulis curribus sequentibus se inuicem per vnam dietam.

Præmissa omnia sic fiunt, dum Imperatori tendendum est remotè, aliàs autem minuuntur, & distinguuntur comitatus, iuxta quod decet, vt nonnunquam omnes Imperatores etiam cum filio simul tendant, cum vna comitatuum distinctione. Transeunte autem sic Imperatore per ciuitates & villas quilibet ante fores proprias præparato igne iactat puluerem aromata redolentem, stans genibus flexis ad reuerentiam illi. Et sciatis vbi propè transitum illius habentur Christianæ Abbatiæ, quas olim constituit Dux Ogerus, exeunt obuiam illi in processione cum vexillis, & sancta cruce, & aqua benedicta, & thuribulo, hymnum, Veni Creator spiritus, decantantes.

Nota: Ego semel cum Episcopo nostro, & alijs fratribus, iuimus obuiam per duas dietas, & portaui thuribulum. Odericus. quos ipse à remotis videns, consueuit ad se appellare, & ad crucem suum galeatum deponere, ac reuerenter nudo capite inclinare: & prælatus dicens super eum aliquam orationem signat cruce, & aqua benedicta aspergit. Et quoniam necesse est, vt quisque extraneus ante Regem apparens, offerat ei aliquid, prælatus in disco præsentat ei fructus, & poma, vel pyra, & hoc in numero nouenario, (ratio ponitur primo capitulo proximo, quod iste numerus est plus cęteris acceptus,) de quibus Imperator vnum sibi sumens, reliqua tradit Dominis præsentibus: quo facto habent relligiosi recedere citò, ne opprimantur multitudine populi subsequentis.

Præfatum Domini galeatum, est ita intextum auro, diamantibus, gemmunculis, & orientalibus margaritis, granellis, & dubletis, & prædiues in materia & artificio, vt ei non sit æquandus magni in partibus istis Regis thesaurus. Item sicut hæc fiunt transeunti Imperatori, fiunt & Imperatricibus, & filio seniori.

Caput. 37.

Qua de causa dicitur Grand Can.

SI placet audire, dicam cur hic Imperator sit appellatus Grand Can. Audieram ego in partibus Ierosolymorum hunc esse sic dictum, à filio Noe, Cham: sed in terra Cathay accepi & aliam, & meram huius rei veritatem. Nam & scribendo hæc duo nomina habent differentiam, quòd filius Noe Cham scribitur quatuor elementis, quorum vltimum est M. & iste Can tribus tantùm, quorum vltimum est N.

Vera ratio huius nominis Can.

Post annos Christi 1100. illa prima Tartaria (de qua suprà scripsi in prima parte, capitulo quinto) fuit nimis oppressa seruitute sub Regibus circumiacentium sibi nationum. Quandò autem Deo placuit, maiores illius Tartariæ eleuauerunt de seipsis sibi Regem dictum Guis Can, cui & promiserunt subiectissimam obedientiam.

Guis Can.

Idem cùm esset prudens & strenuus 12. viriles habens filios, debellauit cum ijs & populo suo, & vicit, ac subiecit cunctos in circuitu Reges, quibus terra indebitè diù subiacuerat. Quin etiam apparente sibi in visione Angelo Dei velut milite in albo equo, & candidis armis, & hortante se, vt transiret Alpes, per montem "Beliam, & per brachium maris, ad terram Cathay, & ad alias illic plurimas regiones transiuit, & cœpit cum filijs suis aliquas ex illis debellare, & subijcere, Deo in omnibus adiuuante patenter. Et quoniam in equo albo ei Angelus apparuit, qui etiam antè passum prædicti maris nouem orationes Deo facere iussit, ideò successores vsq; hodiè diligunt equos albos, & nouenarium numerum habent præ cæteris in gratia. Dúmque Guis Can morti præ senio appropinquaret, conuocatos ante se filios hortabatur, & mouebat exemplo 12. telorum in simul colligatorum, quæ à nullo filiorum pariter frangi potuerant, sed dissoluta vnumquodque per se facilè frangebatur, sic filij (inquit) dilectissimi, si per concordiam vos inuicèm dilexeritis, & vixeritis seniori fratri obedientes, confido in Deo iuxtà promissionem mihi ab Angelo factam, quòd omnem latissimam istam terram, & optimam illius imperio subijcietis, quod & pòst patris discessum strenuissimè, ac fidelissimè (Deo sibi prosperante) perfecerunt. Et quia cum propriis nominibus habebant cognomen Can, primogenitus pro differentia obtinuit nomen Grand Can, id est, Magnus Can, videlicet suprà cæteros fratres, qui sibi in omnibus obediebant.

De territorio Cathay, & moribus Tartarorum.

TOtum Imperium Imperatoris Grand Can distinctum est in 12. magnas prouincias, iuxta numerum duodecim filiorum primi Genitoris Can, quarum quelibet in se continet circiter 6. millia ciuitatum, præter villas non numeratas quæ sunt velut absque numero. Habent & singulæ prouinciæ regem principalem, hoc est 12. reges prouinciales, & horum quisque sub se reges Insularum plurimos, alij 50. alij cẽtum, alij plures, qui omnes & singuli subiectissimè obediunt Grand Can Imperatori. Harũ prouinciarũ maior, & nobilior dicitur Cathay, quę consistit in Asia profunda. Tres enim sunt Asię, scilicet quæ profunda dicitur, & Asia dicta maior quæ nobis est satis propinquior & tertia minor intra quam est Ephesus beati Ioannis Euangelistę sepultura, de qua habes in præcedentibus. Audistis statum magnatum & nobilium esse permagnificũ, & gloriosum, sed sciatis longè secus esse apud communes & priuatos homines tam in ciuitatibus quam in forensibus totius Tartariæ. In prouincijs autem Cathay habetur tantum de mercimonijs specierum, & de operibus sericosis, quòd multis facilius acquirere esset prætiosum indumentum, quam camisium de lino. Vnde & quicunq; sunt alicuius honestatis non carent desuper precioso vestimento. 12. Prouinciæ Chinæ. Numerus ciuitatum. Cathay. Abundantia serici in Cathay.

Omnes tam viri quam feminæ similibus in forma vestibus inducuntur, videlicet valdè latis, & breuibus vsque ad genua cum apertura in lateribus quam firmant (dum volunt) ansis quibusdam, nam vterque sexus est brachijs seu femoralibus plenè tectus. Nunquam vtuntur toga aut collobio, sed nec caputio, vndè nec per aspectum indumentorum potest haberi differentia inter virum & mulierem innuptam. Sed nupta (vt supra dictum est) gestat per aliquod tegumentum in capite formam pedis viri. Vestitus Tartarorum.

Nubit illic vir quotquot placet mulieribus, vt nonnulli habeant decem vel duodecim vxores aut plures, Nam quisque maritus iungitur licenter cuilibet mulieri, exceptis matre, & amita, sorore, & filia. Sicut viri equitant, tendunt, & currunt per patriã pro negotijs sic & mulieres, quoniam & ipsę operantur omnia ferè artificia mechanica sicut pannos & quicquid efficitur de pãno, corio, sericoq;, minantq; carrucas, & vehicula, sed viri fabricant de ferro et de omni metallo lapidibus atq; ligno, nec vir nec mulier nobilis aut degener comedit vltra semel in die communiter. Multa nutriunt pecora sed nullos porcos, parum comeditur ibi de pane exceptis magnatibus & diuitibus, sed carnes edunt peconum, bestiarum, & bestiolarum vtpote bouũ, ouium, caprarum, equorum, asinorum, canum, cattorum, murium, & rattorum, ius carnium sorbentes, & omnis generis lac bibentes. Tartari lac equarum bibunt.

Nobiles autẽ bibunt lac equarũ, seu iumentorũ, pro nobilissimo potu & pauperes aquã bullitã cũ modico mellis, quia nec vinũ ibi habetur, nec ceruisia cõficitur: & multi ac plurimi fontes cõsiliunt in sua siti, per villas, & rura. Domus, & habitacula rotundę sunt formę, compositæ & cõtextę panis ligneis, & flexilibus virgulis, ad modũ cauearũ quas nos facimus pro auiculis, habẽtes Appellatur Medo. Formæ domorum.

Formæ domorum. Tartari Hamaxouij, i. in plaustris viuentes.

rotundam in culmine aperturã præstantem duo beneficia habitationi, quoniam & ignis quem in medio domus cõstituunt fumum emittit, & pro aspiciendo lumen immittit. Intrinsecus sunt parietes vndiq; de filtro, sed & tectum filtreũ est: has domus, dum locum habitandi mutare volunt, vel dum in diutina expeditione procedunt, ducunt secum in plaustris quasi tentoria.

Multas superuacuas obseruant ceremonias, quia respiciunt in vanitates & insanias falsas: solem & lunam præcipuè adorant, eisque frequentèr genua curuant, & ad nouilunium, quicquid est magni estimant inchoandum.

Nullus omnino vtitur calcaribus in equitãdo, sed cogunt equum flagello scorpione, reputantes peccatum non leue, si quis ad hoc flagellum appodiat, aut iumentum percuteret suo freno, pleraq; similia, quę parũ aut nihil nocent, põderant vt grauia, sicut imponere cultellum in igne, os osse confringere, lac seu aliud potabile in terram effundere, nec non & huiusmodi multa.

Nouilunium in precio. Ceremoniæ Tartarorum.

Mingere intra domum peccatũ capitale.

Sed super hęc, tenẽt pro grauiori admisso mingere intra domũ quę inhabitatur, & qui de tanto crimine proclamaretur assuetus, mitteretur ad mortem. Et de singulis necesse est vt confiteatur peccator Flaminj suę legis, & soluat summã pecuniarũ delicti. Et si peccatũ deturpationis habitaculi venerit in publicum, oportebit reconciliari domũ per sacerdotem, priusquã vllus audeat intrare. Insuper & peccatorem necesse erit pertransire ignem, semel, bis, aut ter iuxta iudicium Flaminis, quatenus per ignis acrimoniam purgetur à tanti inquinatione peccati.

Neminem hominum probibent inter se habitare, sed indifferentèr receptant, Iudæos, Christianos, Saracenos, & homines cuiuscunque nationis, vel legis, dicentes se satis putare suum ritum non ita securũ ad salutem, nisi quandoq; traherentur ad ritũ magis salutarem, quem tamen determinate nunc ignorant, imò multi de nobilibus sunt iam in Christianitate baptizati.

Attamen qui illorum sunt curiales Imperatoris non vellent in palatio publicari.

Pœnè oblitus eram, quod nunc hic dico notandum, quia dum ab extra Imperium, quis veniens nuntius aut legatus cupit tradere proprijs manibus literas Imperatori, vel deponere coram illo mandata, non permittur, donec prius in puris transeat lineis ad vnũ ad minus regum prosii purgatione, ne quid forsitan afferat cuius visu, vel odoratu seu tactu rex possit grauari.

‖Seu Gubernatorum. Arma Tartarorum.

Porrò Tartari in præcincto expeditionis habent singuli duos arcus, cum magna pluralitate telorum: Nam omnes sunt sagittarij ad manum & cum rigida & longa lancea. Nobiles autem in equis preciosè phaleratis ferunt gladios, vel spatas breues & latas, scindentes pro vno latere, & in capitibus galeas de corio cocto, non altas, sed ad capitis formam depressas.

Quicunq; de suis fugerit de prælio, ipso facto conscriptus est, vt siquãdo inuentus fuerit occidatur. Si castrũ vel ciuitas obsessa se illis reddere voluerit, nullam acceptant cõditionẽ nisi cum morte omnium inimicorum, vel si quis homo singularis se dederit victum nihilominus absque vlla miseratione occidunt, detruncantes illi protinus aures, quas postea coquentes, & in acetum (dum habuerint) ponentes mittunt inuicem ad conuiuia pro extremo ferculo: dumque ipsi in bellis arte fugam simulant, periculosum est eos insequi, quoniam iaciunt sagittas à tergo, quibus equos & homines occidere norunt. Et quando in prima acie comparant ad bellandum, mirabilitèr sese constringunt, vt media pars numeri eorum vix credatur.

Tartari retro sagittantes.

Tartari habent paruos oculos & raram barbam.

Generalitèr noueritis, omnes Tartaros habere paruos oculos, & modicam vel raram barbam. In proprijs locis rarò inter se litigant, contendunt, aut pugnant, timentes legũ pergraues emendas. Et inuenitur ibi rarius vilipilio, latro, fur, homicida, iniurias, adulter, aut fornicarius, quia tales criminatores inuestigatione sollicita requiruntur, & sine redemptione aliqua perimuntur.

Mos sepulturæ.

Dũ quis decumbit infirmus figitur lancea iuxta illum in terra, & cũ appropinquauerit mori, nullus remanet iuxta ipsum, cũ verò mortuus esse scitur, confestim in campis, & cum lancea sepelitur.

Caput. 39.

De sepultura Imperatoris Grand Can, & creatione successoris.

Imperator Grand Can postquam eius cognita fuerit defunctio, defertur mox à paucis viris in parco palatij, ad præuisum locũ vbi debeat sepeliri. Et nudato prius toto illo loco à graminibus cum cespite figitur ibi tentorium, in quo velut in solio regali de ligno corpus defuncti residens collocatur, paraturq; mensa plena coram eo cibarijs præciosis, & potu de lacte iumentorum. Instabulatur ibi & equa cum suo pullo, sed & ipse albus, nobilitèr phaleratus, & onustatus cotto pondere auri & argenti. Et est totum Tentorij pauimentum de mundo stramine stratum.

Tuncque effodiunt in circuitu fossam latam valdè, & profundam vt totum tentorium cum omnibus contentis descendat in illam. Eoq; facto ita equalitèr terram planificantes adoperiunt graminibus, vt in omni tempore locus sepulturę non valeat rpparere. Et quoniam ignorantiæ nubilo turpiter extręcati putant in alio seculo homines delectationibus frui, dicunt quòd tentoriũ erit ei pro hospitio, cibi ad edendũ, lac ad potandum, equus ad equitandum, aurum & argentũ ad respiciendũ, sed & equa lac semper præstabit, & pullos equinos successiue generabit.

CAPVT. 40.

De multis regionibus Imperio Tartariæ ſubiectis.

BReuitèr & nunc intendo curſum deſcribere aliquarum magnarum regionum & Inſularum Imperij Tartariæ. Et primò illas quæ deſcendunt à prouincia Cathay per ſeptentrionalem plagám,vſque ad fines Chriſtianitatis Pruſſiæ,& Ruſſiæ.

Ergò prouincia Cathay deſcendens in ſui oriente à regno Tharſis iungitur ab occidente regno ‖Turqueſcen,in quo & ſunt plurimæ ciuitates, quarũ formoſior dicitur Octopar. Ipſum autem Turqueſcen regnũ iungitur ad occidentem ſui regno ſeu Imperio Perſiæ, & ad ſeptentrionem regno Coraſinę, quod ſpacioſum eſt valde, habens verſus orientem ſui vltra centum dietas deſerti: hoc regnũ eſt multis bonis abundans,& appellatur eius melior ciuitas etiam Coraſine. Turqueſtan. Octopar. Coraſine. Regnum Cõmanorum.

Iſti quoq; regno iungitur in occidente verſus partes noſtras regnum Commanorum, quod & ſimiliter longum eſt,& latum,ſed in paucis ſui locis inhabitatum: Nam in quibuſdam eſt frigus nimium,in alijs nimius calor, & in nonnullis nimia muſcarum multitudo.

De iſtis Communis venit olim fugata quædam pluralitas populi vſque in terram Ægypti quæ ibidem ſuccreta nunc ita inualuit, vt ſuppreſſis indigenis videatur regnare: Nam & de ſeipſis conſtituerunt hunc,qui modo eſt Soldanus, Melech Mandibron. Per Commanorum regnum decurrit Grandis fluuius ‖Echil, qui omni hyemali tempore in magna ſpiſſitudine gelatur: in ſuperiori quoq; parte huius regni inter duo freta Caſpię, & Oceani, mons ſublimis eſt valde ‖Chocas. Nota quod à noſtris partibus non poſſit vſque in Indiam ſuperiorem duci magnus exercitus per terras, niſi per tres tantummodo tranſitus, quorum iſte eſt vnus, qui tamen non valet tranſiri niſi tempore glaciei,& hic appellatus eſt Lodekonc. Id eſt Volga. ‖Vel Caucaſus. Iter faciendũ tempore glaciei.

Alter per Turqueſcen,& per Perſiam,tamen ibi ſunt deſerta plurium dietarum,in quibus niſi eſſet exercitus bene prouiſus, poſſet perire.

Tertius ad primos fines regni Commanorum,tranſſretando tamen mare vſque in regnum Abchaz: principalis ciuitas Commanorum dicitur Sarach. Sarach.

Ab hoc regno verſus partes noſtras inuenitur regio Laiton quæ eſt vltima paganiſmi,iungitur iſte finis terræ Chriſtianitatis regno Pruſſiæ,& Ruſſiæ. Laiton,vel Lituania.

Poſt poteſtatem Imperij Tartariæ deſcendendo à prouincia Cathay in Auſtralem plagam venitur verſus Perſiam,Syriam,& Greciam. Verſus terram Chriſtianorum poſſum aliqualiter in ſumma(quantum conuenit huic ſctipto)cõnotare. Dixi ſupra iam prouinciam Cathay iungi regno Turqueſcen ad occidentem, & illud quoq; iungi regno ſeu Imperio Perſiæ. Adquod ſciendum,quamuis rex Perſiæ habet etiam ab olim nomen Imperatoris; quia(cũ tenet aliquas terras ſui Imperij ab Imperatore Tartarorum)neceſſe eſt vt in tanto ſubiectus ſit illi.

Sunt autem in Perſia duæ regiones: vna altæ Perſiæ,quę à regno Turqueſcen deſcẽdens,iungitur ad occidentem ſui fluuio ‖Pyſon.In iſta habẽtur renominatę ciuitates,quarũ meliores duę dicuntur Bocura & Seonargant, quam aliqui appellant Samarkand: Et altera Regio baſſæ Perſiæ, deſcendens à flumine Pyſon, qui ad ſui occidentem iungitur regno Mediæ, & terræ minoris Armeniæ,& ad Aquilonem mari Caſpio,& ad Auſtrum terræ minoris Indiæ. Id eſt,Euſtrate. Bocura,vel Bohare. Samarkand. ‖Seu Neſſabó. ‖Seu Sarmaſane.

In hac baſſa Perſia tres principaliores ciuitates ſunt ‖Aeſſabor, Saphaon, ‖Sarmaſaule.In terra autẽ maioris Armeniæ quondã habebantur quatuor regna, quę nunc dicuntur ſubeſſe Imperio Perſarum Maior Armenia.

Perſarum, habetque famam terræ nobilis, & ad occidentem ſui iungitur Regno Turciæ.

Maior Armenia.

Hęc Armenia multas valdè bonas continet ciuitates, quarũ famoſior eſt Tauriſa, Regnũ Mediæ quod ſubeſt Regi Perſarum quamuis non latum eſt, tamen longũ eſt, & ad occidentem ſui regno Chaldeę coniunctum. In Media meliores duæ ciuitates ſunt, Seras, & Keremen.

Tauriſa.

Regnum Mediæ.

Hinc ad occidentẽ ſui, iuncta eſt regio Georgiæ, quę modo conſtat diuiſa in duo regna: Nam pars ſuperior, quę iungitur Medię, reſeruauit ſibi nomen Georgię, ſed inferior pars dicitur regnũ Abchaz. Ambo hęc regna, & reges eorũ, ſunt de fide Chriſtiana, & homines ita deuoti vt ad minus ſemel in hebdomada cõmunicent ſacramentis, iuxta ritũ Grecorum confectis. Et quidem regnum Georgię ſubiacet imperio Grand Can: ſed Abchaz nunquam ab ipſo Imperatore Tartariæ, neque Perſarum, neq; Medorum domino ſubdi potuit, eo quòd munitum eſt aquis & rupibus & aljs prouiſionibus contra impugnationes hoſtiles.

Georgia.

Abchas, aliàs Alchaz.

In parte regni Georgiæ ſunt tenebræ.

Iuxta hoc regnũ Abchaz habetur vnũ mirum & mirabile, nam magnus eſt territorij locus dictus Hamſon, & continens in circuitu ſpacium vię quatuor dietarũ: videtur ſemper opertus tenebris denſis vt nemo audeat illic intrare profundè, quoniam ſi qui præſumpſerint, non ſunt viſi reuerti. Attamen fatentur vicini ſub illis ſe tenebris audiſſe nonnunquã clamores hominũ, hinnitus, mugitus, rugitus, & boatus pecudum, & beſtiarum, ſed & cantus gallorum, vt per hęc & alia ſigna conſtet ibi habitare gentes: nam & fluuius decurrens monſtrat ſigna ſępè certiſſima in ſuo exitu: ignoratur tamen ſi tenebræ per totum territorium ſint eiuſdem denſitatis, an ſint in circuitu per aliquod ſpacium, & intrinſecus plus luminoſum.

Dicuntur autem tenebrę iſtę olim per diuinum miraculum adueniſſe. Saboere enim Imperatore Perſarum, circa annum Gratię ducenteſſimum quinquageſſimũ in perſecutione Chriſtianorũ tendente cum pleno exercitu per hunc locum, & Chriſtianis tyrannidem eius fugientibus, contigit ex improuiſo eos ità arctari, vt ſe effugere deſperarent, quapropter ſtatim ad orationis refugium omnes ſe ſternentes clamauerunt ad Chriſtum auxiliatorem ſuum: Et deus, qui puro corde Chriſtianos ad ſe orantes ſemper exaudit, expleuit illic literam vaticinij Iſaiæ: quia ecce tenebræ operient terrã & caligo populos, monſtrans per tenebram terrenam, quam eis ſuperduxit, quas paſſuri eſſent inimici nominis Chriſti tenebras infernales, indicansque per temporalem vitam, quam ſibi fidelibus conſeruauit, eam quam poſſeſſuri ſunt viri Chriſtiani vitam perpetuam, & cœleſtem.

Itaq; hoc regnum Abchaz ad occidentem ſui iungitur regno Turciæ, quod in longo & lato valdè extẽſum multas cõtinet prouincias ſcilicet Iconię, Cappadocię, Saure, Brike, Beticon, Patan, & Gennoch; hij omnes Turci, cum tota Syria & Arabia vſq; ad Galliziam Hiſpanię, ſubſunt Imperatori Babylonię Soldano, & ſunt in ſingulis prouinciis & regionibus ciuitates magnę, & multę nimis. Conſequẽtèr huic regno Turcię ad Occidentem ſui in ciuitate ‖Cathaſa iungitur per mare Grecię ſuperior pars poteſtatis Imperatoris Conſtantinopolitani, & quaſi ad Aquilonem contiguatur regno Syrię: cuius vna prouincia eſt terra promiſſionis, prout hoc ſacis dictum eſt ſuprà. Sunt & alię terrę, & Inſulę, & patrię latę, & ſpatioſę, continentes in ſe multa regna, & reges, & gentes diuerſas, de quibus nunc per ſingula pertractare non eſt conſilij.

‖Vel Sathata.

Ad ſupradictã Chaldeã iungitur Meſopotamia, & minor Armenia, & velut ad Auſtrum eius Æthiopia, Mauritania, Lybia alta & baſſa, & Nubia. Excepto ergò duntaxat diſtrictu Imperij Perſię & poteſtate Soldani, omnes ſępè pertractatę terræ, regiones, regna & Inſulę deſcendendo tam per Aquilonem, quã ad Auſtrum à prouincia Cathay, vſq; ad Chriſtianitatem ſunt de Imperio Tartariæ Grand Can. Et notandum de ſpacio diſtantiæ, quod inſtitores de Roma, vel Venetia feſtinantes tam per terras, quàm per mare, expendunt de tempore 11. menſes, & quandoque duodecim, priuſquam in Cathay valeant peruenire.

Extenſio Imperij Grand. Can.

Diſtantia à Roma ad Cathayam per Inſtitores.

Hijs itaq; viſis deſcribam ſaltem aliquas à prouincia Cathay in oriẽtem terras Imperij Tartarorum. Illic habetur regio Cadilla ſpacioſa multũ, ſimul & ſpecioſa: creſcunt namq; in ea fructus ad quantitatẽ magnorũ Cawardorũ, in quibus inuenitur vna beſtiola, in carne & ſanguine ad formam agnelli abſq; lana, & manducatur totus fructus cũ beſtiola. Sunt & alij plures diuerſi fructus, quorũ penes nos non eſt reſpectus nec vſus. Nam & ſunt ibi nonnullæ ſpeciales vites ferentes botros incredibiliter magnos, quorum vnum vix virilis vir valet in haſta portare.

Cadilla Regio orientalior Cathaya.

Angli noſtri hanc beſtiolam nuper viderunt in Perſia.

Et deinde in meridiem per aliquas dietas, poteſt peruenire ad primas Caſpiæ alpes, quę deſcendendo deſcendunt vſque ad Amazoniam, inſulam mulierũ, de qua tractatum eſt. Inter has Alpes retinetur maxima multitudo Iudæorum decem tribuũ Iſrael, per Dei voluntatem ita incluſa, vt in copioſa numeroſitate non poſſint à noſtra parte exire, quamuis aliqui pauci nonnunquam ſunt viſi tranſiſſe. Haberent autem competentem exitum circa inſulam Amazonię, ſed illum diligenter regina obſeruat.

Bacchariæ Regnum vel Boghariæ.

Porrò de regione Cadilla in orientem venitur ad regnum Backariæ, in qua mali & multum

crudeles habitant homines, nec eſt ſecurum itinerare per illam, quòd ad modicam occaſionem (ſi Deus non conſeruaret) occiderent viatorem & manducarent. Illic ſunt arbores ferentes lanam velut ouium, ex qua texunt pannos ad veſtimenta. Hyppocentauri ſunt ibi pro media ſuperiori parte in forma humana, & pro inferiori figura equorum, ſeu taurorum, venantes in terris, & piſcantes in aquis quod comedunt, & ſuper omnia carnes hominũ, quos capere poſſunt. Arbor Lanifera.

Nec non & gryphi illic apparent pro media poſteriori parte in forma leonis, pro anteriori in forma aquilę. Sed ſciatis, corpus magni gryphi maius eſſe octo leonibus de partibus iſtis. Nam poſtquã equum, bouem vel hominem, etiam aſinum occiderit, leuat & aſportat pleno volatu: tanquã cornua bouis aut vaccę ſunt illi vngulæ, de quibus etiam fieri ſolent ciphi ad bibendum, qui plurimùm reputantur precioſi. Fiunt quoq; de pennis alarum eius arcus rigidi, & fortes, ad iaciendum miſſilia & ſagittas. Ad iſtius regni Baccarię extremitates in Orientem finitur terra poteſtatis Grand Can: Et iungitur ei terra poteſtatis magni Imperatoris Indiæ, qui ſemper vocatur Prębyter Ioannes. Notandum, quoties per prouincias totius Imperij Grand Can, quicquam accidit, quod Imperatorẽ non oportet latere, confeſtim mittuntur per reges aut barones nuncij in dromedarijs aut equis, qui celerrimè feſtinant ad certa hoſpitia, ad hoc ipſum, velut abſque numero per imperium inſtituta: Iſque nuncius hoſpitio appropinquans, & cornu reſonans, dum auditur paratur nuncius alter, qui de manu ſuſcipiens literas, per recentem dromedarium feſtinat ad aliud hoſpitium, & ſic in breui tempore perferuntur rumores ad curiæ aures. Similiq́ue modo nuncij pedites permutantur de hoſpitio in hoſpitium, vt citiùs percipiatur negocium huius nuncij: appellantur ſua lingua Chidibo. Gryphones, de quibus Paulus Venetus. Curſores, Chidibo Tartaricè dicti.

Ergò per prędmiſſa ſatis elucet magnam eſſe nobilitatem, poteſtatem, reuerentiam, & dominationẽ Imperatoris Tartarię Grand Can de Cathay, & quòd nullus ab iſta parte Imperator, nec Perſię, nec Babylonię, nec Grecię, ſed nec Romę eſt illi comparandus. Vndè & multũ miſerandũ eſt, quia ipſe cùm toto Imperio nec eſt fide Catholica illuſtratus, nec ſalutari lauachro regeneratus: & hoc oremus vt in breui eueniat, per Ieſum Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum. Charitas Mandeuilli.

QVm in præcedentibus Imperator Indiæ dictus ſit magnus, reſtat de illius magnificentia aliquid poni hoc loco: cuius vtiq; gloria, nobilitas, & poteſtas, dici non habetur minor, quàm dicti Imperatoris de Cathay: nam etſi in aliquibus videatur forſitan minor, eſt tamen in aliquibus ſatis maior, quia omne ęquale nõ eſt idem cum illo cui ęquatur: itaq; à finibus regni Bachariæ ſupradicti vbi contiguatur Imperio Indię, eundo per multas dietas intratur in regnum ‖ Pentoxyrię quod eſt magnę latitudinis, & abundantię in multis bonis: huius nominatior ciuitas, dicitur Nyſe, & in ea habet Imperator palatiũ Imperiale, in quo reſidet dum ſibi placet. Imperator iſte ſemper vocitatus eſt Prębyter Ioannes, cuius nominis cauſam audieram quandoq; non veram: ſed in illis partibus accepi rationem indubitatã, quam breuiter hîc enarro. Circa annũ ab incarnatione Domini octingenteſſimũ, dux Ogerus de Danemarchia, cum quindecim cognationis ſuę baronibus, & armatis viginti milibus tranſiuit mare Grecię, & fauente ſibi Deo conquiſiuit Chriſtianitati per multa prędia penè omnes terras, regiones, & inſulas, quas eſſe de poteſtate Grãd Can prędixi, nec non & omnes, quę ſunt de poteſtate Imperij huius Imperatoris Indię. Eratq; inter Barones vnus denominatus Ioannes filius Goudebucf, regis Friſonũ: qui dictus Ioãnes Deo deuotus fuit, & dũ licuit Eccleſiarũ limina iniuit, vnde & barones ei dabant quaſi per iocum Prębyter Ioannes vocabulum. Dum ergo Ogerus dictas regiones expugnatas diuideret in hijs quindecim ſuis cognatis, & quemlibet eorũ in ſuo loco cõſtitueret regem, quatenus Chriſtiana religio in illa orbis ſuperficie ſemper ſtabilis permaneret, tradidit iſti Prębytero Ioanni ſuperiorẽ Indiam, cũ 4000. inſulis, regionibus, & ipſũ prębfecit Imperatorẽ ſuper reliquos cognatos, vt ei certa tributa impenderent, & in omnibus obedirent, atq; ex tunc omnes ſucceſſores Indiæ ſunt vocati Prębyter Ioannes, & vſq; in hodiernũ tempus boni mãſerunt Chriſtiani, & religionis æmulatores. Interim cum cauſa matrimoniorum aut procurationis filiorum diſperſa eſt primi Imperij integritas, & multę de inſulis conuerſę vel potius peruerſę retroceſſerunt ad vetuſtum ſqualorem paganiſmi primi. Nota. Recedens à Cambalu verſus orientem poſt 50. dietas ad terram Prębyteri Ioannis, principalis ciuitas terrę vocatur Coſan, ſatis parua ſicut Vincentia: habet etiam ſub ſe multas alias ciuitates. Ex pacto ſemper habet in vxorem vnam de filiabus Grand Can. Narratio de rebus geſtis Ogeri Ducis Daniæ. Vndè Presbyter Ioannes ſit dictus. 4000. Inſulæ. Coſan ciuitas.

Per multas peruenitur ad prouinciam Caſan, quę eſt ſecunda melior de mundo, vbi ſubtilior eſt, habet dietas 50. longior, 60. & eſt vna de duodecim partibus Imperij Grand Can. Oderi- Caſan.

Thebeth.

cus. Vide infra capitulo 49. de Cassan, & de Epulone. Deinde venitur in Thebeth prouinciam, quæ Indiæ est confinis. Itaque Rex & Imperator iste tenet spatiosissimum Imperium plenum valdè multis Regionibus & Insulis amplis, diuisum inter quatuor flumina magna de Paradiso terrestri descendentia, Pyson, Gyon, Tygrim, & Euphratem. Nam vltra fines orientales eius Imperij, & terrestrem Paradisum, nullus hominum habitat vel dominatur.

Insulæ Orientales.

Præterea imperat multis alijs regionibus & Insulis quæ distinguntur per brachia maris Oceani, & in quibus singulis continetur grandis numerositas ciuitatum ac villarum, & multitudo innumera populorum præ abundantia & præciositate omnium terrenorum bonorum.

Imperium Indiæ habetur famosum per vniuersum orbem. Sed & famosius haberetur si mercatores mundi communitèr possint & auderent adire sicut Cathay. Nostratibus enim perrarus est illic accessus, tam præ longinquitate, quàm præ marinis periculis. Nam exceptis alijs sunt ibi quamplures Adamantini colles, ad oram maris, & intra mare, qui sua virtute attrahunt sibi naues ferrum continentes. Quoniam & mihi nauiganti mõstrabatur per nautas à remotis quasi paruula Insula in mari, quam asserebant totalitèr ab antiquis temporibus paulatim ibi cumulatam de nauibus per Adamantes retentis.

Latitudo Imperij præsbyteri Ioannis est 4. mẽsium iter.

Estimatur autem latitudo huius Imperij per dietas quatuor mensium, sed longitudini non datur estimatio, eo quòd tenditur vsque Paradisum vbi nullus accedit.

Duodecim reges prouinciales.

Distinctum est Imperium per duodecim prouincias, quibus totidem præsunt reges principales seu prouinciales, & quorum singuli habent sub se Reges, Duces, Marchiones, & Barones, præstantes atque reddentes presbytero Ioanni promptam obedientiam, & certa tributa. Sæpius & cõmunitèr tenet sedem Imperator in palatio vrbis Imperialis Suse. Hoc autem Palatium tale & tantum est, vt per me non credatur debite estimandum. Istud tamen dico audentèr in summà, quòd grandius, nobilius, preciosius, & placidius est, in auro, gemmis, structuris, & schemate supra descripto palatio Grand Can in Caydo.

Suse sedes Imperialis.

Et ex speciali sciatis, istius palatij principales portas esse de Sardonico, vndiq; in ebore circumcluso: sed & transuersæ lineæ sunt omnes Eburneæ, aularum & cubiculorum seneſtræ christallinæ. Mensarum quædam Smaragdinę, aliquæ Hęmatistinæ, cæterorumq; lapidum preciosorum per aurum sibimet coniunctorum. Et nonnullæ in toto aureæ vel gemmunculis disseminatæ, & vnaquæque de mensis cum stabilimento proprij generis. De throni quoque preciositate, quia meæ demonstrationis excellit modũ, solummodo dico, singulos ascensionis gradus esse singulorum lapidum preciosorum: Primum onychis, secundum christalli, tertium iaspidis, quartum hęmatisti, quintum sardij, sextum cornelij. Et septimus qui est sub sedentis Imperatoris pedibus, ipse est, chrysolitus, omnes circumfusi, & incluſoria arte formati, auro splẽdido relucentes. Sed & ambo throni reclinatoria ex smaragdis auro combinatis, eoque distincto nobilissimis granis, & gemmis: cuncti pilarij in camera Regis dormitoria cõsistunt de auro fuluo, disseminati baccis, & quampluribus carbunculorum rubetis, totum de nocte habitaculum illustrantibus.

Magnificentia palatij presbiteri Ioannis.

Et nihilominus in ea christallina lampas plena balsamo pistico sed ardens & lucens, tam pro augendo lumine, quàm pro corrigendo aere, tamen etiam pro ministrando optimo odore.

Forma lecti Imperatoris compacta est de puris & nobilissimis Saphyris, concluſi vtiq; aureis vel ebumeis ligaturis, vt virtute lapidũ capiat suauem somnũ, motusq; carnis inhonesti stimuli, in eo refrenentur. Nunquã enim iungitur mulieri nisi soli coniugi propriæ, sed nec illi nisi quatuor quindenis anni videlicet in capite hyemis, veris, æstatis, & autumni causa sobolis generãdæ.

Vtq; breuitèr transeam de multa huius palatij nobilitate, mirabile hoc solummodò præmissis super addo. Quia circa medium illius in summo apice turris maioris, duo sunt nodi seu pomella de decoctissimi auri metallo miræ magnitudinis, & serenę resplendentiæ, & in ipsis formati duo carbunculi grandes, & lati, sua virtute tenebras effugantes, & velut splendorem plenilunij nocturno tempore mentientes.

CAPVT. 42.

De frequentia palatij & comitatu Imperatoris.

SEruiunt & prestò sunt iugitèr Domino Imperatori septem reges, qui in capite singulorum mensiũ, alijs septem regibus pro illis palatiũ ingredientibus recedunt ad propria, donec reuoluatur eis tempus statutum. Hij curam habent de gubernatione administrationũ in aula maiori per subiectos eis 72. duces, & 300. & 63. comites seu barones, quorum vnusquisque optimè nouit & diligentèr intendit proprio ministerio.

Nam isti sunt Imperatoris Cubicularij, isti Camerarij, isti scindunt Regi morsellos: alij de apponendis curam gerunt ferculis & deponendis, deafferendis, de asportandis, alij pincernæ, Archimandritæ, ostiarij, & sic de singulis.

Nec

Nec non absque iam dictis, manducant omni die in aula coràm Imperatore, duodecim Archiepiscopi, 220. Episcopi, quibus etiam alij totidem certis temporibus succedunt per vices. Verumtamen ad quotidianas expensas vsque præmissas, veniunt de Curia 300. millia personarum, sed non ampliùs: sed sicut prædixi de Curia præcedentis Imperatoris, sic nullus hîc, cuiuscũq; sit status, aut sexus, comedit vltrà semel in die, & hoc ipsum sobriè satis: quoniam prout æstimare possum, expensæ duodecim hominum de nostris communitèr compensarent triginta hominum in partibus illis. Taxat gulositatem Europæorum.

Dum Ioannem Presbyterum contingit procedere cum exercitu in plena exhibitione, non deferuntur vexilla, sed tredecim cruces magnæ altitudinis, & grossitudinis, de auro distincto pretiosissimis petris, in honorem Christi & suorum Apostolorum duodecim. Hæ vectantur in singulis curribus, & singularum ad hoc maximis curribus cum custodia cuiuscunque crucis, decem mille equitum, & centum mille peditum, nec tamen hic numerus auget vel minuit principalem exercitum Paganorum.

Tempore pacis per terras proprias de palatio ad palatium, aut de regno ad regnum, dum tendere ei placèt, comitatur vtique magna multitudine hominum antè & retrò, & ex vtroque laterum.

Túncque portantur coràm eo tria valdè notabilia, quæ tam illi quàm omnibus ea dignè notantibus esse possunt salutaria. Præcedit enim eum in spatio circiter octodecim passuum discus onustus velut omni genere pretiosorum vasorum auri & argenti, gemmarum, & inæstimabilis artificij. Illúmque discum subsequitur propinquiùs Imperatori ad spatium centum passuum, alia crux lignea nullo penitùs auro, nulloue colore aut preciositate artificialis operis adornata.

Dehinc ad sex passuum succedit ibidem propinquans Imperatori discus aureus terra nigerrima plenus. Sunt enim prædicti comitatus in custodiam & honorem personę Imperatoris, discus vasorum in ostensionem diuitiarum, & maiestatis Imperialis. Crux in recordatione passionis & mortis, quam in cruce ligni simplice Christus passus est pro nobis. Et terra nigra in memoriam diræ mortis, qua caro ipsius Imperatoris, quæ terra est, in terram ibit corruptionis.

Caput 43.

De quibusdam miris per regiones India.

Licèt plurima mira habeantur in terra Imperij Presbyteri Ioannis, ne materia operis nimiùm proteletur, multa tego silentio: & solùm de quibusdam in principalibus Insulis narro.

Ergò inprimis dico vidisse me magnum mare arenosum, quod de solùm minuta arena sine vlla aqua cum lapillorum granellis currit, & fluit per altas eleuationes, & depressiones ad similitudinem maris aquæ, nec vnquam quiescit: & quòd ipse non cesso stupere, inueniuntur pisces ad littus proiecti, qui cum sint alterius formæ & speciei, quàm de nostro mari, videntur tamen gustui in edendo delicatiores. Nullo tamen humano ingenio videtur hoc mare transuadari, aut nauigari, aut illo piscari, sed nec propter sui longitudinem, & plura impedimenta de propè circuiri. Magnum mare arenosum. In orientali India vsque hodie venti anniuersarij, arenis ostia fluminum suffocant.

Item ab hoc latere maris per tres dietas habentur magnæ montium alpes, inter quas venit quasi oriens de Paradiso fluuius decurrentibus petris, nihil penitùs habens aquę, in quibus æstimandæ sunt plurimum magnarum esse virtutum, quamuis de singulis humanę scientiæ constare non potest.

Hic petrarum fluuius currit ad interciſum tempus, quasi in tribus septimanę diebus, per spatium deserti Indiæ plurium dietarum, velut fluuius, quousque tandem se perdat in mare arenosum prædictum, atque ex tunc ipsi lapides penitùs non comparent. Tempore autem sui cursus nullus appropinquare præsumit, præ strepitu eius & motu: sed tempore quietis aditur sine periculo vitæ.

In Orientem versus fluuij originem ad ingressum deserti magni inter quosdam de montibus, cernitur grandis terræ planicies tanquam spatiosi campi totalitèr arenosi, in quo videntur ad Solis ortum exurgere de arena, & secundùm eleuationem Solis excrescere quædam virgulta, atque in feruore meridiei producere fructum. Ac de illo in Solis declino fructus cum arbustulis paulatim minui, & in occasu penitùs deperire, vnde & nullus hominum audet illorum vti fructibus, ne sit quid fantasticum & nociuum.

In huius deserti interioribus, vidi homines in toto syluestres, qui etsi in superioribus formam prætendere videantur humanam, descendunt in subterioribus ad formam bestiæ alicuius.

Horum quidam frontes gerunt cornibus asperatas, grinientes vt ferę vel apri: alij nonnulla vti videntur loquela, quam nemo rationalium nouit, & quibusdam signis concepta depromunt. Et est illic pluralitas syluestrium canum, qui dicuntur papiones, quibus postquam edomiti, Papagalli. miti,& ad venandum instructi fuerint,valent capi multæ bestiæ per desertum. Est & copiosita papingonum auium viridium in colore quas appellant phicake,& quarum diuersa sunt genera, nobiliores habent latas in rostro linguas, & in vtroque pede digitos duos. Et quædam ex istis naturaliter loquuntur verba aut prouerbia,seu salutationes,in patriæ idiomate, vt euidenter salutes concedant,& reddant viatoribus,& nonnunquam debitum iter errantibus per desertum ostendant.Minus autem nobiles non loquuntur ex natura, sed si latas habent linguas, & non sunt vltrà duorum annorum ætatis,possunt per assiduitatem instrui ad loquelam.

Aliæ nec loquuntur,nec erudiuntur,sed solùm clamitant pro voce milui, & nisi tres digitos habent in pede.

Nota: in quarta orientali Deus dedit fratribus minoribus magnam gratiam,vnde in magna Tartaria ita expellunt ab obsessis dæmones,sicut de domo canes: vnde quandoque per decem dietas ad eos adducuntur dæmoniaci alligati,& statim fratribus præcipientibus in nomine Iesu Christi, exeunt,& liberati baptizantur,& comburunt idola, & plures credunt, & quandoque exeunt idola de igne, & fratres proijciunt aquam benedictam, & clamat dæmon, Vide,de meo habitaculo expellor propter fratres nunores. Ita multi credunt, & baptizantur. Odericus.

Melescorde Regio. Item nota:dum recederem de terra Præsbyteri Ioannis versus occidentem,applicui ad contratam vnam, quæ dicitur Melescorde,quę pulchra est, & multùm fertilis: inter montes duos huius "Vel regionis. "contratę fecerat quidam murum circundantem mõtem,& in eo fontes nobilissimos,& omne delectabile.Et hunc locum dicebant paradisum,sicut hîc ferè continetur.Ideò Odericus, qui posteà narrat de valle infausta,in hoc se terminat.

Ad supradictum Indiæ regnum Pentexoriæ satis propè, & lata est & longa Insula, Mischorach,bonis copioſè referta,de qua vnum scribo præteritum mirum. Mischorach.

Ante paucos hos annos, villanus ditissimus, sibi valdè preciosum construxerat palatium, quasi pro Paradiso terrestri,circundatum, munitum fortalitijs, ac repletum omnibus corporalibus delicijs.

Illic areæ,turres,cameræ,cubicula,cum alijs ædificijs,in multo numero,& gloria permagnifica,ac historiarum picturis,inter quas,nonnunquam prodigioso artificio bestiæ & bestiolæ,aues & auiculæ discurrebant,volitabant,& per pugnas,garritus,collusiones,mẽtiebantur viuere.

Illic prata, & pometa,& seruatoria circà delicioſi collis congestum, distincta velut omni genere florum, arborum, & herbarum, cum multis fontibus & riuulis, quorum perspicuitas,& fluxus in glaris suauem & auditui præstabant refectionem, & super aliquos fuerunt exceptioris artificij, circumstructi auro,& argento,& gemmis, & tres principales fontes emittentes ad palatium Domini per occultas conductas,riuulos vini,lactis,& mellis. Ditissimi villani paradisus factitius.

Copiosus quoque numerus formosorum puerorum,& puellarum, ætatis inter decem & sex decem annos,indutorum torquibus,& cycladibus exauratis,exercentium inter iocos cantus & spectacula,ac seruientium suo Domino prope nutum.Audiebantur ex turrium costodibus, nec non videbantur dulcisonæ symphoniæ,generum diuersorum,vt certissimè putares, non hominum,sed Angelorum: & in istis,ac similibus,deliciebatur iste villanus.

Sed & aurum liuido nil iuuat,imò nocet:quia enim hic inuidiæ & otij facibus super ingenuitatem mentis omnium generaliter nobilium principum verebatur in corde: (ingenuitas enim, & rusticitas nunquam cohabitãt in cordis vno domicilio) Composuerat ista sibi in hunc finem, vt per se singulos aduocaret aliquos vasallos corpore robustos,mentéq; audaces atq;,ad omnẽ proteruiam benè procliues:& cuilibet pro placitis muneribus commisit vt illum seu illum principem seu Baronem,quem dicebat sibi aduersariũ,clàm per insidias vel impetũ occideret,promittens quenquam post factum ad se recepturum perpetuò in hunc locum: sed & velut vaticinans pseudopredicauit,si quem illorum pro his flagitijs contigeret corporaliter tradi morti,nihilominùs animam eius in hunc amœnum Paradisum recipi, & viuere in æternum.

Mandeuillus oculatus testis Per hunc igitur modum nonnullis nobilibus occisis, & interfectis,tandem nudabatur eius nequitia tanta,& congregati regionis Barones miserum occiderunt,eius opera destruentes.Ipse ego inibi ductus, vidi fontium loca,& multa rei vestigia.

Caput 44.

De loco & dispositione vallis infaustæ.

HVius ad insulæ extremitates non procul à fluuio Pyson, habetur locus mirabilis pariter & terribilis,vltrà omne mundanũ,penè & procul:de euentibus,ac laboribus infinitis,quæ mihi meisque in tempore itinerationis acciderunt hucusque subticui,cùm iam vnum de maioribus ecce narro.

Eſt illic in alpibus vallis infauſta, quatuor fermè leucarum: longitudo vallis, quaſi ad quatuor milliaria Lombardica, appellata vallis incantationis, ſeu periculoſa, ſeu propriùs dæmonioſa: intrà quam diebus ac noctibus reſonant boatus & tumultus tonitruorum, tempeſtatum, clamorum, & ſtridorum, diuerſique generis ſonituum terribilium, quos illic exercet multitudo ſpirituum malignorum.

Propè ad vallis medium ſub vna rupium, apparet omni tempore viſibiliter integrũ ac maximum caput dæmonis vſque ad humeros tantùm, cuius ſpeciem præ horrore nullus pleno intuitu humanus audet diu oculus ſuſtinere: nam reſpicientes contrà aſpicit truculentèr, agitans oculos minacitèr, tanquam ex palpebris eiecturus (quæ & ſcintillant) flammas in altum. Totúmque caput ſeſe rotat ad minas, & variat terribiliter modum & continentiam ſub repentè diuerſis maneriebus. Exítque de illo per totum ignis obſcuratus fumo, & fœtor tantus, quòd per magnum ſpatium viæ peſſimam vallem infectat.

Ingredi autem volentibus, apparet ſemper ad introitum vallis, magna copia auri, argenti, vaſorum, veſtium, & rerum pretioſarum, quas proculdubio ibi dæmones confingunt, quibus & ab olim multi inſipientium hominum concupiſcentia tracti intrarunt, & vſque nunc intrant pro colligendo theſauro: ſed de Infidelibus pauciſſimi reuertuntur, imò nec de Chriſtianis, qui auaritiæ cauſa ingrediuntur: per vallis autem ſemitam, quæ inter montes & monticulos, tortuoſa & aſpera eſt, gradientes vident, & audiunt, dæmoniacos ſpiritus multos volutantes, & imaginibus corporum viſibilium, ſerpentum, volucrum, vlularum, lamiarum, & huiuſmodi ſpecierum horribilium dentibus minitantes, vngulas erigentes, incognitos ſibilos ſpirantes propè ſuper capita ad aures tranſgredientium. Sempérque minuitur lumen aeris, donec ventum fuerit ad terribiliſſimum locum capitis antedicti.

Si quis autem ſincerę fidei Chriſtianus per contritionẽ verã & confeſsionẽ, ſe poſuerit in ſtatu ſaluationis, munitus corporis Chriſti myſterijs, ac ſigno crucis, cum intentione ibidem agendi pœnitentiam de admiſsis, & cauendi de admittendis, putatur poſſe hanc tranſire vallem ſecurus quidem à morte, non tamen liber à laboribus, horroribus, & tormentis, & exire, de omnibus culpis præteritis corruptis, ac de futuris magis ſolito cautus, ſicut ſcriptum eſt, territi purgabuntur.

Nota aliud mirabile magnum. Vidi cùm irem per vnam vallem poſitam iuxta flumen quod egreditur de paradiſo, vidi in ea multa corpora mortuorum, in qua etiam audiui multa genera Muſicorum, qui ibi mirabilitèr pulſabant: tantus erat ibi tinnitus Muſicorum, quòd incuſsit mihi timorem horribilem.

Eſt autem longitudo illius vallis quaſi ad quatuor milliaria Lombardica, in qua ſi vnus Infidelis intrat, nunquam egreditur, ſed ſine mora moritur: Et licet ſciui, quòd intrantes moriuntur, tamen acceptaui intrare, vt viderem quid ibi eſſet. Dum intraſſem tot humana cadauera ibi vidi, quod niſi quis videret, credere non poſſet.

In hac valle, ab vno eius latere, vidi faciem hominis valdè horribilem, qui tantum horrorem mihi incuſsit, quòd putaui me ſpiritum exhalare, propter quod ſæpè repetij verbum vitæ, ſcilicet, verbum Caro factum eſt.

Ad illam faciem non audebam accedere, niſi ad diſtantiam octo paſſuum: poſteà iui ad caput vallis, & aſcendi ſuper montem arenoſum, in quo vndique circumſpiciens, nihil videbam, niſi inſtrumenta muſicalia, quæ audiebam fortitèr pulſare. Cùm fuiſſem in capite montis, reperi multum argentum congregatum ibi in ſimilitudinem ſquammarum piſcium, vnde poſui in gremio, ſed quod de ipſo non curabam, dimiſi illud, & ſic illæſus tranſiui Deo concedente.

Sarraceni cùm hoc ſcirent, reuerebantur me eſſe baptizatum, & ſanctum: mortuos nunc in valle dicebant, homines infernales.

Odericus ad literam hic terminat ſuum librum: non fuit tot perpeſſus in valle, ſicut ego. Anno Domini 1331. Ianuarij nono, migrauit ad Chriſtum, in conuentu Minorum: cuius vitam ſtatim in fine, & vſque nunc claris miraculis diuina prouidentia approbat, & commendat, prout continebatur in quaterno, à quo concordantias hic ſuperſeminaui.

Caput 45.

De periculo & tormentis in valle eadem.

ITaque dico vobis, cùm ego cum ſodalibus, qui ſimul eramus, quatuordecim diuerſarum nationum ante ingreſſum huius tanti periculi peruenisſemus, nos tractatu longo, & deliberatione acuta conſiliabamur, vtrùmnam ingredi deberemus, & quidam affirmabant, alii verò negabant. Erat autem in numero duo deuoti fratres, de religione beati Franciſci, natione Lombardi, qui videbantur pro ſeipſis non multum curare ingreſſum, niſi quia noluerunt nos animare ad ingreſſum, ingressum, dicentes, si qui nostrum per confessionem, & Eucharistiæ susceptionem se ibidem præmunirent, ingrederentur cum illis: quo, ab omnibus mediante debita prouisione, quam ipsi fratres penes se gerebant peracto, parauimus mentes nostras cum pedibus ad intrandum.

Sed ecce quinque de nobis, duo Græci & tres Hispani, semetipsos ab alijs segregantes, visi sunt alium requirere introitum nos precedere cupientes, & certè nos illos exinde non vidimus, & quid eis acciderit an periculum subierint, vel ne ignoramus.

Nos autem nouem per vallem processimus in silentio, & cum cordis ea deuotione, quam quisque sibi potuerit obtinere: & ecce in breui transacto spatio apparuerunt cumuli massarum auri & argenti, & precioſorum copia vasorum. Sed dico vobis pro parte mea, quia nihil horum tetigi, reputans id fallaciam dæmonum confinxisse ad mittendum concupiscentiam in cor nostrum, imò sine intermissione conabar cor meum custodire ad deuotionem inceptam.

Procedentibus igitur nobis lux cæli minuebatur paulatim & augebatur horror, quoniam propè nos vndique etiam sub pedibus nostris apparebant iacere cadauera mortuorum hominum penitùs defuncta: alia adhuc spirantia, & nonnulla semiuiua, super quæ dum nos aliquando calcare contingeret, conquerebantur, ac doloroſè submurmurabant.

Et licèt non certum id habebam, æstimaui hoc fieri in parte vel in toto fictione dæmonum, reputans in breui tempore tantam multitudinem hominum spontaneè vallem intrasse, & sic à longo tempore in ea perijssent putrefactos fuisse.

Ergò in initio nostri processus quasi propè leucam inuenitur iter sub pedibus satis promptum, sed lumine tanquam ad medium nobis sufficiente, via torquebatur nimis, & asperabatur: & ecce figuræ dæmonum, circum & suprá in aere se ferentium, ad imagines horribilium luporum, leonum, laruarum, megerarum, iuxtà cuiuscunque genus, vlulantium, rugentium, stridentium, gannientium, hiantes ore, intentantes dentibus, rostris, ac vnguibus, nos terrere, mordere, discerpere, deglutire.

Quapropter pro breui interdum soluto silentio nos inuicèm hortabamur, ne quis pro pusillanimitate terrori cederet, & tanto deficeret in agone. Hoc igitur modo per secundam leucam expirante nobis vsque ad tenebras lumine, quousque quis vix vmbram proximi agnoscere posſit, præter prædicta in aere tormenta, incurrebant nobis ad tibias, & pedes pluralitas quasi porcorum, vrsorum, & caprarum grinnientium, & impellentium nos ad lapsum, quod vel ad tertium, vel quartum, aut sextum passum solatenus cadebamus in palmas, seu genua, vel prosternebamur in faciem, aut supini.

Ac superuenere præter hoc ventorum turbines, fulgurum coruscationes, tonitruorum boatus, grandinum casus & exundatio pluuiarum, quantas & quales nunquam accepimus in hoc mundo, quibus iactabamur, ruebamus, quassabamur, & periclitati fuimus extrà narrandum.

Interdum quoque sensimus tanquam graues baculorum ictus, per humeros, dorsa, latera, & ad renes, alij quidem grauiores, alij vt puta secundum demeritum vniuscuiusque. Et certè dum per tanta tormẽta, quasi exhaustis totis viribus, iam propè medium locum vallis erat ventum, accidit repentè, sub vnico instanti temporis, quibusdam nostrum expalmatio ita dura, vt omnes paritèr collisi, & prostrati iaceremus in extasi per vnam vel duas forsitan horas.

Et isto defectu vidit quilibet suo modo spiritualem visionem supermirabilem, & excedentem omne dictum, & scriptum.

Ego verò de visione mea nihil ausus sum scribere, vel loqui, quia & fratres singuli inhibuerunt, nisi de his, quæ corporalitèr intuebamur, & passi sumus.

Grauissimum singuli sustinuimus ictum per corporis loca diuersa, vnus in facie, alius in pectore, ad costas, in dorso, vel ad humerum, & mansit cuique signum percussuræ nigerrimum, ad formam virilis manus humanæ:

Mirabilis ictus

Ictum autem meum in colli ceruice tali ac tanta passione, vt putabam caput abscissum de corpore auolare: & hinc ad octodecimũ annum mansit mihi in prima magnitudine signum: sed & vsque nunc variato colore locus ille demonstrat plenissimè cicatricem, donec cum cadauere tota mutabitur in sepulchro: porrò vbi nos ab extasi in his tenebris separauimus singuli per diuinam gratiam respirando, loquendo, palpando, erigendo nos ipsos mutua humanitate, vt potuimus, recollegimus, & cohortabamur, cùm subitò nobis apparuit sub tenebroso lumine, vel potiùs fumosa caligine, locus ille spatiosus mediæ vallis, continens antedictum horribile caput dæmonis, plenus fœtore inæstimabili, & iugi occupatus exercitatione innumerorum spirituum malignorum.

Hunc ergò locum ineptũ cùm vitare vellemus, in toto nequiuimus extremitatem eius, quocunque girantes, nullus nostrorum perfecto aspectu audebat respicere quę gerebantur ibidem,

quia inuadens tremor ſtatuebat horripilationem, extrahebat ſudorem, & pudorem omnes extinguere videbantur. Nec tamen potuit eſſe conſilium de reuertendo, ne propter immutatum propoſitum confeſtim à dæmonibus ſtrangularemur.

Tranſiuimus, Dei gratia nobis opitulante, ſed non ſine maximo horroris, fœtoriſque tormento: rurſùmque ex tunc procedentes nos apprehendebat tenebroſa, validáque tempeſtas, ventorum, coruſcationum, tonitruum, grandinum, & pluuiarum, cuius quaſſatione collabebabamur in facies, & in dorſo dextrorſum, & ſiniſtrorum, interuoluente ad tibias, ſicut priùs multitudine grinnienſium beſtiarum, nec dubito ſcribere quoque ampliùs, quàm 500. vicibus per hanc vallem quiſque noſtrum ſternebatur ad terram.

Poſt verò exactam tertiam leucam, cœpit nobis augeri lux aeris, ex quo animoſiores effecti, in vno tranquilliori loco nos parùm pauſantes, gratias Deo palmis extenſis in cælum, reddidimus immenſas, & præcipuè quòd nullus deeſſet de nouenario numero ſociorum.

Nihilominùs tamen ſpiritus in aere nobis minari non ceſſabant, prætendentes in deriſionem ſua pudenda ſimul, & fœda virilia & poſteriora.

Pro certo ergò habeatis de his quæ vidi, & ſenſi, nullam poſſum vobis tradere æquipollentiam verborum, cùm quia grauiſſima erant, tum quia ſingulis ne mihi deuotionem minueret non attendebam, tum etiam, quod præ horrore, labore, & dolore multa memoriæ non commendabam.

Per quartam autem leucam (ductrice gratia) leuiùs tranſeuntes, ſuſtinuimus tamen ſub pedibus hominum cadauera mortuorum, propè vallis exitum rerum tentamina precioſarum.

Nunc itaque obſecro magno cordis affectu, hæc legentes & audientes ego, qui in illa hora quid erga me agebat miſericordiſsimi Dei pietas ignorabam, vt velitis pro me, ſimul & mecum ex mentis intimo collaudare ipſum Dominum, qui tunc de poteſtate tenebrarum illarum eripuit me indignum, & prout confido, à delictis iuuentutis me purgauit, quatenùs de poſteà commiſsis, & committendis, mihi propitius fore dignetur, cùm iam ſenior ſim effectus. Quoniam etſi ex tunc propoſui mores corrigere, ex nunc ſtatuo in melius emendare, per filium eius Ieſum Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum.

Ad hoc, addo breuiter, quòd non auderem hortari quenquam, me conſulentem, vt ſponte neè ingrederetur hanc vallem infauſtam, quamuis ego curioſus intrauí. Venientes poſthac ad proximas habitationes, neceſſe fuit nobis intendere ad recreandum corpora cibarijs, & balneis, & ad medendum vulneribus, & quaſſaturis, donec per aliquod tempus vnuſquiſque acciperet deliberationem ſuper ſuo futuro.

De quibuſdam alijs admirandis per Indorum inſulas.

VT modò procedam in tractatu. Sciatis ad paucas inde dietas grandem inſulam haberi gigantium, ad ſtaturam altitudinis viginti quinque pedum noſtrorum, de quibus ipſe vidi nonnullos, ſed extrà terram eorum, & audiuimus eſſe intrinſecùs quoſdam triginta pedum, & vltrà: hi operiuntur non veſtibus, ſed beſtiarum pellibus vtcunque ſibi appenſis, comedentes animalium carnes crudas, & lac pro potu ſorbentes, atque appetentes ſuper omnem eſum carnes humanas. Gigantes Anthropophagi.

Iſtorum non curaui intrare inſulam: nam & audiui quòd ad maris littus ſolent inſidiari nauigantibus, nauéſque ſubmergere, niſi interdum redimantur tribus aut quatuor per ſortem hominibus ſibi datis.

Verſus Auſtrum hinc in mari Oceano, habetur inter alias inſulas, vna, vbi crudelibus quibuſdam mulieribus naſcitur in oculis lapis rarus, & malus, qnę ſi per iram reſpexerint hominem, more Baſiliſci interficiunt ſolo viſu. Lætiferi aſpectus mulierum

Et vltrà hanc inſulam alia maior & populoſior, vbi cùm multi ſint vſus nobis inſueti, vnum deſcribo.

Dum deſponſauerit vir puellam, virginem, mandat hominem incompoſitum, velut ribaldum, qui ſua idonea claue per expertos ſuper hoc diligenter conſiderata, ſi reputatur idonea referet & veſtiget ſub nocte vnica virginalem conclauem, pro mercede ſibi tradita competenti. Et ſi poſtera nocte accedens ſponſus ita non inuenerit, poterit, & conſueuit hominem impetere ad mortis iudicium indeclinabile. Cúmque huius moris diſcere voluiſſem cauſam, accepi reſponſum, pro certis temporibus apud eos, virgines habuiſſe in matricibus paruos ſerpentes, quibus nocebantur primi ad illas intrantes. Inſula vbi virgines vitiantur antequam nubant

Ideóq; & viri, qui pro mercede tantum ſubeunt periculum, vocant ſua loquela cadibrum, eſt, ſtultos deſperatos.

Ex

Ex hac, apparet Insula in qua inter alios vsus, peruersæ sunt matres contra naturam & scripturã, cum peperierint contristantur, & dum proles moritur iocũdantur, iactantes in magno igne cum conuiuio & exultatione, dumque maritus ante vxorem decedit, patebit vxoris plena dilectio, si cum corpore mariti, quod rogo traditur se iactat cremandam, vt quia in isto seculo steterunt amoris vinculo colligati, non sint alio separati.

Nec tamen intelligunt illud seculum, nisi quod sibi confingunt terrestem Paradisum. Puerum aut minorẽ annis, trahet mater secum si placet, sed ætatis puer perfectæ, eliget pro proprio placito viuere superstes, aut mori iuxta parentes.

Hic etiam non succedunt Reges per generationem sed per electionem, vt assumatur non nobilior, aut fortior, sed morigerator, & iustior, 50 ad minus annorum, nullam habens sobolem aut vxorem, seruatúrque illic iusticiæ rigor in plena censura, in omnibus & contra omnes, etiamsi forefecerit ipse Rex, qui nec eximitur a traditis legibus pro concupiscentia vel contemptione quarumlibet personarum.

Veruntamen Rex si peccauerit non occiditur ob reuerentiam, sed quòd sub pœna mortis, publicè inhibetur, ne quispiam in Regione ei verbo vel vllo facto communicet, & quoniam sui loco alter rex constituitur, necesse est illi breui vita degere vel perpetuò exulare.

Constat post ipsam, & alia Insula multis bonis locuples, & hominibus populosa, de qua recolo scribendum, quod nulla occasione comedunt tria genera carnium, gallinarum, leporum, & aucarum, quas etsi nutriant in copijs, vtuntur duntaxat pellibus aut plumis.

Cæterarum verò bestiarum & animalium licitè vescuntur carnibus pro victu, & lacte pro potu. Ibi quisq; vir licitè potest coniungi cuique mulieri, quantumcúnque propinquet, exceptis progenitoribus, patre & matre. Nam cohabitatio, & commixtio omnium virorum ad singulas mulieres apparet ibi communis, vnde mater natum paruulum suum, adicit pro sui placito cuicúnque viro, qui circa generationis tempus secum dormierit, nec valet vllus virorum esse certus de proprio generato, quem modum exlegem arbitror & turpem.

Sicut ergò præfatus sum, multa mira videntur per Regiones Indorum, mira quidẽ nobis, sed illis assueta, quibus si nostra recitarentur assueta, audirent pro miris. Nam & dum quibusdam dixi aucas viuas apud nos nasci in arboribus, admirati sunt satis. In multis locis seminatur singulis annis sementum de ‖ Cothon, quod nos dicimus lanam arboream, exurgunt ei modici arbusta, vel potius arbustula de quibus talis lana habetur: est arbor Iuniperus, de cuius ligno desiccato, si carbones viuos sub proprijs cineribus tenueris diligenter opertos, igniti seruabuntur ad annum.

‖ Vel Cotton.

Descriptio arboris Bombasum ferentis.

Est & genus Nucum incredibilis magnitudinis ad quantitatem magni capitis: & bestia vocata, oraflans, vel serfans, corpore in nostrorum altitudine caballorum, & collo in 20 longitudine cubitorum ad prospiciendum vltra domos & muros, quorum posteriora apparent vt hinniculi siue lemi.

Nux Indica. Oraflans bestia.

Genus est etiam Camelionum ad formam hynnulorum, qui semper patulo tendunt ore, vel nil manducantes. Viuunt de aere, quæ etiam ad suum libitum videntur sibi variare colorem, exceptis (vt dicitur) albo vel rubeo.

Camelliones.

Maximi quoq; serpentes, inuicem qualitate, & genere differentes atq; colore.

Aliqui cristam in capite gerunt, quidam more hominum ad duos pedes erecti incedunt, & nonnulli qui dicuntur Reguli, venenum per ora distillare non cessant, nec non quam plures cocodrilli, de quibus aliquid in præcedentibus retuli: & apri in nostrorum magnitudine boum, spinosi ericij, in quantitate porcorum, leones albi in altitudine dextrariorum. Louheraus, seu Edouches per Indiam habentur, quod ferarum genus fatis est maius nostris communibus equis, gerens in fronte tetri capitis tria longa cornua, ad formam pugionis, ex vtráque parte scindentia, vt eis nonnunquam interficiant Elephantes.

Apri ingentes. Leones albi. Louheraus.

Aliæ quoq; bestiæ crudeles vt vrsi cum capitibus ferè aprorum & habentes pedes senos, qui finduntur latis vngulis bis acutis, & cum caudis leonum siue pardorum.

Et quod vix credetur, mures pro quantitate, 10, aut 12. nostrorum & vespertiliones ad modum coruorum.

Sed & aucæ in triplo maiores nostris, plumis indutæ rubris, nisi quod in pectore & collo apparet nigredo.

Et breuiter tam ibi quàm alibi, habentur pisces, bestiæ, volucres, aut vermes diuersorum generum, aut specierum, de quibus hoc loco, vel inutilis, vel prolixa posset fieri narratio, quod nec illis qui nunquam propria exierunt, credibilis videretur.

De Bracmannorum & aliorum Inſulis.

BRacmannorum Inſula quaſi ad medium Imperij cõſiſtit Preſbyteri Ioannis. Hij licet Chriſtiani non ſunt, viuunt tamen naturali optimo more. Rudes enim & incomparati, ſimplices, & inſcij omnis artis apparent. Non cupidi, ſuperbi, inuidi, iracundi, guloſi, aut luxurioſi nec iurant, fraudant, aut mentiuntur. Laborant corpore, ſed intendunt animo implere quoad valent naturale mandatum, hoc facias alijs quod tibi vis fieri: credentes & adorantes omnium creatorem Deum, & ſperantes ab ipſo ſimpliciter Paradiſum.

Sobrij quoque ſunt, quapropter & longo tempore viuunt: & ſi quis ab eorum moribus degenerat, proſcribitur perpetuò ſine mora, omnibus nulla poſita differentia perſonarum, vnde & in iuſto Dei iudicio, quòd naturalem exercere iuſtitiam contendunt, Elementa eis naturaliter obſequuntur, & rarò eos tangit tempeſtas, aut fames, peſtilentia aut gladius.

Magna riparia dicta Chene currit per Inſulam, miniſtrans piſcium & aquarum copiam: Iſtos olim Alexander rex Grecorum debellare cupiens, miſit eis literas comminationis, cui inter cætera notabilia remandauerunt, nihil ſe habere curioſi, quod Rex tantus deberet concupiſcere, nihilque ita ſe timere perdituros ſicut pacem bonam, quam hactenus habuerunt inconfuſam: ſicque diuino nutu eſt actum vt Rex truculentus ad alia ſe verteret, atque in breui poſtmòdum caderet, quia diſſipat Dominus eos, qui bella volunt, & iſtis manet pax multa diligentibus eam. Flumen Chene.

Pytan Inſula breuis continet paucos & breues habitatores, Pygmæis modico longiores, qui decoris vultibus nullo vnquam cibo veſcentes, ſpecialis pomi quod ſecum portant ſuſtẽtantur odore, quo ſi carerent ad parum, color in vultu marceſceret, & die tertia vita periret. Pytan.

Diſcretio & rationabilitas ijs adeſt modica, nec enim habent laborare niſi pro veſtitu, quem ſibi circa arbuſta colligunt: Et conficit vnuſquiſq; pro 12. annis vitę ſuæ.

Vltra hanc Inſulam ſilueſtres, & fortes habentur homines, ſed beſtiales, veſtiti per totum corpus proprijs capillis & pilis, exceptis palmis, & faciebus, qui videntur penitus gubernatione & politia carere: vesantur carnes per ſiluas, & diſcurrunt piſcantes in aquis, omnia cruda vorantes.

Huius ad terræ metas manat fluuius Briemer latitudinis duarum leucarum, & ſemis, quem nos tranſire nequiuimus, nec auſi fuimus. Quoniam illo tranſmiſſo inſtant deſerta 15. aut plurium diætarum inhabitata nũc temporis (prout audieramus) diuerſis & nobis ignotis generibus beſtiarum, ſerpentum, draconum, gryphiũ, aſpidum, dypſarum, & colubrorũ in multitudine tanta, vt centum millia armatorum ſimul pertingere vſquè ad arbores, quæ ibi dicuntur ſolis & lunæ, vix poſſent. Attamen ſuo tempore Alexander magnus ſcribitur pertigiſſe, & quædam ab arboribus fictitia ſuccepiſſe reſponſa. Fluuius Briemer.

Circa has arbores excolitur Balſamum, cuius liquoris comparatio nuſquam ſcitur contineri ſub cœlo. Nam ibidem homines, de iſtarum arborum fructibus & Balſamo vtentes dicuntur illorum virtute quadringentis aut pluribus annis viuere. Balſamum indicum.

Peruenit autem & Dux Danus Ogerus, ac manducauit de illis, vnde & nonnulli præ ſenſus ſtoliditate vel fidei leuitate putant ipſum adhuc alibi viuere in terris. Ego autem quia tantum pro dilatanda Chriſtianitate laborauit arbitror magis, eum regnare cum Chriſto in cœlis.

Verſus orientales partes Indorum conſiſtit magna regio Taprobane exuberans optimis terrenorum bonorum, in quam nauigio intrauimus in octo vel circa dietis per aquam ſatis tenuem, haud profundam. Ibi, ſicut & in alijs multis Inſulis, rex non naſcitur ſed eligitur per partes terrę: & eſt hæc vna de quindecim nominatis Regionibus conquiſitionis Ogeri. Iſta, cum modicum declinet à circulo terræ ſub Æquatore, patitur in anno duas æſtates, & duas hyemes, ſi tamen hyems aliqua dici debeat, & non magis æſtas, quia nullus hîc dies anni caret fructu, flore, germine. Taprobana Inſula, & eius deſcriptio.

Habitatores ſunt diſcreti, & honeſti, vnde & mercatores, de remotis partibus libenter cum ijs communicant: & ſparſim per regionem habitant plurimi diuites Chriſtiani.

Hijs iunguntur duę inſulę (quas nos vocamus, Orilla, & Argita,) quanquam illa lingua aliter nominentur. In quarum prima ſunt multę mineriæ auri, in ſecunda argenti, & propter quandam craſſitudinem aeris continuam, perpauca apparent ſydera, præter vnum quod dicunt Canopũ, quod æſtimo planetam Veneris. Et quod mirum eſt valdè, de omni lunatione ijs apparet niſi 2. quarta. Cuius rei probabilis ratio effugit etiam Aſtronomos valdè peritos. Atque per has Inſulas quoddam rubrum mare à mari Oceano ſegregatur. Orilla. Argita. Hunc locum notat Gerardus Mercator in ſua charta generali.

Itaq; in Orilla in locis multis effoditur, colligitur, & conflatur optimum auri metallum, per viros, mulieres, & paruulos in hoc inſtructos, ſed & in nonnullis ibi montibus monſtrantur congregationes bestiolarum in quantitate nostrorum carulorum, in formicarum forma ac natura totali: qui pro suis viribus effodiunt, purificant,& colligunt cum intenta occupatione auri minutias,eas reponentes,& repositas retrahentes de cauernis & specubus in cauernas & specus. Et in conseruando sunt diligentes & acres, vt nemo audeat de facili propinquare,nisi quod interdum ab illis pausantibus, seu ab æstu se occultantibus, aliqui non sine periculo in dromedarijs & veredarijs rapiunt,vel furantur.

Solet etiam ab eis obtineri,quòd excogitato ingenio super equam quæ nuper fœtum ædiderit,imponentes homines duas de ligno cistulas seu cophinos nouos, vacuos, & apertos à lateribus dependentes propè terram: hanc famelicam dimittunt vt se pascat ad herbas in montem: Quam formicæ videntes solam, salientes & iocantes, colludunt ad eam & ad eius confines pro nouitate: & quoniam eis est naturale, vt circa se omne vacuum implere conentur comportant certatim aurum suum in vasculis suis mundis, Cumque homines a remotis tempus obseruauerint, emittunt pullum equæ vt videat matrem, cuius aspectu iam diu stetit priuatus, ad cuius hinnitum protinus equa reuertitur onusta de auro. Hijs ergò & similibus modis homines aurum diripiunt à formicis.

Aliquid de loco Paradisi terrestris per auditum.

A Finibus Imperij Indiæ recta linea in orientem nihil est habitatum vel habitabile, propter rupium,& montium altitudinem,& asperitatem,& propter aeris inter Alpes diuersitatem: nam in multis locis, licet quandoque aer sit serenus, nunc fit spissus nunc fumosus, vel venenosus,& frequenter die medio tenebrosus. Durantque aut potius aggrauescunt huiusmodi difficultates,vsque ad illum amænissimum Paradisi locum, quem protoplausti per inobedientiam sibi & posteris perdidisse noscuntur, quod spacium si metiri posset, est multarum vtique diætarum. Quia iam non vlterius processi, nec procedere quiui,pauca duntaxat de illo loco referam verisimilia, quæ didici per auditum.

Descriptio Paradisi.

Paradisus terrestris dicitur locus spacioſus ad amplitudinem quasi quinq; Insularum nostrarum,Angliæ,Normanniæ, Hiberniæ, Scotiæ,& Norvegiæ, aut forsan satis plurium. Cuius situs est pertingens in altitudine ad aeris supremam superficiem, eò quod illic terra vel terræ orbis sit multum spissior quàm alibi per modum excentricum à vero centro mundi, nec valet hoc deinde ab aliquo experto refelli, scriptura veritatis clamante, quòd ibi sit fons irrigans vniuersam superficiem terræ: aquæ enim est natura semper fluere ad ima.

Exeunt autem ab illo fonte versus nostri partes hemispherij,hoc est nobis de illo loco in occidentem quatuor flumina, Pyson,Gyon,Tygris, & Euphrates, ab ista dimidia parte terræ circa Æquatoris circulum terræ influentes, quapropter & merito credendum videtur, exire de eodem fonte & alia quatuor flumina irrigantia terram oppositam, quæ est circa alteram dimidiam partem circuli Æquatoris,quamuis nos eorum fluminum loca,virtutes,& nomina ignoramus,quòd homines habitant ab alia parte Æquinoctij.

Gentes ad austrum Aequatoris.

Hoc tamen volo sciri pro verò & audiui, illic terræ faciem inhabitatam in maxima multitudine ciuitatum,vrbium,& regionum,quoniam & eorum institores Indiam frequentant,& nunciant sibi inuicem gentes & principes per literas, ac alijs modis destinare sunt visi.

Ganges fluuius.

Vnus nostrorum fluuiorum Pyson currit per Indiam, & per eius deserta quandoque sub terra,sed sæpius supra, qui & Ganges illic appellatus est, ab illo vltimo Paganitatis rege,quem Dux Ogerus deiectum cùm baptizari renueret in ipso flumine proiectum submersit.

Ad littus huius reperiuntur multi lapides præciositatis immensæ & metalli grana carissimi, nec non & auri mineriæ, multumque descendit in eo natans lignum Aloes ex Paradiso, quod rebus nitræ virtutis inserit Salomon in Canticis.

Hinc secundus fluuius Gyon,currit per Aethiopiam,vnde dum venit in Ægyptũ,accipit nomen Nilus. Tertius Tygris veniens per Assyriam influit maiorem Armeniam & Persiam:tandemq; fluuij singuli per loca singula se iactant in mare per quod defluunt vsq; ad Nador,id est, ad oppositum diametrum paradisi: Ideoq; merito æstimantur omnes vniuerso orbe aquę dulces originẽ capere, à supradicto paradisi fonte,quamuis secundũ distãtiam maiorem vel minorem, & secundum naturas rerum per quas meant diuersos habere inueniuntur sapores, atq; virtutes.

Porrò ipsum Paradisi locum audiui à tribus plagis, orientali, meridionali, & septentrionali, inaccessibilem tam hominibus quàm bestijs, eo quòd apparet ripis perpendiculariter abscisis, tanquam inestimabilis altitudinis. Et ab occidente idest nostra parte tanquam super omnium humanorum intuitum rogus ardẽs,qui in scripturis rumphea flammea appellatur,vt nulli creaturę terrenę ascẽsus in eũ credatur nisi quibusdam volatilibus,prout decreuit iusti iudicij Deus.

Ambu-

Ambulantibus enim illuc ſiue repentibus hominibus obſtarent tenebræ imo rupes, aër infeſtus, beſtiæ, ſerpentes, frigus, & cauma. Nauigare autem contra ictum fluminis nitentes impediret intrinſecus recurſus, ac impetuoſus & quandoque ſubterraneus aquæ curſus deſcendentis cum vehementia ab euectiſſimo, vt dictum eſt, loco, qui ſuo quoque ſtrepitu, per petras atq; ſtrictos alioſque diuerſos cadens gurgites, efficeret ſurdos, & aeris mutatio cæcos, vnde & multi tam nobiles quàm ignobiles, fatua eſe audacia in iſto ponẽtes periculo perierunt, alijs excæcatis, alijs abſurdatis, & nonnullis in ipſo acceſſu ſubitanea morte peremptis. Ex quo nimirum credi habetur iſtum Deo diſplicere conatum.

Quapropter & ego in illo loco ſtatui animum ad repatriandum, quatenus Deo propitio, Anglia quæ me produxit ſeculo viuentem, ſuſciperet morientem.

CAPVT. 49.

In reuertendo de Caſſan, & Riboth, & de diuite Epulone.

EXhinc de illis quæ in reuertendo vidi ſcribo curſim panca, ne modum excedere videatur materia, Reuertebar itaque quaſi per Aquilonare latus Imperij Presbyteri Ioannis, & nunc terræ, non mari nos commendantes, tranſiuimus Deo Ductore, multas Inſulas in multis diætis, & peruenimus ad regionem magnam Caſſan: hæc cum ſit vna de quindecim habens longitudinem diætarum 60. & latitudinem propè 30. poſſet eſſe nominatior omnibus ibi circa prouincijs, ſi a noſtris frequentaretur.

Via per quam Mandeuillus redijt in Angliam.

Caſſan.

Notandum. Caſſan (ſecundum Odericum) eſt melior prouincia de mundo, vbi ſtrictior eſt, habet diætas 50. vbi longior 60. & eſt vna de 12. prouincijs Imperij Grand Can. eſt iſta populoſa, diſtincta ciuitatibus, vt quiſque à quacunque plaga de vna exeat ciuitate nouerit aliam in media diæta propinquam. Tenetque iſtam regionem Caſſan rex diues & potens, pro parte de Imperio Præsbyteri Ioannis, & pro parte de Imperio Grand Can.

Riboth.

De iſta in reuerſione noſtra venimus ad regnum Riboth, quod ſimiliter eſt vnum de quindecim, latum, & ſpecioſum, in quo de multis bonis, habetur plena copia. Hoc tenetur in toto de Imperio Tartarorum.

Labaſſi, ſummus idolorum pontifex.

Vna eſt ibi inter & ſuper omnes ciuitas Sacerdotalis, & Regia, in qua Rex habet ſuum magnificum palatium, & ſummus idolorum Pontifex quem Labaſſi appellant, cui omnes Regni obediunt, & populi ſicut Domino Papæ nos Chriſtiani, quoniam & iubet, & benedicit, ac confert ſacerdotibus beneficia idolorum.

Ciuitatis vndique muri ſunt compacti albis & nigris lapidibus conquadratis ad modum ſcakarij, omnesque contractæ ſimili pauimento ſunt, ſtratæ. Tanta eſt illic reuerentia ſacrificiorum vt ſi quis vel in modica quantitate, ſanguinem hominis, ſeu immolaticię pecudis fudiſſe deprehenſus fuerit, nequaquam iudicium mortis euadet. Et inter innumeras ſuperſtitiones eſt illic vna talis.

Hæres cuius pater defungitur, ſi alicuius vult eſſe reputationis, mandat cognatos, amicos, Relligioſos, & ſacerdotes pro poſſe, qui certo Die conuenientes ſub magno Symphoniæ feſto, comportant defuncti cadauer, in montis ſublime cacumen. Ibi accedens dignior Prælatorum, funeris caput abſcindit, tradens hæredi in aureo diſco decãtanti ſub deuotione ſuas orationes cum ſuis in propria lingua. Atque interim aues regionis rapaces, & immundæ, vt corui, vultures, & aquilæ, quæ pro conſuetudine optimè morem norunt, aduolant magno numero in aëre: Tuncque Relligioſi cum ſacerdotibus detruncant corpus in fruſta velut in macello, proijcientes pecias in altum auibus, ac decãtantes certam ad hoc compoſitam orationem, tanquam ſi noſtri ſacerdotes cantarent. Subuenite ſancti Dei. &c.

Et habet eorum oratio, hunc ſenſum in ſua lingua. Reſpice quàm iuſtus & ſanctus extitit homo iſte, quem Angeli Dei coueniunt accipere & in Paradiſum deferre. Talique diabolico errore deluſi, putant filius, & amici, quod defunctus ſit in Paradiſum tranſlatus, viuat illic ſempiterne beatus, quoniam, vbi plures conuenere volucrum, ibi maiorem lætantur & iactant fuiſſe numerum Angelorum.

Hinc deinde reuertentes, cum choris, & reſonantia Muſicorum, filius paratum præſtat omnibus conuiuium, in cuius fine pro extremo ferculo, tradit ſingulis particulam, de patris capite ſumma cum deuotione. Hanc etiam capitis caluariam filius facit poſtmodum debitè formari & poliri ſibi pro cypho, in quo bibit in conuiuijs, ob recordationem amantiſſimi patris.

Ab hoc Regno decem dietis per poteſtatem Imperatoris Grand Can, inuenitur Inſula delectabilis, & ſpecioſa ſatis: cuius Rex eſt præpotens in gloria, & in diuitijs ſuperabundans, & de multis quæ illic geruntur admirandis vnum recito ſolum.

Diues Epulo.

Quòd est ibi homo quidam ditissimus nullius dignitatis nomine honoratus, sed byssio, ac serico adornatus, & splendide omni tempore epulatus: non ergo vult dici princeps, Dux, comes, miles, aut huiusmodi, licet superioritatem habeat super marchiones aliquos & barones.

Eius possessionis valor æstimatur in anno 30. cumandefinarijs bladi, & risi, nec quærit nisi delitiosè viuere in isto seculo, vt cum diuite Epulone sepeliatur in inferno. Cum etiam sibi derelictus sit, iste viuendi modus a retrogenitoribus, eum & ipse posteris derelinquet. Hic tanquam Imperiali residet palatio, cuius muri ambitus ad tractum leucæ tenditur, continens nemusta, vineta, riuulos, fontes & stagna, aulas, & cubicula auro strata depictaque mirè, & sculpta artificiosè, vltra quam vales explicare, & inter omnia ad medium palatium in celso vertice atrium amænum, valdè tamen modico, sed cunctis præciosius, ædificio, quasi ad scemata nostrarum Ecclesiarum, cum turribus, pilarijs, & columnis, in quibus nihil prominet indignius auro. Nunquam vel rarò hîc exit de suo palatio cum solis pulchris quos sibi conuocat & conuiriat paruis pueris & puellis, non excedentibus 16. annos ætatis. Tendit dum libet pedibus, quandoque vectatur equo, interdum ducitur vehiculo, nonnunquam vult ferri gestatorio, vel certè puellaribus brachijs, & visitat sæpissimè præfatum præciosius ædificium: atque hijs & modis alijs excogitat delectare visum pulchris, auditum suauibus, olfactum redolentibus, tactum lenibus, & gustum pascere delicatis. Electas semper habet præsto 50. puellas ei, & de proximo exquisitissimè ministrantes tam ad mensam quàm ad cubiculum, & ad omne libitum.

Hæ ad prandium recumbenti afferunt processionis more pro singulo ferculo semper 5. genera dapum nobilium cum dulcisonæ resonantia camtilenæ, quarum aliquæ ei singulos detruncant genu flexo morsellos, aliquæ ponunt in ore, mundis tergentes comedentis labia mappis.

Versus.

Nam ipse quidem in mensa continet iacentes manus puras & quietas. Post deseruitionem ferculi primi, seruitur pro secundo in 5. alijs dapum generibus modo quo supra, & renouatur in apponendo cantus suauior melodia.

Ista absque vlla Domini cura per ministros quotidiè reparantur, etiam in maiori satis quàm effor nobilitate, nisi dum ipse pro placito iusserit, quandoque temperari.

Delicioſius igitur quo vult deducit animam, non curans animam, sed nec probitatem curans terrenam, pascit sterilem, & viduæ non benefacit. Et

Quia vnus sicut porcus, Morientem suscipit orcus.

Longitudo vngium. Vtuntur etiam in Florida principes longis vnguibus. Noua historia Chinensis hoc testatur.

Porrò quod eum dixi manus tenere quietas, noueritis nimirum nil posse manibus capere vel tenere, propter longitudinem, & recurui tatem vnguium in digitis, qui sibi nullo tempore præscinduntur. Caput. 50.

De compositione huius tractatus in nobili ciuitate Leodiensi.

IN reuertendo igitur venitur ab hac insula per prouincias magnas Imperij Tartarorum, in quibus semper noua, semper mira, imo nonnunquam incredibilia viator potest videre, percipere, & audire.

Et Noueritis, vt prædixi, me pauca eorum vidisse, quæ in terris sunt mirabilium, sed nec hic scripsisse centesimam partem eorum quæ vidi, quod nec omnia memoriæ commendare potui, & de commendatis multa subticui, propter modestiam, quam decet omnibus actibus addi.

Idcirco vt & alijs, qui vel antè mein partibus illis steterunt, vel iturí sunt, maneat locus narrandi siue scribendi, modum huius pono tractatus, potius decurtans, quàm complens, quoniam aliàs loquendi non esset finis, nec aures implerentur auditu.

Concludit opus suum.

Itaque anno à natiuitate Domini nostri Iesu Christi 1355. in patriando, cum ad nobilem Legiæ, seu Leodij ciuitatem peruenissem, & præ grandeuitate ac artericis guttis illic decumberem in vico qui dicitur, Bassestanemi, consului causa conualescendi aliquos medicos ciuitatis: Et accidit, Dei nutu, vnum intrare physicum super alios ætate simul & canicie venerandum, ac in sua arte euidenter expertum, qui ibidem dicebatur communiter, Magister Ioannes ad barbam.

Is, dum paritèr colloqueremur, interseruit aliquid dictis, per quod tandem nostra inuicem renouabatur renouabatur antiqua notitia, quam quondam habueramus in Cayr Aegypti apud Melech Mādibron Soldanum, prout ſuprà tetigi in 7. capitulo libri.

Qui cum in me experientiam artis ſuæ excellenter monſtraſſet, adhortabatur ac præcabatur inſtanter, vt de hijs quæ videram tempore peregrinationis, & itinerationis meæ per mundum, aliquid digererem in ſcriptis ad legendum, & audiendum pro vtilitate.

Sicque tandem illius monitu & adiutorio, compoſitus eſt iſte tractatus, de quo certè nil ſcribere propoſueram, donec ſaltem ad partes proprias in Anglia peruenijſſem. Et credo præmiſſa circa me, per prouidentiam & gratiam Dei contigiſſe, quoniam à tempore quo receſſi, duo reges noſtri ‖ Angliæ, & Franciæ, non ceſſauerunt inuicem exercere deſtructiones, deprædationes, inſidias, & interfectiones, inter quas, niſi à Domino cuſtoditus, non tranſiſſem ſine morte, vel mortis periculo, & ſine criminum grandi cumulo. Et ecce nunc egreſſionis meæ anno 33. conſtitutus in Leodij ciuitate, quæ à mari Anglię diſtat ſolum per duas diætas, audio dictas Dominorum inimicitias, per gratiam Dei conſopitas: quapropter & ſpero, ac propono de reliquo ſecundum maturiorem ætatem me poſſe in propriis, intendere corporis quieti, animęq; ſaluti. Edwardus tertius.

Hic itaque finis ſit ſcripti, in nomine Patris, & Filij, & ſpiritus ſancti, AMEN.

Explicit itinerarium à terra Angliæ, in partes Hieroſolimitanas, & in vlteriores tranſmarinas, editum primò in lingua Gallicana, à Domino Ioanne Mandeuille milite, ſuo authore, Anno incarnationis Domini 1355. in Ciuitate Leodienſi: Et paulò poſt in eadem ciuitate, tranſlatum in dictam formam Latinam.

Richardi Hakluyti breuis admonitio ad Lectorem.

Ex libro eiuſdem Plinij ſeptimo, CAP. 2. cui titulus eſt, De Scythis, & aliarum diuerſitate gentium.

ESſe Scytharum genera, & quidem plura, quæ corporibus humanis veſcerentur, indicauimus. Idipſum incredibile fortaſſe, ni cogitemus in medio orbe terrarum, ac Sicilia & Italia fuiſſe gentes huius monſtri, Cyclopas & Læſtrigonas, & nuperrimè trans Alpes hominem immolari gentium earū more ſolitum: quod paulum à mandendo abeſt. Sed & iuxta eos, qui ſunt ad Septentrionem verſi, haud procul ab ipſo Aquilonis exortu, ſpecúque eius dicto, quem locū Geſelitron appellant, produntur Arimaſpi, duos diximus, vno oculo in fronte media inſignes: quibus aſſiduè bellum eſſe circa metalla cum gryphis, ferarum volucri genere, quale vulgò traditur, eruente ex cuniculis auruni, mira cupiditate & feris cuſtodientibus, & Arimaſpis rapientibus, multi, ſed maximè illuſtres Herodotus, & Ariſteas Proconneſius ſcribunt. Super alios alios autem Anthropophagos Scythas, in quadam conualle magna Imai montis, regio est, quæ vocatur Abarimon, in qua syluestres viuunt homines, auersis post crura plantis, eximiæ velocitatis, passim cum feris vagantes. Hos in alio non spirare cœlo, ideóque ad finitimos reges non pertrahi, neque ad Alexandrum magnum pertractos, Beton itinerum eius mensor prodidit. Priores Anthropophagos, quos ad Septentrionem esse diximus decem dierum itinere supra Borysthenem amnem, ossibus humanorum capitum bibere, cutibúsque cum capillo pro mantelibus ante pectora vti, Isigonus Nicæensis. Idem in Albania gigni quosdam glauca oculorum acie, à puertia statim canos, qui noctu plusquàm interdiu cernant. Idem itinere dierum x. supra Borysthenem, Sauromatas tertio die cibum capere semper. Crates Pergamenus in Hellesponto circa Parium, genus hominum fuisse tradit, quos Ophiogenes vocat serpentum ictus contactu leuare solitos, & manu imposita venena extrahere corpori. Varro etiam nunc esse paucos ibi, quorum saliuæ contra ictus serpentum medeantur. Similis & in Africa gens Psyllorum fuit, vt Agatharchides scribit, à Psyllo rege dicta, cuius sepulchrum in parte Syrtium maiorum est. Horum corpori ingenitum fuit virus exitiale serpentibus, vt cuius odore sopirent eas. Mos verò, liberos genitos protinus obijciendi sæuissimis earum, eóque genere pudicitiam coniugum experiendi, non profugientibus adulterino sanguine natos serpentibus. Hæc gens ipsa quidem prope internicione sublata est à Nasamonibus, qui nunc eas tenent sedes: genus tamen hominii ex his qui profugerant, aut cùm pugnatum est, abfuerant, hodiéque remanent in paucis. Simile & in Italia Marsorum gentis durat, quos à Circes filio ortos seruant, & ideo inesse ijs vim naturalem eam. Et tamen omnibus hominibus contra serpentes inest venenum: ferúntque ictas saliua, vt feruentis aquæ contactũ fugere. Quòd si in fauces penetrauerit, etiam mori: idq; maximè humani ieiuni oris. Supra Nasamonas confinésque illis Machlyas, Androginos esse vtriusq; naturæ, inter se vicibus coëuntes, Calliphanes tradit. Aristoteles adijcit, dextram mammam ijs virilem, læuam muliebrem esse. In eadem Africa familias quasdam effascinantium, Isigonus & Nymphodorus tradunt quarum laudatione intereant probata, arescant arbores, emoriantur infantes. Esse eiusdem generis in Triballis & Illyrijs, adijcit Isigonus, qui visu quoque effascinent, interimántque quos diutius intueãtur. Iratis præcipuè oculis: quod eorum malum facilius sentire puberes. Notabilius esse quòd pupillas binas in oculis singulis habeant. Huius generis & fœminas in Sythia, quæ vocantur Bithyæ, prodit Apollonides. Philarchus & in Ponto Thibiorum genus, multósque alios eiusdem naturæ: quorum notas tradit in altero oculo geminã pupillam, in altero equi effigiem. Eosdem præterea non posse mergi, ne veste quidem degrauatos. Haud dissimile ijs genus Pharnacum in Æthiopia prodidit Damon, quorum sudor tabem cõtactis corporibus afferat. Fœminas quidem omnes vbique visu nocere, quæ duplices pupillas habeant, Cicero quoque apud nos autor est. Adeò naturę, cùm ferarum morem vescendi humanis visceribus in homine genuisset, gignere etiam in toto corpore & in quorundam oculis quoque venena placuit: ne quid vsquã mali esset, quod in homine non esset. Haud procul vrbe Roma in Falisc orum agro familiæ sunt paucæ, quæ vocantur Hirpię: quæ sacrificio annuo, quod fit ad montem Soractem Apollini, super ambustam ligni struem ambulantes non aduruntur. Et ob id perpetuo senatusconsulto militiæ omniúmq; aliorũ numerum vacationem habent. Quorundam corpore partes nascuntur ad aliqua mirabiles sicut Pyrrho regi pollex in dextero pede: cuius tactu lienosis medebatur. Hunc cremari cum reliquo corpore non potuisse tradunt, conditúmque loculo in templo. Præcipuè India Æthiopúmq; tractus, miraculis scatent. Maxima in India gignuntur animalia, Indicio sunt canes grandiores cæteris. Arbores quidem tantæ proceritatis tradũtur, vt sagittis superari nequeant. Hæc facit vbertas soli, temperies cœli, aquarum abundantia (si libeat credere) vt sub vna ficu turmæ condantur equitum. Arundines verò tantę proceritatis, vt singula internodia alueo nauigabili ternos interdum homines ferant. Multos ibi quina cubita constat longitudine excedere: non expuere: non capitis, aut dentium, aut oculorum vllo dolore affici, raro aliarum corporis partium: tam moderato Solis vapore durari. Philosophos eorum quos Gymnosophystas vocant, ab exortu ad Occasum præstare, conuentes Solem immobilibus oculis: feruentibus harenis toto die alternis pedibus insistere. In monte cui nomen est Milo, homines esse auersis plantis, octonos digitos in singulis pedibus habentes, autor est Megasthenes. In multis autem montibus genus hominum capitibus caninis, ferarum pellibus velari, pro voce latratum edere, vnguibus armatum venatu & aucupio vesci. Horum supra centum viginti millia fuisse prodente se, Ctesias scribit: & in quadam gente Indiæ, fœminas semel in vita parere, genitósque confestim canescere. Item hominum genus, qui Monosceli vocarentur, singulis cruribus, mirę pernicitatis ad saltum: eosdemque Sciopodas vocari, quòd in maiori æstu humi iacentes resupini, vmbra se pedum protegant, non longè eos à Troglodytis abesse. ¶ The ſame in Engliſh.

THis yeere Iohn the firſt king of Portugal,being principally aſſiſted by the help of the Engliſh Marchants,and Almaines,ouercame the Pagyes in the dominion of the King of Barbarie, 1415.

barie, putting many thousands of them to the swoyde, and he tooke their Citie which was very mightie, seated vpon the sea, which is called Ceut in their language.

The voyage of Macham an Englishman, wherein he first of any man, discouered the Iland of Madera, recorded verbatim in the Portugall historie, written by Anthonio Galuano.

Madera first discouered by one Macham an Englishman.

IN the yeere 1344. King Peter the fourth of that name, raigning in Arragon, the Chronicles of his age, write, that about this time the Iland of Madera, standing in 32. degrees, was discouered by an Englishman, which was named Macham, who sayling out of England into Spaine, with a woman that he had stolne, arriued by tempest in that Iland, and did cast anker in that hauen or baye, which now is called Machico, after the name of Macham. And because his louer was sea sicke, he went on land with some of his companie, and the shippe with a good winde made saile away, and the woman died for thought. Macham, which loued her decrely, built a chappell, or heremitage, to bury her in, calling it by the name of Iesus, and caused his name and hers to be written or grauen vpon the stone of her tombe, and the occasion of their arriuall there: And afterward he ordained a boate made of one tree, (for there be trees of a great compasse about) and went to sea in it, with those men that he had, and were left behinde with him, and came vpon the coast of Affricke, without saile or oare. And the Moores which sawe it, tooke it to be a marueilous thing, and presented him vnto the King of that Countrey for a wonder, and that king also sent him and his companions for a miracle vnto the King of Castile.

Macham made there a chappell, naming it Iesus Chappell.

In the yeere 1395. King Henry the third of that name, raigning in Castile, by the information which Macham gaue of this Iland, and also the shippe of his companie, mooued many of France and Castile to goe and to discouer it, and also the great Canaria, &c.

In the yeere 1417. King Iohn the second, raigning in Castile, and his mother Ladie Katherine being Regent, one Monsieur Ruben of Bracamont, which was Admirall of France, demaunding the conquest of the Ilands of the Canaries, with the title of King, for a kinsman of his named Monsieur Iohn Betancourt, after that the Quene had giuen him them, and holpen him, he departed from Stuyl with a good armie. And they affirme also, that the principal cause which moued him to this, was to discouer the Iland of Madera, which Macham had founde, &c. ibidem pag. 2. of Anthonio Galuano.

The Ambaſſage which King Iohn the ſecond, King of Portugall ſent to Edward the fourth King of England, which in part was to ſtay one Iohn Tintam, and one William Fabian Engliſhmen, from proceeding in a voyage which they were preparing for Ginnee, 1481. Taken out of the Booke of the workes of Garcias de Reſende, which intreateth of the life and acts of Don Iohn the ſecond King of Portugal. Chap. 33.

AND afterwards the king ſent as ambaſſadours from the towne of Montemaior to king Edward the fourth of England, Ruy de Souſa, a principall perſon, and a man of great wiſedome, and eſtimation, and in whome the King repoſed great truſt, with Doctor Iohn Deluas, and Ferdinand de Pina, as Secretarie. And they made their voyage by ſea very honorably, being very well accompanied. Theſe men were ſent on the behalfe of their King, to confirme the auncient leagues with England, wherein it was conditioned, that the new king of the one and of the other kingdome, ſhould be bound to ſend to confirme the olde leagues. And likewiſe they had order to ſhewe and make him acquainted with the title which the King held in the ſegneurie of Ginnee, to the intent that after the King of England had ſeene the ſame, he ſhould giue charge throughout all his kingdoms, that no man ſhould arme or ſet foorth ſhips to Ginnee: and alſo to requeſt him, that it would pleaſe him to giue commandement to diſſolue a certaine fleete, which one Iohn Tintam, and one William Fabian, Engliſhmen, were making, by commandement of the Duke of Medina Sidonia, to goe to the aforeſaid partes of Ginnee. With which ambaſſage the King of England ſeemed to be very well pleaſed, and they were receiued of him with very great honour, and he condeſcended vnto all that the Embaſſadours required of him, at whoſe hands they receaued authenticall writings of the diligence which they had performed, with publication thereof by the Heralds: and alſo promiſes of thoſe confirmations which were neceſſarie. And hauing diſpatched all things well, and with the Kings good will, they returned home into their countrey.

The firſt cauſe of this ambaſſage.

The ſecond cauſe.

The third cauſe.

The manner of the entring of Solyman the Great Turke, with his armie into Aleppo in Syria, marching toward Perſia againſt the Great Sophie, the fourth day of Nouember, 1553, noted by Maſter Anthonie Ienkinſon, preſent at that time.

THere marched before the Grand Signior, otherwiſe called the Great Turke, 6000. Eſperes, otherwiſe called light horſemen very braue, clothed all in ſcarlet.

After, marched 10000. men, called Nortans, which be tributaries to ꝑ Great Turk, clothed all in yellow veluet, and hats of the ſame, of the Tartarie faſhion, two foote long, with a great role of the ſame colour about their foreheads, richly decked, with their bowes in their hands, of the Turkiſh faſhion.

After them marched foure Captaines, men of armes, called in Turkiſh Saniaques, clothed all foure in crimſon veluet, euery one hauing vnder his banner twelue thouſand men of armes well armed with their morrions vpon their heads, marching in good order, with a ſhort weapon by their ſides, called in their language, Suniterro.

After came 16000. Ianizaries, called the ſlaues of the Grand Signior, all afoote, euery one hauing his harquebuſhe, who be his gard, al clothed in violet ſilke, and apparelled vpon their heads with a ſtrange forme, called Cuocullucia, faſhioned in this ſort: the entring in of the forehead is like a ſkull made of white veluet, & hath a traine hanging downe behinde, in manner of a French hoode, of the ſame colour, and vpon the forepart of the ſaide ſkull, ſtuft in the middes of his forehead there is ſtanding bolt vpright like a trunke of a foote long of ſiluer, garniſhed moſt richely with Goldſmiths worke, and pretious ſtones, and in the toppe of the ſaide trunke, a great buſh of feathers, which wauereth vp and downe moſt braucly when he marcheth.

After this, there came 1000. pages of honour, all clothed in cloth of golde, the halfe of them carying harquebuſhes, and the other halfe Turkiſh bowes, with their quilles of arrowes, marching in good order.

Then came three men of armes well armed, and vpon their harneſſe coates of the Turkes faſhion, of Libard ſkinnes, and murrions vpon their heads, their ſpeares charged, and at the ende of their ſtaffe hard by the head of ꝑ ſpeare, a horſe taile died in a bloody colour, which is their enſigne: they be the challengers for the Turkes owne perſon.

After them came ſeuen pages of honour in cloth of ſiluer, vpon ſeuen white horſes, which horses were couered with cloth of siluer, all embyodered and garnished with pretious stones, emeraulds, diamonds, and rubies most richly.

ſes

After them also came six more pages of honour, clothed in cloth of golde, euery one hauing his bowe in his hand, and his fawchine of the Turks fashion by his side.

Immediatly after them came the Great Turke himselfe with great pompe, & magnificence, shining in his countenance and gesture a wonderfull Maiestie, hauing onely on each side of his person one page clothed with cloth of golde: he himselfe was mounted vpon a goodly white horse, adorned with a robe of cloth of golde, embyodered moste richly with the most pretious stones, and vpon his head a goodly white tuck, containing in length by estimation fifteene yards, which was of silke and linnen wouen together, resembling something Callicut cloth, but is much more fine and rich, and in the toppe of his crowne, a litle pinnach of white Ostrich feathers, and his horse most richly apparelled in all points correspondent to the same.

After him followed six goodly young Ladies, mounted vpon fine white hackneis, clothed in cloth of siluer, which were of the fashion of mens garments, embyodered very richly with pearle, and pretious stones, and had vpon their heades caps of Goldsmiths worke, hauing great flackets of heare hanging out on each side, died as red as blood, and the nailes of their fingers died of the same colour, euery of them hauing two eunuches on each side, and litle bowes in their hands, after an Antike fashion.

After marched the Great Basha, cheefe conductor of the whole armie, clothed with a robe of Dollymant crimson, and vpon the same another short garment very rich, and about him fiftie Janizaries afoote, of his owne gard, all clothed in crimson veluet, being armed as the Great Turks owne Janizaries.

Then after ensued three other Bashas, with slaues about them, being afoote, to the numbers of three thousand men.

After came a companie of horsemen very braue, and in all pointes well armed, to the number of foure thousand.

All this aforesaid armie, most pompous to behold, which was in number foure score and eight thousand men, encamped about the citie of Aleppo, and the Grand Signior himselfe was lodged within the towne, in a goodly castle, situated vpon a high mountaine: at the foote whereof runneth a goodly riuer, which is a branch of that famous riuer Euphrates.

The rest of his armie passed ouer the mountaines of Armenia, called nowe the mountaines of Camarye, which are foure daies iourney from Aleppo, appointed there to tarie the comming of the Grand Signior, with the rest of his armie, intending to march into Persia, to giue battell to the Great Sophie. So the whole armie of the Grand Signior, containing as well those that went by the mountaines, as also those that came to Aleppo, in companie with him, with horsemen and footemen, and the conductors of the camels and victuals, were the number of 300000. men.

The camels which caried munition and victuals for the said armie, were in number 200000.

A note of the presents that were giuen at the same time in Aleppo, to the Grand Signior, and the names of the presentors.

FIrst the Basha of Aleppo, which is as a Viceroy, presented 100. garments of cloth of golde, and 25. horses.

The Basha of Damasco, presented 100. garments of cloth of golde, and twentie horses, with diuers sortes of comfits, in great quantitie.

The Basha of Amante, presented 100. garments of cloth of gold, 20. horses, and a cup of gold, with two thousand duckets.

The Saniaque of Tripolis, presented six camels, charged all with silkes, 20. horses, and a litle clocke of golde, garnished with pretious stones, esteemed worth two hundred duckets.

The Consul of the companie of the Venetians in Tripolis, came to kisse the Grand Signiors hand, and presented him a great basen of golde, and therein 4000. duckets Venetians.

The safe conduct or priuiledge, giuen by Sultan Solyman the Great Turke, to Master Anthony Ienkinson at Aleppo in Syria, in the yeere, 1553.

SVltan Solyman, &c. to all Viceroyes, Saniaques, Cadiz, and other our Iustices, Officers, and Subiects of Tripolis in Syria, Constantinople, Alexandria in Egypt, and of all other Townes, and Cities, vnder our Dominion, and turisdic iuriſdiction: we will and commaund you, that when you ſhall ſee Anthony Ienkinſon, bearer of theſe preſent letters, marchant of London in England, or his factor, or any other, bearing the ſaid letters for him, arriue in our ports and hauens, with his ſhippe or ſhippes, or other veſſels whatſoeuer, that you ſuffer him to lade or vnlade his marchandiſe whereſoeuer it ſhal ſeeme good vnto him, trafficking for him ſelfe in all our countries and dominions, without hindring or any way diſturbing of him, his ſhippe, his people, or marchandiſe, and without enforcing him to pay any other cuſtome or tole whatſoeuer, in any ſort, or to any perſons whoſoeuer they be, ſaue onely our ordinary duties, contayned in our cuſtome houſes, which when he hath paide, we will that he be franke, and free, as well for himſelfe, as for his people, marchandiſe, ſhippe, or ſhippes, and all other veſſels whatſoeuer, and in ſo doing that he may trafficke, bargaine, ſell, and buy, lade, and vnlade, in all our foreſaide Countries, landes, and dominions, in like ſorte, and with the like liberties and priuiledges, as the Frenchmen and Venetians vſe, and inioy, and more if it be poſſible, without the hinderance or impeachment of any man. And furthermore we charge and commaunde all Viceroyes, and Conſuls of the French nation, and of the Venetians, and all other Conſuls reſident in our Countreys, in what port or prouince ſoeuer they be, not to conſtraine, or cauſe to conſtraine by them, or the ſayde Miniſters and Officers whatſoeuer they be, the ſayde Anthony Ienkinſon, or his factor, or his ſeruants, or deputies, by his marchandiſe, to pay any kinde of conſullage, or other right whatſoeuer, or to intermeddle or hinder his affaires, and not to moleſt nor trouble him any manner of way, becauſe our will and pleaſure is, that he ſhall not pay in all our Countries, any other then our ordinarie cuſtome. And in caſe any man hinder, and impeach him aboue and beſides theſe our preſent letters, we charge you moſt expreſſly to defende, and aſſiſt him againſt the ſayde Conſuls, and if they will not obey our preſent commaundement, that you aduertiſe vs thereof, that we may take ſuch order for the ſame, that others may take example thereby. Moreouer, wee commaunde all our Captaines of our Gallies, and their Lieutenants, be they Foyſtes, or other veſſels, that when they ſhall finde the ſayde Ienkinſon, or his factor, his ſhippe or ſhippes, with his ſeruants, and marchandiſe, that they hurt him not, neyther in bodie nor goods, but that rather they aſſiſt, and defend him againſt all ſuch as ſeeke to doe him wrong, and that they ayde and helpe him with victuals, according to his want, and that whoſoeuer ſhall ſee theſe preſents, obey the ſame, as they will auoide the penaltie in doing the contrarie: Made in Aleppo of Syria, the yeere 961. of our holy Prophet Mahomet, & in the yeere of Ieſus, 1553: ſigned with the ſcepter and ſignet of the Grand Signior, with his owne proper hande.

A voyage made out of England into Guinea in Affricke, at the charges of certaine Merchants aduenturers of the Citie of London, in the yeere of our Lorde. 1553.

BEing deſired by certaine of my friends, to make ſome mention of this voyage, that ſome memorie thereof might remaine to our poſteritie, if either iniquitie of time, conſuming all things, or ignorance creeping in by barbaroufines and contempt of knowledge, ſhould hereafter bury in obliuion ſo worthy attempts, ſo much the greatlier to be eſteemed, as before neuer enterpriſed by Engliſh men, or at the leaſt ſo frequented, as at this preſent they are, and may be, to the great commoditie of our Merchants, if the ſame be not hindred by the ambition of ſuch, as for the conquering of 40. or 50. miles here and there, and erecting of certaine fortreſſes, thinke to be Lords of halfe the world, enuying that other ſhould enioy the commodities, which they themſelues can not wholy poſſeſſe. And although ſuch as haue bene at charges in the diſcouering & conquering of ſuch landes, ought by good reaſon to haue certaine priuiledges, preheminences, and tributes for the ſame, yet (to ſpeake vnder correction) it may ſeeme ſomewhat rigorous, and againſt good reaſon and conſcience, or rather againſt the charitie that ought to be among Chriſtian men, that ſuch as violently inuade the dominions of other, ſhould not permit other friendly to vſe the trade of merchandiſe, in places neuer, or ſeldome frequented of them, whereby their trade is not hindred in ſuch places, where they themſelues haue at their owne election appointed the martes of their trafficke. But foraſmuch as at this preſent, it is not my intent to accuſe or defend, approoue or improoue proue, I will cease to speake any further hereof, and proceede to the description of the first voyage, as briefly and faithfully as I was aduertised of the same, by the information of such credible persons, as made diligent inquisition to knowe the trueth hereof, as much as shall be requisite, omitting to speake of many particular thinges, not greatly necessarie to be knowen: which neuertheless, with also the exact course of the nauigation, shall be more fully declared in the second voyage. And if herein fauour or friendship shall perhaps cause some to thinke that some haue bene sharpely touched, let them lay apart fauour and friendship, and giue place to trueth, that honest men may receiue praise for well doing, and leude persons reproch, as the iust stipend of their euil deserts, whereby other may be deterred to doe the like, and vertuous men encouraged to proceede in honest attempts.

Affrica. The coast of Guinea.

But that these voyages may be more plainely vnderstoode of all men, I haue thought good for this purpose, before I intreate hereof, to make a briefe description of Affrica, being the great parte of the worlde, on whose West side beginneth the coast of Guinea at Cabo Verde, about twelue degrees in latitude, on this side the Equinoctiall line, and two degrees in longitude from the measuring line, so running from the North to the South, and by East in some places, within fiue, foure, and three degrees and a halfe vnto the Equinoctiall, and so forth in manner directly East and by North, for the space of thirtie six degrees, or there about, in longitude from the West to the East, as shall more plainely appeare in the description of the seconde voyage.

A briefe description of Affrike, gathered by Richard Eden.

Tunes. Bugia. Tripoli. Numidia.

IN Affrica the lesse are these kingdomes: the kingdome of Tunes and Constantina, which is at this day vnder Tunes, and also the region of Bugia, Tripoli, and Ezzah. This part of Affrike is very barren by reason of the great deserts, as the deserts of Numidia and Barcha. The principall portes of the kingdome of Tunes, are these: Goletta, Bizerta, Potofarnia, Boua, and Stora. The chiefe cities of Tunes, are Constantina, and Boua, with diuers other. Vnder this kingdome are deserts of Lybia. All the nations in this Affrica the lesse, are of the secte of Mahomet, and a rude and barbarous people, liuing scattered in villages. The best of this part of Affrike, is Barbaria, lying on the coast of the sea Mediterraneum.

Mauritania. The kingdoms of Fes and Marrocco

Mauritania (now called Barbaria) is diuided into two partes, as Mauritania Tingitana, and Cesarienſis. Mauritania Tingitana, is nowe called the kingdome of Fes, and the kingdome of Marrocco. The principall citie of Fes, is called Fessa: and the chiefe citie of Marrocco, is named Marrocco.

Tremisen. Oram. Massaquiber. Salla.

Mauritania Cesarienſis, is at this day called the kingdome of Tremisen, with also the citie called Tremisen or Telensin. This region is full of deserts, and reacheth to the sea Mediterraneum, to the citie of Oram, with the port of Massaquiber. The kingdome of Fes reacheth vnto the Ocean sea, from the West to the citie of Argilla: and the port of the sayde kingdome is called Salla.

Azamor.

The kingdome of Marrocco is also extended aboue the Ocean sea, vnto the citie of Azamor and Azafi, which are aboue the Ocean sea, towarde the West of the saide kingdome. In Mauritania Tingitana (that is to say, in the two kingdomes of Fes, and Marrocco) are in the sea, the Ilands of Canarie, called in olde time, the fortunate Ilandes. Toward the South of this region, is the kingdome of Guinea, with Senega, Ialofo, Gambra, and many other regions of the blacke people, called Aethiopians, or Negros, all which are watered with the riuer Negro, called in olde time Niger. In the said regions are no cities, but onely certaine lowe cottages made of boughes of trees, plastered with chauke, and couered with strawe. In these regions are also very great deserts.

Marrocco. Fes. Tremisen. Guinea.

The kingdome of Marrocco hath vnder it these seuen kingdomes: Hea, Sus, Guzula, the territorie of Marrocco, Duchala, Hazchora, and Telde. The kingdome of Fes hath as many: as Fes, Temesne, Azgar, Elabath, Errifi, Garet, and Elcauz. The kingdome of Tremisen hath these regions: Tremisen, Tenez, and Elgazaet, all which are Machometistes. But all the regions of Guinea are pure Gentiles, and idolatrous, without profession of any religion, or other knowledge of God, then by the lawe of nature.

Affrica

Africa the great, is one of the three partes of the world, knowen in olde time, and ſeuered from Aſia, on the Eaſt by the riuer Nilus, on the Weſt, from Europe by the pillers of Hercules. The hither part is now called Barbarie, and the people Moores. The inner part is called Libya and Ethiopia. Afrike the leſſe, is in this wiſe bounded: On the Weſt it hath Numidia: On the Eaſt Cyrenaica: On the North, the ſea called Mediterraneum. In this countrey was the noble citie of Carthage. Africa the great. Africke the leſſe. Carthage.

In the Eaſt ſide of Africke, beneath the red ſea, dwelleth the great and mightie Emperour and Chriſtian king Preſter John, well knowen to the Portingals in their voyages to Calicut. His dominions reach very farre on euery ſide: and hath vnder him many other kinges both Chriſtian and heathen that pay him tribute. This mightie prince is called Dauid the Emperour of Ethiopia. Some write, that the king of Portingall ſendeth him yeerely eight ſhippes laden with marchandize. His kingdome confineth with the red ſea, and reacheth farre into Afrike toward Egypt and Barbarie. Southward it confineth with the ſea toward the Cape de Bona Speranza: and on the other ſide with the ſea of ſand, called Mare de Sabione, a very dangerous ſea, lying betweene the great citie of Alcayer, or Cairo in Egypt, and the countrey of Ethiopia: In the which way are many vnhabitable deſarts, continuing for the ſpace of fiue dayes iourney. And they affirme, that if the ſaid Chriſtian Emperour were not hindered by thoſe deſarts (in the which is great lacke of victuals, and eſpecially of water) he would or now haue inuaded the kingdome of Egypt, and the citie of Alcayer. The chiefe citie of Ethiopia, where this great Emperour is reſident, is called Amacaiz, being a faire citie, whoſe inhabitants are of the colour of an Oliue. There are alſo many other cities, as the citie of Saua vpon the riuer of Nilus, where the Emperour is accuſtomed to remaine in the Sommer ſeaſon. There is likewiſe a great citie named Barbaregaf, and Aſcon, from whence it is ſaid that the Queene of Saba came to Hieruſalem to heare the wiſedome of Salomon. This citie is but little, yet very faire, and one of the chiefe cities in Ethiope. In the ſaid kingdome is a prouince called Manicongo, whoſe king is a Moore, and tributarie to the Emperour of Ethiope. In this prouince are manie exceeding high mountaines, vpon the which is ſaid to be the earthly Paradiſe: and ſome ſay that there are the trees of the Sunne and Moone, whereof the antiquitie maketh mention: yet that none can paſſe thither, by reaſon of great deſarts of a hundred dayes iourney. Also beyond theſe mountaines, is the cape of Bona Speranza. And to haue ſaid thus much of Afrike it may ſuffice. Cape de Bona Speranza. The ſea of ſand. Alcair. Amacaiz. The firſt voyage to Guinea, and Benin.

IN the yeere of our Lord 1553. the twelfth day of Auguſt, ſailed from Portſmouth two goodly ſhippes, the Primroſe and the Lion, with a pinneſſe called the Moone, being all well furniſhed aſwel with men of the luſtieſt ſort, to the number of ſeuen ſcore, as alſo with ordinance and victuals, requiſite to ſuch a voyage: hauing alſo two captaines, the one a ſtranger, called Antony Anus Pinteado, a Portingall, borne in a towne named the Port of Portingall, a wiſe, diſcreet, and ſober man, who for his cunning in ſailing, being aſwell an expert pilot as a politike captaine, was ſometime in great fauour with the king of Portingall, and to whom the coaſtes of Byaſſie and Guinea, were committed to be kept from the Frenchmen, to whom he was a terror on the ſea in thoſe parts, and was furthermore a gentleman of the king his maiſters houſe. But as fortune in maner neuer fauoreth but flattereth, neuer promiſeth but deceiueth, neuer raiſeth but caſteth downe againe: and as great wealth and fauor hath alwayes companions emulation and enuie, he was after many aduerſities and quarels made againſt him, inforced to come into England: where in this golden voyage he was euill matched with an vnequall companion, and vnlike match of moſt ſundrie qualities & conditions, with vertues few or none adorned. Thus departed theſe noble ſhippes vnder ſaile on their voyage: But firſt captaine Windam, putting foorth of his ſhip at Portſmouth a kinſeman of one of the head merchants, and ſhewing therein a muſter of the tragicall partes he had conceiued in his braine, and with ſuch ſmall beginnings nouriſhed ſo monſtrous a byrth, that more happie, yea and bleſſed was that young man being left behinde, then if he had beene taken with them, as ſome doe wiſh he had done the like by theirs. Thus ſailed they on their voyage, vntill they came to the Ilands of Madera, where they tooke in certaine wines for the ſtore of their ſhippes, and paid for them as they agreed of the price. At theſe Ilands they met with a great Galion of the king of Portingall, full of men and ordinance: yet ſuch as could not haue preuailed if it had attempted to withſtand or reſiſt our ſhippes, for the which cauſe it was ſet foorth, not onely to let and interrupt the ſe our ſhippes of their purpoſed voyage, but all other that ſhould attempt the like: yet chiefly to fruſtrate our voyage. For the king of Portingall was ſhutterly informed, that our ſhippes were armed to his caſtell of Mina in theſe parties, whereas nothing leſſe was ment. The Primroſe. The Lion. The Moone. Pinteado. Byaſſie. Guinea. The flattering of fortune. The Ilands of Madera. A galeon of the king of Portingall. The caſtell of Mina.

After that our ships departed from the Iland of Madera forward on their voyage, began this woorthy captaine Pinteados sorow, as a man tormented with the company of a terrible Hydra, who hitherto flattered with him, & made him a faire countenance and shew of loue. Then did he take vpon him to command all alone, setting nought both by captaine Pinteado, and the rest of the merchant factors: sometimes with opprobrious wordes, and sometimes with threatnings, most shamefully abusing them, taking from Pinteado the seruice of the boies and certaine mariners that were assigned him by the order and direction of the worshipful merchants, and leauing him as a common mariner, which is the greatest despite and griefe that can be to a Portingale or Spaniard, to bee diminished their honour, which they esteeme about all riches. Thus sailing forward on their voiage, they came to the Ilands of Canarie, continuing their course frō thence vntill they arriued at the Iland of S. Nicholas, where they victualed thēselues with fresh meate, of the flesh of wild goates, whereof is great plentie in that Iland, and in maner of nothing els. From hence following on their course and tarying here and there at the desart Ilands in the way, because they would not come to timely to the countrey of Guinea for the heate, and tarying somewhat too long (for what can be well ministred in a common wealth, where inequalitie with tyrannie will rule alone) they came at the length to the first land of the countrey of Guinea, where they fell with the great riuer of Sesto, where they might for their merchandizes haue laden their ships with the graines of that countrey, which is a very hote fruite, and much like vnto a fig as it groweth on the tree. For as the figs are full of small seedes, so is the said fruit full of graines, which are loose within the cod, hauing in the midst thereof a hole on euery side. This kind of spice is much vsed in cold countreis, & may there be sold for great aduantage, for exchange of other wares. But our men by the perswasion or rather inforcement of this tragicall Captaine, not regarding and setting light by that commoditie, in comparison of the fine gold they thirsted, sailed an hundred leagues further, vntil they came to the golden land: where not attempting to come neere the Castell pertaining to the king of Portingall, which was within the riuer of Mina, made sale of their ware onely on this side and beyond it, for the gold of that countrey, to the quantitie of an hundred and fiftie pounds waight, there being in case that they might haue dispatched all their ware for golde, if the vntame hayne of Wyndam had, or could haue giuen eare to the counsell and experience of Pinteado. For when that Wyndam not satisfied with the gold which he had (and more might haue had if he had taried about the Mina) commanding the said Pinteado (for so he tooke vpon him) to lead the ships to Benin, being vnder the Equinoctiall line, and an hundred and fiftie leagues beyond the Mina, where he looked to haue their ships laden with pepper: and being counselled of the said Pinteado, considering the late time of the yeere, for that time to goe no further, but to make sale of their wares such as they had for gold, whereby they might haue bene great gainers: Wyndam not assenting hereunto, fell into a sudden rage, reuiling the said Pinteado, calling him Iew, with other opprobrious wordes, saying, This whoreson Iew hath promised to bring vs to such places as are not, or as he cannot bring vs vnto: but if he doe not, I will cut off his eares, and naile them to the maste. Pinteado gaue the foresaid counsell to goe no further for the safegard of the men and their liues, which they should put in danger if they came too late, for the rossia which is their Winter, not for cold, but for smothering heate, with close and cloudie ayre, and stormie weather, of such putrifying qualitie, that it rotted the coates off their backs: or els for comming too soone for the scorching heate of the sunne, which caused them to linger in the way. But of force and not of will, brought he the shippes before the riuer of Benin, where riding at an Anker, sent their pinnesse vp into the riuer fiftie or threescore leagues, frō whence certaine of the merchants with Captaine Pinteado, Francisco a Portingale, Nicholas Lambert gentleman, and other merchants, were conducted to the court where the king remained, ten leagues from ꝑ riuer side: whither when they came, they were brought with a great company to the presence of the king, who being a black Moore (although not so black as ꝑ rest) sate in a great huge hall, long & wide, ꝑ wals made of earth, without windowes, ꝑ roofe of thin boords, opē in sundry places, like vnto louers to let in ꝑ aire.

And here to speake of the great reuerence they giue to their king, it is such, that if wee would giue as much to our Sauiour Christ, we should remoone from our heads many plagues which we daily deserue for our contempt and impietie.

So it is therefore, that when his noble men are in his presence, they neuer looke him in the face, but sit cowring, as we vpon our knees, so they vpon their buttockes, with their elbowes vpon their knees, and their hands before their faces, not looking vp vntill the king commaund them. And when they are comming toward the king, as far as they doe see him, doe they shew such reuerence, sitting on the ground with their faces couered as before. Likewise when they depart from him, they turne not their backs toward him, but goe creeping backward with like reuerence.

And now to speake somewhat of the communication that was betweene the King and our men, you ſhall firſt vnderſtand that he himſelfe could ſpeake the Portuguſe tongue, which he had learned of a childe. Therefore after he had commaunded our men to ſtand vp, and demaunded of them the cauſe of their comming into that countrey, they anſwered by Pinteado, that they were merchants, trauelling into thoſe parties for the commodities of his countrey, for exchange of wares which they had brought from their countreys, being ſuch as ſhould be no leſſe commodious for him and his people. The King then hauing of olde lying in a certaine ſtore houſe thirtie or fourtie kintals of pepper (euery kintall beyng an hundred weighte) willed them to looke vpon the ſame, and agayne to bring him a ſlight of ſuch merchandizes as they had brought with them. And thereupon ſent with the Captaine and the merchants, certaine of his men to conduct them to the waters ſide, with other to bring the ware from the pinneſſe to the court. Who when they were returned and the wares ſeene, the king grew to this ende with the merchants, to prouide in thirtie dayes the lading of all their ſhips with pepper. And in caſe their merchandizes would not extend to the value of ſo much pepper, hee promiſed to credite them to their next returne: and thereupon ſent the countrey round about to gather pepper, cauſing the ſame to be brought to the court: So that within the ſpace of thirtie dayes they had gathered foureſcore tunne of pepper.

The communication betweene the king of Benin and our men.

Pepper.

The kings gentleneſſe toward our men.

In the meane ſeaſon, our men partly hauing no rule of themſelues, but eating without meaſure of the fruites of the countrey, and drinking the wine of the Palme trees that droppeth in the night from the cut of the branches of the ſame, and in ſuch extreame heate running continually into the water, not vſed before to ſuch ſudden and vehement alterations (then the which nothing is more dangerous) were thereby brought into ſwellings and agues: inſomuch that the later time of the yeere comming on, cauſed them to die ſometimes three, and ſometimes foure or fiue in a day. Then Windam perceiuing the time of the thirtie dayes to be expired, and his men dying ſo faſt, ſent to the court in poſte to captaine Pinteado, and the reſt, to come away and to tary no longer. But Pinteado with the reſt, wrote backe to him againe, certifying him of the great quantitie of pepper they had already gathered, and looked daily for much more: deſiring him furthermore to remember the great prayſe and name they ſhould winne, if they came home proſperouſly, and what ſhame of the contrary. With which anſwere Windam not ſatisfied, and many of their men dying daily, willed and commanded them agayne either to come away forthwith, or els threatned to leaue them behind. Whē Pinteado heard this anſwer, thinking to perſwade him with reaſon, he tooke his way from the court toward the ſhips, being conducted thither with men by the kings commandement.

The diſorder and death of our men.

In the meane ſeaſon Windam all raging, brake vp Pinteados Cabin, brake open his cheſtes, ſpoiled ſuch prouiſion of cold ſtilled waters and ſuckets as he had prouided for his health, and left him nothing, neither of his inſtrumentes to ſaile by, nor yet of his apparell: and in the meane tyme falling ſicke himſelfe, died alſo. Whoſe death Pinteado comming aboord, lamented as much as if he had beene the deareſt friend he had in the world. But certaine of the mariners and other officers did ſpet in his face, ſome calling him Jewe, ſaying that he had brought them thither to kill them: and ſome drawing their ſwordes at him, making a ſhew to ſlay him. Then he perceiuing that they would needes away, deſired them to tary that he might fetch the reſt of the merchants that were left at the court, but they would not graunt his requeſt. Then deſired he them to giue him the ſhip boate, with as much of an olde ſaile as might ſerue for the ſame, promiſing them therewith to bring Nicholas Lambert and the reſt into England, but all was in vaine. Then wrote he a letter to the court to the merchants, informing them of all the matter, and promiſing them if God would lend him life, to returne with all haſt to fetch them. And thus was Pinteado kept a boordſhip againſt his will, thruſt among the boyes of the ſhip, not vſed like a man, nor yet like an honeſt boy, but glad to find fauour at the cookes hand. Then departed they, leauing one of their ſhips behind them, which they ſunke for lacke of men to cary her. After this, within ſixe or ſeuen dayes ſayling, died alſo Pinteado for very penſiuneſſe and thought, that ſtroke him to the heart: A man worthy to ſerue any Prince, and moſt vilely vſed. And of ſeuen ſcore men came home to Plimmouth ſcarcely fortie, and of them many died. And that no man ſhould ſuſpect theſe wordes which I haue ſaid in commendation of Pinteado, to be ſpoken vpon fauour otherwiſe then trueth, I haue thought good to adde hereunto the copie of the letters which the king of Portingale and the infant his brother wrote vnto him to reconcile him, at ſuch time as vpon the king his maiſters diſpleaſure (and not for any other crime or offence, as may appeare by the ſayd letters) he was onely for pouertie induced to come into England, where he firſt perſwaded our merchants to attempte the ſayd voiages to Guinea. But as the king of Portingall too late repented him that he had ſo puniſhed Pinteado, vpon malicious informations of ſuch as enuied the mans good fortune: euen ſo may it hereby appeare, that in ſome caſes, euen Lions themſelues, may either be hindered by the contempt, or aided by the helpe of the poore mill, according vnto the fable of Eſope.

The death of Pinteado.

Pinteado firſt perſwaded our men to the voyage of Guinea.

The copie of Anthonie Anes Pinteado his letters patents, wherby the king of Portingall made him knight of his house, after all his troubles and imprisonment, which, by wrong information made to the king, he had susteined of long time, being at the last deliuered, his cause knowen and manifested to the king by a gray frier the kings Confessor.

I The king do giue you to vnderstand lord Frances Desseosa, one of my counsell, and secretary of my house, that in consideration of the good seruice which Antonie Anes Pinteado, the sonne of John Anes, dwelling in the towne called the Port, hath done vnto me, my will and pleasure is, to make him knight of my house, allowing to him in pension seuen hundred reis monethly, and euery day one alcayre of barly, as long as he kepeth a horse, and to be paid according to the ordinance of my house, prouiding alwayes that he shall receiue but one marriage gift: And this also in such condition, that the time which is excepted in our ordinance, forbidding such men to marry for getting such children as might succeed them in this allowance, which is sixe yeeres after the making of this patent, shalbe first expired before he do marry. I therefore command you to cause this to be entred in the booke called the Matricula of our houshold, vnder the title of knights. And when it is so entred, let the clarke of the Matricula, for the certeintie thereof, write on the backeside of this Aluala, or patent, the number of the leafe wherein this our grant is entred. Which done, let him returne this writing vnto the said Anthonie Anes Pinteado for his warrant.

Seuen hundred reis are ten shillings. Alcayre is halfe a bushell.

I Diego Henriques haue written this in Almarin the twentie and two day of September, in the yeere of our Lord 1551. And this benevolence the king gaue vnto Anthonie Anes Pinteado the twentie and fiue day of July this present yeere.

The secretaries declaration written vnder the kings grant.

YOur Maiestie hath vouchsafed, in respect and consideration of the good seruice of Anthonie Anes Pinteado, dwelling in the port, and sonne of Iohn Anes, to make him knight of your house, with ordinarie allowance, of seuen hundred reis pension by the moneth, and one alcayre of barly by the day, as long as he keepeth a horse: and to be paid according to the ordinance of your house, with condition that he shall haue but one marriage gift: and that not within the space of sixe yeeres after the making of these letters patents. The secretaries note. Entred in the booke of the Matricula. Fol. 683.

The copie of the letter of Don Lewes the infant, and brother to the king of Portingall, sent into England to Anthonie Anes Pinteado.

ANthonie Anes Pinteado, I the infant brother to the king, haue me heartily commended vnto you. Peter Gonsalues is gone to seeke you, desiring to bring you home againe into your countrey. And for that purpose, hath with him a safe conduct for you, granted by the king, that thereby you may freely and without all feare come home. And although the weather be foule and stormie, yet faile not to come: for in the time that his Maiestie hath giuen you, you may do many thinges to your commendation and gratifying the king, whereof I would be right glad: and to bring the same to passe, will do all that lieth in me for your profite. But forasmuch as Peter Gonsalues will make further declaration hereof vnto you, I say no more at this present. Written in Lisbone the eight day of December. Ann. 1552.

The infant Don Lewes.

ALl these foresaid writings I saw vnder seale, in the house of my friend Nicholas Liell, with whom Pinteado left them, at his vnfortunate departing to Guinea. But notwithstanding all these friendly letters and faire promises, Pinteado durst not attempte to goe home, neither to keepe company with the Portingals his countrey men, without the presence of other: forasmuch as he had secret admonitions that they entended to slay him, if time and place might haue serued their wicked intent.

The

The ſecond voyage to Guinea, ſet out by Sir George Barne, Sir Iohn Yorke, Thomas Locke, and Edward Caſtelyn, in the yeere 1554.

AS in the firſt voyage I haue declared rather the order of the hyſtorie, then the courſe of the nauigation, whereof at that time I could haue no perfect information: ſo in the diſcription of this ſecond voyage, my cheefe intent hath beene to ſhew the courſe of the ſame, according to the obſeruation and ordinary cuſtome of the Mariners, and as I receiued it at the hands of an expert Pilot, being one of the chiefe in this voyage, who alſo with his owne hands wrote a briefe declaration of the ſame, as he found and tried all things, not by coniecture, but by the art of ſailing, and inſtruments pertaining to the mariners facultie. Not therefore aſſuming to my ſelfe the commendations due vnto other, neither ſo bolde as in any part to change or otherwiſe diſpoſe the order of this voyage, ſo well obſerued by art and experience, I haue thought good to ſet forth the ſame, in ſuch ſort and phraſe of ſpeech as is commonly vſed among them, and as I receiued it of the ſaid Pilot, as I haue ſaid. Take it therefore as followeth.

In the yeere of our Lord 1554. the eleuenth day of October, we departed the riuer of Thames with three goodly ſhippes, the one called the Trinitie, a ſhip of the burden of ſeuenſcore tunne, the other called the Bartholomew, a ſhippe of the burden of ninetie, the third was the Iohn Euangeliſt, a ſhip of ſeuen ſcore tunne. With the ſaid ſhippes and two pinneſſes (whereof the one was drowned on the coaſt of England) we went forward on our voyage, and ſtaid at Douer fourteene dayes. We ſtaid alſo at Rie three or foure dayes. Moreouer laſt of all we touched at Dartmouth. Robert Gainſh was maſter of the Iohn Euangeliſt.

The firſt day of Nouember at nine of the clocke at night, departing from the coaſt of England, we ſet of the Start, bearing Southweſt all that night in the ſea, and the next day all day, and the next night after, vntil the third day of the ſaid moneth about noone, making our way good, did runne three-ſcore leagues.

Item from twelue of the clocke the third day, till twelue of the clocke the fourth day of the ſayd moneth, making our way good Southeaſt, did runne euery three houres two leagues, which amounteth to ſixteene leagues the whole.

Item frō twelue of the clocke the fourth day, to twelue of the clocke the fift day, running Southweſt in the ſea, did runne twelue leagues.

Item from twelue of the clocke the fift day, vntill twelue of the clocke the ſixt day, running Southeaſt, did runne eighteene leagues.

And ſo from twelue of the clocke the ſixt day, vntill twelue of the clocke the ſeuenth day, running Southſouthweſt, did run euery houre two leagues, which amount to eighteene leagues the whole.

Item from twelue of the clocke the ſeuenth day, till three of the clocke the eight day, Southſouthweſt running in the ſea, did runne thirtie leagues.

Item from three of the clocke the eight day, vntill three of the clocke the ninth day, running Southſouthweſt, did runne thirtie leagues.

Item frō three of the clocke the ninth day, till three of the clocke the tenth day, in running Southſoutheaſt in the ſea, did run the ſumme of foure and twentie leagues.

Alſo from three of the clocke the tenth day, vntill twelue of the clocke the eleuenth day, did runne Southſouthweſt the ſumme of twelue leagues, & from twelue of the clocke, till ſixe of the ſaid day, did runne ſixe leagues.

Running South and by weſt in the ſea, from ſixe of the clocke the eleuenth, till ſixe of the clocke the twelft day, did runne ſixe and thirtie leagues.

From ſixe of the clocke at after noone the twelft day, till ſixe of the clocke the thirteenth day at after noone, did runne thirteene leagues.

Item from ſixe of the clocke the thirteenth day, til ſixe of the clocke the fourteenth day after noone, we were becalmed, that we could lie Southweſt with a ſaile. And the fifteenth day in the morning, the winde came to the Eaſt and Eaſtnortheaſt.

The ſeuenteenth day in the morning, we had ſight of the ile of Madera, which doth riſe to him that commeth in the Northnortheaſt part vpright land in the weſt part of it, and very high: and to the Southſoutheaſt a low long land, and a long point, with a ſaddle therow the middeſt of it, ſtanding in two and thirtie degrees: and in the Weſt part, many ſpringes of water running downe from the mountaine, and many white fieldes like vnto corne fieldes, and ſome white houſes to the Southeaſt part of it: and the toppe of the mountaine ſheweth very ragged, if you may ſee it, and in the Northeaſt part there is a bight or bay as though it were a harborow: Alſo in the ſaid part, The ile of Madera.

there is a rocke a litle distance from the shore, and ouer the said bight, you shall see a great gap in the mountaine.

The ile of Palmes. Teneriffa. The Canaries.

The ninteenth day at twelue of the clocke, we had sight of the ile of Palmes and Teneriffa and the Canaries. The ile of Palme riseth round, and lieth Southeast and Northwest, and the North west part is lowest. In the South, is a round hill ouer the head land, and an other round hill aboue that in the land. There are betweene the Southeast part of the ile of Madera and the Northwest part of the ile of Palme seuen and fiftie leagues. This ile of Palme lieth in nine and twentie degrees. And our course from Madera to the ile of Palme was South, and South and by West, & that we had sight of Teneriffa and of the Canaries. The Southeast part of the ile of Palme, & the Northnortheast of Teneriffa, lieth Southeast & Northwest, & betweene them are twentie leagues.

Grancanaria. Fortenentura. The iland of Gomera.

Teneriffa and the great Canarie, called Grancanaria, and the West part of Forteuentura, standeth in seuen and twentie degrees and a halfe. Gomera, is a faire iland but very ragged, & lieth Westsouthwest off Teneriffa. And whosoeuer will come betweene them two ilands, must come South and by East, and in the South part of Gomera is a towne and a good rode in the said part of the iland: and it standeth in twentie and seuen degrees and three terces. Teneriffa is an high land, and a great high pike, like a suger loafe: and vpon the said pike is snow throughout all the whole yeere. And by reason of that picke it may be knowen aboue all other ilands, and there we were becalmed the twentith day of November, from fiue of the clocke in the morning, vntill foure of the clocke after noone.

Teneriffa. Snowe.

The two and twentith day of November, vnder the Tropike of Cancer, the Sunne goeth downe West and by South. Vpon the coast of Barbarie fiue and twentie leagues by North Cape blanke at three leagues off the maine, there are fifteene fadomes, and good shelly ground, and sand among, and no streames, and two small ilands standing in the two and twentie degrees and a terce.

The coast of Barbarie. Cape blanke.

From Gomera to Cape de las Barbas is an hundred leagues, and our course was South and by East. The said Cape standeth in two and twentie and a halfe: and all that coast is sand, fifteene or seuentene fadome deepe. Seuen or eight leagues off from the riuer de Oro to Cape de las Barbas, there vse many Spanyardes and Portingals to trade for fishing, during the moneth of November: and all that coast is very low lands. Also we went from Cape de las Barbas Southsouthwest, and Southwest and by South, till we brought our selues in twentie degrees and a halfe, reckoning our selues seuen leagues off: and that was the least sholes of Cape Blanke.

The riuer de Oro.

Then we went South, vntill we brought our selues in thirteene degrees, reckoning our selues twentie and fiue leagues off. And in fifteene degrees, we did reare the Crossiers, and we might haue reared them sooner if we had looked for them. They are not right a crosse in the moneth of November, by reason that the nights are short there. Neuertheless we had the sight of them the nine & twentith day of the said moneth at night.

The crossiers or crosse stars.

The first of December being in thirteene degrees, we set our course South and by East, vntill the fourth day of December at twelue of the clocke the same day. Then we were in nine degrees & a terce, reckoning our selues thirty leages of the sholes of the riuer called Rio Grande, being Westsouthwest of them: the which sholes be thirtie leagues long.

Rio Grande.

The fourth of December, we began to set our course Southeast, we being in fiue degrees and a halfe.

The ninth day of December we set our course Eastsoutheast: the foureteenth day of the said moneth, we set our course East, we being in fiue degrees and a halfe, reckoning our selues thirtie and fiue leagues from the coast of Guinea.

The nineteenth of the said moneth, we set our course East and by North, reckoning our selues seuenteene leagues distant from Cape Mensurado, the said Cape being Eastnortheast of vs, and the riuer of Sesto being East.

Cape Mensurado. The riuer of Sesto.

The one and twentith day of the said moneth, we fell with Cape Mensurado to the Southeast, about two leagues off. This Cape may be easily knowen, by reason the rising of it is like a Bey pose head. Also toward the Southeast there are three trees, whereof the Easternmost tree is the highest, and the middlemost is like a hie stacke, & the Southernmost like vnto a gibet: and vpon the maine, are foure or fiue high hilles rising one after another like round hommockes or billocks. And the Southeast of the three trees, hyandiern wise: and all the coast along is white sand. The said Cape standeth within a litle in fiue degrees.

The two and twentith of December, we came to the riuer of Sesto, and remained there vntill the nine and twentith day of the said moneth. Here we thought it best to send before vs the pinnesse to the riuer Dulce, called Rio Dulce, that they might haue the beginning of the market before the comming of the Iohn Euangeliſt.

to

At the riuer of Seſto, we had a tunne of graines. This riuer ſtandeth in ſixe degrees, lacking a terce. From the riuer of Seſto to Rio Dulce, are fiue and twentie leagues. Rio Dulce ſtandeth in fiue degrees and a halfe. The riuer of Seſto is eaſie to be knowen, by reaſon there is a ledge of rockes on the Southeaſt part of the Rode. And at the entring into the hauen, are fiue or ſixe trees that beare no leaues. This is a good harborow, but very narow at the entrance into the riuer. There is alſo a rocke in the hauens mouth right as you enter. And all that coaſt betweene Cape de Monte, and cape de las Palmas, lieth Southeaſt and by Eaſt, Northweſt & by Weſt, being three leagues off the ſhore. And you ſhall haue in ſome places rocks two leagus off: and that betweene the riuer of Seſto and cape de las Palmas. The riuer of Seſto. Rio Dulce. Cape de monte. Cape de las Palmas.

Betweene the riuer of Seſto and the riuer Dulce are fiue and twenty leagues: and the high land that is betweene them both, is called Cakeado, being eight leagues from the riuer of Seſto. And to the Southeaſtward of it, is a place called Shawgro, and an other called Shyawe or Shauo, where you may get freſh water. Off this Shyawe lieth a ledge of rocks: and to the Southeaſtward, lieth a hedland called Croke. Betweene Cakeado and Croke, are nine or ten leagues. To the Southeaſtward off, is a harborow called ſaint Vincent: Right ouer againſt ſaint Vincent, is a rocke vnder the water, two leagues and a halfe off the ſhore. To the Southeaſtward of that rocke you ſhall ſee an iſland about three or foure leagues off: this iſland is not paſt a league off the ſhore. To the Eaſtſoutheaſt of the iſland, is a rocke that lieth aboue the water, and by that rocke goeth in the riuer Dulce, which you ſhall know by the ſaid riuer and rocke. The Northweſt ſide of the hauen, is flat ſand, and the Southeaſt ſide therof, is like an iſland, and a bare plat without any trees, and ſo is it not in any other place. The land of Cakeado. Shauo. Croke. Saint Vincents harborow. The riuer Dulce.

In the Rode, you ſhall ride in thirteene or foureteene fadomes, good owes & ſand, being the marks of the Rode to bring the iſland and the Northeaſt land together, and here we ankered the laſt of December.

The third day of Januarie, we came from the riuer Dulce.

Note that cape de las Palmas, is a faire high land, but ſome low places thereof by the water ſide looke like red cliffes with white ſtrakes like lie wayes, a cable length a piece, and this is to the Eaſt part of the cape. This cape is the Southermoſt land in all the coaſt of Guinea, & ſtandeth in foure degrees and a terce. Cape de las Palmas. The coaſt of Guinea.

The coaſt from Cape de las Palmas to Cape Trepoyntes, or Tres Puntas, is faire and cleare without rocke or other danger.

Twentie and fiue leagues from Cape de las Palmas, the land is higher then in any place, vntill we come to Cape Trepoyntes. And about ten leagues before you come to Cape Trepoyntes, the land riſeth ſtill higher and higher, vntill you come to Cape Trepoyntes. Alſo before you come to the ſaid Cape, after other fiue leagues to the Northweſt part of it, there is certaine broken ground, with two great rockes, and within them in the bight of a bay, is a caſtell called Arra, pertaining to the king of Portingall. You ſhall know it by the ſaid rockes that lie off it: for there is none ſuch from Cape de las Palmas to Cape Trepoyntes. This coaſt lieth Eaſt and by North, Weſt and by South. From Cape de las Palmas to the ſaid caſtell, is foureſcore and fifteene leagues. And the coaſt lieth from the ſaid caſtell to the Weſtermoſt point of Trepoyntes, Southeaſt and by South, Northweſt and by North. Alſo the Weſtermoſt point of Trepoyntes, is a low land, lying halfe a mile out in the ſea: and vpon the innermoſt necke to the land ward, is a tuft of trees, and there we arriued the eleuenth day of January. The caſtell of Arra.

The twelfth day of January, we came to a towne called Samma or Samua, being eight leagues from Cape Trepoyntes toward Eaſtnortheaſt. Betweene Cape Trepoyntes and the towne of Samua, is a great ledge of rockes a great way out in the ſea. We continued foure dayes at that towne, and the captaine thereof would needes haue a pledge a ſhore. But when they receiued the pledge, they kept him ſtill and would trafficke no more, but ſhot off their ordinance at vs. They haue two or three pieces of ordinance and no more. The towne of Samma. The pledge was ſir Iohn Yorke his nephew.

The ſixteenth day of the ſaid moneth, we made reckoning to come to a place called Cape Corea, where captaine Don Iohn dwelleth, whoſe men entertained vs friendly. This Cape Corea is foure leagues Eaſtward of the caſtell of Mina, otherwiſe called La mina, or Caſtello de mina, where we arriued the eighteenth day of the moneth. Heere we made ſale of all our cloth, ſaue two or three packes. Cape Corea. The caſtell of Mina pertaining to the king of Portingall.

The ſixe and twentith day of the ſame moneth we weighed anker, and departed from thence to the Trinitie, which was ſeuen leagues Eaſtward of vs, where ſhe ſolde her wares. Then they of the Perecow. Perecow grande. Monte Rodondo.

Trinitie

Trinitie willed vs to go Eastward of that eight or nine leagues, to sell part of their wares, in a place called Perecow, and another place named Perecow Grande, being the Easternmost place of both these, which you shal know by a great round hil neere vnto it, named Monte Rodondo, lying West-ward from it, and by the water side are many high palme trees. From hence did we set forth homeward the thirteenth day of February, & plied vp alongst till we came within seuen or eight leagues to Cape Trepointes. About eight of the clocke the fifteenth day at afternoone, we did cast about to seaward: and beware of the currants, for they will deceiue you sore. Whosoeuer shall come from the coast of Mina homeward, let him be sure to make his way good West, vntill he reckon himselfe as farre as Cape de las Palmas, where the currant setteth alwayes to the Eastward. And within twentie leagues Eastwarde of Cape de las Palmas, is a riuer called De los Potos, where you may haue fresh water and balast enough, and plentie of iuory or Elephants teeth. This riuer standeth in foure degrees, and almost two terces. And when you reckon your selfe as farre shot as Cape de las Palmas, being in a degree, or a degree and a halfe, you may go West, and West by North, vntill you come in three degrees: and then you may go Westnorthwest, and Northwest and by West, vntill you come in fiue degrees, and then Northwest. And in sixe degrees, we met Northerly windes, and great ruffling of tides. And as we could iudge, the currants went to the Northnorthwest. Furthermore betweene Cape de Monte, and Cape verde, go great currants which deceiue many men.

The currants. From Mina homeward. Rio de los Potos. Iuory. Cabo de las Palmas. Currants.

The two and twentith day of April, we were in eight degrees and two terces: and so we ranne to the Northwest, hauing the winde at Northeast and Eastnortheast, and sometimes at East, vntil we were at eighteene degrees and a terce, which was on May day. And so from eighteene and two terces, we had the winde at East and Eastnortheast, and sometimes at Eastsoutheast: and then we reckoned the islands of Cape verde Eastsoutheast of vs, we iudging our selues to be eight and fortie leagues off. And in twentie and one and twentie degrees, we had the winde more Easterly to the Southward then before. And so we ran to the Northwest and Northnorthwest, and sometimes North and by West and North, vntill we came into one and thirtie degrees, where we reckoned our selues a hundred and fourescore leagues Southwest, and by South of the island de Flore, or de los Flores, and there we met with the winde at Southsoutheast, and set our course Northeast.

The Ile de Flores.

In three and twentie degrees, we had the winde at the South and Southwest, and then we set our course North northeast, and so we ran to fortie degrees, and then we set our course Northeast, the wind being at the Southwest, and hauing the Ile de Flores East of vs, and xvii. leagues of.

In the one and fortie degrees, we met with the wind at Northeast, and so we ran Northwestward, then we met with the winde West northwest, & at the West within sixe leagues, running toward the Northwest, and then we cast about, and lay Northeast, vntill we came in two and fortie degrees, where we set our course East northeast, iudging the Ile of Coruo South and by West of vs, and sixe and thirtie leagues distant from vs.

The Ile of Coruo.

A remembrance, that the one and twentie day of May we communed with Iohn Rafe, and he thought it best to goe Northeast, and iudged himselfe fiue and twentie leagues Eastward to the Ile de Flores, and in nine and thirtie degrees and a halfe.

Where they lost the sight of the North starre.

Note, that on the fourth day of September, vnder nine degrees, we lost the sight of the North starre.

How the compasse varieth.

Note also, that in fiue and fortie degrees, the compasse is varied eight degrees to the West.

Item, in fortie degrees, the compasse did varie fifteene degrees in the whole.

Item, in thirtie degrees and a halfe, the compasse is varied fiue degrees to the West.

Be it also in memory, that two or three dayes before we came to Cape Troispoints, the pinnesse went alongst the shore, thinking to sell some of our wares, and so we came to anker three or foure leagues West and by South of the Cape Troispoints, where we left the Trinitie.

Then our pinnesse came aboord with all our men, the pinnesse also tooke in more wares. They told me moreouer that they would goe to a place where the Primrole was, and had receiued much gold at the first voiage to these parties, and told me furthermore that it was a good place: but I fearing a brigantine that was then vpon the coast, did wey and folow them, and left the Trinitie about foure leagues off from vs, and there we rode against that towne foure dayes: so that Martine by his owne desire, and assent of some of the Commissioners that were in the pinnesse, went a shore to the towne, and there Iohn Berin went to traffique from vs, being three miles off trafiquing at an other towne. The towne is called Samma or Samua, for Samma and Sammatera, are the names of the two first townes, where we did traffique for gold, to the Northeast of Cape Troispoints.

The Primrole.

The townes of Samma. Gold.

Hitherto continueth the course of the voiage, as it was described by the said Pilot. Now hereafter

I will

I will ſpeake ſomewhat of the countrey & people, and of ſuch things as are brought from thence.

They brought from thence at the laſt voyage, foure hundred pound weight and odde of golde, of two and twentie carrats and one graine in fineneſſe: alſo ſixe & thirtie butts of graines, and about two hundred and fiftie Elephants teeth of all quantities. Of theſe I ſaw & meaſured ſome of nine ſpannes in length, as they were crooked. Some of them were as bigge as a mans thigh aboue the knee, and weyed about foureſcore and ten pound weight a piece. They ſay that ſome one hath beene ſeene of an hundred and fiue and twentie pound weight. Other there were which they call the teeth of calues, of one or two or three yeeres, whereof ſome were a foot and a halfe, foure two foot, & ſome three, or more, according to the age of the beaſt. Theſe great teeth or tuſks, grow in the vpper iaw downewards, and not in the nether iaw vpward, wherein the Painters and Arras workers are deceiued. At this laſt voyage was brought from Guinea the head of an Elephant, of ſuch huge bignes, that onely the bones or crane in the roof, beſide the nether iaw and great tuſks, weighed about two hundred weight, and was as much as I could well lift from the ground: inſomuch that conſidering alſo herewith the weight of two ſuch great teeth, the nether iaw with the leſſe teeth, the tongue, the great hanging eares, the bigge and long ſnout or troonke, with all the fleſh, braines, and ſkinne, with all other parts belonging to the whole head, in my iudgement it could weigh little leſſe then fiue hundred weight. This head diuers haue ſeene in the houſe of the worſhipfull merchant ſir Andrew Iudde, where alſo I ſaw it, and beheld it, not onely with my bodily eyes, but much more with the eyes of my minde and ſpirit, conſidered by the worke, the cunning and wiſedome of the workemaiſter: without which conſideration, the ſight of ſuch ſtrange and woonderfull things may rather ſeeme curioſities then profitable contemplations.

Sir Andrew Iudde.
The contemplations of Gods works.

The Elephant (which ſome call an Oliphant) is the biggeſt of all foure footed beaſts, his foreleggs are longer then his hinder. He hath ancles in the lower part of his hinder leggs, and fiue toes on his feet vndiuided. His ſnout or troonke is ſo long, & in ſuch ſorte, that it is to him in ſtead of a hand: for he neither eateth nor drinketh but by bringing his troonke to his mouth, therewith he helpeth vp his maiſter or keeper, therewith he ouerthroweth trees. Beſide his two great tuſks, he hath on euery ſide of his mouth foure teeth, wherewith he eateth and grindeth his meat: either of theſe teeth, are almoſt a ſpanne in length, as they grow along in the iaw, and are about two inches in height, and almoſt as much in thickneſſe. The tuſkes of the male are greater then of the female: his tongue is very litle, and ſo farre in his mouth, that it cannot be ſeene: of all beaſts they are moſt gentle and tractable, for by many ſundry wayes they are taught, and doe vnderſtand: inſomuch that they learne to doe due honor to a king, and are of quicke ſenſe and ſharpeneſſe of witte. When the male hath once ſeaſoned the female, he neuer after toucheth her. The male Elephant liueth two hundred yeeres, or at the leaſt one hundred and twentie: the female almoſt as long, but the floure of their age, is but threeſcore yeeres, as ſome write. They cannot ſuffer winter or colde: they loue riuers, and will often goe into them vp to the ſnout, wherewith they blow and ſnuffe, and play in the water: but ſwimme they cannot, for the weight of their bodies. Plinie and Soline write, that they vſe none aduouterie. If they happen to meet with a man in wildernes being out of the way, gently they will goe before him, and bring him into the plaine way. Ioined in battell they haue no ſmall reſpect vnto them that be wounded: for they bring them that are hurt or weary into the middle of the army to be defended: they are made tame by drinking the iuice of barley. They haue continuall warre againſt Dragons, which deſire their blood, becauſe it is very colde: and therefore the Dragon lying a wait as the Elephant paſſeth by, windeth his taile (being of exceeding length) about the hinder leggs of the Elephant, & ſo ſtaying him, thruſteth his head into his troonke and ſtoppeth his breath, or elſe biteth him in the eare, whereunto he cannot reach with his troonke, and when the Elephant waxeth faint, he falleth to wreſt on the ſerpent, being now ſo full of blood, and with the poiſe of his body breaketh him: ſo that his owne blood with the blood of the Elephant, runneth out of him mingled together, which being colde, is congealed into that ſubſtance which the Apothecaries call Sanguis Draconis, (that is) Dragons blood, otherwiſe called Cinnabaris, although there be an other kinde of Cinnabaris, commonly called cinoper or vermilion, which the painters vſe in certeine colours.

They are alſo of three kindes, as of the marſhes, the plaines, and the mountaines, no leſſe differing in conditions. Philoſtratus writeth, that as much as the Elephant of Libya in bigneſſe paſſeth the horſe of Nyſea, ſo much doe the Elephants of India exceede them of Libya: for of the Elephants of India, ſome haue beene ſeene of the height of nine cubites: the other doe ſo greatly feare theſe, that they dare not abide the ſight of them. Of the Indian Elephants, onely the males haue tuſkes, but of them of Ethiopia and Libya, both kindes are tuſked: they are of diuers heights, as of twelue, thirteene, and fourteene cubants, euery cubiant being a meaſure of nine inches. Some

wute that an Elephant is bigger then three wilde Oxen or Buffes. They of India are blacke, or of the colour of a mouse, but they of Ethiope or Guinea, are browne: the hide or skinne of them all is very hard, and without haire or bristles: their eares are two cubyants broad, and their eyes very little. Our men saw one drinking at a riuer in Guinea, as they sailed into the land.

Of other properties and conditions of the Elephant, as of their maruellous docilitie, of their fight and vse in the warres, of their generation and chastitie, when they were first seene in the theaters and triumphes of the Romans, how they are taken and tamed, and when they cast their tusks, with the vse of the same in medicine, who so desireth to know, let him reade Plinie, in the eight booke of his naturall historie. He also writeth in his twelft booke, that in olde time they made many goodly workes of iuory or Elephants teeth: as tables, trellis, postes of houses, valles, lattesses for windowes, images of their gods, and diuers other things of iuory, both coloured and vncoloured, and intermixt with sundry kindes of precious woods, as at this day are made certaine chaires, lutes, and virginalles. They had such plentie thereof in olde time, that (as far as I remember) Iosephus writeth, that one of the gates of Hierusalem was called Porta Eburnea, (that is) the Iuory gate. The whitenesse thereof was so much esteemed, that it was thought to represent the naturall fairenesse of mans skinne: insomuch that such as went about to set forth (or rather corrupt) naturall beautie with colours and painting, were reproued by this prouerbe, Ebur atramento candefacere, that is, To make iuory white with inke. The poets also, describing the faire necks of beautifull virgins, call them Eburnea colla, that is, Iuory necks. And to haue said thus much of Elephants and iuory, it may suffice.

Workes of iuory.

The people of Africa.

Now therefore I will speake somewhat of the people and their maners, and maner of liuing, with an other briefe description of Africa also. It is to be vnderstood, that the people which now inhabite the regions of the coast of Guinea, and the mid parts of Africa, as Libya the inner, and Nubia, with diuers other great and large regions about the same, were in olde time called Ethiopes & Nigritæ, which we now call Moores, Moyens, or Negroes, a people of beastly liuing, without a God, law, religion, or common wealth, and so scorched and vexed with the heat of the sunne, that in many places they curse it when it riseth. Of the regions and people about the inner Libya (called Libya Interior) Gemma Phrysius writeth thus.

Libya Interior.

Libya Interior, is very large and desolate, in the which are many horrible wildernesses & mountaines, replenished with diuers kindes of wilde and monstrous beasts and serpents. First from Mauritania or Barbarie toward the South is Getulia, a rough and saluage region, whose inhabitants are wilde and wandering people. After these follow the people called Melanogetuli and Pharusij, which wander in the wildernesse, carrying with them great gourdes of water. The Ethiopians, called Nigritæ, occupie a great part of Africa, and are extended to the West Ocean. Southward also they reach to the riuer Nigritis, whose nature agreeth with the riuer of Nilus, so much as it is increased and diminished at the same time, and bringeth forth the like beastes as the Crocodile. By reason whereof, I thinke this to be the same riuer which the Portingals call Senega: For this riuer is also of the same nature. It is furthermore maruellous and very strange that is said of this riuer: And this is, that on the one side thereof, the inhabitants are of high stature and blacke, and on the other side, of browne or tawnie colour, and low stature, which thing also our men confirme to be true.

A strange thing.

There are also other people of Libya called Garamantes, whose women are common: for they contract no matrimonie, neither haue respect to chastitie. After these are the nations of the people called Pyrei, Sathiodaphnitæ, Odrangi, Mimaces, Lynxamatæ, Dolopes, Aganginæ, Leuci Ethiopes, Xilicei Ethiopes, Calcei Ethiopes, and Nubi. These haue the same situation in Ptolomie that they now giue to the kingdome of Nubia. Heere are certaine Christians vnder the dominion of the great Emperour of Ethiopia, called Prester John. From these toward the West, is a great nation of people called Aphricerones, whose region (as farre as may be gathered by coniecture) is the same that is now called Regnum Orguene, confining vpon the East parts of Guinea. From hence Westward, and somewhat toward the North, are the kingdomes of Gambra and Bodomel, not farre from the riuer of Senega. And from hence toward the inland regions, and along by the sea coast, are the regions of Ginoia or Guinea, which we commonly call Ginnee. On the West side of these regions toward the Ocean, is the cape or point called Cabo verde, or Caput viride (that is) The greene cape, to the which the Portingals first direct their course when they sail to America, or the land of Brasile. Then departing from hence, they turne to the right hand toward the quarter of the winde called Garbino, which is betweene the West and the South. But to speake somewhat more of Ethiopia: although there are many nations of people so named, yet is Ethiopia chiefly diuided into two parts, whereof the one is called Ethiopia vnder Egypt, a great and rich region. To this pertcineth the iland Meroe, imbraced round about with the streames of the riuer Nilus. In this iland women reigned in olde time. Iosephus writeth, that it was some-time called Saba: and that the queene of Saba came from thence to Hierusalem, to heare the wise-dome of Salomon. From hence toward the East, reigneth the said Christian Emperour Prester John, whom some call Papa Iohannes, and other say that he is called Pean Iuan (that is) great John, whose Empire reacheth farre beyond Nilus, and is extended to the coastes of the red sea and Indian sea. The middle of the region is almost in three score and sixe degrees of longitude, & twelue degrees of latitude. About this region inhabite the people called Clodi, Risophagi, Babylonij, Axiunitæ, Molili, and Molibæ. After these is the region called Troglodytica, whose inhabitants dwell in caues and dennes: for these are their houses, and the flesh of serpents their meat, as writeth Plinie, and Diodorus Siculus. They haue no speech, but rather a grinning and chattering. There are also people without heades, called Blemmies, hauing their eyes and mouth in their brest. Likewise Strucophagi, and naked Ganphasantes: Satyrs also, which haue nothing of men but onely shape. Moreouer Oripei, great hunters. Mennones also, and the region of Smyrnophora, which bringeth forth myrrh. After these is the region of Azania, in the which many Elephants are found. A great part of the other regions of Affrike that are beyond the Equinoctiall line, are now ascribed to the kingdome of Melinde, whose inhabitantes are accustomed to traffike with the nations of Arabie, and their king is ioyned in friendship with the king of Portingall & payeth tribute to Prester John.

The other Ethiope, called Ethiopia Interior (that is) the inner Ethiope, is not yet knowne for the greatnesse thereof, but onely by the sea coastes: yet is it described in this maner. First from the Equinoctiall toward the South, is a great region of Ethiopians, which bringeth forth white Elephants, Tygers, and the beastes called Rhinocerontes. Also a region that bringeth foorth plentie of cynamome, lying betweene the branches of Nilus. Also the kingdome of Habech or Habasia, a region of Christian men, lying both on this side and beyond Nilus. Here are also the Ethiopians, called Ichthiophagi (that is) such as liue onely by fish, and were sometimes subdued by the warres of great Alexander. Furthermore the Ethiopians called Rhaphij, and Anthropophagi, that are accustomed to eate flesh, inhabite the regions neere vnto the mountaines called Montes Lunæ (that is) the mountaines of the Moone. Gazacia is vnder the Tropike of Capricorne. After this, followeth the front of Affrike, the Cape of Buena Speranza, or Caput Bonæ Spei, (that is) the Cape of good hope, by the which they passe that saile from Spaine to Calicut. But by what names the Capes and gulfes are called, forasmuch as the same are in euery globe and card, it were here superfluous to rehearse them.

Some write that Affrica was so named by the Grecians, because it is without colde. For the Greeke letter Alpha or A, signifieth priuation, void, or without: and Phrice, signifieth colde. For in deed although in the stead of Winter, they haue a cloudie and tempestuous season, yet is it not colde, but rather smothering hotte, with hotte showres of raine also, and some where such scorching windes, that what by one meanes and other, they seeme at certeine times to liue as it were in furnaces, and in maner already halfe way in Purgatorie or hell. Gemma Phrisius writeth, that in certeine partes of Affrica, as in Atlas the greater, the ayre in the night season is seene shining, with many strange fires and flames rising in maner as high as the Moone: and that in the element are sometime heard as it were the sound of pipes, trumpets and drummes: which noises may perhaps be caused by the vehement and sundry motions of such firie exhalations in the ayre, as we see the like in many experiences wrought by fire, ayre, & winde. The hollownesse also, and diuers reflexions and breaking of the clouds, may be great causes hereof, beside the vehement colde of the middle region of the ayre, whereby the said firie exhalations, ascending thither, are suddenly stricken backe with great force: for euen common and dayly experience teacheth vs, by the whistling of a burning torch, what noise fire maketh in the ayre, and much more where it striueth when it is inclosed with ayre, as appeareth in gunnes, and as the like is seene in only aire inclosed, as in Organ pipes, and such other instruments that go by winde. For winde (as say the Philosophers) is none other then ayre vehemently moued, as we see in a paire of bellowes, and such other.

Some of our men of good credit that were in this last voyage to Guinea, affirme earnestly that in the night season they felt a sensible heat to come from the beames of the moone. The which thing, although it be strange and insensible to vs that inhabite colde regions, yet doth it stand with good reason that it may so be, forasmuch as the nature of starres and planets (as writeth Plinie) consisteth of fire, and containeth in it a spirit of life, which cannot be without heat.

The heat of the Moone.

The nature of the Starres.

And that the Moone giueth heate vpon the earth, the Prophet Dauid seemeth to confirme in his 121 Psalme, where speaking of such men as are defended from euils by Gods protection, he

he saith thus: Per diem Sol non exuret te, nec Luna per noctem. That is to say, In the day the Sunne shall not burne thee, nor the Moone by night.

Spoutes of water falling out of the aire.

They say furthermore that in certaine places of the sea, they saw certaine streames of water, which they call spouts, falling out of the aire into the sea, and that some of these are as bigge as the great pillers of Churches: insomuch that sometimes they fall into shippes, and put them in great danger of drowning. Some faine that these should be the Cataracts of heauen, which were all opened at Noes flood. But I thinke them rather to be such fluxions and eruptions as Aristotle in his booke de Mundo saith, to chance in the sea. For speaking of such strange things as are seene often times in the sea, he writeth thus. Oftentimes also euen in the sea are seene euaporations of fire, and such eruptions and breaking foorth of springs, that the mouthes of riuers are opened, Whirlepooles, and fluxions are caused of such other vehement motions, not onely in the middest of the sea, but also in creekes and streights. At certaine times also, a great quantitie of water is suddenly lifted vp and carried about with the Moone, &c. By which wordes of Aristotle it doth appeare that such waters be lifted vp in one place at one time, and suddenly fall downe in an other place at another time. And hereunto perhaps pertaineth it that Richard Chancellor tolde me that he heard Sebastian Cabot report, that (as farre as I remember) either about the coastes of Brasile or Rio de Plata, his shippe or pinnesse was suddenly lifted from the sea, and cast vpon land, I wot not howe farre. The which thing, and such other like wonderfull and strange workes of nature while I consider, and call to remembrance the narrownesse of mans vnderstanding and knowledge, in comparison of her mightie power, I can but cease to maruell and confesse with Plinie, that nothing is to her impossible, the least part of whose power is not yet knowen to men. Many thinges more our men saw and considered in this voyage, worthie to be noted, whereof I haue thought good to put some in memorie, that the reader may as well take pleasure in the varietie of things, as knowledge of the hystorie. Among other thinges therefore touching the maners and nature of the people, this may seeme strange, that their princes and noble men vse to pounce and rase their skinnes with prettie knots in diuers formes, as it were branched damaske, thinking that to be a decent ornament. And albeit they goe in maner all naked, yet are many of them, and especially their women, in maner laden with collars, braslets, hoopes, and chaines, either of golde, copper, or iuory. I my selfe haue one of their braslets of iuory, weighing two pound and fiue ounces of Troy weight, which make eight and thirtie ounces: this one of their women did weare vpon her arme. It is made of one whole piece of the biggest part of the tooth, turned and somewhat carued, with a hole in the middest, wherein they put their hands to weare it on their arme. Some haue of euery arme one, and as many on their legs, where with some of them are so galled, that although they are in maner made lame thereby, yet will they by no meanes leaue them off. Some weare also on their legs great shackles of bright copper, which they thinke to be no lesse comely. They weare also collars, braslets, garlands, and girdles, of certaine blew stones like beades. Likewise some of their women weare on their bare armes certaine foresleeues, made of the plates of beaten golde. On their fingers also they weare rings, made of golden wires, with a knot or wreath, like vnto that which children make in a ring of a rush. Among other thinges of golde that our men bought of them for exchange of their wares, were certaine dogs chaines and collers.

They are very warie people in their bargaining, and will not lose one sparke of golde of any value. They vse weights and measures, and are very circumspect in occupying the same. They that shall haue to do with them, must vse them gently: for they wil not traffike or bring in any wares if they be euill vsed. At the first voyage that our men had into these parties, it so chanced, that at their departure from the first place where they did traffike, one of them either stole a muske catte, or tooke her away by force, not mistrusting that that should haue hindred their bargaining in another place whither they intended to go. But for all the haste they could make with full sailes, the fame of their misusage so preuented them, that the people of that place also, offended thereby, would bring in no wares: insomuch that they were inforced either to restore the cat, or pay for her at their price, before they could traffike there.

Their houses.

Their feeding.

Fleeing fishes.

A strange thing.

Their houses are made of foure postes or trees, and couered with boughes.

Their common feeding is of roots, and such fishes as they take, whereof they haue great plentie. There are also such fleeing fishes as are seene in the sea of the West Indies. Our men salted of their fishes, hoping to prouide store thereof: but they would take no salt, and must therefore be eaten forthwith as some say. Howbeit, other affirme that if they be salted immediatly after they be taken, they will last vncorrupted ten or twelue dayes. But this is more strange, that part of such fish as they caried with them out of England, and putrified there, became sweet againe at their returne to the clime of temperate regions.

They

They vse also a strange making of bread, in this maner. They grinde betweene two stones with their handes as much corne as they thinke may suffice their family, & when they haue thus brought it to floure, they put thereto a certaine quantitie of water, and make therof very thinne dough, which they sticke vpō some post of their houses, where it is baked by the heat of the sunne: so that when the master of the house or any of his family wil eat therof, they take it downe & eat it. Their bread.

They haue very faire wheate, the eare whereof is two handfuls in length, and as bigge as a great Bulrush, and almost foure inches about where it is biggest. The stemme or straw seemeth to be almost as bigge as the litle finger of a mans hand, or litle lesse. The graines of this wheate are as big as our pease, round also, and very white, and somewhat shining, like pearles that haue lost their colour. Almost al the substance of them turneth into floure, & maketh litle branne or none. I told in one eare two hundred & threescore graines. The eare is inclosed in three blades longer then it selfe, & of two ynches broad a piece. And by this fruitfulnes the Sunne seemeth partly to recompence such griefes and molestations as they otherwise receiue by the feruent heate thereof. It is doubtlesse a worthy contemplation to consider the cōtrary effects of the Sunne: or rather the contrary passions of such things as receiue the influence of his beames, either to their hurt or benefite. Their wheate. The Sunne.

Their drinke is either water, or the iuise that droppeth from the cut branches of the barren Date trees, called Palmites. For either they hang great gourdes at the said branches euery euening, and let them so hang all night, or els they set them on the ground vnder the trees, that the droppes may fall therein. They say that this kinde of drinke is in taste much like vnto whey, but somewhat sweeter, and more pleasant. They cut the branches euery euening, because they are seared vp in the day by the heate of the Sunne. They haue also great Beanes as bigge as chestnuts, and very hard with a shell in the stead of a huske. Their drinke.

Many thinges more might be saide of the maners of the people, and of the wonders and monstrous things that are engendred in Africke. But it shall suffice to haue saide thus much of such things as our men partly sawe, and partly brought with them.

And whereas before speaking of the fruite of graines, I described the same to haue holes by the side (as in deede it is, as it is brought hither) yet was I afterwarde enformed, that those holes were made to put stringes or twigges through the fruite, thereby to hang them vp to dry at the Sunne. They grow not past a foote and a halfe, or two foote from the ground, and are as redde as blood when they are gathered. The graines themselues are called of ỹ Physitiōs Grana Paradisi. Graines.

At their comming home, the keeles of their shippes were maruellously ouergrowne with certaine shelles of two inches length and more, as thicke as they could stande, and of such bignesse that a man might put his thumme in the mouthes of them. They certainely affirme that in these there groweth a certaine slimie substance, which at the length slipping out of the shell and falling in the sea, becommeth those foules which we call Barnacles. The like shelles haue bene seene in shippes returning from Iseland, but these shels were not past halfe an inch in length. Of the other that came from Guinea, I sawe the Pymrole lying in the Docke, and in maner couered with the said shelles, which in my iudgement should greatly hinder her sayling. Their shippes were also in many places eaten with the wormes called Bromas or Bissas, whereof mention is made in the Decades. These creepe betweene the plankes, which they eate through in many places. Shelles that cleane to ships. Barnacles. Bromas. A secret.

Among other things that chaūced to them in this voyage, this is worthy to be noted, that whereas they sailed thither in seuen weekes, they could returne in no lesse space then twentie weekes. The cause whereof they say to be this: That about the coast of Cabo Verde, the winde is euer at the East, by reason whereof they were enforced to saile farre out of their course into the maine Ocean, to finde the winde at the West to bring them home. There died of our men at this last voyage about twentie and foure, whereof many died at their returne into the clyme of the colde regions, as betweene the Ilands of Azores and England. They brought with them certaine blacke slaues, whereof same were tall and strong men, and could wel agree with our meates and drinkes. The colde and moyst ayre doth somewhat offend them. Yet doubtlesse men that are borne in hotte Regions, may better abide colde, then men that are borne in colde Regions may abide heate, forasmuch as vehement heate resolueth the radicall moysture of mens bodies, as colde constraineth and preserueth the same. The death of our men. 5. Blacke Moores brought into England. Colde may be better abiden then heate.

This is also to be considered as a secret worke of nature, that throughout al Affricke vnder the Equinoctiall line, and neere about the same on both sides, the regions are extreeme hotte, and the people very blacke. Whereas contrarily such regions of the West Indies as are vnder the same line, are very temperate, and the people neither blacke, nor with curlde and short woll on their heads, as haue they of Affrike, but of the colour of an Olive, with long and blacke heare on their heads: the cause of which varietie is declared in diuers places in the Decades.

It is also worthy to be noted that some of them that were at this voyage tolde me: That is, that they ouertooke the course of the Sunne, so that they had it North from them at noone, the xiii. day of March. And to haue said thus much of these voyages, it may suffice.

The first voyage made by M. William Towrson Marchant of London, to the coast of Guinea, with two Shippes, in the yeere 1555.

September. Vpon munday the 30. day of September we departed from the Isle of Wight, out of the hauen of Neuport with 2. good shippes, the one called the Hart the other the Hinde, both of London, and the Masters of them were John Ralphe, and William Carter, for a voyage to be made vnto the Riuer de Sestos in Guinea, and to other hauens there about.

October. It fell out by the varietie of windes, that it was the 14. day of October before we could fetch Dartmouth: and being there arriued wee continued in that roade fiue dayes, and the 20. of October we warpt out of the hauen, & set saile directing our course towards the Southwest, and the next morning we were runne by estimation 30. leagues.

The 21. we suppose we ranne 36. leagues, the 22. 40. leagues, the 23. 20. leagues, the 24. but 12. by reason of the foule weather, and change of windes.

The 25. day wee ranne about 20. leagues, the 26. about 12. and all the night laye at trie with much raine and foule weather.

The 27. the windes and seas were high, yet we made some way.

The 28. day the Hindes poope brake with a sea somewhat aboue the helme, whereupon William Carter & Richard Gresham with their marchants agreed to set saile, and go backe againe for England, and for that purpose hoysed vp their saile, and we seeing it shotte off a peece to cause them to tary for vs, and hoysed our foresaile and went to them: and they tolde vs that they would not keepe the seas, and required mee to agree that they might returne, and we also with them to amende the fault, whereunto I would not agree, seeing the fault to bee no worse then it was, and our Master Iohn Ralphe offered them that hee himselfe would goe in her, which thing they hearing saide that they were as able to keepe her as hee, and William Carter made answere, that as long as the company would continue with him, he would not refuse the voyage: so we lay at hull about an houre after, and then it pleased God to sende vs a faire winde at North and by East, and we ranne our course that day by estimation 25. leagues.

The 29. day wee ranne about 40. leagues, the 30. about 50. and the 31. and last of October about 40.

November. The first of November we found our selues to be in 31. degrees of latitude by the reckoning of our Master. This day we ranne about 40. leagues also.

The 2. day we ranne 36. leagues.

Porto Sancto. The 3. day we had sight of Porto Sancto, which is a small Island lying in the sea, about three leagues long, and a league & a halfe broad, & is possessed by Portingals. It riseth as we came from the North Northwest like two small hilles neere together. The East ende of the same Island is a high land like a sadle with a valley, which makes it to beare that forme. The west ende of it is lower with certaine small round hillockes. This Island lyeth in thirtie and three degrees. The Madera. same day at 11. of the clocke wee raysed the Isle of Madera, which lyeth 12. leagues from Porto Sancto, towards the Southwest: that Island is a faire Islande and fruitfull, and is inhabited by Portingals, it riseth afarre off like a great whole lande and high. By three of the clocke this day at after noone we were thwart of Porto Sancto, and wee set our course Southwest, to leaue the Isle of Madera to the Eastward, as we did Porto Sancto. These two Islands were the first land that we sawe since wee left the coast of England. About 3. of the clocke after midnight we were thwart of Madera, within three leagues of the West ende of it, and by meanes of the high hilles there, we were becalmed: We suppose we ranne this day and night 30. leagues.

The fourth day wee laye becalmed vnder the Isle of Madera, vntill one of the clocke at afternoone, and then the winde comming into the East, wee went our course, and ranne that day 15. leagues.

The 5. day we ranne 15. leagues more.

Tenerif. The 6. day in the morning we raysed the Isle of Tenerif, otherwise called the Pike, because it is a very high Island with a pike vpon the toppe like a loafe of Suger. The same night we rai-

Palma. sed the Isle of Palma, which is a high land also, and to the Westward of the Isle of Tenerif.

The

The 7. day we perceiued the Iſle of Gomera, which is an Iſland ſtanding betwixt Tenerif and Palma, about 12. leagues Eaſtward from Palma, and 8. leagues Weſtwarde from Tenerif: and for feare of being becalmed with the Iſle of Tenerif, we left both it, and Gomera to the Eaſtward of vs, and went betwixt Palma and Gomera. We ranne this day and night 30. leagues. Gomera.

Note that theſe Iſlands be 60. leagues from Madera, and that there are 3. Iſlands more to the Weſtward of Tenerif, named the Grand Canaria, Forteventura, & Lancerot, of which Iſlands we came not in ſight: they be inhabited by Spaniards.

This day alſo we had ſight of the Iſle of Ferro, which is to the Southwards 13. leagues from the other Iſlands, and is poſſeſſed by Spaniards. All this day and night by reaſon of the winde wee coulde not double the point of the Iſle of Ferro, except wee would haue gone to the Weſtward of it which had bene much out of our courſe: therefore we kept about, and ranne backe fiue houres Eaſt Northeaſt to the ende we might double it vpon the next boorde, the winde continuing Southeaſt, which hath not bene often ſeene vpon that coaſt by any trauailers: for the winde continueth there for the moſt part Northeaſt, and Eaſt Northeaſt: ſo vpon the other boorde by the next morning we were in a maner with the Iſland, and had roome ynough to double the ſame. Ferro.

The 8. day we kept our courſe as neere the winde as we coulde, becauſe that our due courſe to fetch the coaſt of Barbary, was Southeaſt and by Eaſt, but by the ſcant winde we coulde not goe our due courſe, but went as neere it as we could, and ranne this day and night 25. leagues.

The 9. day we ranne 30. leagues, the 10. 25. leagues, the 11. 24.

The 12. day we ſaw a ſaile vnder our Lee, which was as we thought a fiſherman, ſo that we went roome to haue ſpoken with him, but within one houre there fell ſuch a fogge, that we coulde not ſee the ſhippe nor one of vs the other: we ſhot off diuers pieces to the Hinde, but ſhe hard them not: at after noone ſhe ſhot off a piece which wee hard, and made her anſwere with another: and within one halfe houre after the fogge brake vp, and we were within 4. leagues of the ſhoare vpon the coaſt of Barbarie, and wee ſounded and had 14. fadom water. The Barke alſo came roome with vs and there ancred by reaſon of the contrary winde. When we fell with the lande, we could not iudge iuſtly what part of the land it was, becauſe the moſt part of that coaſt is lowe land, and no part to be iudged of it but the forepart of the ſhoare, which is white like chalke or ſande, and very deepe vnto the hard ſhoare: there immediatly wee beganne to fiſh, and founde great ſtore of a kinde of fiſh which the Portingals commonly fiſh for vpon that coaſt, which they call Pergoſſes, the Frenchmen call them Saders, and our men, ſalt water breames. Before the clearing vp of the fogge, the ſhippe which we followed ſhaped vs ſuch a courſe that wee coulde ſee her no more, by reaſon of our ſhooting off to finde the Hinde againe. This part of the coaſt of Barbarie, by our Pilots reckoning is about 16. leagues to the Eaſtwards of the riuer del Oro. Riuer del Oro.

The 13. day in the after noone wee eſpyed a ſaile comming towardes vs, which wee iudged to be the ſaile that wee ſawe the day before, and as ſoone as wee eſpyed him we cauſed the Hinde to way her ancre and to goe towardes him, and manned out our Skiffe in like caſe to laye him aboorde, or to diſcerne what hee was, and we our ſelues within halfe an houre after wayed alſo: but after the ſaile had eſpyed vs, he kept about, and turned backe againe, and ſhortly after there fell ſuch another fogge, that wee coulde not ſee him: which fogges continued all that night, ſo that wee were conſtrained to leaue the chaſe. This after noone the winde came about, and wee went our courſe Southweſt, and by Weſt, to goe cleare off the coaſt, and we ranne that night 16. leagues.

The foureteenth day in the morning was very foggie: but about twelue a clocke wee eſpyed a Caruell of 60. tunne which was fiſhing, and wee ſent our Skiffe to him with fiue men, and all without any weapon ſauing their Dares. The Caruell for haſte let ſlippe her ancre, and ſet ſaile, and they ſeeing that, fearing that they ſhould not fetch her, woulde tarry for no weapons, and in the ende ouertooke the Caruell, and made her to ſtrike ſaile, and brought her away, although they had foureteene or fifteene men aboord, & euery man his weapon, but they had not the hearts to reſiſt our men. After they were come to vs, they let fall their ancre, for wee had caſt ancre becauſe the winde was not good: I cauſed then the Skiffe to come for mee, and I went aboorde of them to ſee that no harme ſhoulde bee done to them, nor to take any thing but that which they might ſpare vs for our money. So we tooke of them three Tapnets of figges, two ſmall pots of oyle, 2. pipes of water, foure hogeſheads of ſalt fiſh which they had taken vpon the coaſt, and certaine freſh fiſh which they did not eſteeme, becauſe there is ſuch ſtore vpon that coaſt, that in an houre and ſometime leſſe, a man may take as much fiſh as will ſerue twentie men a day. For theſe things, and for ſome wine which wee dranke aboorde of them, and three or foure great cannes which they ſent aboorde of our Shippes, I payed them twentie and ſeuen Piſtolets, A Caruell taken. Great ſtore of fiſh vpon the coaſt of Barbarie.

which was twise as much as they willingly would haue taken: and so let them goe to their ancre and cable which they had let slippe, and got it againe by our helpe. After this we set saile, but the wind caused vs to ancre againe about 12. leagues off the riuer Del oro, as the Portingals tolde vs. There were 5. Caruels more in this place, but when they sawe vs, they made all away for feare for vs.

The 15. day we ridde still because of the winde.

The Tropike of Cancer in 23. and a halfe. The 16. day we set saile and ranne our course 40. leagues. This day by the reckoning of our Pilots, we were right vnder the Tropike of Cancer. The 17. day we ranne 25. leagues within sight for the most part of the coast of Barbarie.

The 18. day we ranne 30. leagues, and at 12. of the clocke by the reckoning of our Pilots we were thwart of of Cape Blanke. Cape Blanko.

The 19. day we ranne our course 30. leagues.

The 20. day we ranne 36. leagues, the 21. 34 leagues, and the 22. 30 leagues. And this 22. day our Pilots reckoned vs to be thwart of Cape Verde. Cape Verde.

The 23. day we ranne our course 28. leagues, the 24. 25. leagues, the 25. 12. leagues, the 26. 12. leagues, the 27. 15. leagues, the 28. by reason we were becalmed, but 3. leagues, the 29. 25. leagues, the 30. 8. leagues: and this day at 12. of the clocke, we found our selues to be in 8. degrees and a halfe of latitude. 8. Degrees and a halfe.

December. The first of December we ranne 20. leagues, the 2. day being becalmed, but 4. leagues, the 3. day 16. leagues.

The 4. day we had terrible thunder and lightning, with exceeding great gusts of raine called Ternados, which continued not aboue halfe an houre: we ranne our course 18. leagues.

The 5. day we ranne 20. leagues, the 6. day 8. leagues by reason of variable windes, the 7. day but 4. leagues.

The 8. day we had more thunder and lightning, and we ranne about 6. leagues.

The 9. day we ranne 8. leagues, the 10. day 10. leagues, the 11. day 12. leagues.

The coast of Guinea. The 12. day we had sight of the land of Guinea, which as soone as we sawe we hailed into the lande Northeast, and about 12. of the clocke at night we were neere the shoare within lesse then 2. leagues: and then we kept about and sounded, and found 18. fadom water. Afterwards we saw a light towards the shoare, which we thought to haue bene a shippe, and thereby iudged it to be the riuer de Sestos, which light as soone as we espied, wee came to an ancre and armed our toppes, and made al things readie to fight, because we doubted that it might be some Portingal or French man: this night we remained at an ancre, but in the morning we saw no man, onely we espied 4. rockes about 2. English miles from vs, one great rocke, and the three other small ones, which when we sawe, we supposed that the light came from the shore, and so waied and set saile East Southeast along the shoare, because the Master did not well know the place, but thought that we were not so farre to the East as the riuer de Sestos.

This land all along is a low land, and full of very high trees all along the shoare, so that it is not possible to know the place that a man doeth fall withall, except it be by the latitude: In these 24. houres I thinke we ranne 16. leagues, for all the night we had a great gale as we were vnder saile, and had withall store of thunder and lightnings.

The 13. day for the most part we ranne East Southeast all along the shoare, within 2. leagues alwayes of the same, and founde the land all as at the first, full of woods and great rockes hard aboorde the shoare, and the billowe beating so sore, that the seas brake vpon the shoare as white as snowe, and the water mounted so high that a man might easily discerne it foure leagues off in such wise that no boate could land there. Thus wee ranne vntill twelue of the clocke, and then they tooke ẏ sunne & after iudged themselues to be 24. leagues past the riuer de Sestos to the Eastwards, by reason whereof we hailed into the shoare within two English miles, and there ancred and found fifteene fadom water, and all off from the shoare the sea so smooth, that wee might well haue ridde by an Hawser: All that after noone we trimmed our boate and made her a saile, to the ende that she might goe along by the shoare to seeke some place to water in: for we could not goe backe againe to the riuer de Sestos, because the winde blowes alwayes contrary, and the current runneth alwayes to the Eastwards, which was also against vs. The Currant setting East-ward.

The fourteenth day we set saile and went backe againe along the coast, and sent our boats hard aboorde the shoare to seeke a watering place, which they founde about twelue of the clocke, and we being farre into the sea, mette with diuers boates of the Countrey, small, long and narrowe, and in euery boat one man and no more: we gaue them bread which they did eate, and were very glad of it. About foure of the clocke our boates came to vs with fresh water: and this night we we ancred againſt a Riuer.

The 15. day wee waied and ſet ſaile to goe neere the ſhoare, and with our leade wee ſounded all the way, and found ſometimes rockes, and ſometimes faire grounde, and at the ſhalloweſt found ſeuen fadoms alwayes at the leaſt. So in fine we founde 7. fadom and a halfe within an Engliſh mile of the ſhoare, and there wee ancred, in a maner before the mouth of the Riuer, and then we ſent our boates into the Riuer for water, which went about a mile within the Riuer, where they had very good water. This Riuer lyeth by eſtimation eight leagues beyond the Riuer de Seſtos, and is called in the Carde, Riuer S. Vincent, but it is ſo harde to finde, that a boate being within halfe a mile of it, ſhall not be able to diſcerne that it is a Riuer: by reaſon that directly before the mouth of it, there lyeth a ledge of rockes, which is much broader then the Riuer, ſo that a boate muſt runne in along the ſhoare a good way betwixt the rockes, and the ſhoare before it come to the mouth of the Riuer, and being within it, it is a great Riuer and diuers other Riuers falls into it: The going into it is ſomewhat ill, becauſe that at the entring, the ſeas doe goe ſomewhat high, but being once within it, it is as calme as the Thames. Riuer S. Vincent.

There are neere to the ſea vpon this Riuer diuers inhabitants, which are mightie bigge men and goe all naked except ſome thing before their priuie partes, which is like a cloute about a quarter of a yarde long made of the barke of trees, and yet it is like a clothe: for the barke is of that nature, that it will ſpinne ſmall after the maner of linnen. Some of them alſo weare the like vpon their heades being painted with diuers coulers, but the moſt part of them goe bare headed, and their heades are clipped and ſhorne of diuers ſortes, and the moſt part of them haue their ſkinne of their bodies raced with diuers workes, in maner of a leather Jerkin. The men and women goe ſo alike, that one cannot knowe a man from a woman but by their breaſtes, which in the moſt part be very foule and long, hanging downe lowe like the vdder of a goate. Cloth made of the barke of trees. The Negroes race their ſkinnes.

This ſame morning we went into the Riuer with our Skiffe, and carried certaine baſons, manels, &c. And there we tooke that day one hogſhead and 100. li. waight of graines, and two Elephants teeth at a reaſonable good reckoning; We ſolde them both baſons, and Manellios, and Margerets, but they deſired moſt to haue baſons: For the moſt part of our baſons we had by eſtimation about 30. li. for a piece, and for an Oliphants tooth of 30. li. waight, we gaue them 6. Graines of Guinea. Oliphants teeth.

The 16. day in the morning we went into the Riuer with our Skiffe, and tooke ſome of euery ſort of our Marchandize with vs, and ſhewed it to the Negroes, but they eſteemed it not, but made light of it, and alſo of the baſons, Manellios and Margarets, which yeſterday they did buy: howbeit for the baſons they would haue giuen vs ſome graines, but to no purpoſe, ſo that this day we tooke not by eſtimation aboue one hundreth pound waight of graines, by meanes of their Captaine, who would ſuffer no man to ſell any thing but through his handes, and at his priſe: hee was ſo ſubtile, that for a baſon hee would not giue 15. pounde waight of graines, and ſometimes would offer vs ſmall diſhfuls, whereas before wee had baſkets full, and when hee ſawe that wee would not take them in contentment, the Captaine departed, and cauſed all the reſt of the boates to depart, thinking belike that we would haue followed them, and haue giuen them their owne askings. But after that we perceiued their fetche, we waied our Grapnel and went away, and then we went on lande in a ſmall Towne to ſee the faſhions of the Countrey, and there came a threeſcore of them about vs, and at the firſt they were afraide of vs, but in the ende perceiuing that wee did no hurt, they would come to vs and take vs by the hande and bee familiar with vs, and then we went into their Townes, which were like to twentie ſmall houels, all couered ouer with great leaues and baggage, and all the ſides open, and a ſcaffolde vnder the houſe about a yarde high, where they worke many prettie thinges of the barkes of trees, and there they lye alſo. In ſome of their houſes they worke yron and make faire dartes, and diuers other thinges to woorke their boates, and other things withall, and the women worke as well as the men. But when we were there diuers of the women to ſhewe vs pleaſure daunced and ſung after their maner, full ill to our eares. Their ſong was thus: The deſcription of their Townes and houſes.

And with theſe wordes they leape and daunce and clappe their handes. Beaſtes wee coulde ſee none that they had, but two goates, ſmall dogges, and ſmall hennes: other beaſtes wee ſawe none. After that wee had well marked all things we departed and went aboorde our ſhippes: which thing the Captaine of the other towne perceiuing, ſent 2. of his ſeruants in a boate with a baſket of graines, and made vs ſignes that if when we had ſlept we would come againe into their Riuer, we ſhould haue ſtore of graines, and ſo ſhewed vs his graines and departed.

The 17. day in the morning becauſe we thought that the Negroes would haue done ſomething becauſe the captaine ſent for vs, I required the Maſter to goe on ſhoare, and ſent the reſt of our marchants with him, and taried abooꝛde my ſelfe by reaſon that the laſt day hee eſteemed our things ſo litle: ſo when the Maſter & the reſt came into the riuer, the Captaine with diuers others came to them, and bꝛought graines with them, and after that hee ſawe that I was not there, hee made ſignes to know where I was, and they made ſignes to him againe that I was in the ſhips: and then he made ſignes to know who was Captaine by the name of Diago, foꝛ ſo they call their Captaine, and they pointed to the Maſter of the ſhippe: then hee beganne to ſhewe his graines, but he held them ſo vnreaſonably, that there was no pꝛofite to be made of them: which things the Maſter perceiuing, and ſeeing that they had no ſtoꝛe of graines, came away, and tooke not aboue 50. pound waight of graines. Then hee went a ſhoare to the litle towne where we were the day befoꝛe, and one of them pluckt a gowꝛd, wherewith the Negroes were offended and came many of them to our men with their darts and great targets, and made ſignes to them to depart: which our men did, hauing but one bowe and 2. oꝛ 3. ſwoꝛdes, and went abooꝛd the boate and came away from them: and aſſoone as they were come abooꝛd we wayed & ſet ſaile, but the winde was off the ſea, ſo that we could not get out cleare of certaine rocks, & therefoꝛe we came to an ancre againe.

Diago the name of a Captaine.

The latitude of S. Vincents riuer is 4. degrees and a halfe.

This riuer is called Riuer S. Vincent, ſtanding in 4. degrees and a halfe, & it ebbeth and floweth there euery 12. houres, but not much water when it ebbeth the moſt: while we were there, it ebbed 1. fadome and a halfe of water.

Leaues of exceeding length.

This countrey as farre as we could perceiue is altogether woody, and al ſtrange trees, whereof we knewe none, and they were of many ſoꝛtes, with great leaues like great dockes, which bee higher then any man is able to reach the toppe of them.

Long peaſe ſtalkes.

There are certaine peaſon by the ſea ſide, which growe vpon great and very long ſtalkes, one of the ſtalkes I meaſured and found it 27. paces long, and doeth grow vpon the ſand like to trees, and that ſo neere the ſea, that ſometimes the ſea floweth into the woods as wee might perceiue by the water markes.

Long womens breaſts.

The trees and all things in this place grow cõtinually greene. Diuers of the women haue ſuch exceeding long bꝛeaſtes, that ſome of them wil lay the ſame vpon the grounde and lie downe by them, but all the women haue not ſuch bꝛeaſtes.

At this place all the day the winde bloweth off the ſea, and all the night off the lande, but wee found it to differ ſometimes, which our Maſter marueyled at.

This night at 9. of the clocke the winde came vp at the Eaſt, which oꝛdinarily about that time was wont to come out of the Noꝛth Noꝛthweſt off the ſhoare: yet we wayed and halled off South with that winde all night into the ſea, but the next moꝛning we halled in againe to the lande, and tooke in 6. Tunnes of water foꝛ our ſhippe, and I thinke the Hinde tooke in as much.

I could not perceiue that here was any golde, oꝛ any other good thing: foꝛ ẏ people be ſo wilde and idle, that they giue themſelues to ſeeke out nothing: if they would take paines they might gather great ſtoꝛe of graines, but in this place I could not perceiue 2. tunne.

There are many foules in the countrey, but the people will not take the paines to take them.

I obſerued ſome of their woꝛds of ſpeach, which I thought good here to ſet downe.

The language about the Riuer of S. Vincent.

Bezow, bezow,	Is their ſalutation.

Theſe and other woꝛdes they ſpeake very thicke, and oftentimes recite one woꝛd three times together, and at the laſt time longer then at the two firſt.

The 18. day towards night, as we were ſayling along the coaſt, we met with certaine boats in the ſea, & the men ſhewed vs that there was a riuer thwart of vs, where there were graines to be ſold, but we thought it not good to tarie there, leaſt the other ſhips ſhould get befoꝛe vs. This riuer hath lying befoꝛe it 3. great rocks, and 5. ſmal rocks, one great tree, and a litle tree right by the riuer, which in height exceeded all the reſt: we halled this night along the coaſt 10. leagues.

The 19. day as we coaſted the ſhoare, about twelue of the clocke there came out to vs 3. boates to tell vs that they had graines, & bꝛought ſome with them foꝛ a ſhew, but we could not tarie there.

We

We proceeded along the coaſt, & ancred by the ſhoze all the night, and ran this day 10. leagues.

The twentie day the Hinde hauing ankered by vs amongeſt rockes, and foule ground, loſt a ſmall anker. At noone, as we paſſed along the coaſt, there came foorth a Negro to vs, making ſignes, that if we would goe a ſhoare, wee ſhould haue graines, and where we ankered at night, there came another to vs, and brought graines, and ſhewed vs them, and made ſignes that wee ſhould tary, and made a fire vpon the land in the night, meaning thereby to tel vs where we ſhould land, and ſo they did in diuers other places vpon the coaſt, where they ſawe vs to anker.

In all the pl[ace] that we haue ankered ſince we came from our watring place, we haue found the tide alwaies [run]ning to the Weſtwardes, and all along the coaſt many rockes hard aboard the ſhoare, and m[any] of them a league of the ſhoare or moze, we ran this day twelue leagues. The tides and nature of the ſhoare.

The 21. day, [wi]th we ranne all day with a good gale of winde, yet the tides came ſo ſoze out of the coa[ſt] were not able to runne aboue ſix leagues: and this day there came ſome Negroes to vs, a[s] had done other times.

The 22. we ranne all day and night, to double a point, called Dos palmas, and ranne ſirteene leagues. The point of Palmas.

The 23. day, about three of the clocke, we were thwart of the point, and before we came to the weſtermoſt part of it, we ſawe a great ledge of rockes, which lie weſt from the Cape, about three leagues, and a league or moze from the land. Shortly after, we had ſight of the Eaſtermoſt part of the Cape, which lieth foure leagues from the Weſtermoſt part, and vpon the very corner thereof, lie two greene places, as it were cloſes, and to the weſtwards of the Cape, the land parted from the Cape, as it were a Baye, whereby it may well be knowen. Foure leagues moze beyond that, there lieth a head land in the ſea, and about two leagues beyond the head lande, there goeth in a great Bay, as it were a riuer, before which place we ankered all that night, which we did, leaſt in the night we ſhould ouerrunne a riuer, where the "laſt pere, they had all their Elephants teeth. "That was the yeere 1554.

This Cape Dos palmas, lieth vnder foure degrees and a halfe, and betwixt the ſaid Cape, and the riuer de Seſtos, is the greateſt ſtoze of graines to be had, and being paſt the ſaid Cape, there is no great ſtoze els where.

Where we ankered this night, we found that the tide, which before ranne alwaies to the weſtward, from this Cape runneth all to the Eaſtward: this day we ranne ſome 16. leagues. The tides running eaſtward.

The 24. day running our courſe, about eight of the clocke there came foorth to vs certaine boates, which brought with them ſmall egges, which were ſoft without ſhels, and they made vs ſignes, that there was within the land freſh water, and Goates: and the Maſter thinking that it was the riuer which we ſought, caſt anker, and ſent the boate on ſhoare, with one that knewe the riuer, and comming neere the ſhoare, he perceiued that it was not the riuer, and ſo came backe againe, and went along the ſhoare, with their oares and ſaile, and wee waied, and ranne along the ſhoare alſo: and being thirteene leagues beyond the Cape, the Maſter perceiued a place, which he iudged to be the riuer, when we were in deede two miles ſhot paſt it: yet the boate came from the ſhoare, and they that were in her, ſaid, that there was no riuer: notwithſtanding we came to an anker, and the Maſter and I tooke fiue men with vs in the boate, and when he came neere the ſhoare, he perceiued that it was the ſame riuer which he did ſeeke: ſo we rowed in, and found the entrance very ill, by reaſon that the ſea goeth ſo high: and being entred, diuers boates came to vs, and ſhewed vs that they had Elephants teeth, and they brought vs one about eight pound, and a litle one of a pound, which we bought: then they brought certaine teeth to the riuer ſide, making ſignes, that if the next day we would come againe, they would ſell vs them: ſo we gaue vnto two Captaines, to either of them a manillio, and ſo we departed, and came aboard, and ſent out the other boate to another place, where certaine boates that came into the ſea, made vs ſignes that there was freſh water: and being come thither, they found a towne, but no riuer, yet the people brought them freſh water, and ſhewed them an Elephants tooth, making ſignes that the next day they would ſell them teeth, and ſo they came aboard. A towne.

This riuer lieth by the Carde thirteene leagues from the Cape Dos palmas, and there lieth to the weſtwards of the ſame, a rocke about a league in the ſea, and the riuer it ſelfe hath a point of land comming out into the ſea, whereupon groweth fiue trees, which may well be diſcerned two or three leagues of, comming from the weſtward, but the riuer can not be perceiued vntill ſuch time, as a man be hard by it, and then a man may perceiue a litle towne on each ſide the riuer, and to each towne there belongeth a Capitaine. The riuer is but ſmall, but the water is good and freſh.

Two miles beyond the riuer, where the other towne is, there lieth another point into the ſea, which is greene like a cloſe, and not aboue fiue trees vpon it, which growe one of them from the other,

other, whereby the coast may well be knowne: for along all the coast that we haue hitherto sailed by, I haue not seene so much bare land.

In this place, and three or foure leagues to the westward of it, al along the shoare, there grow many Palme trees, whereof they make their wine De Palma. These trees may easily be knowne almost two leagues of, for they be very high, and white bodied, and streight, and be biggest in the middes: they haue no boughes, but onely a round bush in the toppe of them: and at the toppe of the same trees, they boare a hole, and there they hang a bottell, and the ioyce of the tree runneth out of the said hole into the bottle, and that is their wine.

Many Palme trees.

From the Cape Dos palmas, to the Cape Tres puntas, there are 100. leagues: and to the port where we purpose to make sales of our cloth beyond the Cape Tres puntas, fortie leagues.

Cape Tres Puntas.

Note: that betwixt the riuer De Sestos, and the Cape Dos palmas, is the place where all the graines be gathered.

The language of the people of this place, as farre as I could perceiue, differeth not much from the language of those, which dwel where we watered before: but the people of this place be more gentle in nature then ỳ other, & goodlier men: their building & apparel is all one with the others.

Their desire in this place was most of all to haue Mamillios and Margarets, as for the rest of our things, they did litle esteeme them.

The 25. day, being the day of the nativitie of Christ, we sent our boates and skiffes for water for our shippes, which that day filled as much water, as we had caskes emptie, which was about two tunnes for vs, and one tunne for the Hinde.

About nine of the clocke, there came boates to vs forth, from both of the places aforesaide, and brought with them certaine teeth, and after they had caused me to sweare by the water of the sea, that I would not hurt them, they came aboord our shippe three or foure of them, and we gaue them to eate of all such things as we had, and they did eate and drinke of all things, as well as we our selues. Afterwardes we bought all their teeth, which were in number foureteene, and of those foureteene there were ten small: afterwards, they departed, making vs signes, that the next day we should come to their townes.

Their manner of sweating by the water of the sea.

The 26. day, because we would not trifle long at this place, I required the Master to goe vnto one of the townes, and to take two of our marchants with him, and I my selfe went to the other, and tooke one with me, because these two townes stand three miles asunder. To these places we caried some what of euery kind of marchandize that we had: and he had at the one towne, nine teeth, which were but small, and at the other towne where I was, I had eleuen, which were also not bigge, and we left aboord with the Master, certaine mamillios, wherewith he bought twelue teeth aboord the shippe in our absence: and hauing bought these of them, we perceiued that they had no more teeth: so in the place where I was, one brought to me a smal goate, which I bought, and to the Master of the other place, they brought fiue small hennes, which he bought also, and after that, we sawe there was nothing els to be had, we departed, and by one of the clocke, we met aboord, and then waied, and went East our course eighteene leagues still within sight of land.

Two townes.

The 27. day we ranne twentie leagues.

The 28. the wind varied, and we ranne into the sea, and the wind comming againe off the sea, we fell with the land againe, and the first of the land which we raised, shewed as a great red cliffe round, but not very high, and to the Eastward of that, another smaller red cliffe, and right about that into the land a round hammoke, and greene, which we tooke to be trees. We ranne in these 24. houres, not aboue foure leagues.

The 29. day comming neere to the shoare, we perceiued the red cliffe aforesaide, to haue right vpon the top of it a great heape of trees, and all to the westwards of it full of red cliffes, as farre as we could see, and all along the shoare, as well vpon the cliffes, as otherwise, full of wood: within a mile of the said great cliffe, there is a riuer to the Eastwards, and no cliffes, that we could see, except one small cliffe, which is hard by it. We ranne this day and night, twelue leagues.

The winds that we had in this place, by the reportes of the people, and of those that haue bene there, haue not bene seene often, but in the night, at North off the land, & in the day South off the sea, and most commonly Northwest, and Southwest.

The 30. day, we made our way twentie leagues.

The 31. day, we went our course by the shoare Northwards: this land is all along a low shoare, and full of wood, as all the coast is, for the most part, and no rockes. This morning came out many boates, which went a fishing, which be greater boates then those which we sawe before, so that in some of them there sate fiue men, but the fashion of the boates is all one. In the afternoone about three of the clocke, we had sight of a towne hard by the sea side, which our Pilots iudged to be 25.

leagues to the weſtwards of the Cape, Tres puntas. About foure of the clocke we met with many ſilher boates, but none of them would come neere to vs, ſauing two, of whome we bought certaine ſilhe.

Betwixt theſe two Capes, we haue found the wind freſheſt in the day, and ſpecially about ten of the clocke, with great gales: the nights we found calmeſt. In theſe 24. houres we made way twentie leagues.

The firſt day of Januarie in the morning, we perceiued the lande to riſe higher then it did before, which our Pilots iudged to be the Cape, and hailed in as neere to the land as they could: we ranne this day twenty leagues. January.

The ſecond day in the morning, when we were come neere to the place, our Pilots perceiued that it was not the Cape, as they thought it had bene: we made way this day but eight leagues.

The third day in the morning, we fell with the Cape Tres puntas, and in the night paſſed, as our Pilots ſaid, by one of the Portingals caſtles, which is eight leagues to the weſtwards of the Cape: vpon the firſt ſight of the Cape, we diſcerned it a very high land, and all growen ouer with trees, and comming neere to it, we perceiued two head lands, as it were two Bayes betwixt them, which opened right to the weſtward, and the vttermoſt of them is the Eaſterne Cape, there we perceiued the middle Cape, and the Eaſtermoſt Cape: the middle Cape ſtandeth not aboue a league from the weſt Cape, although the Carde ſheweth them to be three leagues one from the other: and that middle Cape hath right before the point of it, a ſmall rocke ſo neere to it, that it can not be diſcerned from the Cape, except a man be neere to the ſhoare, and vpon the ſame Cape ſtandeth a great heape of trees, and when a man is thwart the ſame Cape, to the Eaſtward, there riſeth hard by it a round greene hommoke, which commeth out of the maine. Cape Tres Puntas.

The third Cape is about a league beyond the middle Cape, and is a high land like to the other Capes, and betwixt the middle, and the third commeth out a litle head or point of a land out of the maine, and diuers rocks hard aboard the ſhoare.

Before we came to the Capes, being about eight leagues off them, we had the lande South-eaſt, and by Eaſt, and being paſt the Capes, the land runneth in againe Eaſt Northeaſt.

About two leagues beyond the farthеſt Cape, there is a low glade about two miles long, and then the land riſeth high againe, and diuers head lands riſe one beyond another, and diuers rocks lie at the point of the firſt head land. The middeſt of theſe Capes, is the neereſt to the Southwards, I meane further into the ſea, then any of the other, ſo that being to the Eaſtward of it, it may be diſcerned farre off, and being ſo to the Eaſtward, it riſeth with two ſmall rockes.

This day we ankered for feare of ouerſhooting a towne, called S. Iohns. We ranne this day not aboue eight leagues. In the afternoone this day, there came a boate of the countrey from the ſhoare, with fiue men in her, and went along by vs, as we thought, to diſcerne our flaggs, but they would not come neere vs, and when they had well looked vpon vs, they departed.

The fourth day in the morning, ſailing by the coaſt, we eſpied a ledge of rockes by the ſhoare, and to the weſtwards of them two great greene hils ioyning together, ſo that betweene them it was hollowe, like a ſaddle, and within the ſaid rockes, the Maſter thought the aforenamed towne had ſtoode, and therefore we manned our boates, and tooke with vs cloth, and other marchandize, and rowed a ſhoare, but going along by the coaſt, we ſawe that there was no towne, therefore we went aboord againe.

From theſe two hils aforeſaid, about two leagues to the Eaſtward, lie out into the ſea almoſt two miles, a ledge of rockes, and beyond that a great Bay, which runneth into the North North-weſtward, and the land in this place lieth North Northeaſt along the ſhoare: but the vttermoſt point of the land in that place that we could ſee, lay Northeaſt, and by Eaſt from vs.

After that we were with a ſmall gale of wind runne paſt that vttermoſt head land, we ſawe a great red cliffe, which the Maſter againe iudged to be the towne of S. Iohns, and then we tooke our boate with marchandize, and went thither, and when we came thither, we perceiued that there was a towne vpon the toppe of the hill, and ſo we went toward it, and when we were hard by it, the people of the towne came together a great ſort of them, and waued vs to come in with a peece of cloth, and ſo we went into a very faire Baye, which lieth to the Eaſtward of the cliffe, whereupon the towne ſtandeth, and being within the cliffe, we let fall our grapnell, and after that we had tarried there a good ſpace, they ſent a boate aboord of vs, to ſhewe vs that they had golde, and they ſhewed vs a peece about halfe a crowne weight, and required to knowe our meaſure, & our weight, that they might ſhew their Captaine thereof: and wee gaue them a meaſure of two elles, and a waight of two Angels to ſhew vnto him, which they tooke, and went on ſhoare, and ſhewed it vnto their Captaine, and then they brought vs a meaſure of two elles, one quarter and a halfe, and one crusado weight of golde, making vs signes that so much they would giue, for the like measure, and lesse they would not haue. After this, we taried there about an howre, and when we saw that they would doe no otherwise, and withall vnderstoode, that all the best places were before vs, we departed to our shippes, and waied, and ranne along the shoare, & went before with our boate, and hauing sailed about a league, we came to a point, where there lay foorth a ledge of rockes, like to the others before spoken of, and being past that people, the Master spied a place, which he said plainly was the towne of Don Iohn: & the night was come vpon vs, so that we could not well discerne it, but we ankered as neere vnto the place as we could.

The towne of Don Iohn.

The fift day in the morning, we perceiued it to be the same towne in deede, and we manned our boates, and went thither, and because that the last yeere the Portingals at that place tooke away a man from them, and after shot at them with great bases, and did beate them from the place, wee let fall our grapnell almost a base shot of the shoare, and there we laye about two howres, and no boates came to vs. Then certaine of our men, with the Hindes boate, went into a Baye, which lieth to the Eastward of the Towne, and within that Baye, they found a goodly fresh riuer, and afterwards they came, and waued to vs also to come in, because they perceiued the Negroes to come downe to that place, which we did: and immediatly the Negroes came to vs, and made vs signes that they had golde, but none of them would come aboord our boates, neither could we perceiue any boates that they had to come withall, so that we iudged that the Portingals had spoiled their boates, because we saw halfe of their towne destroied.

Wee hauing staied there a good space, and seeing that they woulde not come to vs, thrust our boates heades a shoare, being both well appointed, and then the Capitaine of the Towne came downe, being a graue man: and he came with his dart in his hand, and sixe tall men after him, euery one with his dart, and his target, and their darts were all of yron, faire and sharpe, and there came another after them, which caried the Capitaines stoole: we saluted him, and put off our caps, and bowed our selues, and he like one that thought well of himselfe, did not moue his cappe, nor scant bowed his body, and sate him downe very solemnly vpon his stoole: but all his men put off their caps to vs, and bowed downe themselues.

He was clothed from the loines downe, with a cloth of that Countrey making, wrapped about him, and made fast about his loines with a girdle, and his cap of a certaine cloth of the Countrey also, and bare legged, and bare footed, and all bare aboue the loines, except his head.

His seruants, some of them had cloth about their loines, and some nothing but a cloth betwixt their legges, and made fast before, and behind, to their girdles, and caps of their owne making, some like a basket, and some like a great wide purse of beastes skinne.

All their cloth, cordes, girdles, fishing lines, and all such like things which they haue, they make of the barke of certaine trees, and thereof they can worke things very prettily, and yron worke they can make very fine, of all such things as they doe occupy, as darts, fishookes, hooking yrons, yron heades, and great daggers, some of them as long as a wood knife, which be of both sides exceeding sharpe, and bended after the manner of Turkie blades, and the most part of them haue hanging at their left side one of those great daggers.

Their targets be made of such pils as their cloth is made of, and very closely wrought, and they be in forme foure square, and very great, and somewhat longer then they be broad, so that kneeling downe, they make their targets to couer their whole body. Their bowes be short, and of a prettie strength, as much as a man is able to drawe with one of his fingers, and the stringe is of the barke of a tree, made flat, and about a quarter of an yncbe broad: as for their arrowes, I haue not as yet seene any of them, for they had wrapped them vp close, and because I was busie, I coulde not stande about it, to haue them open them. Their golde also they worke very well.

When the Capitaine was set, I sent him two elles of cloth, and two basons, and gaue them vnto him, and he sent againe for a waight of the same measure, and I sent him a weight of two Angels, which he would not take, neither would he sufferthe towne to buy any thing, but the basons of brasse: so that we solde that day 74. basons, vnto the men of the towne, for about halfe an Angel weight, one with another, and nine white basons, which we solde for a quarter of an Angel a peece, or thereabouts.

We shewed them all our other thinges which we had, but they did not esteeme them.

About two of the clocke, the Captaine, who did depart in the morning from vs, came again, and brought with him to present me withall, a henne, and two great rootes, which I receiued, and after made me signes, that the countrey would come to his towne that night, and bring great store of gold, which in deed about 4. of the clocke they did: for there came about 100. men vnder 3.

Captaines,

Captaines, well appointed with their darts, and bowes, and when they came to vs, euery man ſticked downe his dart vpon the ſhoare, and the Captaines had ſtooles brought them, and they ſate downe, and ſent a young man aboord of vs, which brought a meaſure with him of an ell, and one fourth part, and one ſixteene part, and he would haue that foure times for a waight of one Angell, and twelue graines: I offered him two elles, as I had done before for two Angels weight, which he eſteemed nothing, but ſtill ſtucke at his foure meaſures aforeſaid: yet in the ende, when it grew very late, and I made him ſignes that I would depart, he came to foure elles, for the weight aboueſaid, and other wiſe he would not deale, and ſo we departed. This day we tooke for baſons ſixe ounces and a halfe, and one eight part.

The ſixt day in the morning, we manned our boates, and the ſkiffe well, for feare of the Portingals, which the laſt yeere had taken away a man from the other ſhippes, and went on ſhoare, and landed, becauſe they had no boates to come to vs, and ſo the young man which was with vs the night before, was ſent aboord, who ſeemed to haue dealt and bargained before with the Portingals, for he could ſpeake a litle Portuguiſe, and was perfect in weights, and meaſures: at his comming, he offered vs as he had done before, one Angell, and twelue graines, for foure elles, and more he would not giue, and made ſignes, that if we would not take that, we ſhould depart, which we did: but before we did in deede depart, I offered him of ſome rotten cloth three elles for his waight of an Angell, and twelue graines, which he would not take, and then we departed, making ſignes to him that we would goe away, as in deed we would haue done, rather then haue giuen that meaſure, although the cloth was ill, ſeeing we were ſo neere to the places, which we iudged to be better for ſale. Then we went aboord our ſhippes, which lay about a league of, and came backe againe to the ſhoare for ſande, and balaſte: and then the Captaine perceiuing that the boates had brought no marchandiſe, but came onely for water, and ſand, and ſeeing that we would depart, came vnto them, making ſignes againe, to know whether wee would not giue the foure elles, and they made ſignes againe, that we would giue them but three, and when they ſawe that the boates were ready to depart, they came vnto them, and gaue them the weight of one Angell, and twelue graines, which we required before, and made ſignes, that if we would come againe, they would take three elles. So when the boates came aboord, we laied wares in them both, and for the ſpeedier diſpatch, I and Iohn Sauill went in one boate, and the Maſter Iohn Makeworth, and Richard Curligin, in the other, and went on ſhoare, and that night I tooke for my part, fiftie and two ounces, and in the other boate they tooke eight ounces and a quarter, all by one weight, and meaſure, and ſo being very late, we departed, and went aboord, and tooke in all this day three pound.

The ſeuenth day we went a ſhoare againe, and that day I tooke in our boate three pound, 19. ounces, ſo that we diſpatched almoſt all the cloth that we caried with vs, before noone, and then many of the people were departed, & thoſe that remained, had litle golde, yet they made vs ſignes to fetch them ſome latten baſons, which I would not, becauſe I purpoſed not to trifle out the time, but goe thence with ſpeede to Don Iohns towne. But Iohn Sauill, and Iohn Makeworth, were deſirous to goe againe: and I, loth to hinder them of any profite, conſented, but went not my ſelfe: ſo they tooke eighteene ounces of gold, and came away, ſeeing that the people at a certaine crie made, were departed.

While they were at the ſhoare, there came a young fellow, which could ſpeake a litle Portuguiſe, with three more with him, and to him I ſolde 39. baſons, and two ſmall white ſawcers, for three ounces, &c. which was the beſt reckoning that we did make of any baſons: and in the forenoone, when I was at the ſhoare, the Maſter ſolde fiue baſons vnto the ſame fellow, for halfe an ounce of golde.

This fellow, as farre as we could perceiue, had bene taken into the Caſtle by the Portingals, and was gotten away from them, for he told vs, that the Portugals were bad men, and that they made them ſlaues, if they could take them, and would put yrons vpon their legges, and beſides he told vs, that as many Frenchmen, or Engliſhmen, as they could take (for he could name theſe two very well.) they would hang them: he told vs further, that there were 60. men in the caſtle, and that euery yeere there came thither two ſhippes, one great, and one ſmall caruell, and further, that Don Iohn, had warres with the Portingals, which gaue me the better courage to goe to his towne, which lieth but foure leagues from the Caſtle, where hence our men were beaten the laſt yeere.

60. Portingals in the caſtle of Mina.

This fellow came aboord our ſhippe without feare, and aſſone as he came, he demanded, why we had not brought againe their men, which the laſt yeere we tooke away, and could tell vs, that there were fiue taken away by Engliſhmen: we made him anſwere, that they were in England well well vsed, and were there kept till they could speake the language, & then they should be brought againe, to be a helpe to Englishmen in this Countrey: and then he spake no more of that matter.

Our boates being come aboord, we waied, and set saile, and a litle after spied a great fire vpon the shoare, and by the light of the fire we might discerne a white thing, which they tooke to be the Castle, and for feare of ouershooting the towne of Don Iohn, we there ankered, two leagues of the shoare, for it is hard to fetch vpp a towne here, if a shippe ouer shoote it. This day we tooke seuen pound, and fiue ounces of golde.

This towne lieth in a great Baye, which is very deepe.

The people in this place desired most to haue basons, and cloth. They would bie some of them also, many trifles, as kniues, horsetailes, hornes: and some of our men going a shoare, sould a cappe, a dagger, a hat, &c.

They shewed vs a certaine course cloth, which I thinke to be made in France: for it was course wooll, and a small threed, and as thicke as wosted, and stripped with strippes of greene, white, yellow, &c. Diuers of the people did weare about their neckes great beades of glasse of diuers colours. Here also I learned some of their language, as followeth:

Sight of the castle of Coma.

The eight day in the morning, we had sight of the Castle, but by reason of a mist that then fell, we could not haue the perfect sight of it, till we were almost at the towne of Don Iohn, and then it cleered vp, and we saw it, and a white house, as it were a Chappell vpon the hill about it: then we hailed into the shoare, within two English miles of Don Iohns towne, and there ankered in seuen fadom water. Here, as in many other places before, we perceiued that the currant went with the winde.

The land here is in some places lowe, and in some high, and full of wood altogether.

Don Iohns towne described.

The towne of Don Iohn is but litle, of about twentie houses, and the most part of the towne is walled in with a wall of a mans height, made with reede or sedge, or some such thing. Here we staied two or three howres after we had ankered, to see if any man would come vnto vs: and seeing that none did come, we manned our boates, and put in marchandize, and went, and ankered with our boates neere to the shoare: then they sent out a man to vs, who made vs signes, that that was the towne of Don Iohn, and that he himselfe was in the Countrey, and would be at home at the going downe of the Sunne, and when he had done, he required a reward, as the most part of them will doe, which come first aboord, and I gaue him one ell of cloth, and he departed, and that night we heard no more of him.

The ninth day in the morning, we went againe with our boates to the shoare, and there came foorth a boate to vs, who made signes that Don Iohn was not come home, but would be at home this day: and to that place also came another boate from the other towne, a mile from this, which is called Don Deuis, and brought with him gold, to shew vs, making signes that we should come thether. I then left in this place Iohn Sauill, and Iohn Makeworth, and tooke the Hinde, and went to the other towne, and there ankered, and tooke cloth, and went to shoare with the boate, and by and by the boates came to vs, and brought a measure of foure yards long & a halfe, and shewed vs a weight of an Angell, and twelue graines, which they would giue for so much, and not otherwise: so I staied, and made no bargaine. And all this day the barke lay at Don Iohns towne, and did nothing, hauing answer that he was not come home.

The tenth day we went againe to the shoare, and there came out a boate with good store of gold, and hauing driuen the matter off a long time, and hauing brought the measure to a naile lesse then three elles, and their weight to an Angell and twentie graines, and could not bring them to more, I did conclude with them and solde, and within one quarter of an howre, I tooke one pound and a quarter of an ounce of gold: and then they made me signes to tary, til they had parted their cloth vpon the shoare, as their manner is, and they would come againe, and so they went away, and layd the cloth all abroad vpon the land, peece by peece, and by and by one came running downe from the towne to them, and spake vnto them, & foorthwith euery man made as much haste as he could away, and went into the woods, to hide his golde, and his cloth: we mistrusted some knaue

rie, and being waued by them to come a ſhoare, yet we would not but went aboord the Hinde, and perceiued vpon the hill 30. men which we iudged to be Portingals: and they went vp to the toppe of the hill and there muſtered, and ſhewed themſelues, hauing a flagge with them. Then I being deſirous to know what the Hart did, tooke the Hindes boate and went towardes her, and when I came neere to them, they ſhot off two pieces of ordinance which I marueiled at: I made as much haſte as I could to her, and met her boate & Skiffe comming from the ſhoare in all haſte, and wee met aboord together. They ſhewed me that they had bene a ſhoare all that day, and had giuen to the 2. ſonnes of Don Iohn, to either of them 3. yardes and a halfe of cloth, and 3. baſons bet wixt them, and had deliuered him more 3. yards of cloth and the waight of an Angel and 12. graines, and being on land did tarie for his anſwere, and in the meane time the Portingals came running from the hill vpon them, whereof the Negroes a litle before had giuen them warning, and bad them to goe away but they perceiued it not. The ſonne of Don Iohn conſpired with the Portingals againſt them, ſo that they were almoſt vpon them, but yet they recouered their boate and ſet off from the ſhoare, and the Portingals ſhot their caleeuers at them, but hurt no man, and then the ſhippe perceiuing it, ſhot off the 2. pieces aforeſaid among them. Hereupon, we layed baſes in both the boates, and in the Skiffe and manned them well, and went a ſhoare againe, but becauſe of the winde we could not land, but lay off in the ſea about 10. ſcore and ſhot at them, but the hill ſuccoured them, and they from the rocks and from the hilles ſhot at vs with their halfe hakes, & the Negroes more for feare then for loue ſtood by them to helpe them, and when we ſawe that the Negroes were in ſuch ſubiection vnto them that they durſt not ſell vs any thing for feare of them we went aboorde, and that night ꝑ winde kept at the Eaſt, ſo that we could not with our ſhip fetch the Hinde, but I tooke the boate in the night and went aboord the barke to ſee what was there to be done, and in the morning we perceiued the towne to be in like caſe layd with Portingals, ſo wee waued & went along the coaſt. This towne of Iohn de Viſo ſtandeth vpon an hill like the towne of Don Iohn, but it hath bene burned, ſo that there are not paſſing 6. houſes in it: the moſt part of the golde that comes thither comes out of the countrey, & no doubt if the people durſt for feare of ꝑ Portingals bring forth their gold, there would be had good ſtore: but they dare not ſel any thing, their ſubiection is ſo great to the Portingals. The 11. day riming by the ſhoare we had ſight of a litle towne 4. leagues frō the laſt towne that we came from, & about halfe a league from that of another towne vpō a hil, & halfe a league from that alſo of another great towne vpō the ſhoare: whither we went to ſee what could there be done: if we could doe nothing, then to returne to the other towne, becauſe wee thought that the Portingals would leaue the towne vpon our departure. Here grew ſome contention about one Greſham aboorde the Hinde, who refuſed to vndertake further paines without further wages: but the matter was quieted, for Packman tooke the charge which he refuſed, and ſo wee went towards the ſhoare, but the winde ſcanted ſo that we could not doe it. Along from the caſtle vnto this place are very high hilles which may be ſeene aboue all other hilles, but they are full of wood, & great red cliffes by the ſea ſide. The boates of theſe places are ſome what large & bigge, for one of them will carry 12. men, but their forme is alike with the former boats of the coaſt. There are about theſe townes few riuers: their lāguage differeth not frō the language vſed at Don Iohns towne: but euery one can ſpeake 3. or 4. words of Portuguiſe, which they vſed altogether to vs.

The Portingals of the Caſtle of Mina inuaded our men.

The towne of Don Iohn de Viſo.

We ſaw this night about 5. of the clocke 22. boats running along the ſhoare to the Weſtward, whereupon we ſuſpected ſome knauerie intended againſt vs. The 12. day therefore we ſet ſaile and went further along the coaſt, & deſcried more townes, wherin were greater houſes then in the other townes, & the people came out of the townes to looke vpon vs, but we could ſee no boates. Two mile beyond the Eaſtermoſt towne are blacke rocks, which black rocks continue to ꝑ vttermoſt cape of the land, which is about a league off, & then ꝑ land runnes in Eaſt northeaſt, & a ſandy ſhoare againe; vpon theſe black rocks came downe certaine Negroes, which waued vs w̄ a white flag, but we perceiuing ꝑ principal place to be neere, would not ſtay, but bare ſtill along the ſhoare: and as ſoone as we had opened ꝑ point of the land, we raiſed another head land about a league of the point, which had a rocke lying off it into the ſea, & that they thought to be the place which we ſought. When we came almoſt thwart the place they knew it, & we put wares into our boat, & the ſhip being within halfe a mile of the place ancred in 5. fadom water, and faire ground. We went on ſhoare with our boate, and ancred about 10. of the clocke in the forenoone: we ſaw many boates lying vpon the ſhoare, and diuers came by vs, but none of them would come neere vs, being as we iudged afrayed of vs: becauſe that foure men were taken perforce the laſt yeere from this place, ſo that no man came to vs, whereupon we went aboorde againe, and thought here to haue made no ſale: yet towardes night a great lord came downe to the water ſide, and waued vs on ſhoare with a white flagge, and afterwards their Captaine came downe and many men with him, and sate him downe by the shoare vnder a tree: which when I perceiued, I tooke things with me to giue him: at last he sent a boat to call to vs, which would not come neere vs, but made vs signes to come againe the next day: but in fine, I got them to come aboord in offering them things to giue to their captaine, which were two elles of cloth, one latton bason, one white bason, a bottle, a great piece of beefe, & 6. bisket cakes, which they receiued making vs signes to come againe the next day, saying, that their Captaine was Grand Capitane as appeared by those that attended vpon him with their darts, and targets, and other weapons.

Foure men taken away by the Engliſh.

This towne is very great and stands vpon a hill among trees, so that it cannot well be seene except a man be neere it: to the Eastward of it vpon the hil hard by the towne stand two high trees, which is a good marke to knowe the towne. And vnder the towne lieth another hill lower then it, whereupon the sea beates: and that ende next the sea is all great blacke rockes, and beyond the towne in a bay lieth a nother small towne.

The 13. day in the morning wee tooke our boate and went to shoare, and stayed till tenne a clocke and no man came to vs: wee went about therefore to returne aboorde, and when the Negroes sawe that, they came running downe with a flagge to waue vs againe, so wee ancred againe, and then one shewed vs that the Captaine would come downe by and by: wee sawe a saile in the meane time passe by vs, but it was small, and wee regarded it not. Being on shoare wee made a Tilt with our Oares and saile, and then there came a boate to vs with fiue men in her, who brought vs againe our bottle, and brought me a henne, making signes by the sunne, that within 2. houres the marchants of the countrey would come downe and buye all that wee had: so I gaue them 6. Manillios to carry to their Captaine, and they made signes to haue a pledge of vs, and they would leaue vs another man: and we willing to doe so, put one of our men in their boate, but they would not giue vs one of theirs, so wee tooke our man againe, and there tarried for the marchants: and shortly after one came downe arayed like their Captaine, with a great traine after him, who saluted vs friendly, and one of the chiefest of them went & sate downe vnder a tree, where the last yere the Captaine was wont to sit: and at last we perceiued a great many of them to stand at the ende of a hollow way, & behinde them the Portingals had planted a base, who suddenly shot at vs, but ouershot vs, and yet we were in a maner hard by them, and they shot at vs againe before we could ship our oares to get away, but did no hurt. Then the Negroes came to the rocks hard by vs, and discharged Caleuers at vs, and againe the Portingals shotte off their base twise more, and then our ship shot at them, but the rockes and hilles defended them.

M. Robert Gainshers voyage to Guinea in Anno 1554.

Then we went aboord to goe from this place, seeing the Negroes bent against vs, because that the last yeere M. Gainsh did take away the Captaines sonne, and 3. others from this place with their gold, and all that they had about them: which was the cause that they became friendes with the Portingals, whom before they hated as did appeare the last yeere by the courteous intertainement which the Trinitie had there, when the Captaine came aboorde the ship, and brought them to his towne, and offered them ground to build a castle in, and there they had good sales.

The 14. day we waied & plyed backe againe to seeke the Hinde, which in ỳ morning we met, and so we turned both backe to ỳ Eastwards to see what we could do at that place where the Trinitie did sel her 8. frises the last yeere. The Hinde had taken 18. ounces & a halfe more of golde of other Negroes, the day after that we left them. This day about 1. of the clocke we espied certaine boates vpon the sand & men by them, and went to them with marchandises, and tooke 3. ounces of gold for 18. fusts of cloth, euery fusse 3. yardes & a halfe after one Angel, and 12. graines the fusse, and then they made me signes that the next day I should haue golde ynough: so the Master tooke the Hind with Iohn Sauil, and Iohn Makeworth, & went to seeke the place afore said, & I with Richard Pakeman remained in this place, to see what we could doe the next day: and when the Negroes perceiued our ship to go away, they feared that the other would follow, & so sent forth 2. boats to vs with 4. men in them, requiring vs to tary, & to giue them one man for a pledge, and 2. of them should tary with vs for him, so Edward M. Morleis seruant seeing these men so earnest therein offred himselfe to be pledge, & we let him go for 2. of them, one whereof had his waighes and scales, and a chaine of golde about his necke, and another about his arme. They did eate of such things as we had and were wel contented. In the night the Negroes kept a light vpon the shoare thwart of vs, & about 1. of the clocke we hard & saw the light of a base which shot off twise at the said light, and by & by discharged 2. caleuers, which in the end we perceiued to be ỳ Portingals Brigandine which followed vs frō place to place, to giue warning to the people of the countrey, that they should not deale with vs. The 15. day in the morning the captaine came downe with 100. men with him, and brought his wife, & many others brought their wiues also, because their towne was 8. mile within the Countrey, and they determined to lie by the sea side till they had bought what they would.

A Portingals Brigandine.

Then

When he was come he ſent our man aboord, and required to haue two men pledges, and he himſelfe would come aboord, and I ſent him 2. of whome he tooke but one, and ſo came aboord vs, hee and his wife, with diuers of his friends, & brought me a goate, and two great rootes, & I gaue him againe a latton baſon, a white baſon, 6. mantillios, and a bottel of Malmeſie, and to his wife a ſmal caſket. After this we began to make our meaſure and weight: and hee had a waight of his owne which held one Angel and 14. graines, and required a meaſure of 4. elles and a halfe. In fine we concluded the 8. part for one Angel, and 20. graines, and before wee had done, they tooke mine owne weight and meaſure.

The 16. day I tooke 8. li. 1. ounce of gold: and ſince ꝑ departure of the Hinde I hard not of her, but when our pledge went into the countrey the firſt night, he ſaid he ſaw her caſt ancre aboue fiue leagues from this place. The 17. day I ſold about 17. pieces of cloth, and tooke 4. li. 4. ounces and a halfe of gold. The 18. day the captaine deſired to haue ſome of our wine, and offered halfe a ducket of gold for a bottel: but I gaue it him freely, and made him and his traine drinke beſides. And this day alſo I tooke 5. li. 5. ounces of gold. The 19. day we ſold about 18. clothes, and tooke 4. li. 4. ounces and one quarter of golde.

The 20. day we tooke 3. li. 6. ounces and a quarter of gold. The 21. we tooke 8. li. 7. ounces and a quarter. The 22. 3. li. 8. ounces & a quarter. And this night about 4. of the clocke the captaine who had layen all this while vpon the ſhoare, went away with all the reſt of the people with him.

The 23. day we were waued a ſhoare by other Negroes, and ſolde them cloth, caſkets, knues, and a dozen of bels, and tooke 1. li. 10. ounces of gold. The 24. likewiſe we ſold bels, ſheetes, and thimbles, and tooke 2. li. 1. ounce, and a quarter of golde. The 25. day we ſold 7. dozen of ſmal bels, and other things, and then perceiuing their gold to be done, we waued & ſet ſaile and went to leeward to ſeeke the Hinde, and about 5. of the clocke at night we had ſight of her, and bare with her, and vnderſtood that ſhe had made ſome ſales. The 26. day we receiued out of the Hinde 48. li. 3. ounces, & 1. eight part of gold, which they had taken in the time that we were from them. And this day vpon the requeſt of a Negro that came vnto vs from a captaine, we went to ſhoare with our marchandiſe, and tooke 7. li. and 1. ounce of gold. At this place they required no gages of vs, but at night they ſent a man aboord vs, which lay with vs all night, becauſe we might know we that they would alſo come to vs the next day. The 27. day in both our ſhippes we tooke 8. li. 1. ounce, three quarters and halfe a quarter of golde. The 28. wee made ſales for the companie, and tooke 1. li. and halfe an ounce of golde. The 29. day in the morning we heard 2. caleeuers ſhot off vpon the ſhoare, which we iudged to be either by the Portingals, or by the Negroes of the Portingals: we manned our boates and armed our ſelues and went to ſhoare, but could finde nothing: for they were gone. The 30. day we made more ſales for the companie, and for the Maſters.

The 31. we ſent our boate to ſhoare to take in ſand for balaſt, and there our men mette the Negroes, with whom they had made ſale the day before a fiſhing, which did helpe them to fill ſande, and hauing no gold, ſold fiſh to our men for their handkerchiefs, and nightkerchiefs.

The 1. day of Febuarie we waued and went to another place, and tooke 1. li. 9. ounces 3. quarters of gold. Febuarie.

The 2. day we made more ſales: but hauing viewed our victuals, we determined to tarie no long time vpon the coaſt, becauſe the moſt part of our drinke was ſpent, and that which remained grew ſowre. The 3. and 4. dayes we made ſome ſales, though not greatly, and finding the winde this 4. day to come off the ſhoare, wee ſet ſaile & ranne along the ſhoare to the Weſtwards: vpō this coaſt we found by experience, that ordinarily about 2. of the clocke in the night the winde coms off the ſhoare at Northnortheaſt, and ſo continueth vntill 8. of the clocke in the morning: and al the reſt of the day and night it comes out of the Southweſt: and as for the tide or currant vpon this ſhoare, it goeth continually with the winde. The 5. day we continued ſayling, and thought to haue met with ſome Engliſh ſhips, but found none. They returne for England.

The 6. day we went our courſe Southweſt to fetch vnder the line, and ranne by eſtimation 24. leagues. The 7. day we ranne about 20. leagues, the 8. day, 12. leagues, the 9. day, 16. leagues, the 10. day, 18. leagues, the 11. day, 16. leagues, and ſo many more the 12. day.

The 13. day we thought our ſelues by our reckoning to be cleare of the Cape dos Palmas, and ranne 12. leagues.

The 14. day we ranne 16. leagues, the 15. 20. leagues, and ſo many more the 16. day.

The 17. day in the after noone the winde came vp at the Northweſt with a Ternado, and foule weather continued all day and night, with thunder & lightning: we ranne this day not aboue 4. leagues. The 18. day we had another Ternado, the winde being at Northweſt, and by Weſt: we ranne this day 12. leagues. The 19. day we ranne 10. leagues. The 20. day not aboue 5. leagues, by reaſon of the great change of windes, and foule weather.

The 21. we ranne our course with a good gale 25. leagues.

The 22. day Christopher Rawlinson our Cooper, who had bene sicke for the space of one moneth before, died about 8. of the clocke at night, whose will I made before his death. This night we descried two saile of tal ships, but were content to passe quietly, and therefore went not roome with them. This day by our reckoning we were thwart of the Cape de Monte, which is to the Westward of the Riuer de Sestos, about 30. leagues.

Cape de Monte.

The 23. day we receiued William Iobber for our Cooke, perceiuing that the Cooke himselfe was weake and not able to doe that seruice for which he was shipped.

The 24. day we ranne about 20. leagues, the 25. day 25. leagues, the 26. day 16. leagues.

The 27. day we had a great Ternado out of the Southeast with much raine, which continued not aboue one houre, and then the winde came againe to the Southwest with a good gale: and we made way this day 12. leagues.

The 28. day we had another Ternado out of the North, and Northnorthwest, but continued not long, and so became calme againe presently.

The 29. day we ranne (because of the varietie of windes,) not aboue 7. leagues.

March. The first day of March in a Ternado we lost the Hinde, whereupon we set vp a light, and shot off a piece but could not heare of her, so that then we strooke our saile and taried for her, and in the morning had sight of her againe, 3. leagues a sterne of vs. We ranne as we accompted this day 6. leagues.

The 2. day we ranne 16. leagues, the 3. 20. leagues, the 4. 20. leagues more.

The 5. day we had sight of a Caruel of about 100. tunnes to the windewards of vs, and when she was thwart of vs we cast about and gaue her the chase vntill 4. of the clocke, but could not fetche her.

Cape Verde in latitude 14. degrees and a halfe. From this day till the 22. of this moneth wee went our course directly. Upon which 22. day we found our selues to be in the height of Cape Verde, which standes in 14. degrees, and a halfe.

From this day till the 29. day we continued our course, and then we found our selues to be in 22. degrees. This day one of our men called William King, who had bene long sicke, died in his sleepe, his apparell was distributed to those that lackt it, and his money was kept for his friendes, to be deliuered them at our comming home.

The 30. day we founde our selues to be vnder the Tropike.

The 31. day we went our course, and made way 18. leagues.

April. From the 1. day of April to the 20. we went our course, and then found our selues to be in the height of the Açores.

May. The seuenth day of May wee fell with the South part of Irelande, and going on shoare with our boate had fresh drinke, and two sheepe of the countrey people, which were wilde Kernes, and we gaue them golde for them, and bought further such other victuals as wee had neede of, and thought would serue vs till we arriued in England.

The 12. of May we fell with the Isle of Lundy in the Channel of Bristoll, which lyeth about 5. leagues from the maine land of England.

The 13. day wee came betwixt the flat Holmes and the steepe Holmes, which are about 7. leagues from Bristoll.

Their arrival at Bristow. The 14. day with the afternoone tide we went into the Port of Bristoll called Hungrode, and there ancred in safetie, and gaue thankes to God for our safe arriuall.

The second voyage made by M. William Towrson to the coast of Guinea, and the Castle of Mina, in the yere 1556.

with the Tiger of London, a shippe of 120. tunnes, the Hart of London of 60. tunnes, and a Pinnesse of 16. tunnes.

THe 14. day of September, the yeere aboue said, at 8. of the clocke in the morning wee departed from Harwiche, and directed our course for the Isle of Sillye, to meete there with the Hart and Pinnesse, which were rigged and victualled at Bristoll, but arriuing there the 28. day wee founde them not, and therefore after long lying at hull to tarrie for them, but not espying them, wee turned backe to Plimmouth the 12. day of October, and being there, the Hart and the Pinnesse

November. came to vs; so that the 15. of Nouember we all departed together from Plimmouth at one of the clocke clocke in the afternoone, and the 28. day we had ſight of the Iſle of Porto Sancto, and the next day in the morning of Madera.

The 3. day of December we fell with the Iſle of Palma, and the 9. we were thwart of the Cape Blanke, and found there certaine Caruels fiſhing for Pargoes. December.

The 19. we found our ſelues in the height of Sierra Leona, and all this day wee ranne thwart of certaine Currants, which did ſet to the Weſt Southweſtward ſo faſt as if it had bene the ouerfall of a ſand, making a great noyſe like vnto a ſtreame or tyde gate when the water is ſhoale: and to proue whether we coulde finde ground in this place, we ſounded and had 150. fadom, and no ground, and ſo departed. Sierra Leona.

The 30. of December we fell with the coaſt of Guinea, and had firſt ſight of it about 4. leagues off. The beſt marke that wee could take of the place to knowe it, was three hilles, which laye Northeaſt and by Eaſt from vs: betwixt the Northermoſt two hilles, there are two high and great trees ſtanding in ſight as it were a ſailes breadth one from another, and a litle more to the Northweſtwards are certaine hommocks. Hauing ſailed ſomewhat into the ſhoare, wee tooke our ſelues to be ſhotte ſomewhat paſt the Riuer de Seſtos, ſo that we kept about to fetche it. And a litle after wee had ſight of three ſailes of ſhippes, and two pinneſſes which were in the weather of vs. and hauing ſight of them, we made our ſelues readie to meete them, and halled off our ſhips to fetche the winde as neere as wee coulde: and hauing ſayled about an houre or two, they alſo went about, and went as wee went to make themſelues readie, and when wee had them in chace, they went away from vs: but when they had made themſelues readie, they kept about againe, and came with vs very finely appointed with their ſtreamers, and pendants and enſignes, and noyſe of trumpets very brauely: ſo when we met, they had the weather of vs, and wee being determined to fight if they had bene Portingals, waued them to come vnder our lee, which they denied ſtoutly: then we demaunded of them whence they were, and they ſaide of Fraunce, we tolde them againe that we were of London in England. They aſked of vs what Portingals wee had ſeene, wee anſwered, none but fiſhermen: then they tolde vs that there were certaine Portingall ſhippes gone to the Mina to defende it, and that they mette with another at the Riuer de Seſtos, which was a ſhippe of two hundreth, which they had burned, and had ſaued none but the Maſter and two or three Negroes, and certaine others which were ſore burned, which they left a ſhoare there. Then they deſired to come aboorde of vs with their boates to talke with vs, and wee gaue them leaue. Then the Captaine of the Admirall and diuers others came aboorde very friendly, deſiring vs to keepe them company becauſe of the Portingals, and to goe to the Mina with them: wee tolde them that we had not watered, and that we were but nowe fallen with the coaſt, and they ſhewed vs that we were fiftie leagues paſt the Riuer de Seſtos: notwithſtanding there was water ynough to bee had, and they would helpe vs to water with their owne boates, becauſe they would haue our companie. And tolde vs further, that they had bene ſixe weekes vpon the coaſt, and had gotten but three tunne of graines amongſt them all: and when wee had heard them, we made our reckoning that although the Mine were cleare, yet if they did goe before vs they would marre our market; and if it were not cleare, then if the Portingals were there and did take them, they would vnderſtande that wee were behinde, and ſo woulde waite for vs. And further wee made accompt, that if wee went with them wee ſhould doe as well as they if the coaſt were cleare: if it were not cleare, then by them, wee were aſſured to be the ſtronger. Therefore hauing conſidered thus much of their gentle offers, wee tolde them that the next day wee would conferre more largely of the matter. Whereupon they deſired mee to come the next day to dinner to them, and to bring the Maſters of our ſhippes with mee, and ſuch marchants as I thought good, promiſing to giue vs water out of their owne ſhippes if we would take it, or els to tarie with vs, and helpe vs to water with their owne boates and Pinneſſes. They admit certaine Frenchmen into their companie.

The one and thirtieth day in the morning, the Admirall ſent his boate aboorde for mee, and I tooke our Maſters and certaine of our Marchants and went to him, who had prouided a notable banquet for vs, and intreated vs very friendly, deſiring vs ſtill to keepe his companie, promiſing that what victuals were in his ſhippes, or other thinges that might doe vs pleaſure vntill the ende, wee ſhould haue the one halfe of it, offering vs, if wee woulde, to furle his Flagges, and to be at our commaundement in all things.

In the ende we agreed to come to an ancre, and to ſende our boate on ſhoare with the Admirals boate, and one of his Pinneſſes, and an Almaine which they had brought out of France, to ſeeke water, as for our Pinneſſe ſhe came to an ancre to ſea ward of vs al, and would not come at vs. All this night the boates continued on ſhoare.

The firſt day of January our boats came to vs againe and had found no riuer. Whereupon we waied January.

waued and set saile, and ancred againe at another Riuer.

The 2. day we went into the Riuer and bargained, and tooke 5. small Eliphants teeth.

The 3. day we tooke 5. more.

An assault vpon Eliphants. The 4. day the French Admirall and we tooke 15. small teeth. This day we tooke 30. men with vs & went to seeke Eliphants, our men being all well armed with harquebusses, pikes, long bowes, crossebowes, partizans, long swords, and swordes and bucklers: we founde 2. Eliphants which we strooke diuers times with harquebusses and long bowes, but they went away from vs and hurt one of our men. The 5. day we set saile and ranne along the coast.

The Riuer of S. Andros. The 6. day we fell with the Riuer of S. Andros, at which place the lande is somewhat high to the Westward of the Riuer, and a faire bay also to the Westward of it: but to the Eastwarde of it, it is lowe land.

The 7. day we went into the Riuer and found no village, but certaine wilde Negroes not accustomed to trade. It is a very great Riuer, and 7. fadom water in some places at the entring: here we filled water, and after set saile.

The 8. day we sailed along the shore and came to the red cliffes, and went forwarde in sayling the 9. day also.

Captaine Blundel the French Admirall. The 10. day we came together to confer with Captaine Blundel Admiral of the French ships, Ierom Baudet his vice Admiral, and Iohn de Orleans master of a ship of 70. tunne, and with their marchants, and agreed that when God should sende vs to any place where we might make sale, that we should be of one accord and not one of vs hurt the market of the other, but certaine of our boates to make the price for all the rest, and then one boate to make sale for euery shippe. This night our boates going to the shoare met with certaine Negroes, who said that they had gold, and therefore we here cast ancre.

Allowe. The 11. day all the day we tooke but one halfe Angel waight of 4. graines, which we tooke by hand. for the people of this place had no waight: the Negroes called this place Allowe.

The 12. day we ranne along the coast and found but one towne, but no boates would come out to vs, and therefore we went our course.

The 13. day I tooke my boate and went along the shoare, & passed by diuers small townes, and was waued to come on shoare at 3. places, but the sea went so high vpon the shoare, that it was not possible for vs to land, neither could they come to vs if they had had boates, as I could see none but at one place, where there was one that would haue come vnto vs, but the land wash went so fore, that it ouerthrew his boate, and one of the men was drowned, which the people lamented, and cried so fore, that we might easily heare them, and they got his body out of the sea, and caried it amongst them to their towne.

Dondowe, a great towne. The 14. day we came within Saker shot of the castle, & straight way they set forth an Almade to descrie vs, and when they perceiued that we were no Portingals, they ran within the towne againe: for there is a great towne by the castle, which is called by the Negroes, Dondow. Without this there lie two great rocks like Islands, and the castle standeth vpon a point which sheweth almost like an Island. Before we came at this castle, we found the land for 5. or 6. leagues to bee high land, and about 7. leagues before we came to the castle, low land vntill we came at the castel, and then we found ꝑ land high againe. This castle standeth about 5. leagues on this side the Cape Trois points. Here I tooke the boate with our Negroes and ranne alongst the shoare, till I came to the Cape & found two small townes, but no boates at them, neither any traffique to be had. At these places our Negroes did vnderstand them well, and one of them went a shoare at all the places, and was well receiued of them: this night we ancred at the Cape Trois points.

The castel of Myna.

Cape Trois points. The 15. day I tooke our boate & went along the shoare, & about 3. leagues beyond the Eastermost part of the Cape we found a faire bay where we ran in, and found a small towne, and certaine boates which belonged to the same towne, but the Negroes in a long time would not come to vs, but at the last by the perswasion of our owne Negroes one boat came to vs, and with him we sent George our Negro a shoare, and after he had talked with them, they came aboord our boats without feare, & I gaue to their captaine a bason, & two strings of Margarets, & they shewed vs about 5. duckets waight of golde, but they required so much for it that we would not take it, because the Frenchmen and we had agreed to make price of our goods all in one boat, & the price being made then euery man to sell in his owne boate, and no man to giue more then the price which should be set by vs all. This place is called Bulle, & here the Negroes were very glad of our Negroes and shewed them all the friendship they could, when they had tolde them that they were the men that were taken away, being now againe brought by vs.

Bulle.

The Negroes here shewed vs, that a moneth since there were 3. ships that fought together, & the two

two ſhippes put the other to flight, and before that at the caſtle of Mina there were 4. ſhippes of the Portingals, which met with one French man, which Frenchman cauſed them all to flee, which ſhippe we tooke to be the Roebarge: for the Frenchmen of our company iudged her to be there about that time, with her pinnaſſe alſo: and further, that after her went a ſhippe of twelue ſcore, named the Shawdet, all alone, and after her a ſhippe of foure ſcore, and both for the Mina. And there were two others alſo which they left, one at Cape Verde, called the Leuriere of Diepe, and another at the riuer De Seſtos, beſides theſe three, which all this time be in our companie, whoſe names be theſe:

The Eſpoyer of Hableneff, which is the Admirall, whoſe Captaine is Denys Blundell.
The Leuriere of Roan Viceadmirall, whoſe Maſter is Ierom Bawdet.
The other is of Hunfleur, whoſe Maſter is called Iohn de Orleance.

The ſixteene day, I went along the ſhoare, with two pinneſſes of the Frenchmens, and found a Baye, and a freſh riuer, and after that went to a towne called Hanta, twelue leagues beyond the Cape. At this towne our Negroes were well knowen, and the men of the towne wept for ioy, when they ſaw them, and demaunded of them where Anthony, and Binne had bene: and they told them, that they had bene at London in England, and ſhould be brought home the next voyage. So, after this, our Negroes came aboord, with other Negroes, which brought a weight with them, which was ſo ſmall, that we coulde not giue them the halfe of that which they demaunded for it. Hanta.

The Negroes here told vs, that there were fiue Portingall ſhippes at the Caſtle, and one pinneſſe, and that the Portingals did much harme to their Countrey, and that they liued in feare of them, and we told them againe, that we would defend them from the Portingals, whereof they were very glad.

The 17. day we went a ſhoare, and the Frenchmen with vs, but did no great good, the Negroes were ſo vnreaſonable, we ſolde foure ſcore Manellios for one ounce of golde.

Then we departed, and went to Shamma, and went into the riuer, with fiue boates well appointed with men and ordinance, and with our noiſes of trumpets, and drummes, for we thought here to to haue found ſome Portingals, but there were none: ſo we ſent our Negroes a ſhoare, and after them went diuers of vs, and were very well receiued, and the people were very glad of our Negroes, ſpecially one of their brothers wiues, and one of their aunts, which receiued them with much ioy, and ſo did all the reſt of the people, as if they had bene their naturall brethren: we comforted the Captaine, and tolde him, that he ſhould not feare the Portingals, for we would defende him from them: whereupon we cauſed our boates to ſhoote off their baſes, and harquebuſſes, and cauſed our men to come on ſhoare with their long bowes, and they ſhot before the captaine, which he, with all the reſt of the people, wondred much at, ſpecially to ſee them ſhoote ſo farre as they did, and aſſaied to draw their bowes, but could not. When it grew to be late, we departed to our ſhips, for we looked euery howre for the Portingals. " And here the Negroes ſhewed vs, that there was an Engliſh ſhippe at the Mina, which had brought one of the Negroes againe, which Robert Gaynſh tooke away. Shamma. The Negroes brought home by our men. " Note.

The 18. day we went into the riuer, with no leſſe ſtrength then before, and concluded with the Negroes to giue them for euery fuffe two yardes and three nailes of cloth, and to take for it one Angell Ducket: ſo that we tooke in all 70. Duckets, whereof the Frenchmen had fortie, and we thirtie.

The 19. day we went a ſhoare, euery man for himſelfe, and tooke a good quantitie of golde, and I for my part tooke foure pound and two ounces and a halfe of golde, and our Parts boate tooke 21. ounces. At night, the Negroes ſhewed vs, that the next day the Portingals would be with vs, by land or by ſea: and when we were ready to depart, we heard diuers harquebuſſes ſhoote off in the woods by vs, which we knew to be Portingals, which durſt come no neerer to vs, but ſhot off in the woods, to ſee if they could feare vs, and ſo make vs to leaue our traffike.

The 20. day, we manned our fiue boates, and alſo a great boate of the Frenchmens, with our men, and the Admirals, twelue of them in their murrions, and coſſets, and the reſt all well appointed, with foure trumpets, a drumme, and a fife, and the boate all hanged with ſtreamers of ſilke, and pendants very faire, and went into the riuer, and traffiked, our man of warre lying off, and on in the riuer to waft vs, but we heard no more of the Portingals. This day the Negroes told vs, that there were certaine ſhippes come into Hanta, which towne is about two leagues to the weſtward of this place.

The 21. day we manned our boates againe, and went to a place a league from this, to the weſtwards, and there found many Negroes, with another Captaine, and ſolde at the ſame rate that that we had done with the others.

The 22. day, we went a shoare againe, and trafficked in like sort quietly, and I tooke fourr pound and fiue ounces of golde.

The 23. day, about night, the Negroes with their Captaine, came to vs, and tolde vs that the king of Portingals shippes were departed from the Castle, meaning the next day to plye to the windward, to come to vs, giuing vs warning to take heede to our selues: we told them againe, that we were very glad of their comming, and would be ready at all times to meete them: and to assure them that we were glad of it, we sounded our trumpets, and shot off certaine bases, whereof the Negroes were very glad, and requested vs, that if the Portingals sought to hinder our traffike, to shew them all the extremitie that we could, promising vs, that if they came by land, they would aduertise vs thereof.

The 24. we went a shoare with our trumpets, and drummes, and trafficked, and I had the Captaine of the towne to dinner.

Fiue saile of Portingals descried.

The 25. day, we being a shoare, our ships had descried fiue sayles of the King of the Portingals, and our shippes shotte off ordinance to call vs away, and we there we euery man his caske a shoare for water, and went to our shippes, and by that time we had waied, and giuen order one to another what to doe, it was night, so that that night nothing was done: we set sayle, and lay close all night, to get the winde if we could: we were neere some of them, and one shotte off a peece, which we iudged to be the Admirall of the Portingals, to cause the rest to come and speake with him: so all this night we made our selues ready for fight.

The 26. we came in with the shoare, and had sight of the Portingals, where they rid at anker, and we bare with them, and we gaue all our men white scarffs, to the ende that the Frenchmen might knowe one the other, if we came to boording: but the night came vpon vs, that we could not fetch them, but we ankered within Demy culuering shot of them.

The 27. day we waied, and so did the Portingals, and about eleuen of the clocke, we had the winde of them, and then we went roome with them, which when they perceiued, they kept about to the shoare againe, and we after them, and when they were so neere the shoare, that they could not well runne any further on that boord, they kept about againe, and lay to the seaward, and then we kept about with them, and were a head of them, and tooke in our topsailes, and caried for them, and the first that came vp, was a small barke, which sailed so well, that she cared not for any of vs, and caried good ordinance, and assoone as she came vp, she shot at vs, and ouershot vs, and then she shot at the Admiral of the Frenchmen, and shot him through in two or three places, and went forth a head of vs, because we were in our fighting sailes: then came vp another caruell vnder our lee in like case, which shotte at vs, and at the Frenchman, and hurt two of his men, and shot him thorough the mayne maste. And after them came vp the Admirall vnder our Lee also, but he was not able to doe vs so much harme as the small shippes, because he caried ordinance higher then they, neither were we able to make a good shot at any of them, because our shippe was so weake in the side, that she laide all her ordinance in the sea: wherefore we thought to lay the great shippe aboord, and assoone as the French Admiral went roome with him, he fell a sterne, & could not fetch him, and after he fel a sterne of two caruels more, and could fetch none of them, but fell to leeward of them all: and when he was to leeward, he kept about to the shoare ward, and left vs, and then we put out our topsailes, and gaue them chase, and both the other Frenchmen kept the wind, and would not come neere vs, and our owne shippe was a sterne, so that she could not come to vs: and after we had followed them about two howres to the seaward, they kept about againe towards the shoare, thinking to pay vs as they went along by, & to haue the wind of the French Admirall, which before ran in towards the shoare, & we kept about with them, and kept still the wind of them, thinking that our Viceadmiral, and the other, would haue followed vs, as we willed them to doe: but after that the Portingall was past by them, and euery one had shot at vs & our Viceadmirall, both our Viceadmiral, and the two Frenchmen, and our owne pinnesse, left vs in the lapse, and ran to seaward, and we ran still along, and kept the wind of them, to succour the French Admiral, who was vnder all of their lees, and when they met with him, euery one went roome with him, & gaue him the broad side, and after they cast about againe, and durst not boord him, because they saw vs in the weather of them, or els without doubt they had taken or sunke them: for three of them which were the smallest, went so fast, that it was not possible for a ship to boord them, and caried such ordinance, that if they had had the weather of vs, they would haue troubled three of the best ships that we had, and as for their Admirall, and Viceadmirall, they were both notably appointed.

The French forsake our men.

When the Frenchman was cleare of them, he laye as neere the winde as he could, and wee followed them still towardes the shoare, and then the Admirall ranne to Sea after the

reſt, and left vs all alone: and when the Portingals perceiued that we were alone, and gaue them chaſe, they kept about with vs, and we with them, to keepe the wind of them, and we ranne ſtill within base ſhot of them, but they ſhot not at vs, becauſe we had the weather of them, and ſaw that they could doe vs no hurt: and thus we followed one another vntill night, and in the night we loſt them, but as for all the reſt of our ſhippes, they packed on all the ſailes that they could, and ranne to ſea, and, as they themſelues confeſſe, they prayed for vs, but as for helpe at their hands we could haue none.

The 28. day we met with our Viceadmirall, our pinneſſe, and two of the French men, and the third was fled, which was a ſhippe of foure ſcore tunne, and belonged to Roan: and when I had the ſight of the reſt of our ſhippes, I tooke our ſkiffe, and went to them, to knowe, why they loſt vs in ſuch a caſe, and Iohn Kire made me anſwere, that his ſhippe would neither reare nor ſteere, and as for the pinneſſe, Iohn Daueis made me anſwer, that ſhe would doe nothing, and that he coulde carry her no further, for her rudder was broken, ſo that the Hart was glad to towe her. Then I went to the French Admirall, and found himſelfe to be a man of good ſtomake, but the one halfe of his men were ſicke, and dead, and then I talked with the ſmaller French man, and he made me anſwer, that he could doe nothing, ſaying, that his ſhippe would beare no ſaile, and had ſixteene alſo of his men dead, and ſicke, ſo he made vs plaine anſwer, that he was able to doe nothing. After this, the Frenchmen durſt not anker for feare of the Portingals.

The 29. day, the Maſter of the pinneſſe came to vs, and ſaide, that they were not able to keepe her any longer, and then we viewed her, and ſeeing that there was no remedie, her rudder with all the yron worke being broken both aloft and belowe, we agreed to breake her vp, and to put the men into the Hart. So we tooke out of her foure baſes, one anker, and certaine fire wood, and ſet her on fire, and afterwards ranne along the coaſt. The Engliſh pinneſſe burnt vp.

The thirtie day, we went into the ſhoare, and ſpake with certaine Negroes, who tolde vs, that ſome French ſhippes had bene there, but we could not bargaine with them, they were ſo vnreaſonable.

The 31. day, I went to ſhoare, but did not traffike.

The firſt day of February we waied, ſeeing we could not bring the Negroes to any reaſon, and came to another place, which ſtandeth vpon a hill. February.

The ſecond day we waied hence, and had ſight of a ſaile, which departed from the place aforeſaid, and ſhot off two peeces for his pinneſſe, which was a ſhoare: then I tooke our boate, and the Frenchmen tooke theirs, and went with the ſaile to deſcry him, and when we had rowed about a league, we had ſight of the pinneſſe: the ſhippe was gone ſo farre, that we could not reach her: but the pinneſſe we found to be the French men, which ranne away from vs, when we were in fight with the Portingals. After this, we went to the ſhoare, and found the Negroes vnreaſonable in their prices, and deale not with them.

The third day, I went to a towne foure leagues from vs, and ſhot off two peeces, and the Captaine came to vs, and I ſent Thomas Rippen a land, who knewe the Captaine, and alſoone as he came a ſhoare, the Captaine knew him, and diuers of the Negroes, who then began to aſke for me, and hauing told the Captaine that I was in the boate, he made no longer tarying, but by and by cauſed two boates to be put to the ſea, and came to me himſelfe, and when he ſawe me, he cried to me, before he came to the boate, and ſeemed to be the gladdeſt man aliue, and ſo did all the companie that knew me, and I gaue him a reward, as the manner of the Countrey is, and cauſed the Frenchmen to giue another, promiſing the next day to giue him wine: and that night, becauſe it was late, he would not talke of any price, but left me a pledge, and tooke another of me, and ſo departed.

The fourth day, going on ſhoare, I found that the ſhippes of France, which had bene there, had done much hurt to our markets, but yet I tooke fiue ounces and a halfe of gold.

The fift day I tooke eight ounces and one eight part of golde: but I ſawe that the Negroes perceiued the difference in cloth, betwixt ours and that which the Frenchmen had, which was better, and broader then ours: and then I told Captaine Blundel, that I would goe to the Leeward, becauſe I perceiued, that being there where his cloth was ſolde, I ſhould doe no good, whereof he was ſorie.

The ſixt day there came an Almade, and Negroes aboord me, requeſting me to come to their towne, for they had much golde, and many marchants: and ſo I went, and found their olde Captaine gone, and another in his place: but this night we did no good, becauſe the marchants were not come downe: ſo he required a pledge, which I let him haue, and tooke another of him.

The ſeuenth day, George our Negro came to vs, who had followed vs at the leaſt thirtie leagues, George the Negro.

leagues in a small boate, and when he came, the Negroes and we soone concluded of price. I tooke this day fiue pound and one ounce, & three quarters of gold. This Negro we had left at Shamma, at the time of the fight, who said, that he sawe the fight being a shoare, and that when we were gone from the Portingals, the Portingals came into their riuer, and tolde them, that the Englishmen had slaine two Portingals with a peece, which was in deede out of our shippe, and they required harbour there, but the Captaine of Shamma would not suffer them.

Two Portingals slaine by the English.

The eight day, we tooke nineteene pound, three ounces and a halfe.

The ninth day, we tooke two pound, sixe ounces, and a halfe.

The tenth day, three pound.

The 11. day, came to vs Ierome Bawder, the Viceadmirall of the French men, and his pinnesse, and he shewed vs, that where we left them, there was no good to be done, and said, he would goe to the Eastward, but we tolde him he should not: and thereupon commaunded him to goe to his companie, which he was appointed to be with, which he refused to doe, vntil we had shot three or foure peeces at their pinnesse, and when the ship saw that, she kept about, and ranne to seaward, & durst come no neerer to vs, so the pinnesse went after her. We tooke this day 1. pound, 5. ounces.

The French men diuided by the English.

The 12. day, there came one of the French mens pinnesse to vs, laden with cloth, and would haue made sale: but I would not suffer him, and therefore tooke him, and sent him aboord of our shippe, and caused him to ride there all day. We tooke fiue pound, sixe ounces, and a halfe.

The 13. day, we tooke in sande to balaste our shippe.

The 14. day, we tooke of some Negroes foure ounces of golde.

The 15. we ranne farther along the shoare.

The 16. we came to another towne.

The 17. day, I went a shoare, and vnderstoode that three of the Portingall ships were at the castle, and the other two at Shamma. The Captaine of this towne was gone to the principal towne, to speake with their King, and would returne shortly as they tolde me, and so he did, and brought me a weight and measure, and I sent a man to see that principall towne, and their King. The Portingall shippes rid so neere vs, that within three howres they might be with vs, yet we were all contented to tary for sales.

The 18. day, certaine of the Kings seruants came to vs, and we tooke one pound, two ounces, and one eight part of gold.

The 19. day, we tooke fiue pound, and one ounce.

The 20. day, one pound and foure ounces.

The 21. I tooke foure pound and one ounce, and the Negroes enquired for fine cloth, and I opened two peeces, which were not fine enough, as they said, but seeing that we had no other, they bought of them. At night I prouided a gift, or present, and sent one merchant, and a marriner with it to the King, to certifie him of our want of victuals, by reason whereof, we could not stay long: for in deede we searched our shippe, and the most part of our beere was leaked out of all our barrels.

The 22. day, we tooke three ounces and a halfe.

King Ebaane.

The 23. our men came from the King Ebaane, and tolde vs, that he had receiued them very friendly, but he had litle golde, but promised, if we would tary, to sende into all his countrey, for gold for vs, and he willed our men at their comming home, to speake to our king, to send men and prouision into his countrey, to build a Castle, and to bring Tailers with them, to make them apparell, and good wares, and they should be sure to sell them: but for that present, the Frenchmen had filled them full of cloth.

The offer of the king to the English.

This towne standeth about foure leagues vp in the land, and is, by the estimation of our men, as bigge in circuite as London, but the building is like to the rest of the countrey. They haue about this towne, great store of the wheate of the Countrey, and they iudge, that on one side of the towne, there were 1000. rikes of wheate, and another sort of corne, which is called mill, which is much vsed in Spaine. About this towne, they keepe good watch euery night, and haue to warne the watchmen certaine cords made fast ouer their waies, which leade into the towne, and certaine bels vpon them, so that if any man touch the cordes, the bels ring, and then the watchmen runne foorth of their watch houses, to see what they be: and if they be enemies, if they passe the cord, they haue prouision with certaine nets hanged ouer the waies, where they must passe, to let fall vpon them, and so take them, & otherwise then by the waies it is not possible to enter the towne, by reason of the thickets, and bushes, which are about the same, and the towne is also walled round about with long cords, and bound together with sedge, and certaine barkes of trees.

A towne in circuite as big as London.

A prettie deuise to deceyue the enemie.

When our men came to the towne, it was about fiue of the clocke in the morning, for there they

trauell alwaies in the night, by reaſon of the heate of the day: and about nine of the clocke, the King ſent for them, for there may no man come to him, before he be ſent for, and then they would haue caried their preſent with them: but the Negroes told them, that they muſt be three times brought before him, before they might offer their gift: and when they came to him, he talked with them, and receiued them very friendly, and kept them about halfe an howre, and then they departed, and after that, ſent for them againe three times, and laſt of all, they brought him their preſent, which he receiued thankefully, and then cauſed a pot of wine of Palme to be brought forth, and made them drinke, and before they drinke, both here, and in all the Countrey, they vſe certaine ceremonies. The Kings friendly intertainment of our men.

First, they bring forth their pot of drinke, and then they make a hole in the ground, and put ſome of the drinke into it, and they caſt the earth vpon it, which they digged forth before, and then they ſet the pot vpon the ſame, then they take a litle thing made of a gourd, and with that they take out of the ſame drinke, and put it vpon the ground in three places, and in diuers places they haue certaine bunches of the pils of Palme trees, ſet in the ground before them, and there they put in ſome drinke, doing great reuerence in all places to the ſame Palme trees. Their ceremonies in drinking.

All theſe ceremonies firſt done, the King tooke a cup of golde, and they put him in wine, and he dranke of it, and when he dranke, the people cried all with one voice, Abaan, Abaan, with certaine other wordes, like as they cry commonly in Flanders, vpon the Twelfe night, the kinning drinkes: and when he had drunke, then they gaue drinke to euery one, and that done, the King licenſed them to depart, and euery one that departeth from him, boweth three times towards him, and waueth with both hands together, as they bowe, and then doe depart. The King hath commonly ſitting by him, eight or ten ancient men, with gray beards.

This day we tooke one pound and ten ounces of golde.

The 24. day, we tooke three pound and ſeuen ounces.

The 25. we tooke three ounces, and three quarters.

The 26. we tooke two pound and ten ounces.

The 27. two pound and fiue ounces.

The 28. foure pound, and then ſeeing that there was no more golde to be had, we waied, and went forth.

The firſt day of March, we came to a towne called Mowre, but we found no boates nor people there: but being ready to depart, there came two Almades to vs from another towne, of whome we tooke two ounces and a halfe of golde: and they tolde vs that the Negroes that dwelled at Mowre, were gone to dwell at Lagwaa. March. Mowre. Lagwaa.

The ſecond day, we came thwart of the Caſtle, and about two leagues off, and there ſawe all the fiue Portingall ſhippes at anker, and this day by night, we fetched Shamma. They returne.

The third day, we had ſight of one tall ſhippe, of about two hundreth tunne in the weather of vs, and within leſſe then two leagues of our ſhippes, and then we ſawe two more a sterne of her, the one a ſhippe of fiue hundreth or more, and the other a pinneſſe, and theſe were a newe fleete at that preſent arriued out of Portingall. Whereupon we waied, and made ſhift to double out of the land, and then the winde comming to the South ſouthweſt, the Hart going roome with them, fell three leagues to the leewards of vs. Theſe Portingals gaue vs the chaſe from nine of the clocke in the morning, till fiue at night, but did no good againſt vs. At laſt, we perceiuing the Admiral to be farre a sterne of his companie, becauſe his maine toppemaſt was ſpent, determined to caſte about with them againe, becauſe we were ſure to weather them, and the winde being as it was, it was our beſt courſe: but the Hart was ſo farre to the leeward, that we could not doe it, except we would looſe her companie, ſo that we tooke in ſome of our ſailes, and went roome with him: which when he perceiued, he loffed too, and was able to lie as neere as he did before. At night, when we came to him, he would not ſpeake to vs: then we aſked of his companie, why he went ſo roome, and they made excuſe that they were able to beare no ſaile by, for feare of bearing their fortoppmaſt ouer boord: but this was a ſimple excuſe.

The fourth day, being put from our watring place, we began to ſeeth our meate in ſalt water, and to rebate our allowance of drinke, to make it indure the longer: and ſo concluded to ſet our courſe thence, for our owne countrey.

The twelfe of March, I found my ſelfe thwart of Cape Dos palmas.

The 16. day, we fell with the land, which we iudged to be the Cape Miſerado, about which place, is very much high land. Cape Miſerado.

The 17. we lay South ſouthweſt, with a prettie gale.

The 18. day, we loſt ſight of the Hart, and I thinke the wilfull Maſter ranne in with the ſhoare shoare of purpose to loose vs, being offended that I told him of his owne folly.

The 19. day, we bare a small saile, to tary for the Hart, but could not descry her.

Two smal Ilands by Sierra Leona. Note.

The 27. day, we fell in sight of two small Islands, which lye by our reckoning fiue leagues off the headlande of Sierra Leona: and before we came in sight of the same Islands, we made our reckoning to be foxtie or thirtie leagues at the least off them. Therefore all they that saile this way, are to regarde the currants, which sette North Northwest, or els they may be much deceiued.

Aprill.

The 14. of Aprill, we met with two great shippes of Portingall, which although they were in the weather of vs, yet came not roome with vs, whereby we iudged that they were bounde for Callicut.

The 18. day, we were in the heigth of Cape De Verde.

The 23. one of our companie, called Edmond Perkine, deceased.

The 24. we were directly vnder the Tropike of Cancer.

May.

The first day of May, Henrie Wilson our Steward died: and the next day died Iohn Vnderwood.

The fift day, we were in the height of S. Michael.

The 9. day, we met with two tall shippes, bound for New found lande, as we iudged, being Biskaines, but as it well fel out, we had the weather of them, so that they were able to doe nothing to vs.

The 20. day, we met with a shippe of 60. tunne, and we thought it had bene the Hart, but it was not, we iudged it to be an English shippe.

The 22. we met with the same shippe againe, but she was in the weather of vs, and so kept the wind still.

A French brauado.

The 23. we had sight of a shippe in the weather of vs, which was a Frenchman, of 90. tunne, who came with vs as stoutly and as desperately as might be, and comming neere vs, perceiued that we had bene vpon a long voyage, and iudging vs to be weake, as in deede we were, came neerer vs, and thought to haue laide vs aboord, and there kept vp some of his men in armour, and commaunded vs to strike saile: whereupon we sent them some of our stuffe, crosse barres, and chaine shot, and arrowes, so thicke, that it made the vpper worke of their shippe flee about their eares, and we spoiled with all his men, and toare his shippe miserably with our great ordinance, and then he beganne to fall a sterne of vs, and to packe on his sailes, and to get away: and we hearing that, gaue him foure or fiue good peeces more for his farewell, and thus we were rid of this Frenchman, who did vs no harme at all. We had aboord vs a Frenchman a Trumpetter, who being sicke, and lying in his bed, tooke his trumpet notwithstanding, and blewe, till he could blow no more, and so died.

The 26. we had sight of another saile, & we went roome to haue spoken with her, but could not.

The 28. we conferred together, and agreed to goe into Seuerne, and so to Bristol, but the same night we had sight of the Lizard, and by reason of the winde, we were not able to double the lands end, to goe into Seuerne, but were forced to beare in with the Lizard.

The 29. day, about nine of the clocke in the morning, we arriued safely in Plymmouth, and praised God for our good arriuall.

The third and last voyage of Maister William Towrson, to the coast of Guinie, and the Castle de Mina, in the yeere, 1557.

THe 30. day of January, the yeere aboue sayd, we departed out of the Sounde of Plymmouth, with three shippes, and a pinnesse, whereof the names were these:

1. The Minion, Admirall of the fleete.
2. The Chrystopher, Viceadmirall.
3. The Tyger.
4. A pinnesse, called the Vnicorne: being all bound for the Canaries, and from thence, by the grace of God, to the coast of Guinie.

It is to be vnderstood, that at this time, there was warre betwixt England and France.

The next day, being the last of this moneth, in the afternoone, we mette with two Hulkes of Dantzick, the one called the Rose, a shippe of 400. tunnes, and the other called the Vnicorne of 150. tunnes, the Master of the Rose was called Nicholas Masse, and the Master of the Vnicorne, Melchior White, both laden at Bourdeaux, and for the most part, with wines. When we came to them, we caused them to hoise foorth their boates, and to come, and speak with vs, and we examined euery one of them a part, what Frenchmens goods they had in their shippes, and they said, they

they had none: but by the contrarieties of their tales, and by the ſuſpition which wee gathered of their falſe charter parties, we perceiued that they had French mens goods in them: we therefore cauſed one of them to fetche vs his bils of lading, and becauſe hee denied that he had any, wee ſent certaine with him, who cauſed him to goe to the place where hee had hid them, and by the differences of his billes of lading, and his talke, we gathered as before, that they had Frenchmens goods. Whereupon wee examined them ſtraightly, and firſt the purſer of the Vnicorne which was the ſmaller ſhippe: he confeſſed that they had 32. tunnes and a hogſhead of a Frenchmans. Then we examined the Maſter in like caſe, and he acknowledged the ſame to be true. Then wee examined alſo the Maſter of the great ſhippe, and he confeſſed that hee had 128. tunnes of the ſame Frenchmans, and more they would not confeſſe, but ſaide that all the reſt was laden by one Peter Lewgues of Hamburge, to bee deliuered to one Henry Summer of Camphire, notwithſtanding all their letters were directed to Hamburge, and written in Dutch without, and within in French.

When they had confeſſed that they had thus much French mens goods within their ſhippes, we conferred together what was beſt to be done with them. William Cretton and Edward Selman were of the opinion, that it ſhould bee good either to carie them into Spaine, and there to make ſale of the goods, or els into Ireland, or to returne backe againe into Englande with them if the winde would permit it. But I, waying what charge we had of our Maſters, firſt by mouth, and afterwards by writing, that for no ſuch matter wee ſhoulde in any caſe prolong the time, for feare of looſing the voyage, and conſidering that the time of the peere was very farre ſpent, and the money that wee ſhould make of the wines not very much, in reſpect of the commoditie which wee hoped for by the voyage, perſwaded them that to goe into Ireland the winde being Eaſterly as it was, might be an occaſion that wee ſhould be locked in there with that winde, and ſo looſe our voyage, and to carie them into Spaine (ſeeing they ſailed ſo ill that hauing all their ſailes abroade, we kept them companie onely with our foreſailes, and without any toppe ſailes abroade, ſo that in euery two dayes ſayling, they would haue hindered vs more then one, and beſides that the winde being Eaſterly) we ſhould not be able to leaze the coaſt with them: beſides all this the loſſe of time when we came thither was to be conſidered, wherupon I thought it not good to carie them any further.

And as for carying them into England, although the winde had bene good as ... as not, conſidering what charge we had of our Maſters, to ſhift vs out of the way for feare of ... by reaſon of the warres, I held it not in any wiſe conuenient.

But notwithſtanding al this, certaine of our companie not being herewith ſatiſfied, went to our Maſter to know his opinion therein, who made them a plaine anſwere, that to carry them into any place, it was not the beſt way nor the profite of their Maſters. And he tolde them further, that if the time were prolonged one moneth longer before they paſſed the Cape, but a fewe men would goe the voyage. All theſe things conſidered, we all pauſed, and determined at the laſt, that euery man ſhould take out of the hulks ſo much as he could wel beſtow for neceſſaries, and the next morning to conclude what ſhould be further done with them. So we tooke out of them for vs 14. tunnes and a halfe of wine, and one tunne we put into the pinneſſe.

The Frenchmens goods ſeazed, in the time of the warre vpon the loſſe of Calis.

More we tooke out one hogſhead of Aquauitæ.

Sixe cakes of roſſen.

A ſmall haller for tyes: and certaine cheſſenuts.

The Chriſtopher tooke out,

Ten tunnes of wine, and one hogſhead.

A quantitie of Aquauitæ.

Shall lines.

Cheſſenuts.

Sixe double baſes with their chambers. And their men broke vp the hulks cheſtes, and tooke out their Compaſſes, and running glaſſes, the ſounding leade and line, and candles: and caſt ſome of their beefe ouer boord, and ſpoiled them ſo much, that of very pitie we gaue them a Compaſſe, a running glaſſe, a lead and a line, certaine bread and candles, and what apparell of theirs we could finde in their ſhip, we gaue them againe, and ſome money alſo of that which William Crompton tooke for the ranſome of a poore Frenchman, who being their Pilot downe the Riuer of Bourdeux, they were not able to ſet him aſhoare againe by reaſon of the foule weather.

The Tyger alſo tooke out of the ſmaller hulke, 6. or 7. tunnes of wine, one hogſhead of Aquauitæ; and certaine roſſen, and two Baſes he tooke out of the great hulke.

The 1. day of Febuarie in the morning, we all came together againe ſauing W. Crompton, who ſent vs word that he was contented to agree to that order which we ſhould take. Febuarie.

Now Edward Selman was of this opinion, that it was not best to let the ships depart, but put men into them to carrie them into England, which thing neither wee nor our Master would agree vnto, because we thought it not good to vnman our ships going outward, considering how dangerous the time was: so that in fine we agreed to let them depart, and giue them the rest of the wine which they had in their ships of the Frenchmens for the fraight of that which we had taken, and for their ordinance, rossen, Aquauitæ, chessenuts, and other things which the company had taken from them. So we receiued a bil of their hands, that they confessed how much Frenchmens goods they had, and then we let them depart.

The 3. day in the morning we found a great leake in the sternme of our ship, and in one houre pumped 400. strokes, and besides we found that our boltsprete and foremaste were both sprung, that wee coulde not well beare any sailes vpon them, and finding our selues to be 24. leagues or thereabout North from Cape finister, wee bare with the Tyger and shewed the Master that wee would runne South to runne vnder the Cape to stoppe our leake, and fish our masts, which Richard Packman agreed vnto: then we bare with the Christopher, and shewed them therof in like case, but the Master answered nothing thereto. Yet thinking that hee knowing our necessitie would haue followed vs, we ranne South to haue the Cape aboorde, and so did the Tyger, but the Christopher kept her course South and by West, and would not come neere vs, so that in the afternoone we were forced to goe roome with him againe, and refuse the going with the Cape, putting both our mast and ship in great danger, which with the helpe of the carpenters in 3. houres in smooth water might haue bene mended.

The 4. day in the morning the Tyger sprong the woolings of her boltsprete, and so was forced to take in her topsailes and mainesaile, and with her foresaile lay to the Westwarde to mende the same againe, and we followed her, but the Christopher did not.

The 5. day we reckoned our selues to be in the height of Cape S. Vincent.

The 7. day we met with the winde at South with gusts of raine, lightning, and thunder, and so continued all night following the winde, sometimes South, and sometimes Southsouth west: but alwayes as soone as the gusts were done, the winde came againe to the Northeast. This night we were in the height of Porto Sancto.

The 10. day we reckoned our selues to be 25. leagues from the Grand Canarie, and this day about 9. of the clocke our pinnesse brake her rudder, so that we were forced to towe her at the sterne of the Minion, which we were able to doe, and yet kept company with the rest of our ships. About 11. of the clocke this day we had sight of the Grand Canarie.

The 11. day when we came to the Iland we perceiued that it was the Ile of Tenerif, and then in deede we had sight of the Grand Canarie, which lieth 12. leagues to the Eastwards of Tenerif: and because the road of Tenerif is foule ground, and nothing was there to be gotten for the helping of our pinnesse, hauing the winde large, we agreed to goe with the Grand Canarie.

The 12. day we came into the roade of the towne of Canarie, which lyeth one league from the same towne. And after we had shot off diuers pieces of ordinance to salute the towne and the castle, the gouernour and captaines of the Iland sent to vs which were the captaines of the shippes, requiring vs to come a shoare. And when we came to them they receiued vs very friendly, offering vs their owne Iennets to ride to the towne, and what other friendship they could shew vs: and we went to the towne with two English Marchants which lay there, and remained in their house that day. The second day following we came aboorde to deliuer our marchandise, and to get our pinnesse mended.

Two English Marchants Ligers in the Grand Canarie.

The 14. day came into the roade the Spanish fleete which was bounde to the Emperours Indies, which were in nomber nineteene saile, whereof 6. were shippes of 400. and 500. a piece, the rest were of 200. 150. and of 100. When they were come to an ancre they saluted vs with ordinance, and so wee did them in like case. And afterwards the Admirall (who was a knight) sent his pinnesse to desire me to come to him, and when I came to him hee receiued mee friendly, and was desirous to heare somewhat of the state of England and Flanders. And after he had made me a banquet I departed, and I being gone vnto the boate, hee caused one of his gentlemen to desire Francisco the Portingale which was my interpreter, to require mee to furle my flagge, declaring that he was Generall of the Emperours fleete. Which thing (being come aboord) Francisco shewed me: and because I refused to furle it, but kept it footh still, certaine of the souldiers in the shippes, shotte diuers harquebush shotte about the shippe, and ouer the flagge: and at the same time there came certaine gentlemen aboorde our shippe to see her: to whome I said, that if they would not cause those their men to leaue shooting, I would shoote the best ordinance I had through their sides. And when they perceiued that I was offended they departed, and caused their men of warre

and ſouldiers to ſhoote no more, and afterwards they came to mee againe, and tolde me that they had puniſhed their men. That done, I ſhewed them the ſhippe and made them ſuch cheere as I coulde, which they receiued very thankfully: and the day following they ſent for mee to dine with them, and ſent me word that their General was very ſorie that any man ſhould require me to ſtrike my flagge, and that it was without his conſent: and therefore hee requeſted mee not to thinke any vngentilenes to be in him, promiſing that no man of his ſhould miſdemeane himſelfe.

The 17. day we ſet ſaile in the roade of Grand Canarie, and proceeded on our voyage.

The 20. in the morning we had ſight of the coaſt of Barbarie, and running along the ſhoare we had ſight of the riuer del Oro, which lieth almoſt vnder the tropike of Cancer. Riuer del Oro.

The 21. day we found our ſelues to be in 20. degrees and a halfe, which is the height of Cape Blanke. The 25. we had ſight of the land in the bay to the Northward of Cape Verde.

The 26. I tooke Franciſco and Francis Caſtelin with mee, and went into the pinneſſe, and ſo went to the Tiger which was neerer the ſhoare then the other ſhips, and went aboord her, and with her and the other ſhippes we ranne Weſt and by South, and Weſt Southweſt, vntill about 4. of the clocke, at which time we were hard aboorde the Cape, and then we ranne in Southweſt, and beyond the Cape about 4. leagues we found a faire Iſland, and beſides that 2. or 3. Iſlands, which were of very high rocks, being full of diuers ſorts of ſea foule, and of pigeons, with other ſorts of land foules, and ſo many, that the whole Iſland was couered with the dunge thereof, and ſeemed ſo white as if the whole Iſland had bene of chalke, and within thoſe Iſlands was a very faire bay, and hard aboord the rocks 18. fadom water, and faire ground. And when we perceiued the baye, and vnderſtanding that the Frenchmen had a great trade there, which we were deſirous to know, wee came to an ancre with the Tyger. And after that the Minion and the Chriſtopher ancred in like caſe: then we cauſed the pinneſſe to runne beyonde another Cape of land, to ſee if there were any place to trade in there. Frances Caſtelme. 4. Iſlands. A great trade of the Frenchmen at Cape Verde.

It being neere night I tooke our cocke and the Tygers ſkiffe, and went to the Iſland, where we got certaine foules like vnto Gannards: and then I came aboorde againe and tooke two of the Gannards which we had taken, and caried them to the Captaine of the Chriſtopher, and when I had talked with him, I founde him not willing to tarie there, neither was I deſirous to ſpend any long time there, but onely to attempt what was to be done. The Maſter of the Chriſtopher tolde me he would not tarie, being not bound for that place.

The 27. the Captaine of the Tyger and Edwarde Selman came to me, and Iohn Makeworth from the Chriſtopher, and then we agreed to take the pinneſſe, & to come along the ſhoare, becauſe that where we ridde no Negroes came to vs, and the night before our pinneſſe brought vs worde, that there was a very faire Iſland. And when I came beyond the point I found it ſo, and withal a goodly Bay, and we ſawe vpon the maine certaine Negroes which waued vs on ſhoare, and then we came to an ancre with the pinneſſe, & went a ſhoare with our cocke, and they ſhewed vs where their trade was, and that they had Elephants teeth, muſke, and hides, and offered vs to fetch downe their captaine, if we would ſend a man with them, and they would leaue a pledge for him: then we aſked them when any ſhippe had bene there, and ſome of them ſaid not in 8. moneths, others, in 6. moneths, and others in 4. and that they were Frenchmen. A faire Iſland where the French trade. Elephants teeth, muſke, and hides.

Then we perceiuing the Chriſtopher not willing to tarie, departed from them, & ſet ſaile with the pinneſſe & went aboord the Tyger. And I vnderſtoode of ſome contention betwixt the Maſter of the Minion, and the captaine of the Chriſtopner not worth the reporting.

The 10. day of March we fell with the coaſt of Guinea, 5. leagues to the Eaſtward of Cape de Monte, beſide a riuer called Rio de palmas. March.

The 11. we went to the ſhoare, & found one man that could ſpeake ſome Porteguiſe, who told vs that there were 3. French ſhips paſſed by: one of them 2. moneths paſt, & the other 1. moneth paſt. At this place I receiued 19. Elephants teeth, and 2. ounces and halfe a quarter of gold.

The 12. we ſet ſaile to goe to the riuer de Seſtos. The Riuer de Seſtos.

The 13. at night we fell with the ſame riuer.

The 14. day we ſent in our boates to take water, and tomaged our ſhippes, and deliuered ſuch wares to the Chriſtopher and Tyger, as they had neede of.

The 15. we came together, and agreed to ſend the Tyger to another riuer to take in her water, and to ſee what ſhe could do for graines. After that we tooke marchandize with vs, and went into the riuer, and there we found a Negro which was borne in Lisbone, left there by a ſhip of Portingale which was burned the laſt yeere at this riuer in fighting with 3. Frenchmen: and hee tolde vs further, that two moneths paſt there were 3. Frenchmen at this place, and 6. weekes paſt there were two French ſhippes at the riuer, and 15. dayes paſt there was one. All which ſhippes were gone towards the Mine. This day we tooke but fewe graines.

The 19. day considering that the Frenchmen were gone before vs, and that by reason of the vnwholsome ayres of this place 14. of our men in the Minion were fallen sicke, wee determined to depart, and with all speede to goe to the Mina.

The 21. wee came to the riuer de Potos, where some of our boates went in for water, and I went in with our cocke, and tooke 12. small Elephants teeth.

The 23. day, after wee had taken as many teeth as we could get, about 9. of the clocke wee set saile to goe towards the Mina.

The 27. day being by my reckoning 20. leagues from the Cape Trespoints, our pinnesse broke one of the gudgions of her rudder, so that we were forced to tow her. This day also we called the Botelwaine before vs, and layd to his charge certaine matters, wherein he had misdemeaned himselfe: but vpon his submission & intreatie of pardon, and promise of better behauiour, we (desirous of peace and quietnes) forgaue him.

The 28. we mended our pinnesses rudder.

The 29. we ranne along the coast.

The 31. we came to Hanta, and made sale of certaine Manillios.

Aprill 1558. The first of April we had sight of fiue saile of Portingals, whereupon we set saile and went off to sea to get the winde of them, which wee shoulde haue had if the winde had kept his ordinary course, which is all the day at the Southwest, and West Southwest: but this day with a flawe it kept all the day at the East, and East Southeast, so that the Portingals had the winde of vs, and came roome with the Tyger and vs vntill night, and brought themselues all saue one, which sailed not so well as the rest, within shotte of vs: then it fell calme, and the winde came vp to the South west, howbeit it was neere night, and the Christopher by meanes of her boate, was about foure leagues to the leewards of vs. We tacked and ranne into the weather of the Admirall, and three more of his companie, and when we were neere him, we spake to him, but he would not answere: then we cast about and lay in the weather of him; and casting about hee shotte at vs, and then we shot at him, and shotte him foure or fiue times through. They shot diuers times through our sailes, but hurt no man. The Tyger and the pinnesse because it was night, kept out their sailes and would not meddle with them: after wee had thus fought together two houres or more, and would not lay him aboorde because it was night, we left shooting one at the other, and kept still the weather of them. Then the Tiger and the pinnesse kept about and came to vs, and afterwards being neere the shoare, we 3. kept about and lay to the sea, and shotte off a piece to giue warning to the Christopher.

They discrie fiue saile of the Portingals.

The fight.

This night about twelue of the clocke being very little winde, and the Master of the Tiger a sleepe, by the euill worke of his men the shippe fell aboorde of vs, and with her sheare hookes ouer our maine saile, and her boate being betwixt vs was broken and sunke, with certaine Marchandise in her, and the shippes wailes were broken with her outleger: yet in the ende we cleared her without any more hurt, but she was in hazard to be broken downe to the water.

The second day we had sight of the Christopher, and were neere vnto her, so that I tooke our boate and went to her. And when I came thither, they shewed mee, that after the Portingals had left vs, they went all roome with him, and about twelue a clocke at night mette him, and shot at him, and hee at them, and they shotte him though the sailes in diuers places, and did no other great hurt. And when wee had vnderstoode that they had bene with him as well as with vs, we agreed altogether to seeke them (if wee might finde them,) and keepe a weather our places of trafique.

The 3. we ranne all day to the Southwest wards to seeke the Portingals, but coulde haue no sight of them, and halled into the shoare.

The fourth day when we had sight of land, we found that the currant had set vs thirtie leagues to the Eastwards of our reckoning, which we wondered at: for the first lande wee made, was Lagua. Then I caused our boate to be manned, and the Christophers also, and went to the shoare and tooke our Negro with vs. And on shoare wee learned that there were foure French shippes vpon the coast; one at Perinnen, which is sixe leagues to the Westwarde of Lagua: another at Weamba, which is foure leagues to the Eastward of Lagua: a third at Perecow, which is foure leagues to the Eastward of Weamba: and the fourth at Egrand, which is foure leagues to the Eastward of Perecow.

Lagua. Perinnen. Weamba, Perecow. Egrand.

When we had intelligence of these newes, we agreed to goe to ꝑ Eastwards with the Frenchmen to put them from their trafique, and shotte off two or three pieces in our boates to cause the shippes to way: and hauing bene about one houre vnder saile, we had sight of one of the French men men vnderſaile, halling off from Weamba to whome wee gaue chaſe, and agreed in the night for feare of ouerſhooting them, that the Minion ſhould firſt come to ancre, & after that about 3. houres, the Tyger and the Chriſtopher to beare along all night.

The 5. day we found 3. of the French ſhips at ancre: one called La foye de Honfleur, a ſhippe of 220. tunnes, another called the Ventereuſe or ſmal Roebarge of Honfleur, of 100. tunnes, both appertayning to Shawdet of Honfleur, the 3. was called the Mulet de Batville a ſhippe of 120. tunnes, and this ſhippe belonged to certaine Marchants of Roan.

When we came to them we determined to lay the Admiral aboorde, the Chriſtopher the Vice-admiral, and the Tyger the ſmalleſt: but when we came neere them they wayed, and the Chriſtopher being the headmoſt & the weathermoſt man, went roome with the Admirall: the Roeberge went ſo faſt that we coulde not fetche her. The firſt that wee came to was the Mulet, and her wee layd aboorde and entred our men, and tooke her, which ſhippe was the richeſt except the Admirall. For the Admirall had taken about 80. li. of gold, and the Roeberge had taken but 22. pound, and all this we learned of the Frenchmen, who knewe it very well: for they were all in conſort together and had bene vpon the coaſt of Mina 2. moneths and odde dayes: howbeit the Roeberge had bene there before them with another ſhip of Diepe, and a Caruell which had beaten all the coaſt, and was departed one moneth before our arriuing there, & they 3. had taken about 700. li. of gold. The English boorde the Frenchmen.

As ſoone as we had layd the ſhip aboorde, and left certaine men in her to keepe her, we ſet ſaile and gaue chaſe to the other 2. ſhips, & chaſed them al day and night, & the next day vntil 3. a clocke in the afternoone, but we could not fetch them: and therefore ſeeing that we brought our ſelues very farre to leeward of our place, we left the chace, & kept about againe to goe with the ſhoare.

The 7. day I ſent for the captaine, marchants & maſters of the other ſhips, and when they came we wayed the gold which we had from the Frenchmen, which waped 50. li. and 5. ounces of gold, this done we agreed to put men out of euery ſhip into the priſe to keepe her. 50. pound of golde taken in the French priſe.

The 12. day we came to the further place of the Mine called Egrand, and being come to an ancre diſcharged all the marchants goods out of the priſe, and would haue ſold the ſhip with the victuals to the Frenchmen, but becauſe ſhe was leake they would not take her, but deſired vs to ſaue their liues in taking them into our owne ſhips: then we agreed to take out the victuals and ſinke the ſhippe, and deuide the men among our ſhips.

The 14. at night wee made an ende of diſcharging the priſe, and deuided all the Frenchmen except 4. which were ſicke and not able to helpe themſelues, which 4. both the Chriſtopher and the Tyger refuſed to take, leauing them in their ſhip alone in the night, ſo that about midnight I was forced to fetch them into our ſhip.

The 15. of April, mouing our companie for the voyage of Binnie, the moſt part of them all refuſed it. The 16. ſeeing the vnwillingnes of the companie to goe thither, we determined to ſpend as much time vpon the coaſt as we could, to the end we might make our voyage, & agreed to leaue the Minion here at Egrand, the Tyger to go to Pericow which is 4. leagues off, & the Chriſtopher to goe to Weamba, which is 10. leagues to the wetherward of this place: and if any of them both ſhould haue ſight of more ſailes then they thought good to meddle withall, to come roome to their felowes, to wit, firſt the Chriſtopher to come with the Tyger, and then both they to come with vs. Binnie.

We remained in this place called Egrand vntil the laſt day of April, in which time many of our men fel ſicke, and 6. of them died. And here we could haue no trafique with the Negroes but 3. or 4. dayes in the weeke, and all the reſt of the weeke they would not come at vs. We here loſt one ancre and broke a cable, and in the waying of another ancre ſome of our men were hurt. Our men die of ſickenes.

The 3. of May not hauing the pinneſſe ſent vs with cloth from the other ſhips as they promiſed, we ſold French cloth, and gaue but 3. yards thereof to euery fuſſe. May.

The 5. day the Negroes departed, and tolde vs they would come to vs againe within 4. dayes, which we determined there to tarie, although we had diuers of our men ſicke.

The 8. day al our cloth in the Minion being ſold, I called the company together, to know whether they would tarie the ſale of the cloth taken in the priſe at this place or no: they anſwered, that in reſpect of the death of ſome of their men, and the preſent ſicknes of 20. more, they would not tarry, but repaire to the other ſhips, of whome they had heard nothing ſince the 27. of April: and yet they had our pinneſſe with them, onely to carry newes from one to another. Sickneſſe.

The 9. day we determined to depart heuce to our felowes, to ſee what they had done, and to attempt what was to be done at the towne of Don Iohn.

The 10. day in the morning we ſet ſaile to ſeeke the Chriſtopher and the Tyger.

The 11. day the captaine of the Chriſtopher came to vs, and told vs that they could finde ſmall doings at the places where they had bene.

The 12. William Crompton and I in our small pinnesse went to the Tyger and the Christopher at Perenine.

The 13. we sent away the Tyger to Egrande, because we founde nothing to doe at Perenine, worth the tarying for.

The 14. our great pinnesse came to vs, and presently we put cloth into her, and sent her backe to Weamba where she had bene before, and had taken there 10. li. of golde.

The 15. the Minion came to vs, and the next day we went a shoare with our boates, and tooke but one ounce of golde.

Mowre. The 19. day hauing set saile we came to an ancre before Mowre, and there we taried 2. dayes, but tooke not an ounce of golde.

The 21. we came to an ancre before Don Iohns towne.

The 22. we manned our boats and went to shoare, but the Negroes would not come at vs: then the Captaine of the Christopher and I, tooke a Skiffe and 8. men with vs, and went and talked with the Negroes, and they said that they would send a man to the great towne, where Don Iohn himselfe laye, to aduertise him of our comming.

The great towne of Don Iohn.

The 23. we went a shoare againe, & the Negroes told vs that this day the marchants of Don Iohn would come downe: so we taried there vntill night, and no man would come to vs: but diuers of the Negroes made vs signes to depart.

The 24. the captaine of the Christopher tooke his boate & went to Mowre, and when he came thither certaine Negroes came to him to know the price of his wares, but in the end there came an Almade, which he iudged came from the castle, & caused all the Negroes to depart from him: and when he saw they would come no more to him, he went a shoare and tooke certaine men with him, and then the Negroes cast stones at them, & would not suffer them to come vp to their towne. And when they saw that, they tooke certaine of their Almades, & put them to the sea, & afterwards departed. The same morning I went a shoare at Don Iohns towne & tooke a white flag with me, but none of the Negroes coulde come to me, which caused vs to iudge that the Portingals were in the towne. After this our boate came to vs well manned, and I sent one man vp to the towne with a white flagge in his hand, but when he was come thither all the Negroes went away and would not speake with him. Then I sent one alone into the woods after them, but they in no case would come to vs. When we saw that, we tooke 12. goates and 14. hennes, which we found in the towne, and went aboord without doing any further hurt to the towne: and when I came aboord, I found our pinnesse come frō Cormatin, which had taken there 2. li. 5. ounces of gold. Then after much a doe with the froward Mariners, we went thitherwards with our ship, & the Christopher went to Mowre. The 25. day the Master of the Christopher sent his boate to the shoare for balaste, and the Negroes would haue beaten the companie from the shoare, whereupon the companie resisted them, and slewe and hurt diuers of them, and hauing put them to flight, burned their towne and brake all their boates. The 26. day our pinnesse came to vs from Cormatin, and had taken 2. li. 11. ounces of gold: and Iohn Shirife told vs that the Negroes of that place were very desirous to haue a ship come backe againe to their towne. The 27. we wayed and went to Cormatin.

Cormatin.

A fight with the Negroes.

The 28. the Christopher came to vs from Mowre, and tarried there two dayes.

June. The second day of June the Tiger came to vs from Egrande, and the pinnesse from Weamba, and they two had taken about 50. li. of golde since they departed from vs.

The 4. day we departed from Cormatin to ply vp to Shamma, being not able to tarrie any longer vpon the coast for lacke of victuals, and specially of drinke.

The 7. day we had sight of 5. of the king of Portingals ships, which came to an ancre beside the Castle.

The 8. day George and Binny came to vs, and brought with them about 2. li. of golde. This night the Christopher and the pinnesse came vp to vs, which had bene 3. dayes a sterne of vs, and the Master of the pinnesse tolde vs their extremitie for want of victuall, and therefore they desired to be taken out of the pinnesse, but we intreated them to goe to the pinnesse againe, and gaue them beere, bread, porke and stockfish to victual them vntill such time as we came to Shamma, that we might send her away with some of our Frenchmen.

The 10. day in the morning I tooke our small pinnesse, and the Captaine of the Christopher with me, and manned her well and went to the castle to viewe the Portingals ships, and there we found one ship of about 300. tunne, and 4. caruels: when we had well viewed them, we returned backe againe to our ships which we found 7. leagues at sea.

The 11. day in the morning we found our selues wel shot toward Shamma, and the Tiger with vs, but the Minion & the pinnesse had not wayed that night, so that we were out of sight of them and hauing brought our ſelues in the wether of the Portingals ſhips, we came to an anker to tarie for the Minion, or els we might haue ketched Shamma. At night the Minion, and the pinneſſe came vp to vs, but could not fetch ſo farre to the weatherward as we, and therefore they ankered about a league a wether the caſtle, and we waied in the Chriſtopher, and went roome with her.

and

The 12. day the Tyger came roome with vs, and she and the Chriſtopher finding themſelues to ſtand in great need of victuals, would haue gone with the Portingals ſhippes to haue fetched ſome of them forth: but our maiſter and companie would in no caſe conſent to goe with them, for feare of hanging when we came home: and the other two ſhips being fully minded to haue gone, and fearing that their owne company would accuſe them, durſt not goe to them.

After this, by reaſon of the want of victuals in the pinneſſe, which could receiue no victuals from the other ſhips, but from vs onely, we tooke out all our men, and put 12. French men into her, and gaue them victuals to bring them to Shamma.

The 19. day the Tiger and Minion arriued at Shamma, and the Chriſtopher within two leagues off them, but could not fetch the winde by reaſon of the ſcantneſſe of the winde, which hath bene ſo ſcant, that in fifteene dayes we haue plied to the windewards but twelue leagues, which before we did in one day and a night. Note.

The 20. day I tooke our pinneſſe, and went to the towne of Shamma to ſpeake with the captaine, and he tolde me that there was no golde there to be had, nor ſo much as a hen to be bought, and all by reaſon of the accord which he had made with the Portingals, and I ſeeing that, departed peaceably from him.

The 21. I put ſuch things as we had into our ſmall pinneſſe, and tooke one merchant of our ſhip, and another of the Tyger, and ſent her to Hanta, to attempt, if ſhe could doe any thing there: that night they could do nothing but were promiſed to haue ſome golde the next day.

The next day (which was the 22.) being come, we ſent our pinneſſe to Hanta againe, but there neither the captaine nor the Negroes durſt traffike with vs, but intiſed vs from place to place, and all to no purpoſe.

This day we put away our pinneſſe, with fiue and twentie Frenchmen in her, and gaue them for their victuals, They put the French men with victuals into the pinneſſe.

2. Quiefats of bread.

1. Barrell of hony.

Of theſe 25. men, we ſet 15. at their raunſome, which 15. were taken in the Mulet: the others, ſome came to vs in a pinneſſe, and ſome from the ſhoare, and therefore we put them at no raunſome.

The pinneſſe with two baſes, and all her apparell, we ſet at fortie crownes. The names of the Frenchmen, which we put in her, were theſe, being all of them raunſomed.

Out of the Chriſtopher, we ſet theſe men.

Peter Huguille, of Battuille.
Robert Hauerte, of Roan.
Stephen Bennet, of Honfleur.
Michael Haguille, of Batuille.
Iohn Chapon, of Battuile.
Legier le Feuer, of Honfleur.
Barnardine Adam, of Blankuiſte.

Out of the Tyger, theſe.

Ricard de Mont, of Roan.
Peter Nefew, of Honfleur.

Out of the Minion, theſe.

Oliuer Bowchet, of Honfleur.
Thomas D'Orleance, of Honfleur.
Hubert Colyn, of Battuille.
Michael Vacree, of Honfleur.
Martyn le Buc, of Honfleur.

Martyn

Martyn Osseraye. All which were equally ransomed for sixe crownes a peece.

The 23. of June, our pinnesse came to vs from Hanta, and told vs, that the Negroes had dealt very ill with them, and would not traffike with them to any purpose.

Shamma burnt by the English.

The 24. we tooke our boate, and pinnesse, and manned them well, and went to the towne of Shamma, and because the Captaine thereof was become subiect to the Portingals, we burned the towne, and our men seeking the spoile of such trifles as were there, found a Portingals chest, wherein was some of his apparell, and his weights, and one letter sent to him from the Castle, whereby we gathered, that the Portingall had bene there of a long time.

Then returne homeward.

The 25. day, about three of the clocke at afternoone, we set saile, and put into the sea, for our returne to England.

The last day of this moneth, wee fell with the shoare againe, and made our reckoning to be eighteene leagues to the weatherward of the place where we set off. When we came to make the land, we found our selues to be eighteene leagues to the leeward of the place, where we set off, which came to passe, by reason of the extreame currant that runneth to the Eastward: when we perceiued our selues so abused, we agreed to cast about againe, and to lye as neere the winde as we could, to fetch the line.

The currant.

July.

S. Thomas Iland.

The seuenth of July, we had sight of the Isle of S. Thomas, and thought to haue sought the roade, to haue ankered there: but the next morning the winde came about, and wee kept our course.

The ninth, the winde varying, we kept about againe, and fell with the Iland of S. Thomas, and seeking the roade, were becalmed neere the Iland, and with the currant were put neere the shoare, but could haue noe ground to anker: so that we were forced to hoise out our pinnesse, and the other shippes their skiffes to towe from the Iland, which did little good, but in the ende the winde put vs three leagues off the shoare.

The tenth day, the Christopher, and the Tyger, cast about, whereby we iudged them to haue agreed together, to goe seeke some shippes in the roade, and to leaue vs: our men were not willing to goe after them, for feare of running in with the Iland againe, and of putting our selues into the same danger that we were in the night before: but we shot off a peece, and put out two lights, and they answered vs with lights againe: whereupon we kept our course, & thought that they had followed vs, but in the morning we could not see them, so that they left vs willingly, and we determined to follow them no more.

But the 11. day, we altered our opinion, and course, and consented to cast about againe for the Iland to seeke our shippes, and about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, we met with them.

Our men vnder the line.

The 13. we fell againe with the Iland of S. Thomas, and the same night we found our selues directly vnder the line.

This Iland is a very high Iland, and being vpon the west side of it, you shall see a very high picke, which is very small, and streight, as it were the steeple of a Church, which picke lieth directly vnder the line, and at the same South ende of the Iland, to the westward thereof, lieth a small Iland, about a mile from the great Iland.

August.

The third of August, we departed from the Isle of S. Thomas, and met the winde at the south west.

The sixt day, we found our selues in eight degrees.

The 12. day, we were in the height of Cape Verde.

The Iland of Salt.

The 22. day, we fell with one of the Isles of Cape Verde, called the Isle of Salt, and being informed by a Scottish man, that we tooke among the French men vpon the coast, that there were fresh victuals to be had, we came to an anker there.

The 23. day, in the morning, we manned our skiffe, and went a shoare, and found no houses, but we sawe foure men, which kept themselues alwaies farre from vs, as for cattell, we could finde none, but great store of goates, and they were so wild, that we could not take aboue three or foure of them: but there we had good store of fishe, and vpon a small Iland, which lay by the same, we had great store of sea birds.

At night, the Christopher brake her cable, and lost an anker, so that she could tary no longer, so we all waied, and set saile. Vpon the same Iland, we left the Scottish man, which was the occasion of our going aland at that place, but how he was left, we could not tell: but as we iudged, the people of the Iland found him sleeping, and so caried him away: for at night I went my selfe to the Iland to seeke him, but could heare nothing of him.

The 24. day, the Master of the Tyger came aboord vs, & told vs that his men were so weake, and the shippe so leake, that he was not able to keepe her aboue the water, and therefore requested vs vs to goe backe againe to the Iſland, that we might diſcharge her, and giue her vp: but we intreated him to take paine with her a while, and we put a French Carpenter into her, to ſee if he could finde the leake. This day we tooke a view of all our men, both thoſe that were whole, and the ſicke alſo, and we found that in all the three ſhippes, were not aboue thirtie ſound men.

The great inconuenience by late ſtaying vpon the coaſt of Guinie.

The 25. we had ſight of the Iſle of S. Nicholas, and the day following, of the other Iſles, S. Lucia, S. Vincent, and S. Anthony, which foure Iſles lye the one from the other, Northweſt, and by Weſt, Southeaſt, and by Eaſt.

The 26. we came againe with the Iſland of S. Anthony, and could not double the Cape. This day, Philip Iones, the Maſter of the Chriſtopher, came aboord vs, who had bene aboord the Tyger, and tolde vs that they were not able to keepe the Tyger, becauſe ſhe was leake, and the Maſter very weake, and ſaid further, he had agreed with the Maſter and the company, that if the next day we could double the Iſland, we ſhould runne to the leeward of it, and there diſcharge her: but if we could not double it, then to put in betwixt the Iſland of S. Vincent, and S. Anthonie, to ſee if we could diſcharge her.

The 27. ſeeing we could not double the Iſland, we put in betweene the foreſaid Iſlands, and went through them, but found no roade, and therefore taried for our fellowes, and by and by it fell calme, ſo that we were in hazard to fall aboord one of another, but God ſent vs a ſmall gale of wind, and we went before them, and left them a sterne.

The 28. we were out of ſight of our company: but we kept about, and ſaw them againe, for they were becalmed vnder the Iland all night.

The third day of September, I went aboord the Tyger, with the Maſter, and merchants with me, to view the ſhippe, and men: and we found the ſhippe very leake, and onely ſix labouring men in her, whereof one was the Maſter Gunner: ſo that we ſeeing that they were not able to keepe the ſhippe, agreed to take in the men, and of the goods what we could ſaue, and then to put the ſhip away. September.

The fift day, we went to diſcharge the Tyger.

The eight day, hauing taken out the artillerie, goods, victuals, and gold of the Tyger, we gaue her vp, 25. degrees by North the line. The Tyger giuen vp.

The 27. we had ſight of two of the Iſles of the Azores, S. Marie, and S. Michael.

The 28. day, running along by S. Michael, we had ſight of diuers ſmall caruels, but we could ſpeake with none of them. In the night, about twelue of the clocke, we ſaw a ſhippe, but ſhe would not come roome with vs.

The third day of October, we had ſight of another ſaile, and bare roome with her, to haue knowen ſome newes of England: but the weakenes of our ſhippe, and men, cauſed vs to leaue her, and keepe our courſe. October.

The fourth of October, we found our ſelues to be 41. degrees and a halfe from the line.

The fift day, the weather was very foule with winde, and raine.

The ſixt day, the Chriſtopher came to vs, and willed vs to put with the Cape, for they alſo were ſo weake, that they were not able to keepe the ſea, and we being weak alſo, we agreed to go for Vigo, being a place which many Engliſh men frequent.

The 10. day, the Chriſtopher went roome with the Cape, but we hauing a merrie winde for England, and fearing the danger of enemies, which ordinarily lye about the Cape: beſides, not knowing the ſtate of our Countrey, and Spaine, and although it were peace, yet there was litle hope of friendſhip at their hands, conſidering the voyage that we had made, and we alſo being ſo weake, that by force and violence, we could come by nothing, and doubting alſo that the King of Portingall knowing of our being there, might worke ſome way with the counſell of Spayne, to trouble vs: and further, conſidering that if we did put in with any harbour, we ſhould not be able to come out againe, til we ſent for more men into England, which would be a great charge, and loſſe of time, and meanes of many dangers: All theſe things pondered, we agreed to ſhoote off two peeces of ordinance, to warne the Chriſtopher, and then we went our courſe for England: ſhe hearing our peeces, followed vs, and we carried a light for her, but the next day in the morning, it was thicke, and we could not ſee her in the afternoone nether, ſo that we ſuſpected, that either ſhe was gone with Spayne, or els that ſhe had put foorth more ſailes then we in the night, and was ſhot a head of vs, ſo that then we put foorth our topſailes, and went our courſe with England.

At the time when the Chriſtopher left vs, we were within 120. leagues of England, and 45. leagues Northweſt, and by Weſt, from Cape Finiſter: and at the ſame time, in our ſhips we had not aboue ſixe marriners, and ſixe merchants in health, which was but a weake companie for ſuch a ſhippe, to ſeeke a forren harbor.

The

Extreame weakenes of our men.

The 16. day, about sixe of the clocke at night, we met with a great storme at the Westsouth west, and west, and our men being weake, and not able to handle our sailes, we lost the same night our maine saile, foresaile, and spreetsaile, & were forced to lye a hulling, vntil the eighteeneth day, and then we made ready an olde course of a foresaile, and put it to the yarde, and therewith finding our selues far shot into the Sleeue, we bare with our owne coast, but that foresaile continued not aboue two howres, before it was blowen from the yarde with a freat, and then we were forced to lie a hull againe, vntill the nineteenth day of October, in the morning, and then we put an olde bonnet to our foreyard, which, by the good blessing and prouidence of God, brought vs to the Ile of Wight, where we arriued the 20. of October, in the afternoone.

The first voyage of Robert Baker to Guinie, with the Minion, and Primrose, set out in October, 1562. by Sir William Garrard, Sir William Chester, M. Thomas Lodge, Anthony Hickman, & Edward Castelin.

As men whose heades be fraught with care, haue seldom rest:
(For through the head the body strait with sorowes is oppresst:)
So I that late on bed lay wake, for that the watch Pursued mine eye, and causde my hed no sleepe at all to catch:
To thinke vpon my chaunce
which hath me now betide,
To lie a prisoner here in France,
for raunsome where I bide:
And feeling still such thoughts
so thicke in head to runne,
As in the sommer day the moats doe fall into the Sunne,
To walke then vp I rose,
fansie to put to flight:
And thus a while I doe purpose to passe away the night.
Morpheus I perceiu'd — The God of sleepe.
had small regarde of me,
Therefore I should be but deceiu'd on bed longer to lie.
And thus without delay
rising as voide of sleepe,
I hoyned Cynthia sawe streight way — The Moone.
in at my grate to peepe:
Who passing on her way,
eke knowing well my case,
How I in darke dungeon there lay alwaies looking for grace:

To

To me then walking tho
in darke without en light,
She wipte her face, and straight did show the best countnance she might:
Astonneth eke my head and senses for a space,
And olde fansies away now fled she pattetly new in place.
Then leaning in my grate
wherein full bright she shinde,
And viewing her thus on her gate
she mazeth streight my minde:
And makes me thinke anon
how oft in Ginnie lande
She was my frend, when I haue gone all night vpon the sande, Walking and watching ete least any boate or ship
At any time, while we had slept perhaps by vs might slip.
And streight with ardent fire
my head inflameth shee, Eke me inspires with whole desire to put in memorie,
Those daungers I haue bid and Laberinth that I Haue past without the clue of threede, eke harder ieopardie.
I then gin take in hand straight way to put in rime,
Such trauell, as in Ginnie lande
I haue past in my time.
But hauing writte a while
I fall faint by the way,
And eke at night I lothe that stile which I haue writte that day.
And thinke my doings then vnworthy sure, to be Set forth in print before all men, for euery one to see.
Eke with dispaire therefore my pen I cast away,
And did intende this neuer more hereafterto assay.
My fellow prisoner then
sir Edward Gages sonne Willes me to take againe my pen and ende that I begonne.
By this our friends (sayth he) shall right well understande
And knowe the great trauels that we haue past in Heathen lande.
Take pen therefore againe
in hande, I you require,
And thinke (saith he) therein no paine to graunt this my desire.
Then once againe my hed
my hand a worke doth finde:

Sir Edward Gages sonne, whose name was George Gage.

But first I fall vpon my bed and there deepe sighes I fette,
To see that this to talke
is giuen me silly wight:
And of Minerua helpe I aske that she me teach aright.
Helpe now without delay,
helpe, helpe, ye Muses nine,
O Cleo, and Calliope, shewe me how to define
In condigne stile and phrase
eche thing in euery line,
To you I giue loe all the praise
the trauell only mine.
Giue eare then ye that long to know of my estate,
Which am in France in prison strong as I wrote home of late:
Against all lawe or right
as I doe thinke in deede, Sith that the warre is ended quite,
and peace is well agreed.
The warre at Newe hauen.
Yet least perchaunce you might much maruell, how that I
Into a Frenchmans powre should light in prison here to lie:
Giue nowe attentiue heede,
a straunge tale gin I tell,
How I this yeare haue bene besteede, scaping the gates of hell,
More harde I thinke truly,
in more daunger of life,
Than olde Orpheus did when he through hell did seeke his wife, Whose musike so did sounde
in pleasant play of string,
That Cerberus that hellish hounde
(who as the Poets sing Hauing three huge heads great,
which doe continually Still breath out firy flames of heate most horrible to see)
Did giue him leaue to passe
in at the gates of Hell:
Of which gate he chiefe porter was the Poets thus me tell.
And how he past alone through great king Plutos Court Yea ferried ouer with Charon and yet he did no hurt.
Caron passeth ger of Hell.
Well to my purpose now,
in Hell what hurt had hee?
Perchance he might strange sights inow and vgly spirits there see:
Perhaps eke Tantalus,
there making of his mone,
Who staru'd always: and Syphus still rolling vp the stone,

Yet

Yet Orpheus passed by,
and went still on his way,
There was no torment came him nigh or heate to make him stay.
And I a Gods name would at hazarde play my life
In Guinie lande, to seeke for golde, as Orpheus sought his wife.
At which saide lande of Guinie
I was eke once before,
And scapt the death as narowly
as Orpheus did and more.
Which first ill lucke will I recite, then iudge you plaine,
If Ioue plagued me not now rightly this yeare to goe againe.
The other yeere before when Neptune vs had brought Safely vnto that burning shore, for which so long we sought,
One day when shippe was fast
in sea at anker holde,
The sailes vpfitted, all busmesse past
the boteswaine then I tolde,
That he forthwith should see the small pinnesse well manne, Eke all things therin prest to be that we should haue a lande,
And gunner see that ye want not bowe, pike, or bill,
Your ordinance well primed be with lintstocks burning still.
With merchandize a shore,
we hied to traffike then,
Making the sea some vs before,
by force of nine good men.
And rowing long, at last a riuer we espie,
In at the which we bare full fast to see what there might be.
And entring in, we see a number of blacke soules, Whose likelinesse seem'd men to be,
but all as blacke as coles.
Their Captaine comes to me as naked as my naile,
Not hauing witte or honestie
to couer once his taile.
By which I doe here gesse
and gather by the way,
That he from man and manlinesse was voide and cleane astray.
And sitting in a trough,
a boate made of a logge,
The very same wherein you know
we vse to serue a hogge, Aloofe he staide at first,
put water to his cheeke,

His first voyage 1562.

A signe that he would not vs trust vnlesse we did the like.
That signe we did likewise,
to put him out of feare,
And shewd him much braue marchandise to make him come vs neare.
The wilde man then did come,
by signes nowe crieth the fiend
Of those gay things to giue him some and I should be his friend.
I traffikt there that time for such things as they had,
At night to ship I caried him,
where I with clothes him clad,
Yea, made him there good cheere,
and he by signes againe Tolde vs that he would fraight vs then after a day or twaine.
And eene thus as we were in talke, looking about,
Our boate he sawe with wares that there was tied at sterne without:
Which boate he viewing still,
as then well stuft with ware,
We thinking he had ment no ill,
had thereof little care.
And the next morne again
we caried him a shore, Eke barred there that day with them
as we had done before.
But when Phœbus began somewhat for to draw neare
To Icarus his Court, the sonne of Dedalus most deare, (Whose chaunce it is to dwell
amids the Ocean flood,
Because that he obseru'd not well his fathers counsell good)
We then with saile and oare to ship began to hie,
That we might fetch aboorde, before the day had lost his eye.
To ship we come at last which rid foure leagues from shore Refresht vs after trauaile past, taken that day before.
Then, as it was our guise,
our boate at sterne we tie,
Eke therein leaue our marchandise,
as they were wont to be.
With troughes then two or three this Captaine comes by night
Aboord our boate, where he with wares himselfe now fraighteth quight.
The watch nowe hearing this,
the boate they hal'd vp fast:
But gone was all the marchandise, and they escapte and past.

The theft of the Negros.

The

The next morne then by day
againe we went to shore, Amends to haue for that which they had stolne the night before.
But all in vaine was it,
our signes were now too bad,
They would not vnderstand a whit of any thing they had.
A conflict betweene the Negros & our men.
But as though they had wrong for to reuenged be,
As we row'd downe the streame along after comes hee and hee.
A hundred boats come fro
the sternemost towne I say,
At least meets vs as many mo
before, to make vs stay.
In euery boat two men,
and great long targets twaine:
Most of their darts had long strings then to picke and pull againe.
Now gunners to your charge,
giue fier all arow,
Ech slaue for feare forsakes his barge,
and ducks in water low.
We downe the streame amaine do row to get the sea,
They ouertake vs soone againe,
and let vs of our way.
Then did the slaues draw neere,
with dart and target thicke,
With diuelish fired eyes they peere where they their darts may sticke.
Now Mariners do push with right good will the pike,
The hailshot of the harquebush
the naked slaue doth strike.
Through targe and body right that downe he falleth dead
His fellow then in heauie plight, doth swimme away afraid,
To bathe in brutish bloud,
then fleeth the graygoose wing,
The halberders at hand be good,
and hew that all doth ring.
Yet gunner play thy part,
make hailshot walke againe,
And fellowes row with like good heart that we may get the maine.
Our arrowes all now spent,
the Negros gan approch:
But pikes in hand already hent
the blacke beast fast doth broch.
Their captaine being wood,
a villaine long ond large,
With poisned dart in hand doth shroud
himselfe vnder his targe.
And hard aboord he comes to enter in our boat,
Our maisters mate, his pike eftsoones strikes through his targe and throat.
The captaine now past charge of this brutish blacke gard,
His pike he halde backe which in targe
alas was fixed hard:
And wresting it with might,
to pull it forth in hast,
A deadly dart strikes him too right and in his flesh sticks fast,
He stands still like a man,
and shrinkes not once therfore,
But strikes him with his owne dart then which shot at him before.
Then presse they on, and shake their darts on euery side, Which in our flesh doth light, and make both deadly wounds and wide.
The gunner in that stound with two darts strooke at last,
Shrinks not yet though the double wound with streames of bloud out brast.
And eke the maisters mate,
of stomacke bolde and stout,
For all his wound receiu'd of late,
yet stirred not a foot.
But kept his standing still,
till that a deathfull dart
Did strike him through the ribs so ill, that scarce it mist his hart.
The dart out hal'd quickly,
his guts came out withall,
And so great streames of bloud that he for faintnesse downe gan fall.
The Negros seeing this,
how he for dead doth lie,
Who erst so valiant prou'd i wis,
they gladly shout and crie:
And then do minde as there to enter in his place,
They thinke so many wounded were the rest would yeld for grace.
We then stand by the pike,
and foure row on our boat,
Their darts among vs fast they strike that few were free I wot.
In legge and eke in thigh,
some wounded eke in th'arme,
Yea many darts stucke vs hard by,
that mist and did no harme.
By little thus at last,
in great danger of life
We got the sea, and almost past the danger erst so rife.
Then gin they all retire sith all their darts were spent
They had nought to reuenge their ire, and thus away they went.

Our boat to ship doth roe, where two oares make soft way
Sixe of our men wounded
Sixe of vs nine were wounded so,
the seuenth for dead there lay.
Lo,heare howcruelly
the fiends ment vs to kill, Causeleſſe you see,if they truly on vs might had their will.
And yet we gaue before
much merchandise away,
Among those slaues,thinking therfore to haue friendship for aye.
And Orpheus past I wot
the passage quietly,
Among the soules in Charons boat,
and yet to say truly
I neuer read that he paid for his passage there,
Who past and repast for to see if that his wife there were.
Nor yet that he paid ought,
or any bribe there gaue
To any office,while he sought his wife againe to haue.
Whereby I surely gesse
these men with whom that we Haue had to do,are fiends more fierce then those in hell that be.
Well we now scaping thus the danger I haue tolde, Aboord we come,where few of vs could stand now being colde.
Our wounds now being dreſt,
to meat went they that list,
But I desired rather rest,
for this in minde I wist.
That if I might get once a sleepe that were full sound,
I should not feele my weary bones nor yet my smarting wound.
And lying long aloft
vpon my bed in paine, Vnto Morpheus call'd I oft that he would not disdaine
To heare me then poore wight, but send me helpe with speed
That I might haue good rest this night of which I had great need.
Me thought then by and by,
there hung a heauie waight,
At ech eye lid,which clos'd mine eye,
and eke my head was straight.
And being streight a sleepe,
I fell into a sweauen,
That of my wound I tooke no keepe
I dreamd'd I was in heauen.
Where as me thought I see god Mars in armor bright,
His arming sword naked holdes he in hand,ready to fight.
Castor and Pollux there all complet stand him by,
Least if that Mars conuinced were they might reuenged be.
Then came marching along the great blacke smith Vulcan, Hauing a staffe of yron strong,
and thus at last began:
O Mars,thou God of might,
what is the cause that thou Hast chaleng'd me with thee to fight:
lo present am I now.
Wherfore if that thou hast any great grudge to me,
Before this day be spent and past it shall reuenged be.
Then spake god Mars and said,
for that thou churlish wight,
Thy brutish blacke people hast made with those white men to fight
Which cal'd on me for aid,
I bid thee warre for this.
Then answered Vulcan straight and said that that coast sure was his.
And therefore he would still his blacke burnt men defend,
And if he might, all other kill which to that coast did wend, Yea thus (said he) in boast that we his men had slaine,
And ere that we should passe this coast
he would vs kill againe.
Now marcheth Mars amaine
and fiercely gins to fight,
The sturdie smith strikes free againe whose blowes dint where they light.
But Iupiter that sat in his great royall throne Hearing this noise maruell'd thereat, and streight way sendeth one
To know the cause thereof:
but hearing them in fight,
Commandeth them for to leaue off
by vertue of his might,
And of Vulcan demands
the cause: then answered he,
O mightie Ioue whose power commands and rules all things that be,
Who at a word hast power
all things to destroy cleane,
And in the moment of an houre,
canst them restore againe,
The same God licence me to speake now here my minde:
It is not,Ioue,vnknowne to thee,
how that I was assign'd,

And

And pointed king of most of all the Ginnie land,
A people lo is on my coast which doth me now withstand,
They do my people strike,
they do this day them kill,
To whom I minde to do the like if I may haue my will.
Then Iupiter bespake:
O Vulcan then said he,
Let this thy rage and anger slake for this time presently,
But if at any time
these men chance there againe,
Doe as thou list, the charge is thine
I will not meddle then.
I know them well (said he)
these men need not to seeke,
They haue so fruitfull a countrey that there is none the like.
But if they can not be therewith content, but still Will seeke for golde so couetously, worke then with them thy will.
And therewith straight doth send a pursiuant in post,
To whom (saith he) see that thou wend
vnto the windie coast,
To Eolus, the king
command him thus from me,
That he straight way without lingring do set at libertie,
His seruant Zephirus, which now is lockt so low,
Eke that he do command him thus,
that he straight way do go To Vulcans coast in hast, One shippe.
a ship where he shall finde,
Which ship he must with gentle blast and eke with moderate winde, Conduct safe to that coast
which Albion was highte,
And that no stormes do them withstand by day or eke by night.
I sleeping all this space,
as it were in a trance,
The noise of them that hal'd apace
did waken me by chance.
Then looking out to know what winde did blow in skie,
The maister straight came to me tho and thus said by and by.
All our ill lucke is past,
we haue a merie winde,
I hope England, if this winde last,
yet once againe to finde.
When this I vnderstand, to Ioue I vowed then,
For swearing cleane the Ginnie land for comming there againe.
And passing on in post
with fauorable windes,
We all arriu'd on Englands coast with passing cheerefull mindes.

The second voyage to Guinie, and the riuer of Selto, set out in the Moneth of Nouember 1563, by Sir William Gerrard, Sir William Chester, Sir Thomas Lodge, Maister Beniamin Goston, Maister William Winter, Maister Lionell Ducket, Anthonie Hickman, and Edward Castelin, with two ships, the one called the Iohn Baptist, wherein went for Maister, Laurence Rondell: and the other the Marlin, wherein went also for Maister, Robert Reuell, hauing for Factors, Robert Baker, Iustinian Goodwine, Iames Gleidell, and George Gage: and written in verse by the foresaid Robert Baker.

YOu heard before, that home I got from Ginnie at the last,
But by and by, I quite forgot
the sorowes I had past.
And ships rigged also,
with speed to ship againe,
I being then requir'd to go,
did not denie them plaine,
But granted them to go,
vnhappie foolish wight,
When they command, eke there to do the best seruice I might.
In fine, to go our way
now serueth time and tide,
We hauing nothing vs to stay,
what should we longer bide?
The hempen band with helpe of Mariners doth threat
To wey and reare that slouthfull whelpe The anker.
vp from his mothers teat.
The Maister then gan cheere with siluer whistle blast
His Mariners, which at the Ieere are laboring wondrous fast.
Some other then againe,
the maine yard vp to hoise,
The hard haler doth haile a maine, while other at a trice
Cut saile without delay:
the rest that be below,
Both sheats abaft do hale straitway and bolins all let go.

The Helme a Mariner
in hand then strait way tooke,
The Pilot eke what course to stir within his card did looke.
Againe with siluer blast,
the Maister doth not faile,
To cause his mates forthwith in hast abroad to put more saile.
We then lanch from the shore,
sith warre we knew it right,
And kept in sea aloofe therefore two dayes and eke a night.
And, as it is the guise,
to toppe a man we send,
Who straight a saile or two espies,
with whom we then do wend.
Aloofe would some with one,
and roomeward would the rest:
But with the tallest ship we gone, whom we thinke to be best.
At last, in comming neere
as captaines vse to do,
I hale them, and of whence they were
I did desire to know:
Of France when they had said,
we weaued them a maine,
But they nothing therewith dismaid did like to vs againe.
We then our selues aduant through hope of purchase here, Amaine say we, ye iolly gallant or you shall buie it dere.
To arme the maine top tho
the boatswaine goeth eke,
His mate to the foretop also makes hast to do the like.
To top both stones and darts good fellowes hoise apace:
The quarter maisters with glad hearts do know eche one his place.
Our topsailes strike we tho and fit our sailes to fight,
Our bulwarke at maine mast also is made likewise aright.
Upon our poope eke then right subtilly we lay Pouder, to blow vp all such men, as enter theraway.
Our Trumpetter aloft
now sounds the feats of war,
The brasen pieces roring oft fling forth both chaine and bar.
Some on the pardes againe
do weaue with naked swoord,
And crying loud to them amaine
they bid vs come aboord.
To bath hir feet in bloud
the graigoose fleeth in hast:
And Marmers as Lions wood, do crie aboord as fast.
Now firie Faulkons flie right greedie of their pray,
And kils at first stone dead truely eche thing within their way.
Alarme ye now my mates I say,
see that ye nothing lacke,
At euery loope then gins straightway
a harquebush to cracke.
Their saile to burne, we shoot
our arrowes of wilde fire,
And pikes burning therewith about lads tosse with like desire.
Eke straightway forth for wine
the steward call I then,
With fiery spice enough therein
I drinke vnto my men,
And then euen with a woord
our lime pot prest to fall,
This iolly gallant we clap aboord and enter him withall.
Their nettings now gan teare
with dint of heauie stone,
And some mens heads witnesse did beare who neuer could make mone.
The harquebush acroke which hie on top doth lie, Discharg'd full of haileshot doth smoke to kill his enemie.
Which in his enemies top doth light, there it to keepe,
Yet he at last a deadly lope is made from thence to lepe.
Then entreth one withall into this Frenchmans top,
Who cuts eche rope, and makes to fall
his pard, withouten stop.
Then Mariners belowe,
as carelesse of the pike,
Do hew, and kill still as they goe,
and force not where they strike.
And still the trumpets sound with pleasant blast doth cheare Eche Mariner, so in that stound that they nothing did feare.
The Maister then also,
his mates to cheare in fight,
His Whistle chearefully doth blow, whereby strait euery wight
So fierce begins to be,
that Frenchmen gin to stoe,
And English men as right worthy do catch for pillage tho.
What would you more I say but tell the truth alway:
We vide our matters so this day
we caried him away,

Unto

Unto a Port in Spaine, which sure is call'd the Groine,
Whereas we for French lading plaine receiued readie coine.
Well thus this good lucke past,
we through salt Seas did scoure,
To Ginney coast eke come at last,
O that vnhappie houre.
My hand alas for feare
now shakes, of this to write,
Mine eye almost full fraught with teare, eke lets me to indite.
What should I here recite
the miserie I had,
When none of you will scarce credit that ere it was so bad?
Well, yet I would assay to tell it, if I might,
But O Minerua, helpe me aye,
my wits astond be quite.
Yea helpe, ye muses nine,
let no thought me withstand,
Aid me this thing well to define,
which here I take in hand.
Well, thus it fortuned tho,
in Ginney now arriu'd,
Nine men in boat to shore we go,
where we traffike espide,
And parting at midday
from ship, on good intent
In hope of traffike there I lay to shore away we went.
Our ships then riding fast
in sea at anker bight,
We minded to dispatch in hast,
eke to returne that night.
But being hard by land,
there suddenly doth rise
A mightie winde, where with it raind and thundred, in such wise,
That we by shore did ride,
where we best Port might finde,
Our ships we thinke from anker slide,
a trice before the winde.
This night Vulcan begins on vs reueng'd to be,
And thunderbolts about he flings
most terrible to see,
Admixt with fierie flame which cracks about our eares,
And thus gins he to play his game,
as now to him appeares.
Ye Eolus hath feed
herein to be his friend,
And all the whirling windes with speed among vs doth he send.
Thus hard by shore we lay,
this wet and weary night,
But on next morne and all the day of ship we had no sight.
For Vulcan all this night from fierie forge so fast
Sent thunder bolts with such great light, that when the night was past,
The next day there remaind
so great smoke all about,
Much like a mist, eke there with raine,
that we were wet throughout.
And thus in smoke minded he
to part vs from our ship:
Thus nere a one ech other see,
and so haue we the slip.
Our ships then backe againe,
thinking we were behinde,
Do saile by shore a day or twaine in hope there vs to finde.
And we the contrary,
do row along the shore Forward, thinking our ships to be still sailing vs before.
They sailing thus two dayes or three,
and could not finde vs than,
Do thinke that in that foule night we were drowned euery man.
Our ship then newes doth beare,
when she to England wends
That we nine surely drowned were,
and thus doth tell our frends:
While we thus being lost,
alive in miserie
Do row in hope yet on this coast, our ships to finde truly.
Well thus one day we spent,
the next and third likewise,
But all in vaine was our intent,
no man a saile espies:
Three dayes be now cleane past
since any of vs nine,
Of any kinde of food hath tast,
and thus gan we to pine,
Till at the last bare need bids vs hale in with land,
That we might get some root or weed
our hunger to withstand:
And being come to shore,
with Negros we intreat,
That for our wares which we had there they would giue vs to eat.
Then fetch they vs of roots, and such things as they had,
We gaue to them our wares to boote and were thereof right glad.
To sea go we againe,
in hope along the shore
To finde our ships, yet thinking plaine that they had beene before.

And thus with saile and oze twelue dayes we went hard by The strange vncomfortable shoze where we nothing espie,
But all thicke woods and bush and mightie wildernesse,
Out of the which oft times do rush strange beasts both wilde and fierse, Whereof oft times we see,
at going downe of Sunne, Diuers descend in companie,
and to the sea they come.
Where as vpon the sand
they lie, and chew the cud:
Sometime in water eke they stand and wallow in the floud.
The Elephant we see,
a great vnweldie beast,
With water fils his troonke right hie and blowes it on the rest.
The Hart I saw likewise delighted in the soile,
The wilde Boze eke after his guise with snout in earth doth moile.
A great strange beast also,
the Antelope I weene
I there did see, and many mo, which erst I haue not seene.
And oftentimes we see a man a shoze or twaine,
Who strait brings out his Almadie and rowes to vs a maine.
Here let we anker fall,
of wares a shew we make,
We bid him choose among them all, what wares that he will take
To bring to vs some fish,
and fresh water therefoze,
Oz else of meat some daintie dish, which their cookes dresse a shoze.
They bring vs by and by great roots and beries rke,
Which grow vpon the high palme tree,
such meat as they do like.
We drinke eke of their wine much like our whey to see:
Which is the sappe as I haue seene that runnes out of a tree.
Thus do they bring ech thing which they thinke to be good, Sometime wilde hony combes they bring which they finde in the wood,
With roots and baggage eke
our cozps we thus sustaine
From famine, though it be so weake, that death was figurde plaine
In euery ioynt, foz lacke of sustenance and rest,
That still we thinke our hearts would with sozowes so oppest. (breake
We now alongst the coast
haue saild so many a mile,
That sure we be our ships be lost, what should we do this while?
In Heathen land we be, impossible it is
That we should fetch our owne countrey in such a boat as this.
We now gan to perceiue that we had ouerpast
The Melegete coast so much, that we were come at last Unto the coast of Myne, foz Niegros came abooz
With weights to poise their golde so fine, yea speaking euery wooz
In Portugesse right well demanding traffike there,
If we had any wares to sell, and where our ships then were?
We answered them againe, Two ships.
we had two ships at sea,
The which would come traffike with thē
we thought within a day.
The cause why we thus said,
was hope to be well vsde:
But seeing this, as men dismaid away we went, and musde Whither our ships were gone,
what way were best foz vs:
Shall we here perish now saith one?
no, let vs not do thus:
We see all hope is past
our ships to finde againe,
And here our liues do shozten fast
in miserie and paine:
Foz why the raging heat of Sunne, being so extreme,
Consumes our flesh away in sweat,
as dayly it is seene.
The Ternados againe
so often in a weeke,
With great lightnings, thunder and raine
with such abundance eke, Doe so beat vs by night,
that we sleepe not at all,
Whereby our strength is vaded quite,
no man an oze can hale.
How hard liue we, alas?
three whole dayes oft be past,
Ere we pooze men (a heauy case)
of any thing doe tast.
These twentie dayes ye see,
we haue sit still ech one,
Which we do of necessitie, foz place to walke is none.

Our

Our legs now vs deceiue, ſwolne euery ioint withall,
With this diſeaſe, which, by your leaue,
the Scruuie men doe call.
We cannot long endure
in this caſe as we be,
To leaue our boat I am right ſure, compeld we muſt agree.
Three wayes for vs there is,
and this is my requeſt,
That we may of theſe three deuiſe,
to chooſe thereof the beſt.
The Caſtle of the Mine is not farre hence, we know,
To morrow morne we there may be,
if thither you will goe.
There Portingals do lie, and chriſtened men they be:
If we dare truſt their curteſie,
the worſt is hanging glee.
Our miſerie may make them pitie vs the more, Mine ſuch yong men great pains would for life to hale an ore. (take Their Gallies may perhaps lacke ſuch yong men as we,
And thus it may fall in our laps,
all Galeyſlaues to be,
During our life, and this
we ſhall be ſure to haue, Although we row, ſuch meate as is the allowance of a ſlaue.
But here we rowe and ſterue,
our miſery is ſo ſore:
The ſlaue with meat inough they ſerue,
that he may teare his ore.
If this you will not like,
the next way is to goe:
Vnto the Negros, and to ſeeke what friendſhip they will ſhew.
But what fauour would ye of theſe men looke to haue:
Who beaſtly ſauage people be,
farre worſe then any ſlaue?
If Cannibals they be in kind, we doe not know,
But if they be, then welcome we,
to pot ſtraight way we goe.
They naked goe likewiſe,
for ſhame we cannot ſo:
We cannot liue after their guiſe,
thus naked for to go.
By rootes and leaues they liue,
as beaſts doe in the wood:
Among theſe heathen who can thriue, with this ſo wilde a food?
The piercing heate againe,
that ſcorcheth with ſuch ſtrength,
Piercing our naked fleſh with paine, will vs conſume at length.
The third and laſt is this,
(if thoſe two you refuſe)
To die in miſerable wiſe,
here in the boate you chuſe.
And this iudge by the way,
more truſt is to be giuen,
Vnto the Portingals alway, ſith they be chriſtned men,
Then to theſe bruttiſh ſort,
which beaſtly are ye ſee:
Who of our death will make a ſport,
if Canibals they be.
We all with one conſent,
now death deſpiſing plaine: (Sith if we die as innocent, the more it is our gaine)
Our ſayle we hoyſe in haſt, with ſpeed we mind to go Vnto the caſtell, now not paſt
a twentie leagues vs fro.
And ſayling all this day,
we ſpied late in the night,
As we paſt by thus on our way,
vpon the ſhore a light.
Then ſayd our Boateſwaine thus,
by this great light a ſhore,
Trafique there ſeemes, will you let vs anker this night therefore,
And trie if we may get,
this next morning by day,
Some kind of food for vs to eate,
and then to goe our way?
We anker there that night,
the next morning to ſhore:
And in the place, where we the light
did ſee the night before,
A watch houſe now there ſtood, vpon a rocke without:
Hard by a great blacke croſſe of wood,
which putteth vs in doubt,
What place that this ſhould be,
and looking to the ſhore,
A Caſtell there we gan eſpie, this made vs doubt the more.
Wherein we ſaw did ſtand
a Portingall or twaine:
Who held a white flag in his hand,
and waued vs amaine.
Our fleſh as fraile now ſhakes,
whereby we gan retire,
And he at vs a ſhot then makes,
a Negro giuing fire.
A piece diſcharged thus,
the killing pellet lighes,
I thinke within a yard of vs,
but none of vs it hits.

We

We wisht then we had there a good ship, eke ov t'waine,
But helpleſſe now, we rowe a ſhoꝛe to know th'end of our paine.
The neerer that we went to them vnto the ſhoꝛe,
To yeld our ſelues, as firſt we ment they ſtill did ſhoot the moꝛe.
Now Canons loud gan roꝛe,
and Culuerins now crackt,
The Caſtell eke it thundꝛed ſoꝛe, as though the wals weere ſackt.
Some ſhot doth light hard by,
ſome ouer vs againe:
But though the ſhot ſo thicke doth flie,
yet rowe we in a maine,
That now ſo neere we be
vnto the caſtell wall,
That none of them at vs we ſee,
can make a ſhot at all.
We ment a land to goe,
their curteſie to trie:
But from the wal great ſtones they thꝛow, and therewith by and by,
The Negros marching downe,
in battell ray do come,
With dart and target from the towne,
and follow all a ꝛomme.
A bowe in hand ſome hent,
with poiſned arrow preſt,
To ſtrike therewith they be full bent,
a pined Engliſh breſt.
But ſtones come downe ſo faſt
on vs on euery ſide,
We thinke our boats bottom would hꝛaſt
if long we thus abide.
And arrowes flie ſo thicke,
hiſſing at euery eare,
Which both in clothes and fleſh do sticke,
that we, as men paſt feare,
Cry now, Launch, launch in haſt,
hale of the boate a maine:
Foure men in banke let them ſit faſt and rowe to ſea againe.
The other fiue like men,
do manfully in hand,
Take vp each kind of weapon then,
theſe wolues here to withſtand.
A harquebuſh takes one,
another bends his bowe,
Among the ſlaues then downe fals one,
and other hurt I trowe.
At thoſe Portingals then ſhoot we,
vpon the Foꝛt which ſtand,
In long fine white ſhirts as we ſee,
and lintſtocks in their hand.
And of theſe ſhirts ſo white
we painted ſome full red,
Striking their open coꝛps in ſight, with dint of arrow head.
Foꝛ we ſawe they had there no Gallies vs to take,
Where theatnings th' could vs not feare
oꝛ make vs once to ſhake.
Then Canons loud gan roꝛe,
and pellets flie about,
And each man haleth hard his oꝛe and mooued not a foote.
Yea, though the poulder ſent
the pellets thicke away,
Yet ſpite of them cleane though we went at laſt, and got the ſea.
And pieces charging faſt,
they ſhot after vs ſo,
That wonder was it how we paſt
the furie of our foe.
The pined arme felt not as now, the heauie oꝛe:
With foure ſuch oꝛes was neuer boat,
I thinke, rowd ſo beforꝛe.
To ſeaward ſcaping ſo,
three Negroes we ſee there,
Came rowing after vs to know, what countrey men we were:
We anſwered Engliſhmen,
and that thither we came,
With wares to trafique there with them,
if they had meant the ſame.
They Portuguſe doe ſpeake right naturall twis:
And of our ſhip to know they ſeeke,
how big and where ſhe is.
We anſwered them againe
we had two ſhips at ſea,
Right well appointed full of men, that ſtreight would take their way
Along the coaſt foꝛ gold,
they tary but foꝛ vs,
Which came with wares there to haue ſold but that they vſ'd vs thus.
Then gan they vs to pray,
if we lackt any thing,
To anker there all that whole day,
and they to vs would bring
All things that we doe want,
they ſoꝛy ſay they be:
But we their words yet trulling ſcant,
refuſe their curteſie.
We aſke them of this hold what place that it ſhould be,
Then they againe thus ſtraight vs told that Portingals there lie.
And how that point they ſayd,
which there hard by we ſee,
Was one of Cape three points, that lay the Weſterumoſt of three. Cape three points.

Without en

Without further ſpeech,
we hoiſe our ſaile to ſea:
Minding a friendlier place to ſeech,
and thus we part our way.
We mind truly to prooue
the Portingals no more:
But now t'aſſay rather what loue
Negros will ſhew a ſhore.
We then with ſaile and ore,
went backe againe in haſt:
A thirtie leagues I thinke, and more from thence where we were chaſt.
And here we anker fall,
aboord the Negros come:
We gaue gay things vnto them all,
and thus their hearts we wonne.
At laſt aboord comes one,
that was the Kings chiefe ſonne:
To whom by ſignes I made great mone,
how that I was vndone,
Had loſt our ſhips, and eke were almoſt ſtaru'd for meate,
And knew not where our ſhips to ſeeke,
or any thing to eate.
I offred him our wares,
and bid him take them all:
But he perceiuing now the teares, which from our eyes did fall,
Had great pitie on vs,
and ſayd he would haue nought,
But ſtreight by ſignes he will'd vs then,
that we ſhould take no thought.
As one whom God had ſent,
and kept for vs in ſtore,
To know in haſt away he went,
the Kings pleaſure on ſhore.
And came foorthwith againe,
yea, bade vs come a land:
Whereof God knowes we were full faine,
when this we vnderſtand.
Each man bankes to his ore,
to hale the boate a land:
Where as we ſee vpon the ſhore, fiue hundred Negros ſtand.
Our men rowing in a maine,
the billow went ſo hie,
That ſtraight a waue ouerwhelms vs (cleane and there in ſea we lie.
The Negros by and by,
came ſwimming vs to ſaue:
And brought vs all to land quickly, not one durſt play the knaue.
The Kings ſonne after this,
a ſtout and baliant man,
In whom I thinke Nature t'wis, hath wrought all that ſhe can,
He then I ſay commaunds them ſtraight to ſaue our boate,
To worke forthwith goe many hands,
and bring the ſame a floate.
Some ſwimme to ſaue an ore,
ſome diue for things be loſt:
I thinke there helpt to hale a ſhore,
fiue hundred men almoſt.
Our boate thus halde vp drie, all things ſtreight way were brought
The which we miſt or could eſpie, no man that durſt keepe ought.
Then vs they led away,
knowing we wanted meate,
And gaue to vs, euen ſuch as they themſelues do daily eate.
Was neuer Owle in wood halfe ſo much wondered at,
As we were then poore men, alas,
which there among them ſat.
We feared yet our part,
and wiſht a moneth were paſt,
For each man there went with his dart,
which made vs oft agaſt.
We lay vpon the ground,
with them there all that night:
But fearing ſtill a deadly wound,
we could not ſleepe a whit.
Two dayes thus paſt we well,
no man vs offred wrong:
The cauſe thereof I gin you tell,
they thought this them among:
Our ſhips had bene at ſea, and would come there before
Two dayes, to fetch vs thence away, and giue them wares good ſtore.
But when they thus heare tell how that our ſhips be loſt,
And that we know not very well,
when ſhips will come to coaſt:
They then waxe wearie ſtreight, and they which did before
At ſundry times giue vs to eate, did giue vs now no more.
Our lowance wart ſo ſmall,
that neuer nine I geſſe,
Were ſeru'd the like, yet ſtill withall,
it waxed leſſe and leſſe.
Some run now in the wood,
and there for rootes do ſeeke, Baſe meat would here be counted good,
too bad that we miſlike.
Our clothes now rot with ſweat,
and from our backs do fall,
Saue that whom nature wils for ſhame,
we couer nought at all.
One runs to ſeeke for clay to faſhion ſtraight a pot,
And hardens it in Sunne all day:
another faſteth not

To

To fetch home wood to night,
and eke for fire sought,
That we our roots and things seeth might if any home were brought.
The rest the wood doth seeke, eke euery bush and tree
For berries and such baggage like, which should seeme meate to bee.
Our fingers serue in steed,
both of pickaxe and spade,
To dig and pull vp euery weed,
that grew within the shade.
Eke digd for rootes the ground, and searcht on euery hier
For berries, which if we had found, then streight way to the fire:
Where we rost some of those,
the rest seeth in a pot,
And of this banket nought we lose,
nor fragment resteth not.
The night as beasts we lie
the bare hard earth vpon,
And round by vs a great fire light to keepe wild beasts vs from.
But what shou'd I recite, or couet to declare
My sorowes past, or eke t'endite of my hard Ginnie fare:
I cease here to enlarge
my miserie in that land,
A toy in head doth now me charge,
as here to hold my hand.
In fine, what would ye more,
the heat did so exceed,
That wanting cloths it scorcht so sore,
no man could it abide.
The countrey eke so wilde,
and vnhealthfull withall,
That hungry stomacks neuer fill'd, doth cause faint bodies fall.
Our men fall sicke apace,
and cherishing haue none:
That now of nine, within short space
we be left three alone.
Alas, what great agast
to vs three liuing yet,
Was it to see, that death so fast away our fellowes fet:
And then to loue on hie
we call for helpe and grace,
And him beseech vnfainedly, to fetch vs from this place.
From this wild heathen land,
to Christendome againe,
Or else to lay on vs his hand,
and rid vs from our paine.
Least that we ouerpest
with too much miserie,
Perhaps as weake breake our behest which we owe God on high.
And least we liuing here among this heathen, might Perchance for need do that which were right hainous in his sight.
Well, to my purpose then,
when we to loue thus crie,
To helpe vs hence poore silly men from this our miserie.
He hearing vs at length,
how we to him doe call,
He helps vs with his wonted strength, and straight thither withall,
A French ship sends at last,
with whom we three go hence:
But six in earth there lie full fast, and neuer like come thence.
This Frenchman as I say,
through salt and surging seas,
Vs brought from Ginnie land, away to France, the Lord we praise.
And warre he proues it plaine
when we entred his ship,
A prisner therefore I remaine, and hence I cannot slip Till that my ransome be agreed vpon, and paid,
Which being leuied yet so hie,
no agreement can be made.
And such is so my chance,
the meane time to abide
A prisner for ransome in France, till God send time and tide.
From whence this idle rime
to England I doe send:
And thus till I haue further time, this Tragedie I end. R. Baker.

The voyage of M. George Fenner to Guinie, and the Islands of Cape Verde, in the yeere 1566. with three ships, to wit, the Admirall, called the Castel of Comfort, the May Flower, and the George, and a Pinnesse also. Written by Walter Wren.

THe 10. day of December in the yeere aboue sayd, we departed from Plimmouth and the 12. day we were thwart of Vsham.

The 15. day in the morning being Sunday, we had sight of Cape Finister, and the same night we lost the company of our Admirall, wherefore we sayled along the coast of Portingall, hoping that our Admirall had bene before vs.

Ye

The 18. day we met with a French ſhip, of whom we made inquirie for our Admirall, but he could not tell vs newes of him: ſo we followed our courſe to the Iſlands of the Canaries.

The 25. day in the morning we fell with a ſmal Iſland called Porto Santo, and within 3. houres we had ſight of another Iſland called Madera, which is 6. leagues from Porto Santo.

The ſaid 25. day being the day of the Natiuitie, we hoiſed out our boate, and ſet Maiſter Edward Fenner Captaine of the May Flower aboord vs being in the George, with the Maiſter whoſe name was Robert Courtiſe, and others of the ſayd ſhip, and feaſted them with ſuch cheere as God had ſent vs.

The 28. day we fell with an Iſland called Tenerif, which is 27. leagues from the ſaid Iſland, and on the Eaſt ſide thereof we came to an anker in fortie fadome water, within a baſe ſhotte of the ſhore, in a little Baie, wherein were three or foure ſmall houſes: which Baie and houſes were diſtant from a little Towne called Santa Cruz, a league or thereabout, and as we road in the ſayd Baie, we might ſee an Iſland called the grand Canarie, which was 6. or 7. leagues from vs.

The 29. day the May Flower for that ſhe could not get into the road where we were at an anker, by reaſon the wind was off the ſhore, & becauſe ſhe bare roomer from the land then we did, in the morning came bearing in with the towne of Santa Cruz, thinking to come to an anker in the road againſt the towne, and before ſhe came within the reach of any of their ordinance, they ſhot at her foure pieces, which cauſed her to come roome with vs, and came at laſt to an anker by vs. And about one of the clocke in the after noone, the forenamed Captaine of the May Flower, wrote a letter a ſhore, directing it to the head officer of the towne of Santa Cruz, to the intent to vnderſtand the pretence of the ſhooting of the ſayd ordinance.

The letter being written, Robert Courtiſe maſter of the May Flower, and Walter Wren, were appointed to deliuer the ſame a land at the three or foure houſes, to be conueied to the foreſayd towne, and ſo went with ſixe men in the boate, and rowed to the ſhore as neere as they might, for ſetting the boate on ground, for the ſea went cruelly at the ſhore.

The people ſtood in number 30. perſons, with ſuch armour as they had: the foreſayd Wren called to them in Spaniſh, declaring to them that they had a letter, which they would very gladly haue conueied vnto the towne, ſhewing that they would traffique with them as merchants, deſiring their helpe for the conueiance of the ſame letter. With that one of the Spaniards willed vs to come on land, & we ſhould be welcome, but doubting the worſt, the ſayd Walter anſwered them, that they would not come a land, vntil they had anſwere of their letter which they had brought.

Whereupon one of the Spaniards vnraied himſelfe, and lept into the water, and ſwamme to the boate, whom we receiued. And he ſaluted vs, and demaunded what our requeſt was: we made him anſwere, that by miſfortune we loſt the companie of our Admirall, and being bound to this Iſland to traffique for wines and other things neceſſarie for vs, doe heare mind to ſtay vntill ſhe come.

Concerning our letter, he made vs anſwere that he would with all diligence cary it, and deliuer it according to the direction, and ſo the ſayd Walter knit the letter in a bladder, and deliuered it vnto him, and alſo gaue him foure royals of Spaniſh money for his paines: and promiſing that we ſhould haue anſwere of it, he tooke his leaue, and ſwamme againe a ſhore, where the people ſtood ready to receiue him. And after that they had talked with him, and vnderſtood our meaning, ſome of them threw vp their hats, and the other put them off holding them in their hands, and made vs very curteous ſignes, alwayes deſiring that the boate would come a land, but we refuſing the rowed backe againe aboord.

The 30. day the Gouernours brother of Santa Cruz, came aboord the May Flower, with ſixe or ſeuen Spaniards with him, who concluded with the Captaine that we might come a ſhore and traffique with them, but that day we did not, for we had no ſufficient pledge of theirs for our aſſurance. Our Captaine intertained them well, and at their departure gaue them foure pieces of ordinance for a farewell, and beſtowed vpon them two cheeſes with other things.

The ſayd Gouernours brother promiſed our Capitaine that he ſhould haue ſufficient pledges the morow following, which was not done, whereupon we grew ſuſpicious, and went not that day a ſhore.

The firſt day of Januarie, our Captaine ſent Nicholas Day, and Iohn Sumpter a ſhore, who were very well entertained with as many of our company as went after them. Januarie.

In the ſayd Iſland is a marueilous high hill called the Pike, which is a farre off more like a cloud in the aire, then any other thing: the hill is round and ſomewhat ſmall at the top, it hath not beene knowen that euer any man could go vp to the top thereof. And although it ſtand in 28. degrees which is as hote in Januarie, as it is in England at Midſommer, yet is the top of the ſaid hill Winter, and Sommer ſeldome without ſnow.

In

In this Iland about two leagues from the said Santa Cruz, is a citie called Anagona.

The third day we departed about the Westerne point of the Iland, about 12. or 14. leagues from Santa Cruz, into a Baie which is right against the house of one Petro de Souses, in which Baie we came to an anker the 5. day, where we heard that our Admirall had bene there at an anker 3. dayes before vs, and was gone thence to an Iland called Gomera, whereupon we set sayle presently to seeke him.

They meete their Admirall againe.

The 6. day we came to an anker against the towne of Gomera, where we finde our Admirall, which was very joyfull of our comming, and we also of his sight.

In the sayd roade we found Edward Cooke in a tall ship, and a ship of the Coppersmiths of London, which the Portingals had trecherously surprised in the Baie of Santa Cruz, vpon the coast of Barbarie, which ship we left there all spoiled.

Our Generall and merchants bought in the said towne for our prouision, 14. buts of wine, which cost 15. ducats a butt, which were offered vs at Santa Cruz in Tenerif, for 8, 9. and 10. ducats.

The 9. day we departed from this road to an other Baie, about 3. leagues off, and there tooke in fresh water; and so the 10. day we set saile towards Cape Blanke, which is on the coast of Ginnie.

The 12. day we fell into a Baie to the Eastward of Cape Pargos, which is 35. leagues from Cape Blanke. But hauing no knowledge of that coast, we went with Cape Blanke, and at the fall of the land we sounded, and had 16. fadome water two leagues from the shore. The land is very lowe, and white sand. Upon the fall of the sayd coast, beware how you bozow in 12. or 10. fadome, for within 2. or 3. casts of the lead you may be on ground.

A good caueat.

The 17. day, we set sayle from Cape Blanke, directing our course South and by East, and South among, and so fell into a Baie to the Eastward of Cape Verde, about 16. leagues, and about 6. leagues from the shore. The sayd land seemed vnto vs as if it had bene a great number of ships vnder sayle, being in deed nothing els but the land which was full of Hammoks, some high some lowe, with high trees on them. We bare with the sayd land till we were within 3. leagues of the shore, and then we sounded and found 28. fadome water, black oase. This day we saw much fish in sundry scules swimming with their noses with the brimme of the water.

Cape Verde.

Passing along this coast, we might see two small round hils, seeming to vs about a league one from the other, which is the Cape, and betweene them are great store of trees, and in all our dayes sailing we saw no land so high, as the said two hils.

The 19. day we came to an anker at the Cape, in a road fast by the Westermost side of two hils, in 10. fadome of water, where you may ride in fiue or sixe fadome, for the ground is faire, and alwayes you shall haue the wind off the shore. And as soone as we were all at an anker, our Generall came aboord vs, and with him the master of the Admirall, whose name was William Bats, and with them the Captaine of the Viceadmirall, whose name was master Edward Fenner, and Robert Curtise the master, and dined aboord of vs, being in the George, wherein was Captaine Iohn Heywood, and Iohn Smith of Hampton master, and there we concluded to goe aland, which was halfe a mile from vs: and by the counsell of William Bats, both Captaine and merchants and diuers of the company went without armour: for he sayd, that although the people were blacke and naked, yet they were ciuill: so that he would needes giue the venter, without the consent of the rest, to go without weapon. Thus they rowed to shore, where, we being in the ship might see a great company of Negroes naked, walking to and fro by the sea side where the landing place was, waiting for the comming of our men, who came too soone, and landed to their losse as fell out afterwards.

The foolish rashnesse of Wil. Bats, perswading the company to land vnarmed.

There went a shore the Admirals skiffe, and the May Flowers boate, and in them the number of 20. persons or thereabouts, as master George Fenner the Generall, his brother master Edward Fenner, Thomas Valentine, Iohn Worme and Francis Leigh marchants, Iohn Haward, William Bats, Nicholas Day, Iohn Tomson, and others.

At their comming to the shore there were 100. Negroes or vpward, with their bowes and arrowes: our Captaines and merchants talked with them, and according to the vse of the countrey, the one demanded pledges of the other, and they were content to deliuer 3. of their Negros for 5. of our men. Our 5. mens names were these, Iohn Haward, Wil. Bats, Nich. Day, Ioh. Tomson, and Ioh. Curtise: these were deliuered them, and we receiued 3. Negroes into our Admirals skiffe.

Our men being a shore among the Negroes, beganne to talke with them, declaring what ware and merchandize we had, as woollen cloth, linnen cloth, iron, cheese and other things. The Negroes answered againe, they had cyuet, muske, gold and graines, which pleased our captaines and marchants very well. Then the Negroes desired to haue a sight of some of our wares, to the which our merchants were content, and foorthwith sent aboord one of the boates for part of their marchandize, and and in the meane time while the boate went to the ſhip, our fiue men were walking on the ſhoare with the Negroes, and our Generall and Marchants ſtayed in the other boate by the ſea ſide, hauing the 3. Negroes with them.

Our boate then came againe, and brought vpon and other marchandize, with bread, wine, and cheeſe, which they gaue vnto them. Then two of the Negroes (which were the pledges) made themſelues licke, deſiring to goe aſhoare, promiſing to ſende other two for them. Captaine Hayward perceiuing that our men had let the Negroes come a ſhoare, aſked what they meant, (and doubting the worſt) began to draw toward the boate, and two or three of the Negroes followed him. And when he came to the boate they begamne to ſtay him, and he made ſignes vnto them that he would fetche them more drinke and bread: notwithſtanding, when hee was entring into the boate, one of them caught him by the breeches, and would haue ſtayed him, but hee ſprange from him and leapt into the boate. And as ſoone as hee was in, one of the Negroes a ſhoare began to blowe a pipe, and preſently the other Negro that was in our boate, ſitting on the boates ſide, and Maſter Wormes ſword by him, ſuddenly drewe the ſworde out of the ſcaberde and caſt himſelfe into the ſea, and ſwomme a ſhoare: and preſently the Negroes layde handes on our men that were on ſhoare, and tooke three of them with great violence, and toare all their apparell from their backes, and left them nothing to couer them, and many of them ſhotte ſo thicke at our men in our boates, that they coulde ſcarſe ſet hande to any Oare to rowe from the ſhoare, yet (by the helpe of God) they got from them with their boates, although many of them were hurt with their poyſoned arrowes: and the poyſon is vncurable if the arrowe enter within the ſkinne and drawe bloud, and except the poyſon be preſently ſuckt out, or the place where any man is hurt, be furthwith cut away, hee dieth within foure dayes, and within three houres after they be hurt or pricked, whereſoeuer it be, although but at the litle toe, yet it ſtriketh vp to the heart, and taketh away the ſtomacke, and cauſeth the partie marueilouſly to vomit, being able to brooke neither meate nor drinke. The Negroes treacherie.

The Negroes hauing vſed our men with ſuch cruelty, whoſe names were Nicholas Day, William Bats, and Iohn Tomſon, ledde them away to a towne which was within a mile of the water ſide or there about.

The 20. day we ſent too lande a boate or ſkiffe wherein were eight perſons, and one of them was the foreſaid Iohn Tomſon and our interpreter, which was a Frenchman, (for there was one of the Negroes which ſpake good French:) they carried with them two harquebuſſes, two targets, and a mantell.

The cauſe of ſending them was to learne what raunſome they demaunded for Batts and Day, whome they detained. And when they came to the ſhoare, and tolde the Negroes what they deſired, they went and fetched them from among the trees, and brought them looſe amongſt fourtie or fiftie of them. And being come within a ſtones caſt of the ſea ſide, William Batts brake from them, and ranne as faſt as hee coulde into the ſea towardes the boate, and hee was not ſo ſoone in the water but hee fell downe, either being out of breath or his footing fayling him in the ſande being ſoft: ſo that the Negroes came and fell on him and tooke him, and halled him, that wee thoughte they had torne him in pieces. For they toare againe all the apparell from his backe, ſo that ſome of them caried our men againe to the towne, and the reſt ſhotte at vs with their poyſoned arrowes, and hurt one of our men called Androwes in the ſmall of the legge, who being come aboorde, (for all that our Surgeons coulde doe) wee thought hee would haue died. The danger of poyſoned arrowes.

Our Generall (notwithſtanding all this villanie,) ſent againe to them, and offered them any thing that they deſired for the raunſome of our men, but they would not deliuer them: giuing vs this anſwere, That there was in the foreſayde roade three weekes before wee came, an Engliſh ſhippe which had taken three of their people, and vntill wee did bring or ſende them againe, wee ſhoulde not haue our men, although wee would giue our three ſhippes with their furniture. The anſwere of the Negroes.

The 21. day a French ſhippe of the burden of foureſcore tunnes, (or there abouts,) came to the place where we were, being bounde to traffique at the Cape: we tolde them of the detayning of our two men by the Negroes: and ſeeing that theſe Frenchmen were very well welcome to the Negroes, we wiſhed them to ſee whether they coulde procure them againe of the Negroes, and bring them along with them, and our Generall promiſed the Frenchmen 100. li. to obtaine them. So we committed the matter to the Frenchmen and departed.

Of our men that were hurt by the Negroes arrowes, foure died, and one to ſaue his life, had his arme cut off. Androwes that was laſt of all hurt, laye lame not able to helpe himſelfe:

onely two recouered of their hurts. So we placed other men in the roomes of those that wee lost, and set saile.

The 26. day betweene Cape Verde, and Bona vista, we saw many flying fishes of the bignes of herrings, whereof two flew into our boate, which we towed at our sterne.

Bona vista. The 28. day we fel with an Iland called Bona vista, which is from Cape Verde 86. leagues. The Northside of the saide Islande is full of white sandie hilles, and dales, and somewhat high lande.

The saide day we came to an ancre within the Westermost point, about a league within the point, and found in our sounding faire sande in tenne foote water, but you may goe neere till you be in fiue or sixe fadom, for the ground is faire.

As soone as we were at an ancre, our Generall sent his pinnesse a land, and founde fiue or six small houses, but the people were fledde into the mountaines: and the next day hee sent a shoare againe, and mette with 2. Portingals, who willingly went aboorde with his men, and at their comming he welcommed them, although they were but poore and simple, & gaue eche of them a paire of shoes, and so set them a shoare againe.

The 30. day we waied and sailed into a bay within a small Iland about a league from vs, and tooke plentie of diuers sorts of fish. The foresaide Islande lyeth in sixteene degrees. And if you meane to ancre in the said bay, you may borrow in foure or fiue fadome of the Southermost point of the saide Island, which you may see when you ride in the roade. But beware of the middest of the bay, for there lyeth a ledge of rocks, which at a lowe water breaketh, yet there is three fadom water ouer them.

A good admonition.

The last day of Januarie our Generall with certaine of his men went a shoare in the bay to the houses, where he found twelue Portingals. In all the Iland there were not aboue 30. persons, which were banished men for a time, some for more yeeres, some for lesse, and amongst them there was one simple man which was their captaine.

Banished Portingals.

They liue vpon goates flesh, cockes, hennes, and fresh water: other victuals they haue none, sauing fish, which they esteeme not, neither haue they any boates to take them.

They reported that this Islande was giuen by the king of Portingall, to one of his Gentlemen, who hath let it foorth to rent for one hundreth ducates a yeere, which rent is reared onely in goates skinnes. For by their speaches there hath bene sent foorth of the saide Iland into Portingale 40000. skinnes in one yeere.

Great store of goates.

We were to these men marueilously welcome, and to their powers very well intertained, and they gaue vs the flesh of as many bee-goates as wee would haue, and tooke much paines for vs in taking them, and bringing them from the mountaines vpon their asses.

They haue there great store of the oyle of Toxoyses, which Toxoyse is a fish which swimmeth in the sea, with a shell on his backe as broade as a target. It raineth not in this Iland but in three moneths of the yeere, from the middest of July to the middest of October, and it is here alwayes very hotte. Kine haue bene brought hither, but by reason of the heate and drought they haue died.

Febuarie. The 3. of Febuarie wee departed from this Iland, and the same day fell with another Iland

The Isle of Maiyo. called the Isle of Maiyo, which is 14. leagues from the other Iland: there is in the middest of the way betweene these 2. Islands a danger which is alwayes to be seene.

Wee ancred in the Northwest side of the saide Isle in a faire bay, of eight fadoms water and faire sande, but here wee staied not, but the fourth day waied and sailed to another Iland called

S. Iago. S. Iago, which lyeth off the said Islande of Maiyo East and by South, and about fiue leagues off from the other. Being come within the Westermost point, wee saw a faire roade, and a small towne by the water side, and also a fort or platforme by it: there wee purposed to come to ancre, and our Marchants to make some sale. But before we came within their shotte, they let flie at vs two pieces, whereupon wee went roomer and sailed along the shoare two or three leagues from the roade, where we found a small bay and two or three small houses, where we came to an ancre in 14. fadom faire ground.

Within an houre after we had ancred, we might see diuers horsemen and footemen on the land right against vs riding, and running to and fro.

The next day being the fift of Febuarie, a great companie of their horsemen and footemen appeared on the shoare side, vnto whome our Generall sent, to vnderstande whether they would quietly traffique with them: And they sent him worde againe, desiring that they might speake with him, promising that if he came to traffique as a marchant, he should be welcome, and also that he should haue any thing that he or the marchant would with reason demaunde.

Wher

When this anſwere was brought vnto our Generall, he was very glad thereof, and the whole companie, and preſently (with as much ſpeede as he could) hee cauſed his boates to be made readie: but doubting the villanie of the Portingals, armed his boates, putting a double baſe in the head of his pinneſſe, and two ſingle baſes in the head of his Skiffe, and ſo ſent to the May floure and the George, and willed them in like ſort to man their two boates.

Theſe boates being thus manned and well appointed, our Generall entred into his ſkiffe, and with the reſt rowed to the ſhoare where were threeſcore horſemen or more, and two hundreth footemen readie to receiue them. Our Generall marueiled that they came in ſo great a nomber and all armed, and therefore with a flagge of truce ſent to them to knowe their pleaſure: and they anſwered them with many faire promiſes and othes, that their pretence was all true, and that they meant like Gentlemen and Marchants to trafique with him, declaring alſo that their Captaine was comming to ſpeake with him; and therefore deſired our Generall to come and ſpeake with him himſelfe.

With this anſwere the boate returned, and then our Generall cauſed his pinneſſe to rowe to them, and as he came neere the ſhoare, they came in a great companie with much obeyſance, opening their handes, and armes abroade, bowing themſelues with their bonnets off, with as much humble ſalutations outwardly as they might: earneſtly deſiring our Generall and Marchants to come a lande to them, whereunto hee would not agree, without ſufficient gages of Gentlemen and Marchants. At length they promiſed to ſende two gages to our Generals contentment, promiſing freſh water, victuall, money, or Negroes for ware, if it were ſuch as they liked: and therefore deſired our Generall and Marchants to ſende them a ſhoare in writing, the quantitie of their wares, and the names of them: all which our Generall departed to performe, looking for their anſwere the morowe following. And being gone a litle from the ſhoare, hee cauſed his baſes, curriers, and harquabuſſes to be ſhotte off, and our ſhippes in like caſe ſhotte off fiue or ſixe pieces of great ordinance, and ſo came aboorde to prepare the note. The Portingals moſt of them departed, ſauing thoſe that were left to watch and to receiue the note, which about foure or fiue a clocke in the after noone was ſent, and it was receiued. But all the purpoſes of the Portingals, were villanouſly to betray vs (as ſhall appeare hereafter,) although we meant in trueth and honeſtie, friendly to trafique with them.

The treaſon of the Portingals in S. Iago to our men.

There was to the Weſtwards of vs, and about two leagues from vs, a towne behinde a point laſt by the ſea ſide, where they had certaine Caruels or ſhippes, and alſo two Brigandines, whereof they (with all the ſpeede that they might) made readie foure Caruels, and both the Brigandines which were like two Gallies, and furniſhed them both with men and ordinance, as much as they could carrie, and as ſoone as it was night, they came rowing and falling towards vs: ſo that the land being high, and the weather ſomewhat cloudie or myſtie, and they comming all the way cloſe vnder the ſhoare, wee could not ſee them till they were right againſt one of our ſhippes called the May floure.

By this time it was about one or two of the clocke in the morning, and the May floure roade neerer them then the other two by a baſe ſhotte, ſo that they made a ſure accompt either to haue taken her or burnt her. In the meane time our men that had the watche (litle thinking of ſuch villanous treacheries after ſo many faire wordes,) were ſinging and playing one with the other, and made ſuch a noyſe, that (being but a ſmall gale of winde, and riding neere the lande) they might heare vs from the ſhoare: ſo that we ſuppoſed that they made accompt that wee had eſpied them, which in deede we had not, neither had any one piece of ordinance primed, or any other thing in a readineſſe.

They came ſo neere vs that they were within gunſhot of vs, & then one of our men chanced to ſee a light, & then looking out eſpied the 4. ſhips, and ſuddenly cried out, Gallies, gallies, at which cry we were all amazed, and forthwith they ſhotte at vs all the great ordinance that they had, and their harquebuſſes, and curriers, and ſo lighted certaine tronks or pieces of wilde fire, and all of them with one voyce (as well they on the ſhoare as they in the ſhippes) gaue a great ſhoute, and ſo continued hallowing with great noyces, ſtill approching neerer and neerer vnto the May-floure. Wee (with all the ſpeede that wee might) made readie one piece of ordinance and ſhotte at them, which cauſed them ſomewhat to ſtaye, ſo they recharged their ordinance and ſhotte at vs freſhly againe, and while they ſhotte this ſecond time at vs, wee had made readie three pieces which wee ſhotte at them, but they approched ſtill ſo neere, that at laſt wee might haue ſhotte a ſheaffe arrowe to them. Whereupon wee hauing a gale of winde off the ſhoare, hoyſed our foreſayle, and cut our cable at the hawſe, and went towarde our Admirall, and they continued following and ſhooting at vs, and ſometime at our Admirall, but our Admirall ſhotte one such piece at them that it made them to retire, and at length to warpe away like traiterous villaines, and although they thus suddenly shot all their shot at vs, yet they hurt neither man nor boy of ours, but what we did to them we know not.

The Isle of Fuego.

But seeing the villanie of these men, we thought it best to stay there no longer, but immediately set saile towards an Iland called Fuego, 12. leagues from the saide Iland of S. Iago. At which Iland of Fuego we came to an ancre the 11. day of this moneth, against a white chappell in the West ende of the said Iland, within halfe a league of a litle towne, and within a league or thereabout of the vttermost point of the said Iland.

In this Iland is a marueilous high hill which doth burne continually, and the inhabitants reported that about 3. yeeres past, the whole Iland was like to be burned with the abundance of fire that came out of it.

Mille.

About a league from the said chappel to the Westward, is a goodly spring of fresh water, where we had as much as wee would. Wheate they haue none growing here, but a certaine seede that they call Mill, and certaine pease like Guinie pease, which Mill maketh good bread, but they haue here good store of rother beastes and goates. Their marchandize is cotton which groweth there.

Cotton in Fuego.

The inhabitants are Portingals, which haue commandement frō the king to traffique neither with Englishmen nor Frenchmen for victual or any other thing, except they be forced so to doe.

The Isle of Bzana.

There lieth off this Iland, another called Ilha Braua, which is not passing two leagues ouer, it hath good store of goates and many trees, but there are not passing three or foure persons dwelling in it.

They returne. March.

The 25. day of Februarie we departed towards the Ilands of Azores, and on the 23. day of March we had sight of one of them called Flores, and then wee might see another Iland to the Northward of it called Cueruo, lying 2. leagues or thereabouts off the other.

The 27. we came to an ancre in Cueruo ouer against a village of about twelue simple houses: but in the night by a gale of winde, which caused vs to drawe our ancre after vs, we hoysed saile and went to the aforesaid Iland of Flores, where wee sawe strange streames of water running downe from the high cliffes by reason of the great abundance of raine that had suddenly fallen.

The 29. day we came againe to Cueruo and cast ancre, but a storme arose and continued seuen or eight houres together, so that wee let slippe a cable and ancre, and after the storme was alayed wee came againe thinking to haue recouered the same, but the Portingals had either taken it, or spoiled it: the cable was new and neuer wet before, and both the cable and ancre was better worth then 40. li. So that we accompt our selues much beholding to the honest Portingals.

April.

The 18. day of April wee tooke in water at the Iland of Flores, and hauing ancred, our cable was fretted in sunder with a rocke and so burst, where wee lost that cable and ancre also, and so departed to our coast.

Then wee set saile to an Iland named Faiall, about the which lie three other Ilands, the one called Pico, the other S. George, and the other Graciosa, which wee had sight of on the 28. day.

The 29. we came to an ancre in the Southwest side of Fayal in a faire bay, and 22. fadom water gainst a litle towne, where we had both fresh water and fresh victual. In this Iland by the report of the inhabitants, there groweth certaine greene woad, which by their speaches is farre better then the woade of S. Michael, or of Terçera.

Woade.

May.

The eight day of May we came to Tercera, where we mette with a Portingal shippe, and being destitute of a cable and ancre, our Generall caused vs to keepe her companie, to see if her could conueniently spare vs any. The next morning we might see bearing with vs a great shippe and two Caruels, which wee iudged to bee of the king of Portingals Armado, and so they were, whereupon wee prepared our selues for our defence. The saide shippe was one of the kings Gallias-ses, about the burden of foure hundreth tunnes, with about three hundreth men in her, the shippe being well appointed with brasse pieces both great and small, and some of them so bigge, that their shotte was as great as a mans head, the other two Caruels were also very warlike and well appointed, both with men and munition.

A Portingal Galiasse of 400. tunnes.

A fight betweene one English ship, and 7. Portingals.

As soone as they were within shotte of vs, they waued vs amaine with their swords, wee keeping our course, the greatest shippe shot at vs freely, and the caruell also, and wee prepared our selues, and made all things cleare for our safegard as neere as we could. Then the great shippe shot at vs all her broad side, & her foure greatest pieces that laye in her sterne, and therewith hurt some of our men, and wee did the best wee could with our shotte to requite it. At last two other

Caruels

Caruels came off the ſhoare, and two other pinneſſes full of men, and deliuered them abooꝛde the great ſhippe, and ſo went backe againe with two men in a piece of them. The ſhippe and the Caruels gaue vs the firſt day three fights, and when the night was come, they left off ſhooting, yet notwithſtanding kept hard by vs all the night. In the meane time wee had as much as wee coulde doe all the night to mende our ropes, and to ſtrengthen our bulwarkes, putting our truſt in God, and reſoluing our ſelues rather to die in our defenſe, then to bee taken by ſuch wretches.

The next day being the 10. of May in the morning, there were come to ayde the ſaide Portingals, 4. great Armados oꝛ Caruels moꝛe which made ſeuen, of which 4. three of them were at the leaſt 100. tunnes apiece, the other not ſo bigge, but all well appointed and full of men. All theſe together came bearing with vs being in our Admirall, and one of the great Caruels came to lay vs abooꝛde (as we iudged) foꝛ they had prepared their falſe nettings, and all things foꝛ that purpoſe, ſo that the Gallias came vp in our larbooꝛd ſide, and the Caruel in our ſtarbooꝛd ſide.

Our Captaine and Maſter perceiuing their pretence, cauſed our gunners to make all our oꝛdinance readie with croſſebarres, chaineſhotte, and haileſhot: ſo the ſhippe and Caruell came vp, and as ſoone as they were right in our ſides, they ſhotte at vs as much oꝛdinance as they coulde, thinking to haue layde vs preſently abooꝛde: whereupon wee gaue them ſuch a heate with both our ſides, that they were both glad to fall aſterne vs, and ſo pauſed the ſpace of two oꝛ three houres being a very ſmall gale of winde.

Then came vp the other fiue and ſhot all at vs, and ſo fel all aſterne vs, and then went to counſell together.

Then our ſmall barke named the George came to vs, and wee conferred together a great ſpace. And as the Portingall ſhippes and Caruels were comming to vs againe, our barke minding to fall aſterne of vs, and ſo to come vp againe, fell quickly vpon the lee, and by reaſon of the litle winde, it was ſo long before ſhe could fill her ſailes againe, that both the ſhippe and Caruels were come vp to vs, and ſhe falling in among them, made reaſonable ſhift with them, but they got a head of her, ſo that ſhe could not fetch vs: then 5. of the Caruels folowed her, but we ſawe ſhee defended her ſelfe againſt them all.

Then came the great ſhippe and the Caruell to vs, and fought with vs all that day with their oꝛdinance.

The May floure our other conſoꝛt, being very good by the winde, tooke the benefite thereof, and halde all that day cloſe by the winde, but coulde not come neere vs. So when night againe was come, they gaue ouer their fight and followed vs all the night.

In theſe many fights it coulde not otherwiſe bee, but needes ſome of our men muſt be ſlaine, (as they were indeede) and diuers hurt, and our tackle much ſpoyled: yet foꝛ all this wee did our beſt indeuour to repaire all things, and to ſtand to it to the death, with our aſſured truſt in the mercie and helpe of God.

This night the May floure came vp to vs, and our Captaine tolde them his harmes and ſpoyles, and wiſhed them if they coulde ſpare halfe a doſen freſh men, to hoyſe out their boate and ſende them to him, but they coulde not ſpare any, and ſo bare away againe. Which when our enemies ſawe in the next morning, that we were one from another, they came vp to vs againe and gaue vs a great fight with much hallowing and hooping, making accompt either to booꝛde vs oꝛ els to ſinke vs: but although our companie was but ſmall, yet leaſt they ſhoulde ſee vs any whit diſmayde, when they hallowed wee hallowed alſo as faſt as they, and waued to them to come and booꝛde vs if they durſt, but that they woulde not, ſeeing vs ſtill ſo couragious, and hauing giuen vs that day 4. fights, at night they foꝛſooke vs with ſhame, as they came to vs at the firſt with pride.

The 7. Portingals depart with ſhame from one English ſhipp.

They had made in our ſhippe ſome leakes with their ſhotte which we againe ſtopped with all ſpeede, and that being done, we tooke ſome reſt after our long labour and trouble.

The next day in the morning the May floure came to vs, and brought vs ſixe men in her boate, which did vs much pleaſure, and we ſent to them ſome of our hurt men.

Then we directed our courſe foꝛ our owne countrey, and by the ſecond day of June wee were neere to our owne coaſt, and ſounded being thwart the Lyzard. June.

The thirde day we had ſight of a ſhippe which was a Portingall, who bare with vs, and at his comming to vs (the weather being calme,) our Captaine cauſed him to hoyſe foorth his boate to come abooꝛde to ſpeake with him, and at their comming our Captaine and Marchants demaunded of them what ware they had, and whither they were bounde, and they made anſwere that their lading was Suger and cotton. Then our Captaine and Marchants ſhewed them 5. Negroes that wee had, and asked them whether they would buy them, which they were very desirous to doe, and agreed to giue for them 40. chestes of Suger, which chestes were small hauing not aboue 26. loaues in a piece: so they with their boate did fetch fiue of the chests, and so deliuered them, and went for more, and when they had laden their boate and were come againe, we might see bearing with vs, a great shippe and a small, which our Captaine supposed to be men of warre or Rouers, and then willed the Portingals to carie their suger to their shippe againe, purposing to make our selues readie for our defence. But the Portingals earnestly intreated our Captaine not so to forsake them, and promised him (if he would safegard them.) to giue him aboue the bargaine 10. chests of suger: whereupon our Captaine was content, and the Portingal not being good of saile, we spared our topsailes for her; so at last the foresaide ship bare with vs, and (seeing that we did not feare them) gaue vs ouer. And the next morning came two others bearing with vs, and seeing vs not about to flie a iot from them, forsooke vs also.

A Portingal ship (notwithstanding all their villanies) defended by our men from Rouers.

The 5. day of June wee had sight of the Start, and about noone wee were thwart of the bay of Lime, and so sounded, and had 35. fadom water.

The sixt day wee came in at the Needles, and so came to an ancre vnder the Ile of Wight at a place called Meadhole, and from thence sailed to Southhampton, where wee made an ende of this voyage.

The worthie enterprise of Iohn Fox an Englishman in deliuering 266. Christians out of the captiuitie of the Turkes at Alexandria, the 3. of Ianuarie 1577.

AMong our Marchants here in England it is a common voyage, to trafique into Spaine: whereunto a shippe, being called The three halfe Moones, manned with eight and thirtie men, and well fensed with Munitions, the better to encounter their enemies withal, & hauing winde & tide, set from Portsmouth 1563. and bended her iourney towarde Siuill a Citie in Spaine, intending there to trafique with them. And falling neere the Streights, they perceiued themselues to be beset round about with eight Gallies of the Turks, in such wise, that there was no way for them to flie or escape away, but that either they must yeelde or else bee sunke. Which the owner perceiuing, manfully encouraged his companie, exhorting them valiantly to shewe their manhoode, shewing them that God was their God, and not their enemies, requesting them also not to faint in seeing such a heape of their enemies readie to deuoure them; putting them in minde also, that if it were Gods pleasure to giue them into their enemies handes, it was not they, that ought to shewe one displeasant looke or countenance there against; but to take it patiently, and not to prescribe a day and time for their deliuerance, as the Citizens of Bethulia did, but to put themselues vnder his mercie. And againe, if it were his minde and good will to shewe his mightie power by them, if their enemies were tenne times so many, they were not able to stande in their handes; putting them likewise in minde of the olde and auncient worthinesse of their Countreymen, who in the hardest extremities haue alwayes most preuailed and gone away conquerours, yea, and where it hath bene almost impossible. Such (quoth he) hath bene the valiantnesse of our countrymen; and such hath bene the mightie power of our God.

With such other like incouragements, exhorting them to behaue themselues manfully, they fell all on their knees making their Prayers briefly vnto God: who being all risen vp againe, perceiued their enemies by their signes and defiances bent to the spoyle, whose mercie was no thing else but crueltie; wherupon euery man tooke him to his weapon.

Then stoode vp one Groue the Master, being a comely man, with his sworde and targe, bolding them vp in defiance against his enemies. So likewise stoode vp the owner, the Masters mate, Boteswaine, Purser and euery man well appointed. Nowe likewise sounded vp the drummes, trumpets and flutes, which would haue incouraged any man, had hee neuer so little heart or courage in him.

Then taketh him to his charge Iohn Fox the gunner in the disposing of his pieces in order to the best effect; and sending his bullets towards the Turkes, who likewise bestowed their pieces thyse as fast toward the Christians. But shortly they drewe neere, so that the bowmen fell to their charge in sending forth their arrowes so thicke amongst the Gallies, & also in doubling their shot so sore vpon the Gallies, that there were twise so many of the Turkes slaine, as the number of the Christians were in all. But the Turkes discharged twise as fast against the Christians, & so long, that that the ſhip was very ſore ſtriken & bruiſed vnder water. Which the Turkes perceiuing, made the more haſte to come aboord the ſhippe: which ere they could doe, many a Turke bought it deerely with the loſſe of their liues. Yet was all in vaine, and boorded they were, where they found ſo hot a ſkirmiſh, that it had bene better they had not medled with the feat. For the Engliſhmen ſhewed themſelues men in deede, in working manfully with their browne bils, and holbards: where the owner, maſter, boteſwaine, and their company ſtoode to it ſo luſtily, that the Turkes were halfe diſmaied. But chiefly the boateſwaine ſhewed himſelf valiant aboue the reſt: for he fared amongſt the Turkes like a wood Lyon: for there was none of them that either could or durſt ſtand in his face: till at the laſt there came a ſhot from the Turkes, which brake his whiſtle a ſunder, and ſmote him on the breaſt, ſo that he fell downe, bidding them farewell, & to be of good comfort, incouraging them likewiſe to winne praiſe by death, rather then to liue captiues in miſerie and ſhame. Which they hearing, in deede intended to haue done, as it appeared by their ſkirmiſh: but the preaſe and ſtore of the Turkes was ſo great, that they were not able long to endure, but were ſo ouerpreſſed, that they could not weild their weapons: by reaſon whereof, they muſt needs be taken, which none of them intended to haue bene, but rather to haue died: except onely the Maſters mate, who ſhunke from the ſkirmiſh, like a notable coward, eſteeming neither the valure of his name, nor accounting of the preſent example of his fellowes, nor hauing reſpect to the miſeries, whereunto he ſhould be put. But in fine, ſo it was, that the Turks were victors, wherof they had no great cauſe to reioyce, or triumph. Then would it haue grieued any hard heart to ſee theſe Infidels ſo violently intreating the Chriſtians, not hauing any reſpect of their manhood which they had taſted of, nor yet reſpecting their owne ſtate, how they might haue met with ſuch a booty, as might haue giuen them the ouerthrow: but no remorſe hereof, or any thing els doth bridle their fierce and tyrannous dealing, but that the Chriſtians muſt needes to the gallies, to ſerue in newe offices: and they were no ſooner in them, but their garments were pulled ouer their eares, and torne from their backes, and they ſet to the oares.

The valour & death of their Boatſwaine.

I will make no mention of their miſeries, being now vnder their enemies raging ſtripes. I thinke there is no man wil iudge their fare good, or their bodies vnloden of ſtripes, and not pelted with too much heate, and alſo with too much cold: but I will goe to my purpoſe, which is, to ſhew the ende of thoſe, being in meere miſerie, which continually doe call on God with a ſtedfaſt hope, that he will deliuer them, and with a ſure faith, that he can doe it.

Nigh to the citie of Alexandria, being a hauen towne, and vnder the dominion of the Turkes, there is a roade, being made very ſenſible with ſtrong wals, whereinto the Turkes doe cuſtomably bring their gallies on ſhoare euery yeere, in the winter ſeaſon, and there doe trimme them, and lay them vp againſt the ſpring time. In which roade there is a priſon, wherein the captiues & ſuch priſoners as ſerue in the gallies, are put for all that time, vntill the ſeas be calme and paſſable for the gallies, euery priſoner being moſt grieuouſly laden with yrons on their legges, to their great paine, and ſore diſabling of them to any labour taking. Into which priſon were theſe Chriſtians put, and faſt warded all the winter ſeaſon. But ere it was long, the Maſter and the owner, by meanes of friends, were redeemed: the reſt abiding ſtill by the miſerie, while that they were all, through reaſon of their ill vſage and worſe fare, miſerably ſtarued: ſauing one Iohn Fox, who (as ſome men can abide harder and more miſerie, the nother ſome can, ſo can ſome likewiſe make more ſhift, and worke more deuiſes to helpe their ſtate and liuing, then other ſome can doe) being ſomewhat ſkilfull in the craft of a Barbour, by reaſon thereof made great ſhift in helping his fare now and then with a good meale. Inſomuch, till at the laſt, God ſent him fauour in the ſight of the keeper of the priſon, ſo that he had leaue to goe in and out to the roade, at his pleaſure, paying a certaine ſtipend vnto the keeper, and wearing a locke about his legge: which libertie likewiſe, ſire more had vpon like ſufferance: who by reaſon of their long impriſonment, not being feared or ſuſpected to ſtart aſide, or that they would worke the Turkes any miſchiefe, had libertie to goe in and out at the ſaid roade, in ſuch manner, as this Iohn Fox did, with yrons on their legges, and to returne againe at night.

The Engliſh men carried priſoners vnto an Hauen neere Alexandria.

In the yeere of our Lord 1577. in the winter ſeaſon, the Gallies happily comming to their accuſtomed harborow, and being diſcharged of all their maſtes, ſailes, and other ſuch furnitures as vnto gallies doe appertaine, and all the Maiſters and mariners of them being then neſted in their owne homes: there remained in the priſon of the ſaid road two hundred threeſcore and eight Chriſtian priſoners, who had beene taken by the Turkes force, and were of ſixteene ſundry nations. Among which there were three Engliſhmen, whereof one was named Iohn Fox of Woodbridge in Suffolke, the other William Wickney of Portſmouth in the Countie of Southampton, and the third Robert Moore of Harwich in the Countie of Eſſex. Which Iohn Fox

hauing bene thirteene or foureteene yeeres vnder their gentle entreatance, & being too too weary thereof, minding his escape, weied with himselfe by what meanes it might be brought to passe: and continually pondering with himselfe thereof, tooke a good heart vnto him, in hope that God would not be alwaies scourging his children, and neuer ceassing to pray him to further his pretended enterprise, if that it should redound to his glory.

Not farre from the roade, and somewhat from thence, at one side of the Citie, there was a certaine Victualing house, which one Peter Vnticaro had hired, paying also a certaine fee vnto the keeper of the roade. This Peter Vnticaro was a Spaniard borne, and a Christian, and had bene prisoner aboue thirtie yeeres, and neuer practised any meanes to escape, but kept himselfe quiet without touch or suspect of any conspiracie: vntill that nowe this Iohn Foxe vsing much thither, they brake one to another their minds, concerning the restraint of their libertie and imprisonment. So that this Iohn Fox at length opening vnto this Vnticaro the deuise which he would faine put in practise, made priuie one more to this their intent. Which three debated of this matter, at such times as they could compasse to meete together: insomuch, that at seuen weekes ende they had sufficiently concluded howe the matter should be, if it pleased God to further them thereto: who making fiue more priuie to this their deuise, whome they thought that they might safely trust, determined in three nights after to accomplish their deliberate purpose. Whereupon the same Iohn Fox, and Peter Vnticaro, and the other fiue, appointed to meete all together in the prison the next day, being the last day of December: where this Iohn Fox certified the rest of the prisoners, what their intent and deuise was, and howe and when they minded to bring their purpose to passe: who thereunto perswaded them without much a doe to further their deuise. Which the same Iohn Fox seeing, deliuered vnto them a sort of files, which he had gathered together for this purpose, by the meanes of Peter Vnticaro, charging them that euery man should be ready discharged of his yrons by eight of the clocke on the next day at night.

The last of December.

On the next day at night, this saide Iohn Fox, and his fiue other companions, being all come to the house of Peter Vnticaro, passing the time away in mirth for feare of suspect, till the night came on, so that it was time for them to put in practise their deuise, sent Peter Vnticaro to the master of the roade, in the name of one of the Maisters of the citie, with whome this keeper was acquainted, and at whose request he also would come at the first: who desired him to take the paines to meete him there, promising him, that he would bring him backe againe. The keeper agreed to goe with him, willing the warders not to barre the gate, saying, that he would not stay long, but would come againe with all speede.

Ianuarie.

In the meane season, the other seuen had prouided them of such weapons, as they could get in that house: and Iohn Fox tooke him to an olde rustie sword blade, without either hilt or pomell, which he made to serue his turne, in bending the hand ende of the sword, in steede of a pomell, and the other had got such spits and glaiues as they found in the house.

The keeper now being come vnto the house, and perceiuing no light, nor hearing any noyse, straightway suspected the matter: and returning backe ward, Iohn Fox standing behind the corner of the house, stepped foorth vnto him: who perceiuing it to be Iohn Fox, sayde, O Fox, what haue I deserued of thee, that thou shouldest seeke my death? Thou villaine (quoth Fox) hast bene a bloodsucker of many a Christians blood, and nowe thou shalt knowe what thou hast deserued at my handes: where with he lift vp his bright shining sword of ten yeeres rust, and stroke him so maine a blowe, as therewithall his head claue asunder, so that he fell starke dead to the ground. Whereupon Peter Vnticaro went in, and certified the rest howe the case stoode with the keeper: who came presently foorth, and some with their spits ranne him through, and the other with their glaiues hewed him in sunder, cut off his head, and mangled him so, that no man should discerne what he was.

Then marched they toward the roade, whereinto they entered softly, where were fiue warders, whom one of them asked, saying, who was there? quoth Fox & his company, all friends. Which when they were all within, prooued contrary: for quoth Fox, my maisters, here is not to euery man a man, wherefore looke you play your parts. Who so behaued themselues in deede, that they had dispatched these fiue quickly. Then Iohn Fox, intending not to be barred of his enterprise, and minding to worke surely in that which he went about, barred the gate surely, and planted a Canon against it.

Then entred they into the Gailers lodge, where they found the keies of the fortresse and prison by his bed side, and there had they all better weapons. In this chamber was a chest, wherein was a rich treasure, and all in duckets, which this Peter Vnticaro, and two more, opening, stuffed themselues so full as they could, betweene their shirts and their skinne: which Iohn Fox would not once touch, and ſaide, that it was his and their libertie which he ſought for, to the honour of his God, and not to make a marte of the wicked treaſure of the Infidels. Yet did theſe words ſinke nothing into their ſtomakes, they did it for a good intent: ſo did Saule ſaue the fatteſt Oxen, to offer vnto the Lord, and they to ſerue their owne turne. But neither did Saule ſcape the wrath of God therefore, neither had theſe that thing which they deſired ſo, and did thirſt after. Such is Gods iuſtice. He that they put their truſt in, to deliuer them from the tyrannous hands of their enemies, (he I ſay) could ſupply their want of neceſſaries.

Nowe theſe eight, being armed with ſuch weapons, as they thought well of, thinking themſelues ſufficient champions to encounter a ſtronger enemie, and comming vnto the priſon, Fox opened the gates and doores thereof, and called foorth all the priſoners, whom he ſet, ſome to ramming vp the gate, ſome to the dreſſing vp of a certaine gallie, which was the beſt in all the roade, and was called the captaine of Alexandria, whereinto ſome caried maſtes, ſailes, oares, and other ſuch furniture, as doth belong vnto a gallie.

At the priſon were certaine warders, whome Iohn Fox and his company ſlewe: in the killing of whome, there were eight more of the Turkes, which perceiued them, and got them to the toppe of the priſon: vnto whome Iohn Fox, and his company, were faine to come by ladders, where they found a hot ſkirmiſh. For ſome of them were there ſlaine, ſome wounded, and ſome but ſcarred, and not hurt. As Iohn Fox was thriſe ſhot through his apparell, and not hurt, Peter Vnticaro, and the other two, that had armed them with the buckets, were ſlaine, as not able to weild themſelues, being ſo peſtered with the weight and vneaſie carying of the wicked and prophane treaſure: and alſo diuers Chriſtians were aſwell hurt about that ſkirmiſh, as Turkes ſlaine.

Amongſt the Turkes was one thruſt thorowe, who (let vs not ſay that it was ill fortune) fell off from the toppe of the priſon wall, and made ſuch a lowing, that the inhabitants thereabout (as here and there ſcattering ſtoode a houſe or two) came and dawed him, ſo that they vnderſtoode the caſe, how that the priſoners were paying their ranſomes: wherewith they raiſed both Alexandria, which lay on the weſt ſide of the roade, and a Caſtle which was at the Cities end, nere to the roade, and alſo an other Fortreſſe which lay on the North ſide of the roade: ſo that nowe they had no way to eſcape, but one, which by mans reaſon (the two holdes lying ſo vpon the mouth of the roade) might ſeeme impoſſible to be a way for them. So was the red ſea impoſſible for the Iſraelites to paſſe through, the hils and rockes lay ſo on the one ſide, and their enemies compaſſed them on the other. So was it impoſſible, that the wals of Iericho ſhould fall downe, being neither vndermined, nor yet rammed at with engines, nor yet any mans wiſedome, pollicie, or helpe ſet or put thereunto. Such impoſſibilities can our God make poſſible. He that helde the Lyons iawes from renting Daniel aſunder, yea, or yet from once touching him to his hurt: can not he hold ẏ roring canons of this helliſh force? He that kept the fiers rage in the hot burning Ouen, from the three children, that praiſed his name, can not he keepe the fiers flaming blaſtes from among his elect?

Now is the roade fraught with luſtie ſouldiers, labourers, and mariners, who are faine to ſtand to their tackling, in ſetting to euery man his hand, ſome to the carying in of victuals, ſome munitions, ſome oares, and ſome one thing, ſome another, but moſt are keeping their enemie from the wall of the roade. But to be ſhort, there was no time miſpent, no man idle, nor any mans labour ill beſtowed, or in vaine. So that in ſhort time, this gally was ready trimmed vp. Whereinto euery man leaped in all haſte, hoyſſing vp the ſailes luſtily, yeelding themſelues to his mercie and grace, in whoſe hands is both winde and weather.

Now is this gally on flote, and out of the ſafetie of the roade: nowe haue the two Caſtles full power vpon the gally, now is there no remedie but ſinke: how can it be auoided? the canons let flee from both ſides, and the gally is euen in the middeſt, and betweene them both. What man can deuiſe to ſaue it? there is no man, but would thinke it muſt needes be ſunke.

There was not one of them that feared the ſhotte, which went thundring round about their eares, nor yet were once ſcarred or touched, with fiue and fortie ſhot, which came from the Caſtles. Here did God hold foorth his buckler, he ſhieldeth now this gally, and hath tried their faith to the vttermoſt. Now commeth his ſpeciall helpe: yea, euen when man thinks them paſt all helpe, then commeth he himſelfe downe from heauen with his mightie power, then is his preſent remedie moſt ready preſt. For they ſaile away, being not once touched with the glaunce of a ſhot, and are quickly out of the Turkiſh canons reach. Then might they ſee them comming downe by heapes to the water ſide, in companies like vnto ſwarmes of bees, making ſhew to come after them with gallies, in buſtling themſelues to dreſſe vp the gallies, which would be a ſwift peece of worke for them to doe, for that they had neither oares, maſtes, ſailes, gables, nor any thing els ready in any

any gally. But yet they are carying them into them, some into one gally, and some into an other, so that, being such a confusion amongst them, without any certaine guide, it were a thing impossible to ouertake them: beside that, there was no man that would take charge of a gally, the weather was so rough, and there was such an amasednes amongst them. And verely I thinke their God was amased thereat: it could not be but he must blush for shame, he can speake neuer a word for dulnes, much lesse can he helpe them in such an extremitie. Well, howsoeuer it is, he is very much to blame, to suffer them to receiue such a gibe. But howsoeuer their God behaued himselfe, our God shewed himselfe a God in deede, and that he was the onely liuing God: for the seas were swift vnder his faithfull, which made the enemies agast to behold them, a skilfuller Pylot leades them, and their mariners bestirre them luskily: but the Turkes had neither mariners, Pylote, nor any skilfull Master, that was in a readinesse at this pinch.

When the Christians were safe out of the enemies coast, Iohn Fox called to them all, willing them to be thankfull vnto almightie God for their deliuerie, and most humbly to fall downe vpon their knees, beseeching him to aide them vnto their friends land, and not to bring them into an other daunger, sithe hee had moste mightily deliuered them from so great a thraldome and bondage.

Thus when euery man had made his petition, they fell straight way to their labour with the oares, in helping one another, when they were wearied, and with great labour striuing to come to some Christian land, as neere as they could gesse by the starres. But the windes were so diuers, one while driuing them this way, an other while that way, so that they were now in a newe mase, thinking that God had forsaken them, and left them to a greater danger. And forasmuch as there were no victuals nowe left in the gallie, it might haue bene a cause to them, (if they had bene the Israelites) to haue murmured against their God: but they knew how that their God, who had deliuered them out of Ægypt, was such a louing and mercifull God, as that he would not suffer them to be confounded, in whome he had wrought so great a wonder: but what calamitie soeuer they sustained, they knew it was but for their farther triall, and also (in putting them in minde of their farther miserie) to cause them not to triumph and glory in themselues therefore. Hauing (I say) no victuals in the gally, it might seeme, one miserie continually to fal vpon an others necke: but to be briefe, the famine grew to be so great, that in 28. daies, wherein they were on the sea, there died eight persons, to the astonishment of all the rest.

Extremitie of famine.

So it fell out, that vpon the 29. day, after they set from Alexandria, they fell on the Isle of Candie, and landed at Gallipoli, where they were made much of by the Abbot and Monks there, who caused them to stay there, while they were well refreshed and eased. They kept there the sworde, where with Iohn Fox had killed the keeper, esteeming it as a most precious iewell, and hung it vp for a monument.

Iohn Fox his sword kept as a monument in Gallipoli.

When they thought good, hauing leaue to depart from thence, they sailed along the coast, till they arriued at Tarento, where they solde their gallie, and deuided it, euery man hauing a part thereof. The Turkes receiuing so shamefull a foile at their hand, pursued the Christians, and scoured the seas, where they could imagine that they had bent their course. And the Christians had departed from thence on the one day in the morning, and seuen gallies of the Turkes came thither that night, as it was certified by those who followed Fox, and his companie, fearing least they should haue bene met with. And then they came a foote to Naples, where they departed asunder, euery man taking him to his next way home. From whence Iohn Fox tooke his iourney vnto Rome, where he was well entertained of an Englishman, who presented his worthy deede vnto the Pope, who rewarded him liberally, and gaue him his letters vnto the king of Spaine, where he was very well entertained of him there, who for this his moste worthy enterprise, gaue him in fee twenty pence a day. From whence, being desirous to come into his owne countrey, he came thither at such time as he conueniently could, which was in the yeere of our Lorde God, 1579. Who being come into England, went vnto the Court, and shewed all his trauell vnto the Councell: who considering of the state of this man, in that he had spent and lost a great part of his youth, in thraldome and bondage, extended to him their liberalitie, to helpe to maintaine him now in age, to their right honour, and to the incouragement of all true hearted Christians.

Verses written by A. M. to the curteous Readers, who was present at Rome, when Iohn Fox receiued his letters of the Pope.

Leauing at large all fables vainely vsde, all trifling toyes that doe no truthe import:
Loe here how the'nd (at length) though long de-vnfoldeth plaine a true and rare report: (fusd
To glad those minds, who seek their countries welth by profered paines t'enlarge his happy helth.
At Rome I was, when Fox did there arine:
therefore I may sufficiently expresse
What gallant ioy his deedes did there reuiue in the harts of those which heard his valiantnes.
And how the Pope did recompence his paines, and letters gaue to moue his greater gaines.

I was at Rome in the English house, when Fox was there, and receiued his letters.

But yet I know that many doe misdoubt, that those his paines are fables and vntrue:
Not onely I in this will beare him out,
but diuerse more that did his pattents view.
And vnto those so boldely I dare say: (wo that naught but trueth Iohn Fox doth here bring.
Besides heer's one was slaue with him in thrall, lately returnd into our native land:
This witnes can this matter perfect all,
what needeth more? for witnes he may stand.
And thus I ende, vnfolding what I knowe:
the other man more larger proofe can show.

The ambassage of Master Edmund Hogan, one of the sworne Esquires of her Maesties person, from her Highnes, to Mully Abdelmelech, Emperour of Maroccus, and King of Fes, and Sus: in the yeere 1577. written by himselfe.

May.

Master Hogan his arriuall at Asafi in Barbarie.

I Edmund Hogan, being appointed Ambassadour from the Queenes Maiestie, to the aboue named Emperour and King Mully Abdelmelech, departed with my companie, and seruants from London, the two and twentie day of April, 1577. being imbarked in the good shippe, called the Gallion of London, and arriued in Asafi, a port of Barbarie, the one and twentie day of May, next following. Immediately I sent Leonell Edgerton a shoare, with my letters, directed to Iohn Williams, and Iohn Bampton, who dispatched a Trottero to Maroccus, to know the kings pleasure for my repaire to the Court, which letters came to their hands on the Thursday night.

They with all speede, gaue the King vnderstanding of it, who being glad thereof, speeded the next day certaine Captaines, with souldiers, and tents, with other prouision, to Asafi: so that vpon Whitsonday at night, the said Captaines, with Iohn Bampton, Robert Washborne, and Robert Lyon, and the kings officers, came late to Asafi.

In the meane time, I remained a boord, & caused some of the goods to be discharged for lightning of the shippe, and I wrote in my letters, that I would not lande, till I knewe the Kings pleasure.

The 22. day, being Saturday, the Make speede arriued into the roade about two of the clocke in the afternoone.

The 27. day, being Whitsonday, came aboord the Gallion Iohn Bampton, and others, giuing me to vnderstand, how much the King reioyced of my safe arriuall, comming from the Queenes Maiestie, and how that for my safe conduite to the Court he had sent foure Captaines, and 100. souldiers well appointed, with a horse furnished, which he vsed himselfe to ride on, with al other furniture accordingly: they wished me also to come on land, in ꝑ best order I could, as well for my selfe, as my men, which I did, hauing to the number of 10. men, whereof three were trumpetters.

The

The ſhips being foure, appointed themſelues in the beſt order they could, for the beſt ſhew, and ſhot off all their ordinance, to the value of twentie Markes in powder.

At my comming a ſhoare, I found all the ſouldiers well appointed on horſebacke, the Captaines, and the Gouernour of the towne ſtanding as neere the water ſide as they could, with a Jennet of the kings, and receiued me from the boate, declaring how glad his maieſtie was of my ſafe arriuall, comming from the Queenes maieſtie my maiſtreſſe, and that he had ſent them to attend vpon me, being his pleaſure that I ſhould tary there on ſhore, fiue or ſixe dayes for my refreſhing.

So being mounted vpon the Jennet, they conducted mee through the towne into a faire fielde vpon the Sea ſide, where was a tent prouided for me, and all the ground ſpread with Turkie carpets, and the Caſtle diſcharged a peale of ordinaunce, and all things neceſſarie were brought into my tent, where I both tooke my table, and lodged, and had other conuenient tentes for my ſeruaunts.

The ſouldiors enuironed the tents, and watched about vs day and night as long as I lay there, although I ſought my ſpeedier diſpatch.

On the Wedneſday towardes night, I tooke my horſe and trauailed ten miles to the firſt place of water that we could finde, and there pitched our tents till the next morning, and ſo trauailed till ten of the clocke, and then pitched our tents till 4. and ſo trauailed as long as day light would ſuffer, about 26. miles that day. In Barbarie they haue no Innes, but they lodge in open fieldes where they can find water.

The next day being Friday, I trauailed in like order, but eight and twentie miles at the leaſt, and by a Riuer beyng about ſixe miles within ſight of the Citie of Moroccus wee pitched our tents.

Immediately after came all our Engliſh merchaunts, and the French on horſebacke to meete me, and before night there came an Alcayde from the king with fiftie men, and diuers mules laden with victuall and banket, for my ſupper, declaring vnto me how glad the king ſhewed himſelfe to heare of the Queenes maieſtie, and that his pleaſure was I ſhould be receiued into his countrey as neuer any Chriſtian the like: and deſired to knowe what time the next day I would come into his citie, becauſe he would that all the Chriſtians, as alſo his nobilitie, ſhould meete me, and willed Iohn Bampton to be with him early in the morning, which he did. The ſingular humanitie of the king to our Ambaſſador.

About ſeuen of the clocke being accompanied with the French and Engliſh merchants, and a great number of ſouldiours, I paſſed towardes the Citie, and by that time I had trauailed two miles, there met me all the Chriſtians of the Spaniardes and Portingals to receiue me, which I knowe was more by the kings commaundement, then of any good wils of themſelues: for ſome of them although they ſpeake me faire, hung downe their heads like dogs, and eſpecially the Portingals, and I countenanced them accordingly. The Spaniards and Portingals were commanded by the king in pain of death, to meete the Engliſh Ambaſſador.

So I paſſed on till I came within two Engliſh miles of the Citie, and then Iohn Bampton returned, ſhewing mee that the king was ſo glad of my comming, that hee could not deuiſe to doe too much, to ſhewe the good will that hee did owe to the Queenes Maieſtie, and her Realme.

His counſailers mette me without the gates, and at the entrie of the gates, his footemen and guard were placed on both ſides of my horſe, and ſo brought me to the kings palace.

The king ſate in his chaire with his counſaile about him, as well the Moores as the Elchies, and, according to his order giuen vnto mee before, I there declared my meſſage in Spaniſh, and made deliuerie of the Queenes Maieſties letters, and all that I ſpake at that preſent in Spaniſhe, hee cauſed one of his Elchies to declare the ſame to the Moores preſent in the Larbe tongue.

Which done, he anſwered me againe in Spaniſh, yeelding to the Queenes Maieſtie great thankes, and offering himſelfe and his countrey to bee at her Graces commaundement, and then commaunded certayne of his Counſailers to conduct mee to my lodging, not beyng farre from the Court.

The houſe was faire after the faſhion of that countrey, being daily well furniſhed with all kind of victuall at the kings charge.

The ſame night hee ſent for mee to the Court, and I had conference with him aboue the ſpace of two howers, where I thoughly declared the charge committed vnto mee from her Maieſtie, finding him conformable, willing to pleaſure, and not to vrge her Maieſtie with any demaundes, more then conueniently ſhee might willingly conſent vnto, hee knowyng that out of his countrey, the Realme of England might be better ſerued with lackes, then hee in compariſon from vs.

The king of Spain sought to disgrace the Queene and her Ambassadour.

Further he gaue mee to vnderstand, that the king of Spaine had sent vnto him for a licence, that an Ambassadour of his might come into his countrey, and had made great meanes that if the Queenes Maiestie of England sent any vnto him, that he would not giue any credite or intertainment, albeit (sayd he) I know what the king of Spaine is, and what the Queene of England and her Realme is: for I neither like of him nor of his religion, being so gouerned by the Inquisition, that he can doe nothing of himselfe.

Therefore when he commeth vpon the licence which I haue granted, he shall well see how little account I will make of him and Spaine, and how greatly I will extoll you for the Queenes maiestie of England.

Hee shall not come to my presence as you haue done, and shall daily: for I minde to accept of you, as my companion, and one of my house, whereas he shall attend twentie dayes after hee hath done his message.

After the end of this speach, I deliuered Sir Thomas Gresham's letters, when as hee tooke me by the hand, and led me downe a long court, to a palace, where there ranne a faire fountaine of water, and there sitting himselfe in a chaire, he commanded me to sit downe in another, and there called for such simple Musicians as he had.

The king of Barbarie sent into England for Musicians.

Then I presented him with a great base Lute, which he most thankefully accepted, and then he was desirous to heare of the Musicians, and I tolde him that there was great care had to prouide them, and that I did not doubt, but vpon my returne they should come with the first ship. He is willing to giue them good entertainment with prouision of victuall, and to liue according to their law and conscience, wherein he vseth none to the contrary.

I find him to be one that liueth greatly in the feare of God, being well exercised in the Scriptures, as well in the olde Testament, as also in the New, and he beareth a greater affection to our Nation then to others, because of our religion, which forbiddeth worship of idoles, and the Moores called him the Christian king.

A rich gift bestowed vpon our Ambassadour.

The same night being the first of June, I continued with him till twelue of the clocke, and he seemed to haue so good liking of me, ỳ he tooke from his girdle, a short dagger, being set with 200. stones, rubies, and turkies, and did bestow it vpon me, and so I being conducted, returned to my lodging for that time.

The next day because he knew it to be Sunday and our Sabboth day he did let me rest. But on the Munday in the afternoone he sent for me, and I had conference with him againe, & Musike.

Likewise on the Tuesday by three of the clocke he sent for me into his garden, finding him layd vpon a silke bed, complaining of a sore leg: yet after long conference hee walked into an other Orchard, whereas hauing a faire banketting house, and a great water, and a new gallie in it, he went aboord the gallie, and tooke me with him, and passed the space of two or three howers, shewing the great experience he had in Gallies, wherein (as he sayd) he had exercised himselfe eighteene yeeres in his youth.

After supper he shewed me his horses and other commodities that he had about his house, and since that night I haue not seene him, for that he hath kept in with his sore legge, but he hath sent to me daily.

June. The 13. of June at six of the clocke at night, I had againe audience with the king, and I continued with him till midnight, hauing debated as well for the Queenes commission, as for the well dealing with her merchants for their traffique here in these partes, saying, he would do much more for the Queenes maiestie and the Realme, offering that all English ships with her subiects may with good securitie enter into his portes and dominions, as well in trade of merchaundise, as for victuall & water, as also in time of warre with any her enemies, to bring in prises, and to make sales as occasion should serue, or els to depart againe with them at their pleasure.

The offers of the king to our English merchants.

Likewise for all English shippes that shall passe along his coast of Barbarie, and thorow the Secrets into the Leuant seas, that he would graunt safe conduct that the said ships and merchants with their goods, might passe into the Leuant seas, and so to the Turkes dominions, and the king of Argiers, as his owne, and that he would write to the Turke, and to the king of Argier his letters for the well vsing of our ships and goods.

Also that hereafter no Englishmen, that by any meanes may be taken captiues, shall bee sold within any of his dominions: whereupon I declared that the Queenes maiestie accepting of these his offers, was pleased to confirme the intercourse, and trade of our merchants within this his countrey, as also to pleasure him with such commodities as he should haue need of, to furnish the necessities and wants of his countrey in trade of merchandize, so as he required nothing contrary to her honour and law, and the breach of league with the christian princes her neighbors.

A good prouiso.

The

The ſame night I preſented the king with the caſe of combes, and deſired his maieſtie to haue ſpeciall regard that the ſhips might be laden backe againe, for that I found litle ſtore of Salt peter in readineſſe in Iohn Bamptons hands. He anſwered me that I ſhould haue all the aſſiſtance therein that he could, but that in Sus he thought to haue ſome ſtore in his houſe there, as alſo that the Mountayners had made much in a readineſſe: I requeſted that he would ſend downe, which he promiſed to doe.

The eighteene day I was with him againe, and ſo continued there till night, and he ſhewed me his houſe with paſtime in ducking with water Spaniels, and baiting buls with his Engliſh dogges.

At this time I mooued him againe for the ſending downe to Sus, which he graunted to doe, and the 24. day there departed Alcayde Mammie, with Lionell Edgerton, and Rowland Guy to Sus, and caried with them for our accompts and his company, the kings letters to his brother Muly Hammet, and Alcayde Shauan, and the Vicetroy.

The 23. day the king ſent me out of Morocco to his garden called Shersbonare, with his gard, and Alcayde Mamoute, and the 24. at night I came to the court to ſee a Moris dance, and a play of his Elchies. He promiſed me audience the next day being Tueſday, but he put it off till Thurſday: and the Thurſday at night I was ſent for to the king after ſupper, and then he ſent Alcayde Rodwan, and Alcayde Gowry to conferre with me, but after a litle talke I deſired to be brought to the king for my diſpatch. And being brought to him, I preferred two bils of Iohn Bamptons which he had made for proviſion of Salt peter, alſo two bils for the quiet traffique of our Engliſh merchants, and bils for ſugers to be made by the Iewes, as well for the debts paſt, as hereafter, and for good order in the Ingenios. Alſo I mooued him againe for the Salpeter, and other diſpatches, which he referred to be agreed vpon by the two Alcaydes. But the Friday being the 20. the Alcaydes could not intend it, and vpon Saturday Alcayde Rodwan fell ſicke, ſo on Sunday we made meanes to the king, and that afternoone I was ſent for to conferre vpon the bargaine, with the Alcaydes and others, but did not agree.

Vpon Tueſday I wrote a letter to the king for my diſpatch, and the ſame afternoone I was called againe to the court, and referred all things to the king, accepting his offer of Salt peter.

That night againe the king had me into his gallie, and the Spaniels did hunt the ducke.

The Thurſday I was appointed to way the 300. kintals groſſe of Salt peter, and that afternoone the Tabybe came vnto me to my lodging, ſhewing me that the king was offended with Iohn Bampton for diuers cauſes.

The Sunday night late, being the 7. of July, I got the king to forgiue all to Iohn Bampton, July.
and the king promiſed me to ſpeake againe with me vpon Munday.

Vpon Tueſday I wrote to him againe for my diſpatch, and then he ſent Fray Lewes to me, and ſayd that he had order to write.

Vpon Wedneſday I wrote againe, and hee ſent mee worde that vpon Thurſday I ſhould come and bee diſpatched, ſo that I ſhould depart vpon Friday without faile, being the twelfth of July.

So the Friday after according to the kings order and appointment, I went to court, and whereas motion and petition was made for the confirmation of the demands which I had preferred, they were all graunted, and likewiſe the priuiledges which were on the behalfe of our Engliſh merchants requeſted, were with great fauour and readineſſe yeelded vnto. And whereas the Iewes there reſident, were to our men in certaine round ſummes indebted, the Emperors pleaſure and commaundement was, that they ſhould without further excuſe or delay, pay and diſcharge the ſame. And thus at length I was diſmiſſed with great honor and ſpeciall countenance, ſuch as hath not ordinarily bene ſhewed to other Ambaſſadors of the Chriſtians.

And touching the priuate affaires intreated vpon betwixt her Maieſtie and the Emperor, I had letters from him to ſatiſfie her highneſſe therein. So to conclude, hauing receiued the like honourable conduct from his courte, as I had for my repaire at my firſt landing, I embarked my ſelfe with my forelayde company, and arriuing not long after in England, I repaired to her maieſties Courte, and ended my Ambaſſage to her highneſſe good liking, with relation of my ſeruice performed.

A Letter written from Goa, the principall Citie of all the East Indies, by one Thomas Steuens an Englishman, and sent to his father, M. Thomas Steuens, An. 1579.

AFter most humble commendations: These shall be to craue your daily blessing, with like commendations vnto my mother, and with all, to certifie you of my being, according to your will and my dutie. I wrote vnto you taking my iourney from Italie to Portingall, which letters I thinke are come to your handes, so that presuming thereupon, I thinke I haue the lesse need at this time to tell you the cause of my departing, which neuertheless in one word I may conclude, if I doe but name, obedience. I came to Lisbone toward the ende of March, eight dayes before the departure of the ships, so late that if they had not bene stayed about some weightie matters, they had bene long gone before our comming: in so much that there were others ordained to goe in our places, that the kings prouision and ours also might not be in vayne. Neuertheless, our sudden comming tooke place, and the 4. of Aprill, fiue shippes departed for Goa, wherein besides shipmen and souldiours, there were a great number of children which in the seas beare out better then men, and no maruell, when that many women also passe very well. The setting forth from the porte, I neede not to tell how solemne it is with trumpets, and shooting of ordinaunce, you may easily imagine it, considering that they goe in the maner of warre. The tenth of the foresayd moneth, we came to the sight of Porto Sancto neere vnto Madera, where an English ship set vpon ours, (which was then also alone) with a few shots, which did no harme, but after that our ships had laied out her greatest ordinance, they straight departed as they came. The English ship was very faire and great, which I was sory to see so ill occupied, for she went rouing about, so that wee sawe her againe at the Canarian Isles, vnto the which we came the 13. of the said moneth, and good laisure wee had to wonder at the high mountaine of the Island Tenerif, for wee wandered betweene that and great Canaria foure dayes by reason of contrary windes: and briefly, such euill weather wee had vntill the 14. of May, that they dispaired to compasse the Cape of Good Hope that peere. Neuertheless, taking our voiage betweene Guinea, and the Islands of Capo Verde, without seeing of any land at all, we arriued at length vnto the coast of Guinie, which the Portingals so call, chiefly that part of the burning Zone, which is from the 6. degree vnto the Equinoctiall, in which partes they suffered so many inconueniences of heates, and lacke of windes, that they thinke themselues happy when they haue passed it: for sometimes the ship standeth there almost by the space of many dayes, sometime she goeth but in such order that it were almost as good to stand still. And the greatest part of this coast not cleare, but thicke and cloudie, full of thunder and lightning, and raine so vnwholesome, that if the water stand a little while, all is full of wormes, and falling on the meate which is hanged vp, it maketh it straight full of wormes. Along all that coast we oftentimes saw a thing swimming vpon the water like a cockes combe (which they call a ship of Guinea) but the coulour much fairer which combe standeth vpon a thing almost like the swimmer of a fish in coulour and bignesse, and beareth vnderneath in the water, strings, which sauеth it from turning ouer. This thing is so poisonous, that a man cannot touch it without great perill. In this coast, that is to say, from the 6. degree vnto the Equinoctiall, we spent no lesse then 30. dayes, partly with contrary windes, partly with calme. The 30. of May we passed the Equinoctiall with contentation, directing our course as wel as we could to passe the promontorie, but in all that gulfe, and in all the way beside, we found so often calmes, that the expertest mariners wondred at it. And in places where are alwayes wont to be most horrible tempests, we found most quiet calmes which was very troublesome to those ships which be the greatest of all other, and cannot goe without good windes. Insomuch, that when it is tempest almost intollerable for other ships, and maketh them maine all their sailes, these hold vp, and saile excellent well, vnlesse the waters be too too furious, which seldome happened in our nauigation. You shall vnderstand, that being passed the line, they cannot straightway goe the next way to the promontorie: but according to the wind, they draw alwaies as neere South as they can to put themselues in the latitude of the point, which is 35. degrees and an halfe, and then they take their course towards the East, and so compasse the point. But the wind serued vs so, that at 30. degrees we did direct our course toward the point or promontorie of Good Hope.

You know that it is hard to saile from East to West, or contrary, because there is no fixed point in all the skie, whereby they may direct their course, wherefore I shall tell you what helpes God prouided for these men. There is not a fowle that appeareth, or signe in the aire, or in the sea, which they haue not written, which haue made the voyages heretofore. Wherfore, partly by their owne experience, & pondering withal what space the ship is able to make with such a wind, & such direction, and partly by the experience of others, whose bookes and naugations they haue, they geese where abours they be, touching degrees of longitude, for of latitude they be alwayes sure: but the greatest and best industrie of all, is to marke the variation of the needle or compasse, which in the Meridian of the Island of S. Michael, which is one of the Asores in the latitude of Lisbone is iust North, and thence swarueth towards the East so much, that betwixt the Meridian aforesaid, and the point of Affrica it carieth 3. or 4. quarters of 32. And againe in ỳ point of Affrike, a little beyond the point that is called Cape das Agulias (in English the needles) it returneth againe vnto the North, and that place passed, it swarueth againe toward the West, as it did before proportionally. As touching our first sigues, the neerer we came to the people of Affrike, the more strange kindes of Fowles appeared, insomuch that when we came within no lesse then 30. leagues (almost an 100. miles) and 600. miles as we thought from any Island, as good as 3000. fowles of sundry kindes followed our ship: some of them so great that their wings being opened from one point to the other, contained 7. spans, as the mariners said. A maruelous thing to see how God prouided, so ỳ in so wide a sea these fowles are all fat, & nothing wanteth them. The Portingals haue named thē all according to some propriete which they haue: some they cal Rushtailes, because their tailes be not proportionable to their bodies, but long & smal like a rush, some forked tailes because they be very broad and forked, some veluet sleeues, because they haue wings of the colour of veluet, & boweth them as a man boweth his elbow. This bird is alwaies welcome, for he appeareth neerest the Cape. I should neuer make an end if I should tell all particulars: but it shal suffise briefly to touch a few, which yet shalbe sufficient, if you marke them, to giue occasion to glorifie almightie God in his wonderful works, and such varietie in his creatures. And to speake some what of fishes in all places of calme, especially in the burning zone, neere ỳ line (for without we neuer saw any) there waited on our ship fishes as long as a man, which they cal Tuberones, they come to eate such things as from the ship fall into the sea, not refusing men themselues if they light vpon them. And if they find any meat tied in the sea, they take it for theirs. These haue waiting on them 6. or 7. final fishes (which neuer depart) with gardes blew and greene round about their bodies, like comely seruing men: and they go two or three before him, and some on euery side. Moreouer, they haue other fishes which cleaue alwayes vnto their bodie, and seeme to take such superfluities as grow about them, and they are said to enter into their bodies also to purge them if they needs. The mariners in time past haue eaten of them, but since they haue seene them eate men, their stomacks abhorre them. Neuertheless, they draw thē vp with great hookes, and kil of them as many as they can, thinking that they haue made a great reuenge. There is another kind of fish as big almost as a herring, which hath wings and flieth, and they are together in great number. These haue two enemies, the one in the sea, the other in the aire. In the sea the fish which is called Albocore, as big as a Salmon followeth them with great swiftnes to take them. This poore fish not being able to swim fast, for he hath no finnes, but swimmeth with mouing of his taile, shutting his wings, lifteth himselfe aboue the water, and flieth not very high: The Albocore seeing that, although he haue no wings, yet giueth he a great leape out of the water, and sometimes catcheth him, or els he keepeth himselfe vnder the water going that way on as fast as he flieth. And when the fish being wearie of the aire, or thinking himself out of danger, returneth into the water, the Albocore meeteth with him: but sometimes his other enemie the sea Crow, catcheth him before he falleth. With these and like sights, but alwayes making our supplications to God for good weather and saluation of the ship, we came at length vnto the point, so famous and feared of all mē: but we found there no tempest, only great waues, where our Pilot was a little ouerseene: for whereas commonly all other neuer come within sight of land, but seeing signs ordinarie, and finding bottome, go their way sure and safe, he thinking himselfe to haue wind at will, shot so nigh the land, that the wind turning into the South, and the waues being exceeding great, rolled vs so neere the land, that the ship stood in lesse then 14. fadoms of water, no more then fiue miles from the Cape, which is called Las Agulias, and there we stoode as vtterly cast away: for vnder vs were rockes of maine stone so sharpe, and cutting, that no anker could hold the ship, the shore so euill that nothing could take land, and the land it selfe so full of Tigers, and people that are sauage, and killers of all strangers, that we had no hope of like nor comfort, but onely in God and a good conscience. Notwithstanding, after we had lost ankers, hoising vp the sailes for to get the ship a coast in some safer place, or when it should please God, it pleased his mercy suddenly, where no man looked for helpe, to fill our sailes with winde from the land, and so we escaped thanks be to God. And the day following, being in the place where they are alwayes woont to catch fish, we also fell a fishing, and so many they tooke, that they serued all the ship for that day, and part of the next. And one of them pulled vp a currall of great bignesse and price. For there they say (as we sawe by experience) that the currals doe grow in the maner of stalkes vpon the rockes in the bottome, and waxe hard and red. The day of perill was the 29. of July. And you shall vnderstand that the Cape passed, there bee two wayes to India: one within the Isle of S. Laurence, which they take willingly, because they refresh themselues at Mosambique a fortnight or a moneth, not without great need, and thence in a moneth more, land in Goa. The other is without the Isle S. Laurence, which they take when they set sooth so late, and come so late to the point, that they haue no time to take the foresayd Mosambique, and then they goe beauly, because in this way they take no port. And by reason of the long nauigation, and want of food and water, they fall into sundry diseases, their gummes ware great and swell, and they are faine to cut them away, their legs swell, and all the body becommeth sore, and so benummed, that they cannot stirre hand nor foote, and so they die for weakenesse, others fall into flures and agues, and die thereby. And this way it was our chaunce to make: yet though we had more then one hundred and fiftie sicke, there died not past 27. which losse they esteemed not much in respect of other times. Though some of ours were diseased in this sort, yet thankes be to God, I had my health all the way, contrary to the expectation of many: God send me my health so well in the land, if it may be, to his honour and seruice. This way is full of priuie rocks and quick sandes, so that sometimes we durst not saile by night, but by the prouidence of God we saw nothing, nor neuer found botome vntill we came to the coast of India. When we had passed againe the line, and were come to the third degree, or somewhat more, we sawe crabs swimming on the water that were red as though they had bene sodden, but this was no signe of land. After, about the 11. degree, the space of many dayes, more then ten thousand fishes by estimation followed round about our ship, whereof wee caught so many, that for fifteene dayes we did eate nothing els, and they serued our turne very well: for at this time we had neither meate nor almost any thing els to eate, our nauigation growing so long that it drewe neere to seuen monethes, where as commonly they goe it in fiue, I meane when they saile the inner way. But these fishes were not signe of land, but rather of deepe sea. At length we tooke a couple of birdes, which were a kind of Hawkes, wherein they ioyed much, thinking that they had bene of India, but in deede they were of Arabia, as wee found afterward. And we that thought we had bene neere India, were in the same latitude neere Zocotera, an Isle in the mouth of the red sea. But there God sent vs great winds from the North east or Northnortheast, whereupon vnwillingly they bare vp toward the East, and thus we went ten dayes without seeing signe of land, whereby they perceiued their errour: for they had directed their course before, alwayes Northeast, coucting to multiplie degrees of latitude, but partly the difference of the Needle, and most of all the running seas, which at that time ran Northwest, had drawen vs to this other danger, had not God sent vs this wind, which at length waxed larger, and restored vs to our right course. These running seas be so perillous that they deceiue the most part of the gouernours, and some be so litle curious, contenting themselues with ordinarie experience, that they care not to seeke out any meanes to know when they swarue, neither by the compasse, nor by any other triall. The first signe of land, were certaine fowles which they knew to bee of India: the second, boughes of palmes & sedges: the third, snakes swimming on the water, and substance which they call by ꝑ name of a coine of mony, as broad, and as round as a groat, wonderfully printed and stamped of nature, like vnto some coine. And these two last signes be so certaine, that the next day after, if the winde serue, they see land, which we did to our great ioy, when all our water (for you know they make no beere in those partes) and victuals began to fayle vs. And in Goa we came the 24. of October, there being receiued with passing great charitie. The people be tawnie, but not disfigured in their lippes and noses, as the Moores and Cafres of Ethiopia. They that be not of reputation, or at least the most part, go naked, sauing an apron of a spanne long, and as much in breedth before them, and a lace two fingers broad before them, girded about with a string and no more: and thus they thinke themselues as well as we with all our trimming. Of the fruits and trees that be here, I cannot now speake, for I should make another letter as long as this. For hitherto I haue not seene tree here, whose like I haue seene in Europe, the vine excepted, which neuertheless here is to no purpose, so that all the wines are brought out of Portingall. The drinke of this countrey is good water, or wine of the Palme tree, or of a fruite called Cocos. And this shall suffise for this time. If God send me my health, I shall haue opportunitie to write to you once againe. Now the length of my letter compelleth me to take my leaue, and thus I wish your most prosperous health. The

The letters ſent from the Imperiall Muſulmanlike highneſſe of Zuldan Murad Chan, to the ſacred regall Maieſtie of Elizabeth Queene of England, the fifteenth of March 1579, conteining the grant of the firſt priuileges.

IN greatneſſe and glorie moſt renowmed Elizabeth, moſt ſacred Queene, and noble prince of the moſt mightie worſhippers of Jeſus, moſt wiſe gouernor of the cauſes and affaires of the people and familie of Nazareth, cloud of moſt pleaſant raine, and ſweeteſt fountaine of nobleneſſe and vertue, ladie and heire of the perpetuall happineſſe and glorie of the noble Realme of England, (whom all ſorres ſeeke vnto and ſubmit themſelues) we wiſh moſt proſperous ſucceſſe and happie ends to all your actions, and doe offer vnto you ſuch pleaſures and curteſies as are worthy of our mutuall and eternall familiaritie: thus ending (as beſt beſeemeth vs) our former ſalutations.

In moſt friendly maner we giue you to vnderſtand, that a certeine man hath come vnto vs in the name of your moſt excellent Regall Maieſtie, commending vnto vs from you all kindneſſe, curteſie and friendly offices on your part, and did humbly require that our Imperiall highneſſe would vouchſafe to giue leaue and libertie to him and vnto ‖ two other merchants of your kingdome to reſort hither and returne againe, and that by way of traffike they might be ſuffered to trade hither with their goods and merchandizes to our Imperiall dominions, and in like ſort to make their returne.

‖ Theſe two were Sir Edward Oſborne and maiſter Ruth. Draper.

Our ſtately Court and Countrey hath beene euer open for the acceſſe both of our enemies and friends. But becauſe we are informed that your moſt excellent Regall Maieſtie doth abound with good will, humanitie, & all kinde of louing affection towards vs, ſo much the rather ſhall the ſame our Countrey be alwayes open to ſuch of your ſubiects, as by way of merchandize ſhall trade hither: and we will neuer faile to aid and ſuccor any of them that are or ſhall be willing to eſteeme of our friendſhip, fauor, and aſſiſtance: but will reckon it ſome part of our duetie to gratifie them by all good meanes. And foraſmuch as our Imperiall highneſſe is giuen to vnderſtand that your moſt excellent Regall Maieſtie doth excell in bountie and curteſie, we therefore haue ſent out our Imperiall commandement to all our kings, iudges, and trauellers by ſea, to all our Captaines and voluntarie ſeafaring men, all condemned perſons, and officers of Ports and cuſtomes, ſtraightly charging and commanding them, that ſuch foreſaid perſons as ſhall reſort hither by ſea from the Realme of England, either with great or ſmall veſſels to trade by way of merchandize, may lawfully come to our Imperiall dominions, and freely returne home againe, and that no man ſhall dare to moleſt or trouble them. And if in like ſort they ſhall come into our dominions by land, either on foote or on horſebacke, no man ſhall at any time withſtand or hinder them: but as our familiars and confederates, the French, Uenetians, Polonians, and the ‖ king of Germanie, with diuers other our neighbours about vs, haue libertie to come hither, and to returne againe into their owne countries, in like ſort the merchants of your moſt excellent Regall Maieſties kingdome, ſhall haue ſafe conduct and leaue to repaire hither to our Imperiall dominions, and ſo to returne againe into their owne Country: ſtreightly charging that they be ſuffered to vſe and trade all kinde of merchandize as any other Chriſtians do, without let or diſturbance of any.

‖ He calleth the Germaine emperor but king of Germanie.

Therefore when theſe our Imperiall letters ſhall be brought to your moſt excellent Regal Maieſtie, it ſhall be meet, according to our beneuolence, humanitie and familiaritie towards your moſt excellent Maieſtie, that you likewiſe bethinke your ſelfe of your like beneuolence, humanitie and friendſhippe towardes vs, to open the gate thereof vnto vs, and to nourish by all good meanes this kindneſſe and friendſhip: and that like libertie may be granted by your highneſſe to our ſubiects and merchants to come with their merchandizes to your dominions, either by ſea with their ſhips, or by land with their wagons or horſes, and to returne home againe: and that your moſt excellent Regall Maieſtie do alwayes declare your humanitie, good will, and friendſhip towards vs, and alwayes keepe open the doze thereof vnto vs.

The Turke demaundeth like priuileges for his ſubiects in the Queenes dominions.

¶ The ſame in Engliſh.

ELizabeth by the grace of the moſt mightie God, and onely Creatour of heauen and earth, of England, Frame and Ireland Queene, the moſt inuincible and moſt mightie defender of the Chriſtian faith againſt all kinde of idolatries, of all that liue among the Chriſtians, and falſlie profeſſe the name of Chriſt, vnto the moſt Imperiall and moſt inuincible prince, Zuldan Murad Chan, the moſt mightie ruler of the kingdome of Turkie, ſole and aboue all, and moſt ſouereigne Monarch of the Eaſt Empyre, greeting, and many happy and fortunate yeeres, with abundance of the beſt things.

Moſt Imperiall and moſt inuincible Emperor, we haue receiued the letters of your mightie highneſſe written to vs from Conſtantinople the fifteenth day of March this preſent yeere, whereby we vnderſtand how gratiouſly, and how fauorably the humble petitions of one William Harebowne a ſubiect of ours, reſident in the Imperiall citie of your highneſſe preſented vnto your Maieſtie for the obteining of acceſſe for him and two other merchants more of his company our ſubiects alſo, to come with merchandizes both by ſea & land, to the countries and territories ſubiect to your gouernement, and from thence againe to returne home with good leaue and libertie, were accepted of your moſt inuincible Imperiall highneſſe, and not that onelie, but with an extraordinarie ſpeed and worthie your Imperiall grace, that which was craued by petition was granted to him, and his companie in regard onely (as it ſeemeth) of that opinion which your highneſſe conceiued of vs and our amitie: which ſingular benefit done to our aforeſaid ſubiects, we take ſo thankefully, and in ſo good part (yeelding for the ſame our greateſt thankes to your highneſſe) that we will neuer giue occaſion to your ſaid highneſſe (according as time, and the reſpect of our affayres will permit) once to thinke ſo great a pleaſure beſtowed vpon an vngratefull prince. For the almighty God, by whō, and by whoſe grace we reigne, hath planted in vs this goodneſſe of nature, that we deteſt & abhorre the leaſt ſuſpition of ingratitude, & hath taught vs not to ſuffer our ſelues to be outermatched with the good demerits of other princes. And therefore at this time we do extend our good minde vnto your highnes, by well conceiuing, and publiſhing alſo abroad, how much we repute our ſelfe bound in an euerlaſting remembrance for this good pleaſure to our ſubiects, meaning to yeeld a much more large and plentifull teſtification of our thankefulneſſe, when time conuenient ſhall fall out, and the ſame ſhall be looked for at our hands.

But whereas that grant which was giuen to a few of our ſubiects, and at their onelie requeſt without any interceſſion of ours, ſtandeth in as free a libertie of comming and going to and from all the lands and kingdomes ſubiect to your maieſtie, both by land and ſea with merchandizes, as euer was granted to any of your imperiall highneſſe confederates, as namelie to the French, the Polonians, the Venetians, as alſo to the ſubiectes of the king of the Romans, we deſire of your highneſſe that the commendation of ſuch ſingular curteſie may not be ſo narrowlie reſtrained to two or three men onely, but may be inlarged to all our ſubiects in generall, that thereby your highneſſe goodneſſe may appeare the more notable, by reaſon of the granting of the ſame to a greater number of perſons. The beſtowing of which ſo ſingular a benefit your highneſſe ſhall ſo much the leſſe repent you of, by how much the more fit & neceſſarie for the vſe of man thoſe commodities are, where with our kingdoms do abound, and the kingdomes of other princes do want, so there is no nation that can be without them, but are glad to come by them, although by very long and difficult trauels: and when they haue them, they sell them much deerer to others, because euery man seeketh to make profit by his labor: so that in the getting of them there is profit, but in the buying of them from others there is losse. But this profit wilbe increased to the subiects of your highnesse by this free accesse of a few of our subiectes to your dominions, as also the losse and burden walbe eased, by the permission of generall accesse to all our people. And furthermore we will grant as equall and as free a libertie to the subiects of your highnesse with vs for the vse of traffike, when they will, and as often as they will, to come, and go to and from vs and our kingdoms. Which libertie we promise to your highnesse shalbe as ample, and as large as any was euer giuen or granted to your subiects by the aforesaid princes your confederates, as namely the king of the Romans, of France, of Poleland, and the common wealth of Uenice. In which matter, if your most inuincible imperiall highnesse shall vouchsafe to incline to our reasonable request, and shall giue order vpon these our letters, that we may haue knowledge how the same is accepted of you, and whether it wilbe granted, with sufficient securitie for our subiects to go, and returne safe and secure from all violences and iniuries of your people, we on the other side will giue order, that those commodities which almightie God hath bestowed vpon our kingdoms (which are in deed so excellent, that by reason of them all princes are drawen to enter, and confirme leagues of amitie & good neighborhood with vs, by that meanes to inioy these so great blessings of God, which we haue, and they can in no case want) our subiects shall bring them so abundantly and plentifully to the kingdoms and dominions of your highnesse, that both the former inconueniences of necessitie, and losse, shall most sufficiently be taken away.

Moreouer the signification and assurance of your highnesse great affection to vs and our nation, doth cause vs also to intreat and vse mediation on the behalfe of certeine of our subiects, who are detained as slaues and captiues in your gallies, for whome we craue, that forasmuch as they are fallen into that miserie, not by any offence of theirs, by bearing of armes against your highnesse, or in behauing of themselues contrary to honestie, and to the law of nations, they may be deliuered from their bondage, and restored to libertie, for their seruice towards vs, according to their ductie: which thing shall yeeld much more abundant cause to vs of commending your clemencie, and of beseeching that God (who onely is aboue all things, and all men, and is a most seuere reuenger of all idolatrie, and is ielous of his honor against the false gods of the nations) to adorne your most inuincible imperiall highnesse with all the blessings of those gifts, which onely & deseruedly are accounted most worthie of asking.

The interpretation of the letters, or priuilege of the most mightie and Musulmanlike Emperour Zuldan Murad Chan, granted at the request of Elizabeth by the grace of the most mightie God, and only Creator of heauen & earth, of England, France and Ireland Queene, confirming a peace and league betwixt both the said princes and their subiects.

THE most sacred Musulmanlike Emperor, by the infinite & exceeding great power, by the euerlasting and woonderfull clemencie, and by the vnspeakable helpe of the most mighty and most holy God, creator of all things, to be worshipped and feared with all pureneſſe of minde, and reuerence of speech, The prince of the present times, the onely Monarch of this age, able to giue scepters to the potentates of the whole world, the shadow of the diuine mercy and grace, the distributer of many kingdoms, prouinces, townes & cities, Prince, and most sacred Emperour of Mecha, that is to say, of Gods house, of Medina, of the most glorious and blessed Ierusalem, of the most fertile Egypt, Iemen, and Jouan, Eden & Chanaan, of Damos the peaceable, and of Hebes, of Jabza, and Bazra, of Zeruzub and Halepia, of Caramaria and Diabekiruan, of Dulkadiria, of Babylon, and of all the three Arabias, of the Euxians & Georgians, of Cyprus the rich, and of the kingdoms of Asia, of Dzakior, of the tracts of the White and Blacke sea, of Grecia and Mesopotamia, of Affrica & Goleta, of Algeris, and of Tripolis in the West, of the most choise and principall Europe, of Buda and Temesuar, and of the kingdoms beyond the Alps, and many others such like, most mightie Murad Chan, the sonne of the Emperor Zelim Chan, which was the sonne of Zoliman Chan, which was the sonne of Zelim Chan, which was the sonne of Baizid Chan, which was the sonne of Mehemed Chan, &c.

The most mightie prince Murad Chan, in token of our imperiall friendship, do signifie & declare, that now of late Elizabeth Queene of England, France, & Ireland, the most honorable Queene of Christendome Chriſtendome (to whoſe marchants wee wiſh happie ſucceſſe) ſent her letters by her worthy ſeruant William Harebrowne, vnto our ſtately and moſt magnificent Porche replenished with iuſtice, which is a refuge and Sanctuarie to all the princes of the worlde, by which letters her Maieſtie ſignified, that whereas heretofore certaine of her ſubiects had repaired to our ſaide ſtately Porche, and had ſhewed their obedience to the ſame, and for that cauſe had deſired that leaue and libertie might alſo be graunted vnto them, to come and goe for traſiques ſake too and from our dominions, and that our Imperial commaundement might be giuen, that no man ſhould preſume to hurt or hinder them, in any of their abodes or paſſages by ſea or land, and whereas ſhe requeſted that we would graunt to all her ſubiects in generall, this our fauour, which before wee had extended onely to a fewe of her people: therefore as wee haue entred into amitie, and moſt holy league with the moſt excellent kings and princes our confederats, ſhewing their deuotion, and obedience or ſeruices towards our ſtately Porch (as namely the French king, the Venetians, the king of Polonia and others) ſo alſo we haue contracted an inuiolable amitie, peace and league with the aforeſaid Queene. Therefore we giue licence to all her people, and marchants, peaceably and ſafely to come vnto our Imperiall dominions, with all their marchandiſe and goods without any impeachment, to exerciſe their traſique, to vſe their owne cuſtomes, and to buy and ſell according to the faſhions of their owne countrey.

And further her Maieſtie ſignified vnto vs, that certaine of her people had heretofore bene taken priſoners, and were detained in captiuitie, and required that they might bee ſet at libertie, and that as we had graunted vnto other princes our confederats, priuiledges, and Imperiall decrees, concerning our moſt inuiolable league with them, ſo it woulde pleaſe our Imperiall Maieſtie to graunt and confirme the like priuiledges, and princely decrees to the aforeſayde Queene.

Whereſore according to our humanitie and gracious ingraffed diſpoſition, the requeſts of her Maieſtie were accepted of vs, and wee haue graunted vnto her Maieſtie this priuiledge of ours agreeable to reaſon & equitie. And we ſtraightly cõmaunde all our Beglerbegs, and Zanziacbegs our ſeruants, and our Reyz, that is to ſay, our Iudges, and all our cuſtomers in all places, hauens and paſſages, that as long as this league and amitie with the conditions, and articles thereof, are kept and obſerued on the behalfe of the aforeſaid Queene, 1 Our Imperiall commandement and pleaſure is, that the people and ſubiectes of the ſame Queene, may ſafely and ſecurely come to our princely dominions, with their goods and marchandiſe, and ladings, and other commodities by ſea, in great and ſmall veſſels, and by land with their carriages and cattels, and that no man ſhall hurt them, but they may buy and ſell without any hinderance, and obſerue the cuſtomes and orders of their owne countrey.

2 Item, if the aforeſaid people and marchants ſhalbe at any time in the courſe of their iourneis, and dealings by any meanes taken, they ſhall bee deliuered and inlarged, without any excuſe or cauillation.

3 Item, if their ſhips purpoſe to ariue in any of our ports and hauens, it ſhalbe lawfull for them ſo to doe in peace, and from thence againe to depart, without any let or impediment.

4 Item, if it ſhall happen that any of their ſhips in tempeſtuous weather ſhall bee in danger of laſſe and periſhing, and thereupon ſhall ſtand in neede of our helpe, we will, and commaund that our men and ſhips be readie to helpe and ſuccour them.

5 Item, if they ſhalbe willing to buy any victuals for their money, no perſon ſhall withſtande them, but they ſhall buy the ſame without any diſturbance to the contrary.

6 Item, if by any caſualtie their ſhippes ſhall bee driuen on ſhoare in perill of ſhipwracke, our Beges and Iudges, and other our ſubiects ſhall ſuccour them, and ſuch wares, and goods of theirs as ſhall bee recouered from the laſſe, ſhall bee reſtored to them, and no man ſhall wrong them.

7 Item, if the people of the aforeſaide Queene, their interpreters and marchants, ſhall for traſique ſake, either by lande or ſea repaire to our dominions paying our lawfull toll and cuſtome, they ſhall haue quiet paſſage, and none of our Captaines or gouernours of the ſea, and ſhippes, nor any kinde of perſons, ſhall either in their bodies, or in their goods and cattels, any way moleſt them.

8 Item, if any Engliſhman ſhall growe in debt, and ſo owe money to any other man, and thereupon doeth abſent himſelfe that hee can not be founde, let no man arreſt or apprehend him for any other mans debt, except he be the creditour.

9 Item, if any Engliſhman ſhall make his will and teſtament, to whome ſoeuer by the ſame hee ſhall giue his goods, the partie ſhall haue them accordingly, and if hee die inteſtate, he to whom the Consull or gouernour of the societie shall say the goods of the dead are to be giuen, he shall haue the same.

10 Item, if the Englishmen or the marchants and interpreters of any places vnder the iurisdiction of England, shall happen in the buying and selling of wares, by promises or otherwise to come in controuersie, let them goe to the Iudge, and cause the matter to be entred into a booke, and if they will, let them also take letters of the Iudge testifying the same, that men may see the booke and letters, whatsoeuer thing shall happen, and that according to the tenor thereof the matter in controuersie and in doubt may be ended: but if such thinges be neither entred in booke, nor yet the persons haue taken letters of the Iudge, yet he shal admit no false witnes, but shall execute the lawe according to iustice, and shall not suffer them to be abused.

11 Item, if any man shall say, that these being Christians shall speake any thing to the derogation of our holy faith and religion, and shall slander the same, in this matter as in all others, let no false witnesses in any case be admitted.

12 Item, if any one of them shall commit any great crime, and flying thereupon can not be found, let no man be arrested, or detained for another mans fact, except he be his suretie.

13 Item, if any slaue shall be found to be an Englishman, and their Consull or gouernour shall sue for his libertie, let the same slaue be diligently examined, and if he be found in deed to be English, let him be discharged and restored to the Englishmen.

14 Item, if any Englishman shall come hither either to dwell or traffique, whether he be married or vnmarried, he shall pay no polle or head money.

15 Item, if either in Alexandria, Damasco, Samos, Tunes, Tripolis in ꝑ West, the port townes of Ægypt, or in any other places, they purpose to choose to themselues Consuls or gouernours, let them doe so, and if they will alter them at any time, and in the roome of the former Consuls place others, let them doe so also, and no man shall restraine them.

16 Item, if their interpreter shalbe at any time absent, being occupied in other serious matters, let the thing then in question be stayed and differred till his comming, and in the meane time no man shall trouble them.

17 Item, if any variance or controuersie shal arise among the Englishmen, and thereupon they shall appeale to their Consuls or gouernours, let no man molest them, but let them freely doe so, that the controuersie begunne, may be finished according to their owne customes.

18 Item, if after the time and date of this priuiledge, any pirats or other free gouernors of ships trading the sea, shall take any Englishman, and shall make sale of him, either beyonde the sea, or on this side of the sea, the matter shalbe examined according to iustice, and if the partie shalbe found to be English, and shall receiue the holy religion, then let him freely be discharged, but if he will still remaine a Christian, let him then be restored to the Englishmen, and the buyers shall demaunde their money againe of them who solde the man.

19 Item, if the ships of warre of our Imperiall highnes shall at any time goe foorth to sea, and shall finde any English ships laden with marchandise, no man shall hinder them, but rather shall vse them friendly, and doe them no wrong, euen as we haue giuen and graunted articles, and priuiledges, to the French, Venetians, and other Kings and princes our confederats, so also we haue giuen the like to the English: and contrary to this our diuine lawe and priuiledge, let no man presume to doe anything.

20 Item, if either their great or small ships shall in the course of their voyage, or in any place to which they come, be stayed or arrested, let no man continue the same arrest, but rather helpe and assist them.

21 Item, if any theeues and robbers shall by force take away any of their ships, and marchandise, let the same theeues and robbers be sought, and searched for with all diligence, and let them be punished most seuerely.

21 Last of all the Beglerbegs, and Zanziacbegs, our Captaines, our slaues and seruants of Captaines vsing the sea, and our Iudges, customers and gouernours of shippes called Reiz, and free Reiz, all these according to the tenor of this priuiledge and articles, shalbe bounde to doe proceedingly: and, as long as the Queene of England on her part shall duely keepe and obserue this league and holy peace, expressed in this priuiledge, we also for our Imperial part, doe charge and commaunde the same so long to be straighely kept and obserued.

Her

Her Maieſties letters to the Turke or Grand Signior 1581.

promiſing redreſſe of the diſorders of Peter Baker of Ratcliffe, committed in the Leuant.

ELizabeth by the diuine grace of the eternall God, of England, Fraunce and Irelande moſt ſacred Queene, and of the moſt Chriſtian faith, againſt all the prophaners of his moſt holy Name the zealous and mightie defendour, &c. To the moſt renowned and Emperious Cæſar, Sultan Murad Chan, Emperour of all the dominions of Turkie, and of all the Eaſt Monarchie chiefe aboue all others whoſoeuer, moſt fortunate yeeres with the ſucceſſe of all true happineſſe. As with very great deſire we wiſh and embrace the loue and amitie of forreine Princes, and in the ſame by all good duetie and meanes wee ſeeke to be confirmed: ſo to vs there may be nothing more grieuous and diſliking, then that any thing ſhould happen through the default of our ſubiects, which any way might bring our faith and fidelitie into ſuſpicion: Although wee are not ignorant howe many good princes by the like miſaduenture be abuſed, where the doings of the ſubiects are imputed to the want of good gouernment. But ſuch matters of importance and ſo wel approued we may not omit: ſuch is to vs the ſacred eſtimation of our honour, and of our Chriſtian profeſſion, as we would the ſame ſhould appeare aſwell in the concluding of our promiſes and agreements, as in the faithfull performing of the ſame.

The matter which by theſe our letters we ſpecially beholde, is a moſt iniurious and grieuous wrong which of late came vnto our vnderſtanding, that ſhould bee done vnto certaine of your ſubiects by certaine of our ſubiects, as yet not apprehended: but with all ſeueritie vpon their apprehenſion they are to be rewarded for the ſame. And as the deede in it ſelfe is moſt wicked, ſo is it much more intollerable, by how much it doeth infringe the credite of our faith, violate the force of our authoritie, and impeach the eſtimation of our worde faithfully giuen vnto your Imperiall dignitie. In which ſo great a diſorder if wee ſhould not manifeſt our hatred towards ſo wicked and euill diſpoſed perſons, wee might not onely moſt iuſtly be reproued in the iudgement of all ſuch as truely fauour Juſtice, but alſo of all Princes the patrones of right and equitie, might no leſſe be condemned. That therefore conſidered, which of our parts is ordained in this cauſe which may be to the good liking of your highneſſe, wee are moſt eſpecially to requeſt of your Imperiall Maieſtie, that through the default and diſorder of a ſort of euill and wicked diſpoſed perſons, you will not withdrawe your gratious fauour from vs, neither to hinder the trafique of our ſubiects, which by vertue of your highneſſe ſufferance, and power of your licence are permitted to trade into your dominions and countreis, or that either in their perſons or goods they be preiudiced their trauayling by land or by water, promiſing vnto your greatneſſe moſt faithfully, that the goods whereof your ſubiects by great wrong and violence haue bene ſpoyled, ſhall wholie againe be reſtored, if either by the liues or poſſeſſions of the robbers it may any way be brought to paſſe: And that hereafter (as now being taught by this euill example) wee will haue ſpeciall care that none vnder the title of our authoritie, ſhall be ſuffered to commit any the like wrongs or iniuries.

This was Baker of Ratcliffe, who with the barke called the Roe, robbed certaine Greekians in the Leuante.

Neither they which haue committed theſe euil parts, had any power vnder your highneſſe ſafeconduit graunted vnto our ſubiects, but from ſome other ſafeconduit, whether it were true or fained, we knowe not, or whether they bought it of any perſon within the gouernment of Marſeils: but vnder the colour thereof they haue done that, which the trueth of our dealing doeth vtterly abhorre. Notwithſtanding howſoeuer it be, wee will ſurely meaſure their euill proceedings with moſt ſharpe and iuſt correction, and that it ſhall repent them of the impeachment of our honours, as alſo it ſhalbe an example of our indignation, that others may dread at all times to commit the like offence. Wherefore that our amitie might be continued, as if this vnfortunate happe had neuer chaunced, and that the ſinguler affection of our ſubiects towardes your Imperiall Maieſtie vowed, and dayly more and more deſired, might be conſerued and defended, wee thereunto doe make our humble ſuite vnto your greatneſſe: And for ſo great goodneſſe towards vs and our people graunted, doe moſt humbly pray vnto the Almightie creatour of heauen and earth, euer to maintaine and keepe your moſt renowmed Maieſtie in all happineſſe and proſperitie.

Dated at our palace of Greenewich the 26. of June, Anno 1581.

The letters patents, or priuiledges graunted by her Maiestie to Sir Edward Osburne, Master Richard Staper, and certaine other Marchants of London for their trade into the dominions of the great Turke, in the yeere 1581.

ELizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. To all our officers, ministers, and subiects, and to all other people as well within this our Realme of England, as els where vnder our obeysance, iurisdiction, or otherwise, vnto whome these our letters shall be seene, shewed or read, greeting. Where our welbeloued subiects Edward Osburne Alderman of our Citie of London, and Richard Staper of our saide Citie marchant, haue by great aduenture and industrie, with their great costes and charges, by the space of sundry late yeeres, trauailed, and caused trauaile to be taken, as well by secret and good meanes, as by dangerous wayes and passages both by lande and sea, to finde out and set open a trade of marchandize and traffique into the landes, Islands, dominions, and territories of the great Turke, commonly called the Grand Signior, not heretofore in the memorie of any man now liuing knowen to be commonly vsed and frequented by way of marchandise, by any the marchants or any subiects of vs, or our progenitours; and also haue by their like good meanes and industrie, and great charges procured of the saide Grand Signior (in our name,) amitie, safetie, and freedome, for trade and traffique of marchandise to be vsed, and continued by our subiects within his saide dominions, whereby there is good and apparant hope and likelyhoode both that many good offices may be done for the peace of Christendome, and reliefe of many Christians that be or may happen to be in thraldome or necessitie vnder the saide Grand Signior, his vassals or subiects, and also good, and profitable vent and vtterance may be had of the commodities of our Realme, and sundrie other great benefites to the aduauncement of our honour, and dignitie royal, the increase of the reuenues of our Crowne, and generall wealth of our Realme, Knowe yee that hereupon, wee greatly tendering the wealth of our people, and the incouragement of our subiects in their good enterprises for the aduaincement of the common weale, haue of our speciall grace, certaine knowledge and meere motion, giuen and graunted, and by these presents for vs, our heires and successours, doe giue and graunt vnto our saide trustie, and welbeloued subiects Edward Osburne, and vnto Thomas Smith of London esquire, Richard Staper, and William Garret of London marchants, their executours, and administratours, and to the executours and administratours of them, and of euery of them, that they, and euery of them, and such other person and persons Englishmen borne, not exceeding the nomber of twelue, as they the saide Edward and Richard shall appoint, nominate, or admit to be parteners, aduenturers, or doers with them the saide Edward, Thomas, Richard, and William, in their societie by themselues, their seruants, factours or deputies, and to such others as shall be nominated according to the tenour of these our letters patents, shall and may during the terme of seuen yeeres from the date of these patents, freely trade, traffique, and vse feates of marchandise into, and from the dominions of the said Grand Signior, and euery of them, in such order, and maner, forme, liberties and condition to all intents and purposes as shalbe betweene them limitted and agreed, and not otherwise, without any molestation, impeachment, or disturbance, any lawe, statute, vsage, diuersitie of religion or faith, or other cause or matter whatsoeuer to the contrary notwithstanding.

And that it shalbe lawfull to the said Edward and Richard their executors and administrators, (during the said terme) to appoint or admit to be parteners and aduenturers with them the saide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, such persons not exceeding the nomber of twelue (as before is said) to traffique and vse the said trade & feate of marchandise according to our saide graunt. And that all and euery such person and persons, as shall hereafter fortune to be appointed or admitted as parteners in the said trade or traffique according to these our letters patents, shall and may from the time of such appointment or admittance, haue and enioy the freedome and liberty of the said trade and traffique, during the residue of the said terme of seuen yeeres according to such limitation and agreement as is aforesaid, and that it shall and may be lawfull to and for the saide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, their executours and administratours, seruants, factours and deputies, and all such as shall be so appointed, nominated or admitted, to be parteners or aduenturers in the saide trade, or so many of them as can and will, to assemble themselues for or about any the matters, causes, affaires or businesse of the said trade in any place or places for the same ſame conuenient, from time to time during the ſaide terme of 7. yeeres, within our dominions or elſewhere, and to make, ordeine, and conſtitute reaſonable lawes and ordinances, for the good gouernment of the ſaid companie, and for the better aduancement and continuance of the ſaide trade and traffique, not being contrarie or repugnant to the lawes, eſtatutes or cuſtomes of our Realme, and the ſame lawes or ordinances ſo made to put in vre, and execute accordingly, and at their pleaſures to reuoke the ſame lawes and ordinances, or any of them, as occaſion ſhall require.

And in conſideration that the ſaid Edward Oſburne hath bene the principall ſetter foorth and doer in the opening, & putting in vre of the ſaid trade, we do therfore eſpecially ordeine, conſtitute, and prouide by theſe patents, that the ſaid Edwarde Oſburne ſhall be gouernour of all ſuch as by vertue of theſe our letters patents, ſhall be parteners, aduenturers, or traffiquers in the ſaide trade, during the ſaide terme of ſeuen yeeres, if hee ſo long liue: And that if the ſaide Edward ſhall happen to deceaſe during the ſaid terme, the ſaid Richard Staper then liuing, then the ſaide Richarde Staper ſhall likewiſe be gouernour during the reſidue of the ſaid terme (if he ſo long liue) and that if the ſaid Edward and Richard ſhall both happen to deceaſe during the ſaid terme, then the parteners or aduenturers for the time being, or the greateſt part of them ſhall from time to time as neceſſitie ſhall require, chooſe and elect a gouernour of the ſaid companie.

Prouided alwayes, that if there ſhall happen any great or vrgent occaſion to remooue or diſplace any perſon that ſhall be gouernour of the ſaide fellowſhip, that then it ſhall, and may be lawfull for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, to remooue, and diſplace euery ſuch gouernour, and to place another of the ſaide fellowſhip in the ſame office, during ſuch time as ſuch perſon ſhould haue enioyed the ſame, according to this our graunt, if there had bene no cauſe to the contrary.

And wee further for vs, our heires, and ſucceſſours, of our eſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion, doe graunt to the ſaid Edward Oſburne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, their executours and adminiſtratours, that nothing ſhall be done to be of force or validitie touching the ſaide trade or traffique, or the exerciſe thereof, without or againſt the conſent of the ſaide Edward, during ſuch time as hee ſhall bee Gouernour as afore is ſaide. And after that time without the conſent of the Gouernour for the time being, and of the more part of the ſaide company.

And further, wee of our more ample and abundant grace, meere motion and certaine knowledge, haue graunted, and by theſe patents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, doe graunt to the ſaide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, their executors and adminiſtrators, that they, the ſaide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, their executors and adminiſtrators, and the ſaide perſon and perſons, by them the ſaid Edward and Richard to be nominated, or appointed as afore is ſaid, together, with ſuch two other perſons, as wee our heires or ſucceſſors from time to time during the ſaide terme ſhall nominate, ſhall haue the whole trade and traffique, and the whole entire onely libertie, vſe and priuiledge of trading, and traffiquing, and vſing feate of marchandiſe, into, and from the ſaid dominions of the ſaid Grand Signior, and euery of them. And when there ſhall be no ſuch perſons ſo nominated or appointed by vs, our heires or ſucceſſours, that then the ſaid Edward Oſburne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, their executors and adminiſtrators, and ſuch perſons by them ſo to be appointed, ſhall haue the ſaide whole trade and traffique, and the whole entire, and onely libertie, vſe, and priuiledge of trading and traffiquing aforeſaid. And that they the ſaid Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, their executors and adminiſtrators, and alſo all ſuch as ſhal ſo be nominated or appointed to be partners or aduenturers in the ſaid trade, according to ſuch agreement as is aboueſaide, and euery of them, their ſeruants, factours and deputies, ſhal haue full and free authoritie, libertie, facultie, licence and power to trade and traffique into and from all and euery the ſaide dominions of the ſaide Grand Signior, and into, and from all places where, by occaſion of the ſaid trade, they ſhal happen to arriue or come, whether they be Chriſtiãs, Turkes, Gentiles or other, and into, & from all ſeas, riuers, portes, regions, territories, dominions, coaſts & places, with their ſhips, barks, pinneſſes & other veſſels, and with ſuch mariners and men, as they wil lead with them or ſend for the ſaid trade, as they ſhal thinke good at their owne proper coſt & expenſes, any law, ſtatute, vſage, or matter whatſoeuer to the contrary not withſtãding. And that it ſhalbe lawful for the ſaid, Edward, Thomas, Richard & William, and to the perſons aforeſaid, and to & for the mariners and ſea men to be vſed & employed in the ſaid trade and voyage to ſet and place in the tops of their ſhips & other veſſels the armes of England with the red croſſe ouer the ſame, as heretofore they haue vſed ỳ red croſſe, any matter or thing to the cõtrary notwithſtanding.

And we of our further royal fauor, & of our eſpecial grace, certaine knowledge & meere motion haue graunted, & by theſe preſents doe graunt to the ſaid Edward Oſburne, Tho. Smith, Richard Staper, & William Garret, their executors & adminiſtrators by theſe preſents, that the ſaid lands, territories, and dominions of the saide Grand Signior, or any of them, shall not be visited, frequented, nor haunted by way of marchandise by any other our subiects during the saide terme, contrary to the true meaning of these patents.

And by vertue of our high prerogatiue royall (which we will not haue argued or brought in question) we straighely charge and commaunde, and prohibite for vs, our heires, and successours, all our subiects (of what degree or qualitie soeuer they bee) that none of them directly, or indirectly, doe visite, haunt, frequent or trade, traffique, or aduenture by way of marchandise into, or from any of the Dominions of the saide Grand Signior, or other places aboue saide by water or by lande (other then the saide Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, their executors or administrators, or such as shalbe admitted, and nominated as is afore saide,) without expresse licence, agreement, and consent of the saide Gouernour, and companie or the more part of them, whereof the said Gouernour alwayes to be one, vpon paine of our high indignation, and of forfeiture and losse, as well of the ship and shippes, with the furniture thereof, as also of the goods, marchandizes, and things whatsoeuer they be of those our subiects which shall attempt, or presume to saile, traffique, or aduenture, to or from any the dominions, or places aboue said, contrary to the prohibition afore said: the one halfe of the same forfeiture to be to the vse of vs our heires and successors, and the other halfe to the vse of the said Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, and the saide companie, and further to suffer imprisonment during our pleasure, & such other punishment as to vs, for so high contempt shall seeme meete and conuenient.

And further of our grace speciall, certaine knowledge, and meere motion we haue condiscended and graunted, and by these patents for vs our heires and successors, doe condiscend and graunt to the said Edward, Thomas, Richard & William, their executors and administrators, that we our heires and successors during the said terme, will not graunt libertie, licence or power to any person or persons whatsoeuer, contrary to the tenor of these our letters patents, to saile, passe, trade, or traffique into or from the said dominions of the said Grand Signior or any of them, without the consent of the said Edward, Thomas, Richard & William, and such as shalbe named or appointed as afore is said, or the most of them. And that if at any time hereafter during ẏ said terme, the said Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, or the suruiuors of them, shall admit or nominate any of our subiects to be partners & aduenturers in the said trade to the nomber of 12. or vnder as afore is saide, that then we our heires and successors at the instance and petition of the said Edward, Thomas, Richard, and William, or the suruiuors of them in our Chancerie to be made, and vpon the sight of these presents, will graunt, and make to the said Edward, Thomas, Richard and William, or to the suruiuors of them, & to such persons as so shalbe nominated or appointed by their speciall names, synames, and additions as is afore said, new letters patents vnder the great seale of England in due forme of lawe with like agreement, clauses, prohibitions, prouisoes and articles, (mutatis mutandis) as in these our letters patents are conteined, for, and during the residue of the said terme of 7. yeeres then remayning vnexpired. And that the sight of these presents shalbe sufficient warrant to the Lord Chancelour, or Lord keeper of the great seale for the time being, for the making, sealing and passing of such newe letters patents, without further writte or warrant for the same to be required, had, or obtained.

And the said Edward Osburne, Thomas Smith, and Richard Staper, and William Garret and such others as shalbe so nominated and appointed, as is afore said, to be of their trade or companie, shall yeerely during 6. of the last yeeres of the said 7. yeres, lade out of this our Realme, and bring home yeerely, for, and in the feate and trade of marchandizing afore saide, so much goods and marchandizes, as the custome, and subsidie inwards and outwards, shall amount in the whole to the summe of 500. li. yeerely. So that the said Edward Osburne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret and the said persons so to be nominated as is afore said, or any of them, or their shippe or shippes be not barred, stayed, restrained or let by any reasonable occasion from the saide trade or traffique, and so that the said shippe or shippes doe not perish by any misfortune, or be spoiled by the way in their voyage.

And further, the saide Edwarde Osburne, Thomas Smith, Richarde Staper, and William Garret, and such others as shall bee appointed as afore saide to bee of their saide trade or companie, shall giue notice vnto the Lorde Admirall of England, or to some of the principall officers of the Admiraltie for the time being, of such shippe or shippes as they shall set foorth in the same voyage, and of the nomber of marriners appointed to goe in the same ship or shippes, by the space of fifteene dayes before the setting or going foorth of the same shippe or shippes. And also the saide Edward Osburne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper and William Garret, and such other as shall bee by them the saide Edward and Richard, nominated to bee of the saide trade, shall and will at the setting footh of their shippe, or shippes, for the same voyage, permit and suffer the Master of the Ordinances of vs, our heires, and successors, or some others, our or their principall officers of the Ordinance, to take a view of the number and quantity of such Ordinance, powder, and munition, as shall be caried in the said shippe, or shippes, and shall also at the returne of the same shippe, or shippes, suffer a view to be taken, and vpon request made, make an accompt to the said officers of our Ordinance, of the expenses, and wastes of the said Ordinance, powder, and munition, so to be caried in the same shippe, or ships.

Prouided alwaies, that if any of the said trade or companie, or their seruants, factors, or sailers, in any shippe by them laden, shall commit any piracie or outrage vpon the seas, and that, if the said companie or societie shall not, or doe not, within reasonable time, after complaint made, or notice giuen to the said companie, or to any of them, either satisfie or recompence the parties that so shall fortune to be robbed, or spoiled by any of the said companie, or sailers, in the said shippes, or els shal not doe their endeuour to the vttermost of their reasonable power, to haue the parties so offending punished for the same their offences, that then, and from thencefooth, these present letters patents shall be vtterly voide, cease, and determine.

Prouided likewise, that if it shall hereafter appeare vnto vs, our heires, or successors, that this grant, or the continuance thereof in the whole, or in any part thereof, shall not be profitable to vs, our heires, our successors, or to this our Realme, that then, and from thence footh, vpon, and after one full yeeres warning, to be giuen vnto the said companie, or to the Gouernour thereof, by vs, our heires, or successors, this present grant shal cease, be voide, and determine, to all intents, constructions, and purposes.

Prouided also, that we, our heires, and successors, from time to time, during the said 7. yeeres, may lawfully nominate, appoint, and authorise two persons, being fit men, to be of the said companie, and for want or lacke of them, two others to be aduenturers in the said trade, for such stocke and summe of monie, as they shall put in, so that the saide persons to be nominated, or authorised, shall be contributorie to all charges of the said trade & aduenture indifferently, according to their stockes: and as other aduenturers of the said trade, shall doe for their stockes, and so that likewise they doe obserue the orders of the said companie, allowable by this our grant: and that such persons so to be appointed, by vs, our heires, or successors, shall, and may, with the said companie, and fellowship, vse the trade and feate of marchandise aforesaide, and all the liberties and priuiledges herein before granted, according to the meaning of these our letters patents, any thing in these our letters patents contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

And further of our speciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion, we haue condescended, and granted, and by these presents for vs, our heires, and successors, doe condescend, and grant to the said Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, their executors, and administrators, that if at the ende of the said terme of seuen yeeres, it shall seeme meete, and conuenient vnto the said Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, or the suruiuer of them, that this present grant shall be continued: and if that also it shall appeare vnto vs, our heires, or successors, that the continuance thereof shall not be preiudiciall, or hurtfull to this our Realme, that then we, our heires, or successors, at the instance, and petition of the said Edward Osborne, Thomas Smith, Richard Staper, and William Garret, or the suruiuer of them, to be made to vs, our heires, or successors, will grant and make to the said Edward, Thomas, Richard, and William, or the suruiuer of them, and to such other persons, as so shall be by the said Edward, and Richard nominated and appointed, new letters patents, vnder the great seale of England, in due forme of lawe, with like couenants, grants, clauses, and articles, as in these presents are contained, or with addition of other necessarie articles, or change of these in some part, for and during the full terme of seuen yeeres, then next following. Willing, and straightly commanding, and charging all and singuler our Admirals, Vicеadmirals, Iustices, Maiors, Sheriffes, Escheaters, Constables, Bailiffes, and all & singuler our other officers, ministers, liege men, and subiects whatsoeuer, to be aiding, fauouring, helping, and assisting vnto the saide Gouernour, and companie, and their successors, and to their Deputies, officers, seruants, assignes, and ministers, and euery of them, in executing, and enioying the premisses, as well on land as on sea, from time to time, and at all times when you, or any of you, shall be thereunto required, any statute, acte, ordinance, prouiso, proclamation, or restraint heretofore had, made, set footh, ordained, or prouided, or any other matter, cause or thing to the contrarie, in any wise notwithstanding.

In witnes whereof, we haue caused these our letters to be made patents, witnes our selfe, at Westminster, the 11. day of September, in the 23. yeere of our Raigne.

¶ The same in English.

ELizabeth, by the clemencie of the most good and most great God, the only creator and gouernour of all things, Queene of England, France, and Ireland, inuincible, and most mightie defender of the true faith, against all Idolaters falsly professing the name of Christ, to all and singuler persons, to whose sight and view, these our present letters may come, greeting. Whereas the most renowmed, and most inuincible Prince, Zuldan Murad Can, the most mighty gouernour of the kingdome of Turkie, and Monarch of the East Empire, hath entred into leagues and friendship with vs, (which we for our part, as much as lieth in vs, do purpose solemnly, and inuiolably to keepe in all times to come,) and whereas for the better countenancing and authorising of the same, the foresaid renowmed Emperour hath granted vnto our subiects free libertie of traffike, in all the partes of his sacred Empire, with as ample, and large a graunt of priuileges, as is giuen to other good Princes, our neighbours, and confederats, the graunt of which priuileges, wee taking very thankfully, and acceptably, are certainely, and thoroughly determined to keepe and maintaine, with the like goodnes and curtesie of mynde, desiring nothing more, then with an honourable respect to nourish, and deserue the beneuolent affections of good Princes toward vs: Knowe yee, that wee thinking well, and hauing good confidence in the singular trustines, obedience, wisdome, and disposition, of our welbeloued seruant William Harebrowne, one of the Esquires of our bodie, towardes vs, and our seruice, doeby the theſe preſents, make, ordaine, and conſtitute him, our true and vndoubted Orator, Meſſenger, Deputie, and Agent. Giuing and granting vnto him, power, and authoritie, in our name, and for vs, to confirme the foreſaid league of friendſhip, to take into his handes, and to ratifie the grant of the priuiledges, and to commaunde, and enioyne by the authoritie of our Maieſtie, all and ſinguler our ſubiects, trading and dealing in any of the coaſtes, and kingdomes of that Empire, that as long as they remaine in traffike with his ſubiects, they be obedient to the preſcription and order of the foreſaide priuiledges, applying themſelues in all things, and thorough all thinges, to ſuch duties, and ſeruices, as appertaine to ſo great a league, and friendſhip, and the offenders againſt this our league, to receiue iuſtice, and puniſhment accordingly. We further giue vnto him power and authoritie, ouer all and ſinguler our ſubiects, dealing, and vſing traffike in any place or part whatſoeuer, ſubiect to the gouernement of that Empire, to appoint the places of their traffikes, in what hauen or citie it ſhall pleaſe him, and to prohibite them from all other places, and whereſoeuer their traffikes are appointed to be kept, there to make and create Conſuls, or Gouernours, to enact lawes, and ſtatutes, by the vertue and tenor whereof, all our foreſaid ſubiects, and euery one of them, ſhall both publikely, and priuately vſe and behaue themſelues, to correct and puniſh the breakers of thoſe lawes: and laſt of all, to doe and fulfill all and ſinguler things whatſoeuer, which ſhall ſeeme requiſite and conuenient for the honeſt and orderly gouernment of our ſaid ſubiects, and of the maner of their traffike in thoſe parts. Promiſing aſſuredly, and in the word of a Prince, that whatſoeuer ſhall be done of our ſaid Orator, and Agent, in all or in any of the premiſſes, not repugnant and contrarie to our lawes, ſhall be accepted, ratified, and confirmed by vs. In witnes whereof, we haue cauſed theſe our letters to be made patents, and our ſeale thereunto to be appenſed. Giuen at our Caſtle of Windſore, the 20. day of Nouember, in the yeere of Chriſt, 1582. and of our raigne the 24.

The firſt voyage or iourney, made by Maſter Laurence Alderſey, Marchant of London, to the Cities of Ieruſalem, and Tripolis, &c.

In the yeere, 1581. Penned and ſet downe by himſelfe.

I Departed from London, the firſt day of Aprill, in the yeere of our Lorde, 1581. and the next morning, being Sunday, I arriued at Graueſende, where I found a Craier laden with beere, then ready to depart, for Fluſhing: I, and the companie that was with me, ſtaied there that day, vntill one of the clocke in the afternoone the next day: and then I, and Thomas God, with foure or fiue more that were in the companie, to goe to Antwerpe, imbarked our ſelues in that Craier, and ſo ſet ſaile, and departed: but the winde being quite contrary, we were ſet on ſhoare, a mile or two before we came to Quinborough: in the euening, we miſſed our way to the towne, ſo that we lay in the Marſhes all that night, til two of the clocke the next morning, and then by chance Thomas God happened vpon a tennants houſe of his, by whome we were brought to Quinborough, where we were well entertained, and well refreſhed our ſelues.

Vpon Wenſday, the fift of Aprill, we tooke the ſeas againe, (the wind being ſomewhat good) and it ſerued vs ſo well, that we arriued at Fluſhing vpon the next day, at foure of the clocke in the afternoone. Vpon Friday in the afternoone, I arriued at Antwerpe, and hauing diſpatched my buſines there by Saturday, I tooke my paſſage for Dort, where I arriued vpon Sunday, the ninth of the ſame moneth, ſtaying there but that night: and in the morning, hauing found companie that went to Wezell, I tooke my paſſage with them in a ſmall boate, the boate being heauie laden, and ſore peſtered with paſſengers, and but one man and a boy, to guide the ſame: and the water withal being very rough, I cauſed them to land me at Gorcom, but foure mile from Dort, and there ſtaied that night, and the next day I tooke a ſtronger boate, better manned, and leſſe peſtered, in which boate, I thanke God, I was ſafely deliuered at Neumegen.

From thence, I tooke my paſſage to Collen, in a ſtronge hoy, laden with houſhold ſtuffe, and ſome other marchandize, and about twelue paſſengers, beſide my ſelfe. From Neumegen, we departed vpon Wenſday, the 12. of Aprill, with very ſcant wind, by reaſon whereof, we were very long vpon the way, and many times ſet on ground in great danger, beſides the perill of the Malecontents, who were vpon both ſides of the riuer. One euening, as we lay at anker, the wind being contrarie, there came about ſixteene of the Malecontents in a great ſhip boate, and thought to haue boorded vs, but our watch perceiuing them comming, called vs, the reſt of our companie being all ready and appointed for them, diſcharged a peece or two at them: they nothing afraide,

ſtil came vpon vs, although thoſe 2. peeces were diſcharged, & I being faſt in ſleepe in my Cabbin, was therewith awaked: and aſking what the matter was, one told me, that the Malecontents were comming aboord vs: whereupon I being ſomewhat amazed, roſe out of my Cabbin, and betooke me to my ſword, for that was the beſt weapon I had, and vp I went to the top of the hatches, and when I perceiued them comming, I procured halfe a doſen to diſcharge at once, to let them vnderſtand, that there were thoſe in the ſhip, that would bid them welcome: and when thoſe peeces were all at one inſtant diſcharged, they were amazed, and ſtaied, and wiſt not what to doe. Then I, with the beſt dutch I had, called to them, and aſked them wherefore they came not, they ſhould be welcome to vs, with the beſt cheere that we were able to make, and ſo ſhot off another voley, and ſhewed our ſelues with long pikes, ſwords, and other weapons, in ſuch order, that they went their waies, and would not accept our entertainment, nor thanke vs for our good wils: we were foure daies in danger of them, the wind was ſo contrary. Then at the laſt, we procured the Maſter to go on ſhoare, to hire a couple of horſes to towe the ſhip, which he did, and vpon Sunday, the 16. of the ſame moneth, we landed at Wezell, and there hired a waggon, to goe ouer land to Collen, becauſe I had haſte to be at Venice, before this moneth were out.

Vpon Tueſday, the 17. of Aprill, I ſet from Wezell by lande, and that day I dined at Duiſburge, which is three Dutch miles from Wezell, and I lay all night at Thiſtleborough, which is within fiue miles of Collen, and vpon Wenſday I came to Collen, about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, and ſtaied there till Tueſday, the 24. of the ſame moneth, and then ſet towardes Mentz.

The monuments of the Citie of Collen ſeene by Maſter Alderſey.

The monuments which I ſawe at Collen, be theſe. I ſawe the tombe (as they ſay) of the three Kings of Collen, which are very faire, incloſed in copper, and Maſſe ſaid in it euery day: it is in the great Church of Collen.

I was alſo in the Church of S. Vrſula, where I found the people at a ſermon, made by a Ieſuite: to which ſermon, beſides the people, there reſorted all the ſchollers of the ſaid Ieſuite, who haue their learning there for nothing: I reckoned and numbred them, to be fiue hundreth and more, as they came out, and yet I ſuppoſe there are as many more, as I numbred, which went out at an other doore of the Church, ſo that I could not number them all. Alſo I ſaw the tombe of S. Vrſula there, and the tombe of the Engliſh King, that was her huſband, whoſe ſkuls are layned in ſiluer for great monuments, and the plate of ſiluer is made to open, ſo that euery bodie that will, may ſee the ſkuls: and there are the bones and ſkuls of a great many of other virgins, and ladies of England, to the number of ten thouſand, the ſkuls of all which Ladies, were layned alſo, and the ſkuls of all the virgines were gilt, and put in caſes of purple, and crimſon velluet: alſo the bones of S. Vrſula, and moſt of the bones of the Ladies, with the bones of the Pope, that came with them from Rome, (as they ſay) be all gilt.

This S. Vrſula was a Queene of Wales, and her huſband was a King, or a Kings ſonne of England, and his name was Enterius, which were all ſlaine, comming homewards from Rome, at Collen, with the Pope in their companie, that had chriſtened them at Rome, (for they were all heathen people before) and thinking to be their conductor home, was ſlaine with them. There I ſaw alſo (as they told me) the wedding ring of S. Vrſula: there are the bones and ſkuls alſo of the ſeuen brethren, and the mother of them, mentioned in the Machabees, which were all martyred, for not obeying the tyrants commaundement. I ſawe alſo one of the pots, that (by their report) had water in it at the mariage in Cana of Galile, which Chriſt turned into wine: and I dranke out of the ſame pot, which is made of white marble, and holdeth about a gallon, and the foote of it is trimmed with ſilke of diuers colours.

From Collen, I was commended by George Caſteler to Auguſta, to one Elias Geneſe, towards which place I went vpon Tueſday the 24. of Aprill, and in the way I ſawe many faire caſtles, and braue cities, wherein I entred not, as Punt, which is foure Dutch miles from Collen.

The Caſtle of Drageyfield, is a mile from Punt, which ſtandeth vpon a very high mountaine, and is very ſtrong, and of each ſide of it, is a Caſtle or two more: it is built within the rocke, ſo as it is inuincible, if it were withall well fortified. Then came we to Andernaga, a great Citie, which is not farre from the Caſtle of Drageyfield: from thence to Coplands, which is alſo a great Citie: thence to S. Cure, and Elfielde, two great Cities alſo: and then to the houſe of the Palſgraue, which is vpon the riuer of Rhene, which is not to be come vnto, but by water.

Vpon Sunday, the nine and twentie of Aprill, at twelue of the clocke, I came to Mentz, where I ſtaied but till three of the ſame day, and then tooke paſſage for Vpnam, where I lay all that night.

Mentz

Mentz is a very great Citie, and beautifull: the Biſhop thereof is in dignitie, and authoritie, a great Prince, his Pallace like a Princes Pallace, his barges like dwelling houſes, ſo large, and ſo full as it were of Chambers, that euery one of his ſeruants hath his doore, and thereunto his locke and key of his Chamber in the barge: they haue in the ſaide barge a dining Chamber, walkes, great tables to play at dice or cardes, and much more then I ſpeake of, becauſe I ſawe not all.

Upon Thurſday, the third day of May, I came to Auguſta, where I deliuered the letter I had to Maſter Ieniſe, from Maſter Caſtler, whome I found very willing to pleaſure me, in any thing that I could or would reaſonably demaund. He firſt furniſhed me with a horſe to Venice, for my money, and then tooke me with him a walking, to ſhewe me the Citie, for that I had a day to tarie there, for him that was to be my guide.

The deſcription of Auguſta in Germany.

He ſhewed me firſt the ſtate houſe, which is very faire, and beautifull: then he brought me to the fineſt garden, and orchard, that euer I ſawe in my life: for there was in it a place for Canarie birdes, as large as a faire Chamber, trimmed with wyer both aboue and beneath, with fine litle branches of trees, for them to ſit in, which was full of thoſe Canarie birdes. There was ſuch an other for Turtle dooues: alſo there were two pigeon houſes, ioyning to them, hauing in them ſtore both of Turtle dooues, and pigeons. In the ſame garden alſo, were ſixe or ſeuen fiſhponds, all railed about, and full of very good fiſhe. Alſo, ſeuen or eight fine fountaines, or water ſpringes, of diuers faſhions: as for fruit, there wanted none of all ſortes, as orenges, figges, raiſons, wallnuts, grapes, beſides apples, peares, fillbirds, ſmall nuts, and ſuch other fruite, as wee haue in England.

Then did he bring me to the water tower of the ſame Citie, that by a ſleight and deuiſe, hath the water brought vp as high, as any Church in the towne, and to tell you the ſtrange deuiſes of all, it paſſeth my capacitie. Then he brought me to another very faire garden, called the ſhooters hole, where are buts for the long bowe, the croſſe bowe, the ſtone bowe, the long peece, and for diuers other exerciſes more.

After this, we walked about the wals of the Citie, where is a great, broade, and deepe ditch, vpon one ſide of the towne, ſo full of fiſhe, as euer I ſawe any ponde in my life, and it is reſerued onely for the States of the Citie. And vpon the other ſide of the Citie, is alſo a deepe place all greene, wherein Deere are kept, and when it pleaſeth the States to hunt for their pleaſure, thither they reſorte, and haue their courſes with Grayhoundes, which are kept for that purpoſe.

Venice.

The fift of May, I departed from Auguſta, towards Venice, and came thither vpon Whitſunday, the thirteenth of the ſame moneth. It is needeles to ſpeake of the heigth of the mountaines, that I paſſed ouer, and of the danger thereof, it is ſo well knowen already to the world: the heigth of them is marueilous, and I was the ſpace of ſixe daies in paſſing them.

I came to Venice at the time of a Faire, which laſted foureteene daies, wherein I ſawe very many, and faire ſhewes of wares. I came thither too ſhort for the firſt paſſage, which went away from Venice, about the ſeuenth or eight of May, and with them about three ſcore pilgrims, which ſhippe was caſt away at a towne called Eſtris, two miles from Venice, and all the men in her, ſauing thirtie, or thereabout, loſt.

Within eight daies after fell Corpus Chriſti day, which was a day amongſt them of proceſſion, in which was ſhewed the plate, and treaſure of Venice, which is eſteemed to be worth two millions of pounds, but I doe not accompt it worth halfe a quarter of that money, except there be more then I ſawe. To ſpeake of the ſumptuouſnes of the Copes, and Veſtiments of the Church, I leaue, but the trueth is, they be very ſumptuous, many of them ſet all ouer with pearle, & made of cloth of golde. And for the Ieſuites, I thinke there be as many at Venice, as there be in Collen.

The number of Iewes in Venice.

The number of Iewes, is there thought to be 1000, who dwell in a certaine place of the Citie, & haue alſo a place, to which they reſort to pray, which is called the Iewes Sinagogue. They all, and their offſpring, vſe to weare red caps, (for ſo they are commanded) becauſe they may thereby be knowen from other men. For my farther knowledge of theſe people, I went into their Sinagogue vpon a Saturday, which is their Sabbath day: and I founde them in their ſeruice or prayers, very deuoute: they receiue the fiue bookes of Moſes, and honour them, by carrying them aboue their Church, as the Papiſtes doe their croſſe.

Their Synagogue is in forme round, and the people ſit round about it, & in the middeſt, there is a place for him that readeth to the reſt: as for their apparell, all of them weare a large white lawne ouer their garment, which reacheth from their head, downe to the ground.

The

The Psalmes they sing as we doe, hauing no image, nor vsing any manner of idolatrie: their errour is, that they beleeue not in Christ, nor yet receiue the New Testament. This Citie of Venice is very faire, and greatly to be commended, wherein is good order for all things: and also it is very strong, and populous: it standeth vpon the maine sea, and hath many Ilands about it, that belong to it.

To tell you of the Duke of Venice, & of the Seigniory: there is one chosen that euer beareth the name of a Duke, but in trueth, he is but seruant to the Seignorie, for of himselfe he can do little: it is no otherwise with him, then with a Priest, that is at Masse vpon a festiuall day, which putting on his golden garment, seemeth to be a great man, but if any man come vnto him, and craue some friendshippe at his handes, he will say, you must goe to the Masters of the parrish, for I can not pleasure you, otherwise then by preferring of your suite: and so it is with the Duke of Venice, if any man hauing a suite, come to him, and make his complaint, and deliuer his supplication, it is not in him to helpe him, but he will tell him, you must come this day, or that day, and then I will preferre your suite to the Seignorie, and doe you the best friendship that I may. Furthermore, if any man bring a letter vnto him, he may not open it, but in the presence of the Seignorie, and they are to see it first, which being read, perhaps they will deliuer it to him, perhaps not. Of the Seignorie there be about three hundreth, and about fortie of the priuie Counsell of Venice, who vsually are arraied in gownes of crimsen Satten, or crimsen Damaske, when they sitte in Counsell.

In the Citie of Venice, no man may weare a weapon, except he be a souldier for the Seignorie, or a scholler of Padua, or a gentleman of great countenance, and yet he may not doe that without licence.

The excesse of the women of Venice.

As for the women of Venice, they be rather monsters, then women. Euery Shoemakers or Tailers wife, will haue a gowne of silke, and one to carie vp her traine, wearing their shoes very neere halfe a yard high from the ground: if a stranger meete one of them, he will surely thinke, by the state that she goeth with, that he meeteth a Ladie.

I departed from this Citie of Venice, vpon Midsommer day, being the foure and twentith of June, and thinking that the shippe would the next day depart, I stayed, and laye a shippeboord all night, and we were made beleeue from time to time, that we should this day, and that day depart, but we taried still, till the foureteenth of July, and then with scant winde we sette saile, and sailed that day, and that night, not aboue fiftie Italian miles: and vpon the sixteene day at night, the winde turned flat contrarie, so that the Master knewe not what to doe: and about the fift howre of the night, which we reckon to be about one of the clocke after midnight, the Pylot descried a saile, and at last perceiued it to be a Gallie of the Turkes, whereupon we were in great feare.

His embarking at Venice for Jerusalem

The Master being a wise fellowe, and a good sayler, beganne to deuise howe to escape the danger, and to lose little of our way: and while both he, and all of vs, were in our dumps, God sent vs a merry gale of winde, that we ranne three score and tenne leagues before it was twelue a clocke the next day, and in fiue dayes after, we were seuen leagues past Zanta: and vpon Sunday morning, being the three and twentie of the same moneth, we came to the sight of Candia which day the winde came contrarie, with great blastes, and stormes, vntill the eight and twentie of the same moneth: in which time, the Marriners cried out vpon me, because I was an English man, and saide, I was no good Christian, and wished that I were in the middest of the Sea, saying, that they, and the shippe, were the worse for me. I answered, truely it may well be, for I thinke my selfe the worst creature in the worlde, and consider you your selues also, as I do my selfe, and then vse your discretion. The Friers preached, and the sermon being done, I was demaunded whether I did vnderstand him: I answered, yea, and tolde the Frier himselfe, thus you saide in your sermon, that we were not all good Christians, or els it were not possible for vs to haue such weather: to which I answered, be you well assured, that we are not in deede all good Christians, for there are in the shippe some, that holde very vnchristian opinions: for this time I satisfied him, although (they saide) that I would not see, when they sayd the procession, and honoured their images, and prayed to our Ladie, and S. Marke.

There was also a Gentleman, an Italian, which was a passenger in the shippe, and he told me what they said of me, because I would not sing, Salue Regina, and Aue Maria, as they did: I told them, that they that prayed to so many, or sought helpe of any other, then of God the Father, & of Jesus Christ his onely sonne, goe a wrong way to worke, and robbed God of his honour, and wrought their owne destructions.

All this was tolde the Friers, but I heard nothing of it in three daies after: and then at euening

ning prayer, they ſent the purſer about with the image of our Ladie to euery one to kiſſe, and I perceiuing it went another way from him, and would not ſee it: yet at laſt he fetched his courſe about, ſo that he came to me, and offered it to me as he did to others, but I refuſed it: whereupon there was a great ſtir: the patron and all the friers were tolde of it, and euery one ſaid I was a Lutheran, and ſo called me: but two of the friers that were of greateſt authoritie, ſeemed to beare me better good will then the reſt, and trauelled to the patron in my behalfe, and made all well againe.

The ſecond day of Auguſt we arriued in Cyprus, at a towne called Hillagh: the people there be very rude, and like beaſts, and no better, they eat their meat ſitting vpon the ground, with their legs a croſſe like tailors, their beds for the moſt part be hard ſtones, but yet ſome of them haue ſaye mattraces to lie vpon. Cyprus. Hillagh.

Vpon thurſday the eight of Auguſt we came to Joppa in a ſmall barke, which we hyred betwixt Hillagh and Salina, and could not be ſuffered to come on land till noone the next day, and then we were permitted by the great Baſha, who ſate vpon the top of a hill to ſee vs ſent away. Being come on land, we might not enter into any houſe for victualles, but were to content our ſelues with our owne prouiſion, and that which we bought to carry with vs was taken from vs. I had a paire of ſtirrops, which I bought at Venice to ſerue me in my iourney, and trying to make them fit for me, when the Baſha ſaw me vp before the reſt of the companie, he ſent one to diſmount me, and to ſtrike me, wherupon I turned me to the Baſha, and made a long legge, ſaying, Grand mercye Seignior: and after a while we were horſed vpon litle aſſes, and ſent away, with about fiftie light horſmen to be our conduct thyough the wilderneſſe, called Deſerta fœlix, who made vs good ſport by the way with their pikes, gunnes, and cauchins, Joppa. The Baſha of Joppa.

That day, being S. Laurence day, we came to Rama, which is tenne Italian miles from Joppa, and there we ſtayed that night, and payed to the captaine of the caſtell, euery man a chekin, which is ſeuen ſhillings and two pence ſterling. So then we had a new gard of ſouldiers, and left the other. Rama.

The houſe we lodged in at Rama, had a doore ſo low to enter into, that I was faine to creepe in, as it were vpon my knees, and within it are their roomes to lodge trauellers that come that way: there are no beds, except a man buy a mat, and lay it on the ground, that is all the prouiſion, without ſtooles or benches to ſit vpon. Our victualles were brought vs out of the towne, as hennes, egges, bread, great ſtore of fruite, as pomgranets, figges, grapes, oringes, and ſuch like, and drinke, we drue out of the well. The towne it ſelfe is ſo ruinated, that I take it rather to be a heape of ſtones then a towne.

Then the next morning we thought to haue gone away, but we could not be permitted that day, ſo we ſtayed there till two of the clocke the next morning, and then with a freſh gard of ſouldiers we departed toward Jeruſalem. We had not ridden fiue Engliſh miles, but we were incountred with a great number of the Arabians, who ſtayed vs, and would not ſuffer vs to paſſe till they had ſomewhat, ſo it coſt vs for all our gard aboue twentie ſhillings a man betwixt Joppa and Jeruſalem. Theſe Arabians troubled vs often times. Our Truchman that payed the money for vs was ſtricken downe, and had his head broken becauſe he would not giue them as much as they asked: and they that ſhould haue reſcued both him and vs, ſtood ſtill, and durſt doe nothing, which was to our coſt. Troopes of theeuiſh Arabians.

Being come within ſight of Jeruſalem, the maner is to kneele downe, and giue God thankes, that it hath pleaſed him to bring vs to that holy place where he himſelfe had beene: and there we leaue our horſes, and go on foote to the towne, and being come to the gates, there they tooke our names, and our fathers names, and ſo we were permitted to go to our lodgings. His arriuall in the ſight of Jeruſalem.

The gouernor of the houſe met vs a mile out of the towne, and very curteouſly bade vs all welcome, and brought vs to the monaſterie. The gates of the citie are all couered with yron, the entrance into the houſe of the Chriſtians, is a very low and narrow doore, barred or plated with yron, and then come we into a very darke entry: the place is a monaſtery: there we lay, and dieted of free coſt, we fared reaſonable well, the bread and wine was excellent good, the chambers cleane, and all the meat well ſerued in, with cleane linnen.

We lay at the monaſterie two dayes, friday and ſaturday, and then we went to Bethlem with two or three of the friers of the houſe with vs: in the way thither we ſaw many monuments, as:

The mountaine where the Angell tooke vp Abacucke by the haire, and brought him to Daniel in the Lions denne. The monuments in and about Jeruſalem.

The fountaine of the prophet Jeremie.

The place where the wiſe men mette that went to Bethlem to worſhip Chriſt, where is a fountaine of ſtone.

Being come to Bethlem we ſaw the place where Chriſt was borne, which is now a chapell with two altars, whereupon they ſay maſſe: the place is built with gray marble, and hath beene beautifull, but now it is partly decayed.

Neere therto is the ſepulchre of the innocents ſlaine by Herod, the ſepulchre of Paul, of Jerome, and of Euſebius.

Alſo a litle from this monaſterie is a place vnder the ground, where the virgin Mary abode with Chriſt when Herod ſought him, to deſtroy him.

We ſtayed at Bethlem that night, and the next day we went from thence to the mountaines of Judea, which are about eight miles from Jeruſalem, where are the ruines of an olde monaſterie. In the mid way from the monaſterie to Jeruſalem is the place where John Baptiſt was borne, being now an olde monaſterie, and cattle kept in it. Alſo a mile from Jeruſalem is a place called Inuentio ſanctæ crucis, where the wood was found that made the croſſe.

In the citie of Jeruſalem we ſaw the hall where Pilat ſat in iudgement when Chriſt was condemned, the ſtaires whereof are at Rome, as they tolde vs. A litle from thence is the houſe where the virgin Mary was borne.

There is alſo the piſcina or fiſhpoole where the ſicke folkes were healed, which is by the walles of Jeruſalem, but the poole is now dry.

The mount of Caluaria is a great church, and within the doore thereof, which is litle, and barred with yron, and fiue great holes in it to looke in, like the holes of tauerne doores in London, there ſit that are appointed to receiue our money with a carpet vnder them vpon a banke of ſtone, and they legs a croſſe like tailors: hauing paid our money, we are permitted to go into the church: right againſt the church doore is the graue where Chriſt was buried, with a great long ſtone of white marble ouer it, and railed about, the outſide of the ſepulchre is very foule, by meanes that euery man ſcrapes his name and marke vpon it, and is ill kept.

Within the ſepulchre is a partition, and in the further part thereof is a place like an altar, where they ſay maſſe, and at the doore thereof is the ſtone whereupon the angell ſat when he ſaid to Mary, He is riſen, which ſtone was alſo rowled to the doore of the ſepulchre.

The altar ſtone within the ſepulchre is of white marble, the place able to containe but foure perſons, right ouer the ſepulchre is a deuiſe or lanterne for light, and ouer that a great louer, ſuch as are in England in ancient houſes. There is alſo the chapell of the ſepulchre, and in the mids therof is a canapie as it were of a bed, with a great ſort of Eſtridge egges hanging at it, with tapers of ſilke and lamps.

Behinde the ſepulchre is a litle chapell for the Chaldeans and Syrians.

Vpon the right hand comming into the church is the tombe of Baldwine king of France, and of his ſonne: and in the ſame place the tombe of Melchiſedech.

S. Helens chapell. There is a chapell alſo in the ſame church erected to S. Helen, through which we go vp to the place where Chriſt was crucified: the ſtayres are fiftie ſteps high, there are two altars in it: before the high altar is the place where the croſſe ſtood, the hole whereof is trimmed about with ſiluer, and the depth of it is halfe a mans arme deepe: the rent alſo of the mountaine is there to be ſeene, in the creuis whereof a man may put his arme.

Vpon the other ſide of the mount of Caluarie is the place where Abraham would haue ſacrificed his ſonne. Where alſo is a chapell, and the place paued with ſtones of diuers colours.

There is alſo the houſe of Annas the high prieſt, and the Oliue tree whereunto Chriſt was bound when he was whipt. Alſo the houſe of Caiphas, and by it the priſon where Chriſt was kept, which is but the roome of one man, and hath no light but the opening of the doore.

Without Jeruſalem in the vallie of Joſaphat, is a church vnder the ground, like to the ſtrouds in Paules, where the ſepulchre of the virgin Mary is: the ſtayres be very broad, and vpon the ſtayres going downe are two ſepulchres: vpon the left hand lieth Joſaphat, and vpon the right hand lieth Joachym and Anna, the father and mother of the virgin Mary.

Going out of the valley of Joſaphat, we came to mount Oliuet, where Chriſt prayed vnto his father before his death: and there is to be ſeene (as they tolde me) the water and bloud that fell from the eyes of Chriſt. A litle higher vpon the ſame mount is the place where the Apoſtles ſlept, and watched not. At the foot of the mount is the place where Chriſt was impriſoned.

Vpon the mountaine alſo is the place where Chriſt ſtood when he wept ouer Jeruſalem, and where he aſcended into heauen.

His departure from Jeruſalem. Now hauing ſeene all theſe monuments, I with my company ſet from Jeruſalem, the 20 day of Auguſt, and came againe to Joppa the 22 of the ſame moneth, where we tooke ſhipping preſently for Tripolis, & in 4 dayes we came to Mecina the place where the ſhips lie that come for Tripolis.

The

The citie of Tripolis is a mile and a halfe within the land, ſo that no ſhip can come further then Mecina: ſo that night I came thither, where I lay nine dayes for paſſage, and at laſt we imbarked our ſelues in a good ſhip of Uenice called the new Naue Ragaſona. We entred the ſhip the ſecond of September, the fourth we ſet ſaile, the ſeuenth we came to Salina, which is 140 miles from Tripolis: there we ſtayed foure dayes to take in more lading, in which meane time I fell ſicke of an ague, but recouered againe, I praiſe God. Tripolis in Syria.

Salina is a ruinated citie, and was deſtroyed by the Turke ten yeeres paſt: there are in it now but ſeuenteene perſons, women and children. A litle from this citie of Salina, is a ſalt piece of ground, where the water groweth ſalt that raineth vpon it. Salina.

Thurſday the 21 of September, we came to Hillagh, and there we ſtayed eight dayes for more lading: the 18 of September before we came to Hillagh, and within ten miles of the towne, as we lay at an anker, becauſe the winde was contrarie, there came a great boat full of men to boord vs, they made an excuſe to ſeeke for foure men which (they ſaid) our ſhippe had taken from theirs about Tripolis, but our captaine would not ſuffer any of them to come in to vs. Hillagh a towne in Cyprus.

The next morning they came to vs againe with a great gally, mãned with 500 men at the leaſt, whereupon our captaine ſent the boat to them with twelue men to know their pleaſure: they ſaid they ſought foure men, and therefore would talke with our maiſter: ſo then the maiſters mate was ſent them, and him they kept, and went their way: the next morning they came againe with him, and with three other gallies, and then would needes ſpeake with our captaine, who went to them in a gowne of crimſon damaſke, and other very braue apparell, and fiue or ſixe other gentlemen richlie alſo apparelled. They hauing the Turks ſafe conduct, ſhewed it to the captaine of the gallies, and laid it vpon his head, charging him to obey it: ſo with much adoe, and with the gift of 100 pices of golde we were quit of them, and had our man againe.

That day as aforeſaid, we came to Hillagh, and there ſtayed eight dayes, and at laſt departed towards Candie, with a ſcant winde. Candia.

The 11 day of October we were boorded with foure gallies, manned with 1200 men, which alſo made a ſleeueleſſe arrant, and troubled vs very much, but our captaines paſport, and the gift of 100 chekins diſcharged all.

The 27 of October we paſſed by Zante with a merry winde, the 29 by Corfu, and the third of Nouember we arriued at Eſtria, and there we left our great ſhip, and tooke ſmall boats to bring vs to Uenice. Zanta. Eſtria.

The 9 of Nouember I arriued againe at Uenice in good health, where I ſtaid nine dayes, and the 25 of the ſame moneth I came to Auguſta, and ſtaid there but one day.

The 27 of Nouember I ſet towards Norenberge, where I came the 29, and there ſtayed till the 9 of December, and was very well intertained of the Engliſh merchants there: and the gouernors of the towne ſent me and my company ſixteene gallons of excellent good wine.

From thence I went to Frankford, from Frankford to Collen, from Collen to Arnam, from Arnam to Entrige, from Entrige to Dort, from Dort to Antwerpe, from Antwerpe to Flushing, from Flushing to London, where I arriued vpon Twelfe eue in ſafetie, & gaue thanks to God, hauing finiſhed my iourney to Jeruſalem & home againe, in the ſpace of nine moneths and fiue dayes.

The Queenes letter to the Great Turke 1582, written in commendation of M. Harebrowne, when he was ſent Ambaſſadour.

ELIZABETH &c. Auguſtiſſimo inuictiſſimoque principi, &c. ELizabeth by the grace of the most mighty God and onely creator of heauen and earth, of England, France, and Ireland Queene, the most inuincible and most mighty defender of the Christian faith against all kinde of idolatries of all that liue among the Christians and falsly professe the name of Christ, vnto the most Imperiall & most inuincible prince, Sultan Murad Chan, the most mightie ruler of the kingdome of Turkie, sole aboue all and most soueraigne Monarch of the East Empire, greeting.

Wheras at our request your Imperiall Maiestie in the yeere of our Sauior Iesus 1580, hath entred into a league of peace with vs, whereunto was vnited a most large & bountifull grant of certeine priuileges, by benefit wherof our subiects may with all security most safely and freely trauell by sea and land into all and singular parts of your Musulmanlike Empire, and in the same exercising the trade of merchandize may traffike, dwell, remaine, depart from thence, and returne thither at their pleasure, and in all places be maintained & defended from all damage of bodies and goods by such as are in authoritie vnder your Imperiall Maiestie: we thankefully & gratefully receiuing the benefit of so great a priuilege, as much as in vs lieth do approue & confirme the same, promising in the word of a prince, that we will keepe the said league perfect and inuiolable, and will cause our subiects so to vse the grant of the priuileges giuen vnto them, as your Imperiall Maiestie shall neuer haue occasion to repent you of your most princely liberality. And because the force of this grant, in the iudgement of both our Maiesties, seemeth rather to consist in the vse therof, then in the words, we thought good to send vnto your Imperial Maiesty this our ambassador William Harebowne, one of the esquires of our bodie, which both on our behalfe should yeeld thanks vnto your Maiesty, and also that we might vse his good indeuor for the establishing of such order in our subiects trade of merchandize aswell in your Imperiall citie of Constantinople, as in other places of your Musulmanlike Empire, as according to ỳ prescript of the priuileges is granted by your princely Maiesties goodnesse, and shalbe for the benefit of both our subiects. For performance wherof, because he standeth in need of your Imperiall Maiesties authoritie, we earnestly beseech the same, that you would cause all those which be in authority vnder your highnesse, by all their best meanes to aide and assist this our ambassador in executing this your Imperiall Maiesties pleasure, for vnto him we haue committed this charge: wherin how honestly he will discharge his credit toward both our Maiesties, I no whit stand in doubt: to whom also our pleasure is, that all our subiects shalbe obedient, as far as the grant of your Imperiall Maiestie doth permit. Moreouer, whereas that worthy personage Mustafa your Imperiall Maiesties interpretor hath taken speciall paines for the procuring of this league betweene vs, we earnestly beseech you that for our sakes your Imperiall Maiestie would vouchsafe to aduance him vnto the degree of the Mastafaraks or chiefe pensioners. If in these and in all other honest causes our aforesaid agent and our subiects shall finde your Imperiall highnesses fauor, a noble traffike will florish betweene these nations, and we (if by any way we may stand your state in stead) will alwayes most willingly be ready to requite this your Maiesties fauor and good will with all kinde of good offices. Almighty God the maker of the world, preserue and keepe your Imperiall Maiestie, &c.

M. William Harebowne sent ambassador to the Turke.

A request for the preferring of Mustafa Beg.

The passeport made by the great Maister of Malta vnto the Englishmen in the barke Raynolds. 1582.

FRere Hugo de Lonbenx Verdala, Dei gratia sacræ domus hospitalis sancti Iohannis Hierosolimitani magister humilis, pauperúmque Iesu Christi custos, vniuersis & singulis principibus ecclesiasticis & secularibus, archiepiscopis, episcopis, ducibus, marchionibus, baronibus, nobilibus, capitaneis, vicedominis, præfectis, castellanis, admiralijs, & quibuscúnque triremium vel aliorum nauigiorum patronis, ac ciuitatum rectoribus, potestatibus ac magistratibus, cæterísque officialibus, & quibuscúnque personis cuiusuis dignitatis, gradus, status & conditionis fuerint, vbilibet locorum & terrarum constitutis, salutem.

Notum facimus & in verbo veritatis attestamur, come nel mese di Maggio prossime passato le nostre galere vennero dal viaggio di Barberia, doue habendo mandato per soccorrere a vn galionetto de Christiani che hauea dato trauerso in quelle parti, essendo arriuati sopra questa isola alla parte de ponente trouarono vna naue Inglesa, sopra cargo de essa il magnifico Giouanni Keale, & Dauid Filly patrono, volendo la reconoscere che naue fosse, han visto, che se metteua in ordine per defendersi, dubitando che dette nostre galere fossero de inimici: & per che vn marinaro, riuoltose contra la volonta de detti magnifico Giouani Keale & Dauid Filly, habbi tirato vn tiro di artiglieria verso vna de dette galere, & che non se amangnaua la vela de la Maiestra secondo la volonta de detti magnifico Giouanni Keale & Dauid Filly patrono, fu rimensata detta naue nel presente general porto di Malta, secondo l'ordine del venerando generale de dette galere, & essendo qua, monsignor Inquisitore ha impedita quella per conto del sancto offfcio, & si diede parte alla santita di nostro signor Gregorio papa xiij. a la fin fu licenciata per andarsene al suo viaggio. Han don q, humilmente supplicato detti magnifico Giouanni Keale & Dauid Filly per nome & parte delli magnifici Edwardo Osburn senatore & Richardo Staper merchanti Inglesi della nobile citta di Londra, & anco di Thomaso Wilkinson scriuano, piloti, nocheri, & marinari, gli volessimo dare le nostre lettere patente & saluo condutto, accio che potranno andare & ritornare quando gli parera commodo con alcuna roba & mercantia a loro benuista: si come noi, essendo cosa giusta & che retornera commoda a nostra relligione & a questi forestieri, per tenor de li presenti se gli habiamo concesse con le conditione però infra scritte. videlicet:

Che ogni volta che detti mercadanti con sopradetta naue o con altra non porteranno mercantie de contra bando, & che constara per fede authentica & con lettere patente de sanita, poteran liberalmente victualiarse de tutte le victuarie necessarie, & praticare in questa isola & dominij, & poi partirsene & seguire suo viaggio per doue volessero in leuante o altroue, come tutti altri vasselli & specialmente de Francesi & altri nationi, & di vendere & comprare qual si voglia mercantia a loro benuista,

Item, che potera portare poluere de canone & di archibuso, salnitro, carboni di petra rosetta, platine de rame, stagno, acciale, ferro, carisee commune, tela grossa bianca per far tende de galere, balle de ferro de calibro, petre de molino fine, arbore & antenne de galere, bastardi & alteri. Et in conclusione, hauendo visto che loro per il tempo che restarano qua, si portorno da fideli & Catholici Christiani, & che sua santita habbia trouato bono il saluo condutto del gran Turko a loro concesso, per il timor della armata Turkesca & di altri vasselli de inimici, inherendo alla volonta di sua santita, & massime per che hauera de andare & passare per diuersi lochi & tanto lontani come Inghilterra, Flandra, & tutti parti di ponente, & in altroue, a noi ha parso farle le presente nostre lettere patente come fidele conuersatore nostro, accio piu securamente & senza obstaculo possa andare & ritornare quando li parera con detta naue o con altre, a loro benuista. Per tanto donque tutti & ciascun di voi sudetti affectuosamente pregamo, che per qual si voglia de vostra iurisditione, alla quale detto magnifico Giouani Keale & Dauid filly a nome quo supra con la naue & marinari de detti loro principali o altri caschera, nauigare, passare, & venire sicuramente, alla libera, senza alcuno disturbo o altro impedimento li lasciate, & facciate lasciare stare, & passare, tornare, & quando li parera partire, talmente che per amore & contemplatione nostra il detto magnifico Giouanni keale a nome quo supra con le naue, marinari, & mercantia non habbi difficulta, fastidio & ritentione alcuna, anzi se gli dia ogni agiuto & fauore, cosa degna di voi, giusta, & a noi gratissima de recompensarnila con vguale & maggior seruitio, quando dall'occasione ne saremo rechiesti. Et finalmente commandammo a tutti & qual si vogla religiosi & frati de nostra relligione di qual si voglia conditione, grado & stato che siano, & a tutti ricenitori & procuratori nostri in tutti & qual si uoglia priorati nostri deputati & deputandi in vertu di santa obedientia, & a tutti nostri vassalli & alla giurisditione di nostra relligione soggetti, che in tale & per tale tenghino & reputino il detto magnifico Giouanni keale a nome vt supra, naue, marinari, & mercantia, senza permettere, che nel detto suo viaggio, o in alcun altro luogo sia molestato, o in qual si voglia manera impedito, anzi tutte le cose sue, & negotij loro siano da voi agiontati & continuamente fauoriti. In cuius rei testimonium Bulla nostra magistralis in cera nigra præsentibus est impressa. Data Melita in conuentu nostro die duo decimo Mensis Iulij. 1582.

FRier Hugo of Loubeux Uerdala, by the grace of God, maister of the holy house, the hospitall of S. Iohn at Ierusalem, and an humble keeper of the poore of Iesus Christ, to all & euery prince ecclesiasticall & secular, archbishops, bishops, Dukes, Marqueses, Barons, Captaines, Uicelords, Maiors, Castellanes, Admerals, and whatsoeuer patrons of small boats, or other greater ships, and gouernors of cities, potentates and magistrates, and to other officers and persons whatsoeuer, of what dignitie, degree, state and condition soeuer they be, dwelling in all places and landes, greeting.

We make it knowne, and in the word of trueth doe witnesse, that in the moneth of May last past, our gallies came on the voyage from Barbarie, where hauing commandement to succor a litle ship of the Christians which was driuen ouer into that part, being arriued vpon this iland on the West part they fould one English ship vnder the charge of the worshipfull John Keele, and Dauid Fillie maister: & our men willing to know what ship it was, they seemed to put themselues in order for their defence, doubting that the said our gallies were of the enemies, and therefore one mariner reuolted contrary to the will of the worshipfull John Keele, and Dauid Fillie maister, and had shot off a piece of artillerie against one of the said gallies, and because she would not strike amaine her saile, according to the will of the said worshipfull John Keele, and Dauid Fillie maister, the said ship was brought backe againe vnto the present port of Malta, according to the order of the reuerend generall of the said gallies: and in being there, maister Inquisitor staid it by authoritie of the holy office, and in that behalfe by the holinesse of our Lord pope Gregory the thirteenth, in the end was licensed to depart on her voyage. They therfore the said worshipfull John Keele, and Dauid Fillie, in the name and behalfe of the worshipfull maister Edward Osburne alderman, and Richard Stoper, English merchants of the noble citie of Londõ, haue humblie besought together with Thomas Wilkinson the purser, pilots, maister and mariners, that we would giue our letters patents, and safe conducts, that they might go and returne, when they shall see opportunitie, with their goods and merchandizes at their pleasure: whereupon the thing seeming vnto vs iust, and that it might be for the profit of our religion, and of these strangers, by the tenor of these presents we haue granted the same to them: yet, with the conditions hereunder written. viz.

That euery time the said merchants of the said ship, or with any other, shall not bring such merchandize as is forbidden, and that by sufficient proofe, and letters testimoniall it appeareth that they are free from the infections of the plague, they may victuall themselues with all necessarie victuals, and traffike with vs, and in this iland and dominion, and afterward may depart, and follow their voyage whither they wil into the Leuant or els where, as all other vessels, and especially of France and other nations do, and sell and buy whatsoeuer merchandize they shall thinke good.

Item, that they may bring powder for cannon and harquebush, saltpeeter, cole of Newcastle, plates of lattin, tinne, steele, yron, common karsies white, course canuas to make saile for the gallies, balles of yron for shot, fine millstones, trees and masts for gallies, litle and others, and in conclusion, hauing seene that they for the time of their abode heere, did behaue themselues like faithfull and catholike Christians, and that his holinesse hath allowed the safeconduct of the great Turke to them granted for feare of the Turkish armie, and other vessels of the enemie, submitting our selues to the pleasures of his holinesse, and especially because our people haue occasion to passe by diuers places so farre off, as England, Flanders, and all parts Westwards, and in other places, we haue vouchsafed to make these our letters patents, as to our faithfull trafficant, so as more surely, and without let they may go and returne when they shall thinke good, with the said ship or with others at their pleasure: we therefore pray all and euery of your subiects effectuously that by what part soeuer of your iurisdiction, vnto the which the said worshipfull John Keele, and Dauid Fillie by name abouesaid, with the ship and mariners of the said principall place or other, shall haue accesse, saile, and passe, and come safely with libertie without any disturbance or other impediment, that you giue leaue, and cause leaue to be giuen that they may passe, stay and returne, and when they please, depart, in such sort, that for our loue and contentation the said worshipfull John Keele, with the ship and mariners haue no let, hinderance, or retention, also that you giue all helpe and fauor, a thing worthie of your iustice, and to vs most acceptable, to be recompenced with equall and greater iustice, when vpon occasion it shalbe required.

And

And finally, we commaund all, and whatſoeuer religious people, and brothers of our religion, of whatſoeuer condition, degree, and ſtate they be, and all our receiuers and procurators, in all and whatſoeuer our priories deputed, and to be deputed by vertue of the holy obedience, and all our people, and all that are ſubiect to the iuriſdiction of our religion, that in, and by the ſame they hold, and repute the ſayd worſhipfull Iohn Keele in the name as aboueſayd, the ſhippe, mariners, and merchandiſe, without let in the ſame their voiage, or in any other place, that they be not moleſted, nor in any wiſe hindered, but that in all their cauſes and buſineſſe they be of you holpen, and furthered continually. In witneſſe whereof, our ſeale of gouerment is impreſſed to theſe preſents in blacke wax. Giuen at Malta in our Conuent, the twelfth of the moneth of July, in the yeare, 1582.

Certayne remembrances of an intended voyage to Braſill, and the Riuer of Plate, by the Edward Cotton, a ſhippe of M. Edward Cottons of Southhampton, which periſhed through extreme negligence neere Rio grande in Ginnie, the 17. of Iuly, 1583.

ARticles of Couenants agreed vpon betweene Edward Cotton eſquier, owner of the good ſhip called the Edward Cotton of Southhampton, and of all the merchandizes in her laden, of the one part, and William Huddie gentleman, captaine of the ſaid ſhip, Iohn Hooper his lieutenant, Iohn Foſter maſter, Hugh Smith Pilot for the whole voiage, and William Cheeſman merchant, on the other part.

1 IT is obſerued and kept the daily order of Common prayer aboord the ſhip, & the company to be called thereunto, at the leaſt once in the day, to be pronounced openly.

2 Item, that they be ready with the firſt faire wind, to ſet ſaile and ſailes in the voiage, and not to put into any port or harbour, but being forcibly conſtrained by weather, or other apparant and vrgent cauſe.

3 Item, that they take in, at or about the Iſles of Cape Verde, to the quantitie of 25. or 30. tunnes of ſalt, to be imploied among other the owners merchãdize, at Santos, & S. Vincents, to his only behoofe, & the reſt of the ſalt, ſo much as ſhall be needed for victuall, and for ſauing of the hides to be kept aboord, & the ſame ſalt to be prouided either at the fiſhermens hands nere the ſaid Iſles for trucke of cõmodities, or els to be taken in at the aforeſaid Iſles, at the diſcretion of the aboue named.

4 Item, vpon the due performance of this voiage, the owner bindeth himſelfe by this deede, to yeeld vnto any ſuch of the company, as ſhall refuſe their ſhares before they depart from the coaſt of England, 20. markes a ſingle ſhare, for the dutie of the whole voyage, making not aboue 75. ſhares ſingle in the whole.

5 Item, the company according as they be appointed by the officers of the ſayd ſhippe aboue named, ſhall at all times be as well readie to doe their painfull indeuor, not onely aboord, but in all labours at the land, according to the direction giuen by the aboue named officers, vpon paine of forfeiture of their ſhares and wages, the ſame to be deuided amongſt the company.

6 Item, that the ſhares be taken at their returne out of all the traine oile, and hides of the ſeales, and of all other commodities gotten by their handie labour, and of the ſalt that ſhall be vended and other commodities, at, or neere the coaſt of Braſill, to allow after 9. li. the tunne freight, whereof one third to goe to the companie.

7 Item, that if any man ſhall practiſe by any deuiſe or deuiſes whatſoeuer, to alter the voyage from the true purpoſe and intent of the owner, viz. to make their firſt port at Santos, and S. Vincents, and there to reuictuall and traffike, and from thence to the riuer of Plate, to make their voyage by the traine, and hide of the ſeales, with ſuch other commodities as are there to be had, according as the owner, with diuers that haue gouernment in the ſaid ſhip, are bound to her highnes by their deeds obligatorie in great ſummes, that all ſuch practiſers vpon due proofe made, ſhall looſe their whole intertainment due by ſhares or otherwiſe for this ſaid voiage to be adiudged by the captaine, his lieutenant, the maſter, Pylot and merchaunt, or three of them at the leaſt, whereof the Captaine to be one.

8 Item, that the pinneſſe be ready at all times to ſerue the merchants turne vpon his demaund, to take in wares and commodities, and to cary and recary to, and from the ſhore, when, and as oft as need ſhall bee, and to giue due attendance at the merchaunt, and merchaunts direction, during the whole voyage.

9 Item, that no head or chiefe officer being ſet downe for ſuch an officer vnder the hand of the owner, at the going to ſea of the ſaid ſhip, ſhall or may be diſplaced from his ſaid place or office, without out great cause, and his misdemeanor to be adiudged by the captaine and his lieutenant, the master, the Pylot, and the merchant, or by the consent of 3. of them at the least.

10 Item, that vpon the returne of the ship to the coast of England, the master and Pilot put not into any porte or harbour, to the Westward of Southhampton, but forced by weather, or such like vrgent cause.

William Huddie. John Foster.
Iohn Hooper. William Cheesman.
Hugh Smith.

A direction as well for the Captaine, and other my friends of the ship, as especially for William Cheesman Merchant, for the voyage to the Riuer of Plate.

AT your comming to the Isle of S. Sebastian, vpon the coast of Brasill, you shall according to your discretions, make sale of such commodities, as you may thinke will be there about well vented, and likewise to buy commodities without making longer stay there then your victuals bee prouiding, but rather to bespeake commodities against your returne from the riuer of Plate, especially of Amber, Sugar, Greene ginger, Cotton Wooll, and some quantitie of the peppers of the countrey there. Also for Parats and Munkies, and the best called Serrabosa. Also you shall barrell vp of the beefe called Petune, two or three barrels, and to lose no good opportunitie, to gather of the Indian figs, and the graines of them to preserue dry, in such quantitie as conueniently may be done: and touching the making of the traine, and preseruing of the hides, I leaue it wholy to the order and the discretion of the chiefe of the company. Also that in any road where the ship shall ride vpon the coast of America, that triall be made with the drags, for the pearle Oisters, and the same being taken, to be opened and searched for pearle in the presence of the Captaine, his lieutenant, the master, the pylot, and merchaunt, or three of them, whereof the Captaine or his lieutenant to be one, and to remaine in the custodie of the Captaine and merchant, vnder two lockes, either of them to haue a key to his owne locke, and that a true inuentorie be deliuered also to the master and pilot of the sayd pearle or other iewels of price gotten in the sayd voyage, to the intent that no partie be defrauded of his due, and that no concealment bee made of any such thing vpon forfeiture, the partie to lose his share and dutie for the voyage that shal so conceale and not reueale it vnto the officers aboue named. Also to doe your best indeuour to try for the best Ore of gold, siluer, or other rich mettals whatsoeuer. Forget not also to bring the kernels & seeds of strange plants with you, the Palmito with his fruite inclosed in him. Serue God, keepe good watch, and stand alwayes vpon your gard.

Edward Cotton.

These things being thus ordered, and the ship of the burden of 260. tunnes, with 83. men of all sortes furnished, and fully appointed for the voyage, began to set saile from Hurst Castle vpon Friday the 20. of May, Anno 1583. and the 17. day of July ensuing, fell with the coast of Guinie, to take in fresh water, where, though meere dissolute negligence, shee perished vpon a sand, with the most part of the men in her, as appeareth by the confession of one that escaped, the substance and tenor whereof is this.

The confession of William Bends, Masters Mate in the Edward Cotton, the 21. of October, An. 1584

HE saith that the 17. day of July, Anno 1583. hauing some lacke of fresh water, they put roome vpon the coast of Guinie, where they were set vpon a sand about 8. leagues from the shore, and this Examinate with 29. more, got into the pinnesse, who arriued in an Island, being desolate of people, and fiue miles in compasse, where they rested 18. dayes through force of weather, not hauing els to eate but grasse. The rest of the company, the ship being splitted in two, and in quarters, got them into one of the after quarters, and by the helpe of raftes came also a shore into another Island, neere to Rio grande, where they all died as he supposeth.

The other 30. in the pinnesse, at the end of 18. dayes, departed that Island, and came to Saint Domingo, Domingo, where comming on shore, they were taken of the Moores, and stripped naked. And they buried one Coxe an old man aliue, notwithstanding his pitifull lamentation and skrikings: the rest hauing Rice and water allowed them, liued there a certaine time. This Examinate was at last sold to a Portingall, with whom he dwelt the space of a quarter of a peere, and in the end a Portingall Caruell comming thither, his master laded the same with Negroes, and he obtained leaue of his master to goe in the same Caruell, and by that meanes arriued at Lisbone, and from thence came into England the 17. of October, 1584. leauing behind him of his company aliue, Richard Hacker, Iohn Baker, Iohn Mathew, and a boy, with two others which were gone beyond S. Domingoes: all which, as he saith, were so sicke and diseased, that he iudgeth them to be long before this time dead.

One Coxe an old English man buried aliue by the Moores of Rio grande in Guinea.

¶ The same in English.

RIght high and mightie king,
May it please your highnesse to vnderstand, that the most high and most mightie maiestie of the Grand Signor hath confirmed certaine articles of priuiledges with the most excellent maiestie of our Queene of England, that her subiects may freely go and come, and traffique by sea and land in the dominions of his most mightie maiestie, as appeareth more at large by the said articles, whereof we haue sent the copy vnto M. Iohn Tipton our Commissarie, to shew the same vnto your highnesse. Against the tenor of which articles, one of our ships which came from Petras which is in Morea, laden with currants and other merchandizes which were bought in those partes, was sunke by 2. gallies of your citie of Argier, and the greatest number of the men thereof were slaine and drowned in the sea, the residue being detained as slaues: An acte very contrary to the meaning of the aforesaid articles and priuiledges, which is the occasion that by these presents we beseech your highnesse very humbly, that since it hath pleased the most mightie maiestie of the Grand Signor to fauour vs with the sayd priuiledges, it would please your highnesse in like maner to assist vs in the same, granting vs by your authoritie, your aide and fauour, according as our hope is, that the poore men so detained in captiuitie, as is aforesaid, may be set at libertie, and returne into their countrey. And likewise that your highnesse would send to giue order to the captaines, masters and people of your gallies, that from henceforth they would suffer vs to vse our traffique with six ships peerely into Turkie vnto the dominions of the Grand Signor in peace and safetie, that they doe not withstand those our said priuiledges, euery one of our foresaid ships carying with them a passeport of his most high and most mightie maiestie to be knowen by. And for that your so singular fauour and curtesie which in so doing we shall receiue, we on our part with all bounden duetie vnto your highnesse, will seeke to honour you in that behalfe, according as the said master Iohn Tipton (to whom we referre our selues touching all other circumstances) shall more at large enforme your highnesse, whose most excellent person and estate, we pray and beseech almightie God to prosper and increase with all felicitie and honour. From the Citie of London the 20. of July, 1584.

An English ship sunke by two gallies of Argier.

At the seruice of your highnesse, for and in the name of our whole company trading into Turkie, I Maior of London, Edward Osborne.

Notes concerning the trade of Argier.

The money of Argier.

THe money that is coined in Argier, is a piece of gold called Asiano, and Doublaes, and two Doublaes make an Asiano, but the Doubla is most vsed, for all things bee sold by Doublaes, which Doubla is fiftie of their Aspers there.

The Asper there is not so good by halfe and more, as that in Constantinople: for the Chekin of gold of the Turkes made at Constantinople, is at Argier worth an hundred and fifty Aspers, and at Constantinople it is but 66. Aspers.

The

The piſtolet and roials of plate are moſt currant there.

The ſaid piſtolet goeth for 150. Aſpers there: and the piece of 4. roials goeth for 40. Aſpers, but oftentimes is ſold for more, as men need them to cary vp into Turkie.

Their Aſianos and doublaes are pieces of courſe gold, worth here but 40. ſhillings the ounce, ſo the ſame is currant in no place of Turkie out of the kingdome of Argier, neither the Aſpers, for that they be leſſe then others be, for they coine them in Argier.

The cuſtome to the king is inward 10. per centum, to the Turke, to be paid of the commoditie it ſelfe, or as it ſhall be rated. The cuſtome.

There is another cuſtome to the Elemine, of one & an halfe per centum, which is to the Juſtice of the Chriſtians: the goods for this cuſtome are rated as they are for the kings cuſtome.

Hauing paid cuſtome inwards, you pay none outwards for any commoditie that you doe lade, more then a reward to the gate keepers.

The waight there is called a Cantare for fine wares, as mettals refined, and ſpices, &c. which is here 120. li. ſubtil. The waights.

Mettall not refined, as lead, iron, and ſuch groſſe wares are ſold by a great Cantare, which is halfe as big againe: ſo it is 180. li. ſubtil of ours here.

The meaſure of corne is by a meaſure called a Curtia, which is about 4. buſhels of our meaſure, and corne is plentifull there and good cheape, except when there happeneth a very dry yeere. The meaſure.

The ſureſt lodging for a Chriſtian there, is in a Jewes houſe: for if he haue any hurt, the Jew and his goods ſhall make it good, ſo the Jew taketh great care of the Chriſtian and his goods that lieth in his houſe, for feare of puniſhment. The ſureſt lodging for a Chriſtian.

An Engliſhman called Thomas Williams, which is M. Iohn Tiptons man, lieth about trade of merchandize in the ſtreete called The Soca of the Iewes.

Notes concerning the trade in Alexandria.

ALexandria in Egypt is a free port, and when a man commeth within the Caſtels, preſently the Ermyn ſends aboord to haue one come and ſpeake with him, to know what goods are aboord: and then he will ſet guards aboord the ſhippe to ſee all the goods diſcharged. And then from the Ermine you goe to the *Bye, onely for that he will inquire newes of you, and ſo from thence to the Conſuls houſe where you lye. The Venecians haue a Conſul themſelues. But all other nations goe to the French nations Conſul, who will giue you a chamber for your ſelues apart, if you will ſo haue it. This is another officer.

The cuſtoms inward of all commodities, are ten in the hundred, and the cuſtome is paid in wares alſo that you buy: for the ſame wares in barter you pay alſo ten in the hundred, at the lading of the wares. But if you ſell for money, you pay no more cuſtome but the ten afore ſaid, and one and a half in the hundred, which is for the cuſtome of the goods you lade for the ſayd money, for more cuſtome you pay not. But for all the money you bring thither, you pay nothing for the cuſtome of the ſame. And if you ſell your wares for money, and with the ſame money buy wares, you pay but two in the hundred for the cuſtome thereof. And if you ſteale any cuſtome, if it bee taken, you pay double cuſtome for that you ſteale. Other ſmall cuſtoms you pay beſides, which may be at two in the hundred: and for Conſullage you pay two in the hundred

The waight of Alexandria is called Pois Forforeine, which is a kintal in that place, which maketh at Marſeils 109. li. of Marſeils waight, at 15. ounces the pound, which is 103. li. of 16. ounces to the li. There is another waight called Pois Gerrin, which is 150. li. of Marſeils waight, by which are ſold all things to eate: but ſpice is ſold by the former waight.

From Alexandria to Cairo, is three dayes iourney, but you muſt take a Janiſſarie with you: and to goe vp thither by water, it is 8. dayes iourney. Roials of Spaine are currant money there, and are the beſt money you can cary. And 4. roials are worth 13. Medins, and 2. Medins, are 3. Aſpers. Piſtolets and crowes of France, and Dollers will goe, but of all Roials are beſt. Cairo three daies iourney from Alexandria by land.

Rice is not permitted to goe out of the land, but is kept for a victuall. But with a preſent to the Bye and Ermine ſome may paſſe.

All ſortes of ſpices be garbled after the bargaine is made, and they be Moores which you deale withall, which be good people and not ill diſpoſed. And after you be ſearched & haue leaue to paſſe, you muſt preſently depart out of the port, and if you doe not, they will ſearch you againe. And you muſt depart in the day, for in the night the caſtles will not ſuffer you to depart. The dutie to the Conſul, is 2. in the hundred, for his aide, and meate and drinke and all. And the port of Alexandria is good when one is within it with good ankers and cables. Siluer is better currant then gold in Alexandria, but both are good.

Commonly

Commonly the Caranans come thither in October from Mecca to Cairo, and from thence to Alexandria, where the merchants be that buy the spices, and there fore the spices are brought mot to Alexandria, where each Christian nation remaineth at the Consuls houses. Yet oftentimes the Christians go vp to Cairo to buy drugs and other commodities there as they see cause. And the commodities there vendible, are all sortes of kersies, but the most part blewes, and of clothes all colours except mingled colours and blacks. Pepper is vsually sold for 24. ducats the quintal, Ginger for 14. ducats. You must take canuas to make bags to put your commoditie in from Alexandria, for there is none. There is also fine flaxe, and good store of Buffe hides.

The voiage made to Tripolis in Barbarie, in the yeere 1584. with a ship called the Iesus, wherein the aduentures and distresses of some Englishmen are truly reported, and other necessarie circumstances obserued. Written by Thomas Sanders.

THis voiage was set foorth by the right worshipfull, sir Edward Osburne knight, chiefe merchant of all the Turkish company, and one master Richard Stapers, the ship being of the burthen of one hundred tunne, called the Iesus, she was builded at Farmne a riuer by Portsmouth. The owners were master Thomas Thomson, Nicholas Carnabie, and Iohn Gilman. The master (vnder God) was one Zacheus Hellier of Black-wall, and his Mate was one Richard Morris of the place: their Pilot was one Anthony Ierado a French man, of the prouince of Massils: the purser was one William Thomson our owners seruant: the merchants factors were Romane Sonnings, a Frenchman, and Richard Skegs seruant vnto the said master Stapers. The owners were bound vnto the merchants by charter partie thereupon, in one thousand markes, that the said ship by Gods permission should goe for Tripolis in Barbarie, that is to say, first from Portesmouth to Newhauen in Normandie, from thence to S. Lukar, otherwise called S. Lucas in Andeluzia, and from thence to Tripolie, which is in the East part of Affrica, & so to returne vnto London.

Man doeth purpose, and God doth dispose.

But here ought euery man to note and consider the workes of our God that (many times) what man doth determine, God doth disappoint. The said master hauing some occasion to go to Farmne, tooke with him the Pilot and the Purser, and returning againe by meanes of a perrie of wind, the boate wherein they were, was drowned, the said master, the purser, and all the company: onely the said Pilot by experience in swimming saued himselfe: these were the beginnings of our sorowes.

A new master chosen.

After which the said masters Mate would not proceed in that voiage, and the owner hearing of this misfortune, and the vnwillingnesse of the masters Mate, did send downe one Richard Deimond, and shipped him for master, who did chuse for his Mate one Andrew Dier, and so the said ship departed on her voiage accordingly: that is to say, about the 16. of October, in An. 1584. she made saile from Portesmouth, and the 18. day then next following she arriued into Newhauen, where our said last master Deimond by a surfeit died. The factors then appointed the said Andrew Dier being then masters Mate, to be their master for that voiage, who did chuse to be his Mates, the two quarter masters of the same ship, to wit, Peter Austine, and Shillabey, and for purser was shipped one Richard Burges. Afterward about the 8. day of Nouember, we made saile foorthward, and by force of weather we were driuen backe againe into Portesmouth, where we refreshed our victuals and other necessaries, and then the wind came faire. About the 29. day then next following, we departed thence, and the first day of December by meanes of a contrary winde, we were driuen to Plimmouth. The 18. day then next following, we made foorthward againe, and by force of weather we were driuen to Falmouth, where we remained vntil the first day of Ianuarie: at which time the wind cõming faire, we departed thence, & about the 20. day of the said moneth we arriued safely at S. Lucas. And about the 9. day of March next following, we made saile from thence, and about the

The new master died.

The Iesus arriued in Tripolis.

18. day of the same moneth we came to Tripolis in Barbarie, where wee were very well interteined by the king of that country, and also of the commons. The commodities of that place are sweet oiles: the king there is a merchant, and the rather (willing to preferre himself before his commons) requested our said factors to traffique with him, and promised them that if they would take his oiles at his owne price, they should pay no maner of custome, and they tooke of him certaine tunnes of oile: and afterward perceiuing that they might haue farre better cheape notwithstanding the custome free, they desired the king to licence them to take the oiles at the pleasure of his commons, for that his price did exceed theirs: whereunto the king would not agree, but was rather contented to abate his price, insomuch that the factors bought all their oiles of the kings custome free, and so laded the same aboord.

In

In the meane time there came to that place one Miles Dickenson, in a shippe of Bristow, who together with our said Factors tooke a house to themselues there. Our French Factor Romaine Sonnings desired to buy a commoditie in the market, and wanting money, desired the said Miles Dickenson to lende him an hundred Chikinoes vntill hee came to his lodging, which hee did, and afterward the same Sonnings mette with Miles Dickenson in the streete, and deliuered him money bound vp in a napkin: saying, master Dickenson there is the money that I borowed of you, and so thanked him for the same: hee doubted nothing lesse then falshoode, which is seldome knowen among marchants, and specially being together in one house, and is the more detestable betweene Christians, they being in Turkie among the heathen. The said Dickenson did not tell the money presently, vntill hee came to his lodging, and then finding nine Chikinoes lacking of his hundred, which was about three pounds, for that euery Chikinoe is worth seuen shillings of English money, he came to the saide Romaine Sonnings and deliuered him his handkerchiefe, and asked him howe many Chikinoes hee had deliuered him? Sonnings answered, an hundred: Dickenson said no: and so they protested and swore on both partes. But in the ende the said Romaine Sonnings did sweare deepely with detestable othes and curses, and prayed God that hee might shewe his workes on him, that other might take ensample thereby, and that hee might be hanged like a dogge, and neuer come into England againe, if hee did not deliuer vnto the saide Dickenson an hundred Chikinoes. And here beholde a notable example of all blasphemers, cursers and swearers, how God rewarded him accordingly: for many times it commeth to passe, that God sheweth his miracles vpon such monstrous blasphemers, to the insample of others, as nowe hereafter you shall here what befell to this Romaine Sonnings.

Another ship of Bristowe came to Tripolis.

There was a man in the said towne a pledge, whose name was Patrone Norado, who the yere before had done this Sonnings some pleasure there. The foresaide Patrone Norado was indebted vnto a Turke of that towne, in the summe of foure hundred and fiftie crownes, for certaine goods sent by him into Christendome in a shippe of his owne, and by his owne brother, and himselfe remained in Tripolis as pledge, vntill his saide brothers returne: and, as the report went there, after his brothers arriual into Christendome, hee came among lewde companie, and lost his brothers said shippe and goods at dice, and neuer returned vnto him againe.

The saide Patrone Norado being vayde of all hope, and finding nowe opportunitie, consulted with the saide Sonnings for to swimme a seabooyde the Ilands, and the shippe being then out of danger, should take him in, (as after was confessed) and so to goe to Tallowne in the prouince of Marsilis, with this Patrone Norado, and there to take in the rest of his lading.

A conspiracie practised by the French Factor, to deceiue a Turkish marchant of 450. crownes.

The shippe being readie the first day of May, and hauing her sailes all abroade, our sayde Factors did take their leaue of the King, who very courteously bidde them farewell, and when they came abooyde, they commaunded the Master and the companie hastely to get out the shippe: the Master answered that it was vnpossible, for that the winde was contrary and ouerblowed. And he required vs vpon forfeiture of our bandes, that wee should doe our indeuoure to get her sooth. Then went wee to warpe out the shippe, and presently the king sent a boate abooyde of vs, with three men in her, commaunding the saide Sonnings to come a shoare: at whose comming, the king demaunded of him custome for the oyles: Sonnings answered him that his highnesse had promised to deliuer them custome free. But notwithstanding the king weighed not his saide promise, and as an infidel that hath not the feare of God before his eyes, nor regarde of his worde, albeit hee was a King, hee caused the saide Sonnings to pay the custome to the vttermost penie. And afterwarde willed him to make haste away, saying, that the Ianizaries would haue the oyle ashoare againe.

These Ianizaries are souldiers there vnder the great Turke, and their power is aboue the Kings. And so the saide Factor departed from the king, and came to the waterside, and called for a boate to come a booyde, and hee brought with him the foresaid Patrone Norado. The companie inquisitiue to know what man that was, Sonnings answered, that he was his countreyman, a passenger: I pray God saide the companie, that wee come not into trouble by this man. Then said Sonnings angerly, what haue you to do with any matters of mine? if any thing chance otherwise then well, I must answere for all.

The beginning of their troubles, and occasion of all their miserie.

Nowe the Turke vnto whome this Patrone Norado was indebted, missing him, (supposed him to bee abooyde of our shippe,) presently went vnto the King, and tolde him that hee thought that his pledge Patrone Norado was abooyde of the English shippe, whereupon the King presently sent a boate abooyde of vs, with three men in her, commaunding the said Sonnings to come a shoare, and not speaking any thing as touching the man, hee saide that hee would come presently in his owne boate, but assoone as they were gone, he willed vs to warpe foorth the shippe, and said that he would see the knaues hanged before hee would goe a shoare. And when the king sawe that hee came not a shoare, but still continued warping away the shippe, he straight commaunded the gunner of the bulwarke next vnto vs, to shoote three shootes without ball. Then we came all to the saide Sonnings, and asked of him what the matter was that we were shot at, he saide that it was the Ianizaries who woulde haue the oyle a shoare againe, and willed vs to make haste away, and after that hee had discharged three shottes without ball, hee commaunded all the gunners in the towne to doe their indeuoure to sinke vs, but the Turkish gunners coulde not once strike vs, wherefore the king sent presently to the Banio: (this Banio is the prison wherein all the captiues lay at night) and promised if that there were any that coulde either sinke vs, or else cause vs to come in againe, he should haue a hundred crownes and his libertie. With that came forth a Spaniard called Sebastian, which had bene an olde seruitour in Flanders, and hee said, that vpon the performance of that promise, hee woulde vndertake either to sinke vs, or to cause vs to come in againe, and thereto hee woulde gage his life, and at the first shotte hee split our rudders head in pieces, and the second shotte he strake vs vnder the water, and the thirde shotte he shotte through our foremaste with a Colouring shotte, and thus hee hauing rent both our rudder and maste, and shotte vs vnder water, we were inforced to goe in againe.

A Spanish captiue that at vs, and made the ship to perish.

This Sebastian for all his diligence herein, had neither his libertie, nor an hundred crownes, as promised by the saide king, but after his seruice done was committed againe to prison, whereby may appeare the regard that a Turke or infidel hath of his word, although he be able to performe it, yea more, though he be a king.

Then our marchants seeing no remedie, they together with fiue of our companie went a shoare, and then they ceased shooting, they shotte vnto vs in the whole, nine and thirtie shoots, without the hurt of any man.

And when our marchants came a shoare, the king commaunded presently that they with the rest of our companie that were with them, should be chained foure and foure, to a hundred waights of yron, and when we came in with the ship, there came presently aboue an hundred Turks about vs, and they searched vs, and stript our very clothes from our backes, and brake open our chests, and made a spoyle of all that we had: and the Christian caitifes likewise that came a boorde of vs, made spoile of our goods, and vsed vs as ill as the Turkes did. And our masters mate hauing a Geneua Bible in his hand, there came the kings chiefe gunner, and tooke it out from him, who shewed me of it, and I hauing the language, went presently to the kings treasurer, and tolde him of it, saying, that sith it was the will of God that wee shoulde fall into their handes, yet that they should graunt vs to vse our consciences to our owne discretion, as they suffered the Spaniards and other nations to vse theirs, and he graunted vs: then I tolde him that the master gunner had taken away a Bible from one of our men: the Treasurer went presently and commaunded him to deliuer vp the Bible againe, which he did: and within a litle after he tooke it from the man againe, and I shewed the Treasourer of it, and presently hee commaunded him to deliuer it againe: saying, thou villaine, wilt thou turne to Christianitie againe? for hee was a Renegado, which is one that first was a Christian, & afterwards becõmeth a Turke, and so hee deliuered me the Bible the second time. And then I hauing it in my hand, the gunner came to mee, and spake these words, saying, thou dogge, I wil haue the booke in despight of thee, and tooke it from me, saying: If thou tell the kings treasurer of it any more, by Mahomet I will bee reuenged of thee. Notwithstanding I went the third time vnto the kiugs Treasurer, and tolde him of it, and he came with me, saying thus vnto the gunner: by the head of the great Turke, if thou take it from him again, thou shalt haue an hundred bastenadoes. And foorthwith he deliuered mee the booke, saying, he had not the value of a pinne of the spoile of the ship, which was the better for him, as hereafter you shall heare: for there was none, neither Christian nor Turke that tooke the value of a penniworth of our goods from vs, but perished both bodie and goods within seuenteene moneths following, as hereafter shall plainly appeare.

A Turke tooke a Geneua Bible for his share of the spoile.

All that had share of the spoile (shortly after) by Gods iudgement died.

Then came the Guardian Basha which is the keeper of the kings captiues, to fetch vs all a shoare, and then I remembring the miserable estate of poore distressed captiues, in the time of their bondage to those infidels, went to mine owne chest, and tooke out thereof a iarre of oyle, and filled a basket full of white Ruske to carie a shoare with mee, but before I came to the Banio, the Turkish boyes had taken away almost all my bread, and the keeper saide, deliuer mee the iarre of oyle, and when thou commest to the Banio thou shalt haue it againe, but I neuer had it of him any more.

But when I came to the Banio, and sawe our marchants and all the rest of our companie in chaines, and we all readie to receiue the same reward, what heart in the world is there so hard, but would would haue pitied our cauſe, hearing or ſeeing the lamentable greeting there was betwixt vs: all this happened the firſt of May, 1584.

And the ſecond day of the ſame moneth, the king with all his counſell ſate in iudgement vpon vs. The firſt that were had forth to be arraigned, were the Factors, and the Maſters, and the king aſked them wherefore they came not a ſhoare when he ſent for them. And Romaine Sonnings anſwered, that though hee were king on ſhoare, and might commaunde there, ſo was he as touching thoſe that were vnder him: and therefore ſaid, if any offence be, the fault is wholy in my ſelfe, and in no other. Then foorthwith the king gaue iudgement, that the ſaid Romaine Sonnings ſhould be hanged ouer the Northeaſt Bulwarke, from whence he conueyed the forenamed Patrone Norado, and then he called for our Maſter Andrew Dier, and vſed fewe words to him, and ſo condemned him to be hanged ouer the walles of the Weſtermoſt bulwarke. The Engliſhmen araigned.

Then fell our other Factor (named Richard Skegs) vpon his knees before the king, and ſaide, I beſeech your highneſſe either to pardon our Maſter, or elſe ſuffer me to die for him, for hee is ignorant of this cauſe. And then the people of that countrey, fauouring the ſaid Richard Skegs, beſought the king to pardon them both. So then the king ſpake theſe wordes: Beholde, for thy ſake, I pardon the Maſter. Then preſently the Turkes ſhouted, and cried, ſaying: Away with the Maſter from the preſence of the king. And then he came into the Banio whereas we were, and tolde vs what had happened, and wee all reioyced at the good happe of maſter Skegs, that hee was ſaued, and our Maſter for his ſake.

But afterward our ioy was turned to double ſorow, for in the meane time the kings minde was altered: for that one of his counſell had aduiſed him, that vnleſſe the Maſter died alſo, by the lawe they coulde not confiſcate the ſhippe nor goods, neither captiue any of the men: whereupon the king ſent for our Maſter againe, and gaue him another iudgement after his pardon for one cauſe, which was that hee ſhould bee hanged. Here all true Chriſtians may ſee what truſt a Chriſtian man may put in an infidels promiſe, who being a King, pardoned a man nowe, as you haue heard, and within an houre after hanged him for the ſame cauſe before a whole multitude: and alſo promiſed our Factors their oules cuſtome free, and at their going away made them pay the vttermoſt penie for the cuſtome thereof. Maſter Dier condemned to be hanged ouer a bulwarke.

And when that Romaine Sonnings ſaw no remedie but that he ſhould die, he proteſted to turne Turke, hoping thereby to haue ſaued his life. Then ſaide the Turke, If thou wilt turne Turke, ſpeake the words that thereunto belong: and he did ſo. Then ſaid they vnto him, Now thou ſhalt die in the faith of a Turke, and ſo hee did, as the Turkes reported that were at his execution. And the forenamed Patrone Norado, whereas before he had libertie and did nothing, hee then was condemned ſlaue perpetuall, except there were paiment made of the foreſaid ſumme of money. A Frenchman turned Turke, in hope of his life, and afterward was hanged.

Then the king condemned all vs, who were in nomber ſixe and twentie, of the which, two were hanged (as you haue heard) and one died the firſt day we came on ſhoare, by the viſitation of Almightie God: and the other three and twentie he condemned ſlaues perpetually vnto the great Turke, and the ſhippe and goods were confiſcated to the vſe of the great Turke: and then wee all fell downe vpon our knees, giuing God thankes for this ſorowfull viſitation, and giuing our ſelues wholy to the Almightie power of God, vnto whome all ſecrets are knowen, that hee of his goodneſſe would vouchſafe to looke vpon vs.

Here may all true Chriſtian hearts ſee the wonderfull workes of God ſhewed vpon ſuch infidels, blaſphemers, whoremaſters, and runnagate Chriſtians, and ſo you ſhall reade in the ende of this booke, of the like vpon the vnfaithfull king and all his children, and of as many as tooke any portion of the ſaid goods.

But firſt to ſhewe our miſerable bondage and ſlauerie, and vnto what ſmall pittance and allowance wee were tied, for euery fiue men had allowance but fiue aſpers of bread in a day, which is but two pence Engliſh: and our lodging was to lye on the bare boords, with a very ſimple cape to couer vs, wee were alſo forceably and moſt violently ſhauen, head and beard, and within three dayes after, I and ſixe more of my fellowes together, with foure ſcore Italians and Spaniards, were ſent foorth in a Galeat to take a Greekiſh Carmoſel, which came into Arabia to ſteale Negroes, and went out of Tripolis vnto that place, which was two hundred and fourtie leagues thence, but we were chained three and three to an oare, and wee rowed naked aboue the girdle, and the Boteſwaine of the Galley walked abaft the maſte, and his Mate afore the maſte, and eche of them a bulls piſſell dried in their handes, and when their diueliſh choller roſe, they would ſtrike the Chriſtians for no cauſe: And they allowed vs but halfe a pounde of bread a man in a day without any other kinde of ſuſtenance, water excepted. And when wee came to the place whereas we ſaw the Carmoſell, we were not ſuffered to haue neither needle, bodkin, knife, Euery fiue men allowed but two pence of bread a day.

or any other instrument about vs, nor at any other time in the night, vpon paine of one hundred bastinadoes: we were then also cruelly manackled in such sort, that we could not put our handes the length of one foot a sunder the one from the other, and euery night they searched our chaines three times, to see if they were fast riueted: Wee continued fight with the Carmosall three houres and then we tooke it, & lost but two of our men in that fight, but there were slaine of the Greekes fiue, and 14. were cruelly hurt, and they that were sound, were presently made slaues, and chained to the oares: and within fifteene dayes after we returned againe into Tripolis, and then we were put to all maner of slauerie. I was put to hewe stones, and other to carie stones, and some to drawe the Cart with earth, and some to make morter, and some to drawe stones, (for at that time the Turkes builded a church:) And thus we were put to all kinde of slauerie that was to be done. And in the time of our being there, the Moores that are the husbandmen of the countrey rebelled against the king, because he would haue constrained them to pay greater tribute then heretofore they had done, so that the souldiours of Tripolis marched forth of the towne to haue fought battell against the Moores for their rebellion, and the king sent with them foure pieces of ordinance, which were drawen by the captiues twentie miles into the countrey after them, and at the sight thereof the Moores fled, and then the captaines returned backe againe. Then I and certaine Christians more, were sent twelue mile into the countrey with a Cart to lode timber, and we returned againe the same day.

Nowe the king had 18. captiues, which three times a weeke went to fetch wood thirtie miles from the towne, and on a time he appointed me for one of the 18. and we departed at eight of the clocke in the night, and vpon the way as wee rode vpon the camels, I demaunded of one of our companie, who did direct vs the way: hee saide, that there was a Moore in our companie which was our guide, and I demaunded of them how Tripolis and the wood bare one off the other: and he said, East Northeast, and West Southwest. And at midnight or neere thereabouts, as I was riding vpon my camel, I fell asleepe, and the guide and all the rest rode away from me, not thinking but I had bene among them. When I awooke, and finding my selfe alone, durst not call nor hallow, for feare least the wilde Moores should heare mee, because they holde this opinion, that in killing a Christian they doe God good seruice: and musing with my selfe what were best for me to doe, if I should goe forth, and the wilde Moores should happe to meete with mee, they would kill mee: and on the other side, if I should returne backe to Tripolis without any wood or companie, I should be most miserablie vsed therefore: of two euils, rather I had to goe forth to the losing of my life, then to turne backe and trust to their mercie, fearing to bee vsed as before I had seene others: for vnderstanding by some of my companie before, how Tripolis and the said wood did lie one off another, by the North starre I went forth at aduenture, and as God would haue it, I came right to the place where they were, euen about an houre before day: there altogether we rested and gaue our camels prouender, and assoone as the day appeared, we rode all into the wood, and I seeing no wood there, but a sticke here and a sticke there, about the bignesse of a mans arme growing in the sand, it caused me to marueile how so many camels should be loden in that plat. The wood was Juniper, we needed no axe nor edge toole to cut it, but pluckt it vp by strength of hands rootes and all, which a man might easily do, and so gathered it together, a little at one place and so at another, & laded our camels, & came home about seuen of the clocke that night following: because I fell lame and my camel was tired, I left my wood in the way.

The Christians sent 3. times a weeke 30. miles to fetch wood.

There was in Tripolis that time a Venetian, whose name was Benedetto Venetiano, and seuenteene captiues more of his companie, which ranne away from Tripolis in a boate, and came in sight of an Island called Malta, which lieth fourtie leagues from Tripolis right North, and being within a mile of the shoare, & very faire weather, one of their companie said, In dispetto de dio adesso venio a pilliar terra, which is as much to say: In the despite of God I shall nowe finde the shoare, and presently there arose a mightie storme, with thunder and raine, and the winde at North, their boate being very smal, so that they were inforced to beare vp roome, & to sheare right afore the winde ouer against the coast of Barbarie from whence they came, and rowing vp and downe the coast, their victuals being spent, the 21. day after their departure they were inforced through the want of food to come ashoare, thinking to haue stolne some sheepe: but the Moores of the countrey very craftily (perceiuing their intent) gathered together a three score horsemen, and hid themselues behinde a sandie hill, and when the Christians were come all a shoare, and past by halfe a mile into the countrey, the Moores rode betwixt them and their boate, and some of them pursued the Christians, and so they were all taken and brought to Tripolis, from whence they had before escaped: and presently the king commaunded that the foresaide Benedetto with one more of his companie should lose their eares, and the rest to be most cruelly beaten, which was presently presently done. This king had a sonne which was a ruler in an Island called Gerbi, whereunto arriued an English ship called the Greene Dragon, of the which was master one M. Blonket, who hauing a very vnhappie boy in that shippe, and vnderstanding that whosoeuer would turne Turke should be well entertained of the kings sonne, this boy did runne a shoare, and voluntarily turned Turke. Shortly after the kings sonne came to Tripolis to visit his father, and seeing our companie, he greatly fancied Richard Burges our purser, and Iames Smith: they were both pong men, therfore he was very desirous to haue them to turne Turkes, but they would not yeeld to his desire, saying, we are your fathers slaues, and as slaues wee will serue him. Then his father the king sent for them, and asked them if they would turne Turke: and they saide: If it please your highnes, Christians we were borne, and so we will remaine, & beseeched the king that they might not be inforced thereunto. The king had there before in his house, a sonne of a yeoman of our Queenes guard, whom the kings sõne had inforced to turne Turke, his name was Iohn Nelson: him the king caused to be brought to these pong men, and then said vnto them: will not you beare this your countreyman company, and be Turke as he is? and they said, that they would not yeeld thereunto during life. But it fell out, that within a moneth after, the kings sonne went home to Gerbi againe, being sixe score miles from Tripolis, and caried our two foresaide pong men with him, which were Richard Burges, and Iames Smith: and after their departure from vs, they sent vs a letter, signifying that there was no violence shewed vnto them as yet, but within three dayes after they were violently vsed, for that the kings sonne demaunded of them againe, if that they would turne Turke? then answered Richard Burges, a Christian I am, and so I will remaine. Then the kings sonne very angerly saide vnto him: by Mahomet thou shalt presently bee made Turke. Then called hee for his men, and commaunded them to make him Turke, and they did so, and circumcised him, and would haue had him speake the wordes that thereunto belonged. But he answered them stoutly that he would not: and although they had put on him the habite of a Turke, yet said he, a Christian I was borne, and so I will remaine, though you force mee to doe otherwise.

The kings sonne had a captiue that was sonne to one of the Queenes maiesties guard, that was forced to turne Turke.

And then he called for the other, and commanded him to be made Turke perforce also: but hee was very strong, for it was so much as eight of the kings sonnes men could doe to holde him, so in the ende they circumcised him, and made him Turke. Now to passe ouer a litle, and so to shewe the maner of our deliuerance out of that miserable captiuitie.

In May aforesaid, shortly after our apprehension, I wrote a letter vnto Englande vnto my father, dwelling in Eauistoke in Deuonshire, signifying vnto him the whole estate of our calamities: and I wrote also to Constantinople to the English Embassadour, both which letters were faithfully deliuered. But when my father had receiued my letter, and vnderstood the trueth of our mishap, and the occasion thereof, and what had happened to the offenders, he certified the right honorable the earle of Bedford therof, who in short space acquainted her highnes with ꝑ whole cause thereof, & her maiestie like a most mercifull princesse, tendring her subiects, presently tooke order for our deliuerance. Wherupon the right worshipful sir Edward Osburne knight, directed his letters with all speede to the English Embassadour in Constantinople, to procure our deliuerie: and he obteined the great Turkes commission, and sent it forthwith to Tripolis, by one master Edward Barton, together with a Iustice of the great Turkes, and one souldiour, and another Turke, and a Greeke which was his interpretour, which could speake besides Greeke, Turkish, Italian, Spanish and English. And when they came to Tripolis, they were well intertained. And the first night they did lie in a captaines house in the towne: all our companie that were in Tripolis, came that night for ioy to master Barton and the other commissioners to see them. Then master Barton said vnto vs, welcome my good countreymen, and louingly intertained vs, and at our departure from him, he gaue vs two shillings, and saide, serue God, for to morrow we I hope you shall be as free as euer you were. We all gaue him thankes and so departed.

The first motion for those Englishmens deliuerie.

The next day in the morning very early, the king hauing intelligence of their comming, sent worde to the keeper; that none of the Englishmen (meaning our companie) shoulde goe to worke. Then hee sent for master Barton and the other commissioners, and demaunded of the saide master Barton his message: the Iustice answered, that the great Turke his Soueraigne had sent them vnto him, signifying that hee was informed that a certaine English shippe called the Iesus, was by him the said king confiscated, about twelue moneths since, and nowe my saide Soueraigne hath here sent his especiall commission by vs vnto you, for the deliuerance of the said ship and goods, and also the free libertie & deliuerance of the Englishmen of the same shippe, whome you haue taken and kept in captiuitie. And further the same Iustice saide, I am authorized by my saide Soueraigne the great Turke to see it done: And therefore I commaunde you by vertue of this commission, presently to make restitution of the premisses or the value thereof, and so did the Justices deliuer vnto the King the great Turkes commission to the effect aforesaide, which commission the King with all obedience receiued: and after the perusing of the same, hee foorthwith commaunded all the English captiues to bee brought before him, and their willed the keeper to strike off all our yrons, which done, the King saide, You Englishmen, for that you do offende the lawes of this place, by the same lawes therefore some of your companie were condemned to die as you knowe, and you to be perpetuall captiues during your liues: notwithstanding, seeing it hath pleased my soueraigne lorde the great Turke to pardon your saide offences, and giue you your freedome and libertie, beholde, here I make deliuery of you to this English Gentleman: so hee deliuered vs all that were there, being thirteene in number, to master Barton, who required also those two yong men which the kings sonne had taken with him. Then the king answered that it was against their lawe to deliuer them, for that they were turned Turkes: and touching the ship and goods, the king saide, that he had solde her, but would make restitution of the value, and as much of the goods as came vnto his handes, and so the King arose and went to dinner, and commaunded a Iewe to goe with master Barton and the other commissioners, to shewe them their lodging, which was a house prouided and appointed them by the saide king. And because I had the Italian and Spanish tongues, by which their most traffique in that countrey is, Master Barton made mee his Cater to buy his victuals for him and his companie, and deliuered mee money needefull for the same. Thus were we set at libertie the 28. day of Aprill, 1585.

The English men released.

The plagues and punishments that happened to the king and his people.

Nowe to returne to the kings plagues and punishments, which Almightie God at his will and pleasure sendeth vpon men in the sight of the worlde, and likewise of the plagues that befell his children and others aforesaid. First when we were made bondmen, being the second day of May 1584. the King had 300. captiues, and before the moneth was expired, there died of them of the plague 150. And whereas there were 26. men of our companie, of whome two were hanged, and one died the same day that we were made bondslaues, that present moneth there died 9. more of our companie of the plague, & other two were forced to turne Turkes as before is rehearsed: and on the 4. day of June next following, the king lost 150. camels, which were taken from him by the wild Moores: and on the 28. day of the said moneth of June, one Geffrey Maltees, a renegado of Malta, ran away to his country, & stole a Brigandine which the king had builded for to take the Christians withal, & caried with him 12. Christians more which were the kings captiues. Afterward about the 10. day of July next following, the king road forth vpon the greatest & fairest mare that might be seen, as white as any swan: he had not ridden 40. paces frō his house, but on a sudden the same mare fell downe vnder him starke dead, & I with 6. more were commanded to burie her skinne, shoes and all, which we did. And about three moneths after our deliuerie, Master Barton, with all the residue of his companie, departed from Tripolie to Zante, in a vessell, called a Settea, of one Marcus Segoorus, who dwelt in Zante, and after our arriuall at Zante, wee remained 15. daies there, aboord our vessell, before wee could haue Platego (that is, leaue to come a shoare) because the plague was in that place, from whence we came: and about three daies after, we came a shoare, thether came another Settea of Marsills bound for Constantinople. Then did Master Barton, and his company, with two more of our company, shippe themselues as passengers in the same Settea, and went to Constantinople. But the other nine of vs that remained in Zante, about three moneths after, shipt our selues in a shippe of the said Marcus Segoorus, which came to Zante, and was bound for England. In which three moneths, the souldiers of Tripolie killed the said king. And then the kings sonne, according to the custome there, went to Constantinople, to surrender vp all his fathers treasure, goods, captiues, and concubines, vnto the Great Turke, and tooke with him our said Purser, Richard Burges, and Iames Smith, and also the other two Englishmen, which he the said kings sonne had inforced to become Turkes, as is aforesaid. And they the said Englishmen, finding now some opportunitie, concluded with the Christian captiues, which were going with them vnto Constantinople, being in number about one hundred and fiftie, to kill the kings sonne, and all the Turkes which were aboord of the Galley, and priuily the said Englishmen conueied vnto the said christian captiues, weapons for that purpose. And when they came into the maine sea, toward Constantinople (vpon the faithfull promise of the said Christian captiues) these foure Englishmen lept suddenly into the Crosia, that is, into the middest of the Galley, where the canon lieth, and with their swordes drawne, did fight against all the foresaid Turkes, and for want of helpe of the saide Christian captiues, who fallie brake their promises, the said Master Blonkets boy was killed, and the saide Iames Smith, and our Purser Richard Burges, and the other Englishman, were taken and bound into chaines, to be hanged at their arriuall in Constantinople: and as the Lordes will was, about two daies after, passing passing through the gulfe of Venice, at an Iſland called Cephalonia, they met with 2. of ỹ Duke of Venice his Gallies, which tooke that Galley, and killed the kings ſonne, and his mother, and all the Turkes that were there, in number, 150. and they ſaued the Chriſtian captiues, and would haue killed the two Engliſhmen, becauſe they were circumciſed, and become Turkes, had not the other Chriſtian captiues excuſed them, ſaying, that they were inforced to be Turkes, by the kings ſonne, & ſhewed the Venetians alſo, how they did enterpriſe at ſea to fight againſt all the Turkes, and that their two fellowes were ſlaine in that fight. Then the Venetians ſaued them, and they with all the reſidue of the ſaid captiues, had their libertie, which were in number, 150. or thereabouts, and the ſaid Gallie, and all the Turkes treaſure, was confiſcated to the vſe of the ſtate of Venice, and from thence our two Engliſhmen trauelled homeward by land, and in this meane time, wee had one more of our companie, which died in Zante, and afterward the other eight ſhipped themſelues at Zante, in a ſhippe of the ſaide Marcus Segoorus, which was bound for England: and before we departed thence, there arriued the Aſſention, and the George Bonauenture of London, in Cephalonia, in a harbour there, called Arrogoſtoria, whoſe marchantes agreed with the marchants of our ſhippe, and ſo laded all the marchandiſe of our ſhippe into the ſaid ſhips of London, who tooke vs eight alſo in as paſſengers, and ſo we came home, and within two moneths after our arriuall at London, our ſaid Purſer Richard Burges, and his fellow, came home alſo, for the which we are bound to praiſe Almightie God, during our liues, & as dutie bindeth vs, to pray for the preſeruation of our moſt gratious Queene, for the great care her Maieſtie had euer vs, her poore ſubiects, in ſeeking and procuring of our deliuerance aforeſaid: and alſo for her honorable priuie Councell, and eſpeciall for the proſperitie and good eſtate of the houſe of the late deceaſed, the right honorable the Earle of Bedford, whoſe honor I muſt confeſſe, moſt diligently at the ſuite of my father now departed, trauelled herein: for the which I reſt continually bounden to his, whoſe ſoule I doubt not, but is already in the heauens in ioy, with the Almightie, vnto which place he vouchſafe to bring vs all, that for our ſinnes ſuffered moſt vile and ſhamefull death vpon the Croſſe, there to liue perpetually world without end, Amen.

Two gallies of Venice tooke the king of Tripolie his galley, and killed the kings ſonne, and all the Turkes in it, and releaſed al the Chriſtians being in number 150.

¶ The same in English.

ELizabeth, by the grace of the most high God, and onely maker of heauen and earth, of England, France, and Ireland Queene, and of the Christian faith, against all the Idolaters and false professors of the name of Christ dwelling among the Christians, most inuincible and puissant defender: to the most valiant and inuincible Prince, Zultan Murad Can, the most mighty Ruler of the kingdome of Musulman, and of the East Empire the onely and highest Monarch aboue all, health, and many happie and fortunate yeeres, with great aboundance of the best things.

Most noble and puissant Emperour, about two yeeres now passed, we wrote vnto your Imperiall Maiestie, that our welbeloued seruant, William Harebrowne, a man of great reputation and honour, might be receaued vnder your high authoritie, for our Ambassadour in Constantinople, and other places, vnder the obedience of your Empire of Musulman: And also that the Englishmen, being our subiects, might exercise entercourse and marchandize in all those Prouinces, no lesse freely then the French, Polonians, Venetians, Germanes, and other your confederats, which trauell through diuerse of the East parts: endeuouring that by mutuall traffike, the East may be ioyned and knit to the West.

Which priuiledges, when as your most puissant Maiestie, by your letters and vnder your dispensation most liberally and fauourably granted to our subiects of England, we could no lesse doe, but in that respect giue you as great thankes, as our heart could conceaue, trusting that it wil come to passe, that this order of traffike, so well ordained, will bring with it selfe most great profits and commodities to both sides, as well to the parties subiect to your Empire, as to the Prouinces of our kingdome. Which thing that it may be done in plaine and effectuall manner, whereas some of our subiects of late at Tripolis in Barbarie, and at Argier, were by the inhabitants of those places (being perhaps ignorant of your pleasure) euill intreated and grieuously vexed, we doe friendly and louingly desire your Imperiall Maiestie, that you will vnderstand their causes by our Ambassadour, and afterward giue commandement to the Lieutenants and Presidents of those prouinces, that our people may henceforth freely, without any violence, or iniurie, traual, and doe their busines in those places.

And we againe with all endeuour, shall studie to performe all those things, which we shall in any wise vnderstand to be acceptable to your Imperiall Maiestie, which God, the onely maker of the world, most best and most great, long keepe in health, and flourishing. Giuen in our pallace at London, the fift day of the moneth of September, in the yeere of Iesus Christ our sauiour, 1584. and of our raigne, the 26.

The commandement obtained of the Grand Signior by her Maiesties Ambassadour, for the quiet passing of her subiects to, & from his dominions, sent in Anno 1584. to the Viceroys of Argier, Tunes, and Tripolis in Barbarie.

TO our Beglerbege of Argier. We certifie thee, by this our commandement, that the right honorable, William Harebrowne, Ambassadour to the Queenes Maiestie of England, hath signified vnto vs, that the shippes of that Countrey, in their comming, and returning to and from our Empire, ane the one part of the seas haue the Spaniards, Florentines, Sicilians, and Malteses, on the other part our Countries, committed to your charge, which aboueseyd Christians, will not quietly suffer their egresse and regresse into, and out of our dominions, but doe take, and make the men captiues, and forfeit the ships, and goods, as the last yeere the Malteses did one, which they tooke at Gerbi, and to that ende, doe continually lie in waight for them, to their destruction, whereupon they are constrained to stand to their defense, at any such times as they might meete with them: wherefore considering by this meanes they must stand vpon their gard, when they shall see any galley a farre off, whereby if meeting with any of your gallies, and not knowing them, in their defense they doe shoote at them, and yet after, when they do certainely knowe them, doe not shoote any more, but require to passe peaceably on their voyage, which you would denie, saying, the peace is broken, for that you haue shotte at vs, and so doe make prise of them, contrarye to our priuiledges, and agaynst reason: for the preuenting of

of which inconuenience, the ſayd Ambaſſadour hath required this our commandement. We therefore command thee, that vpon ſight hereof, thou doe not permit any ſuch matter in no ſort whatſoeuer, but ſuffer the ſaid Engliſh men to paſſe in peace, according to the tenor of our commandement giuen, without any diſturbance, or let, by any meanes vpon the way, although that meeting with thy gallies, and not knowing them a farre off, they taking them for enemies, ſhould ſhoote at them, yet ſhall you not ſuffer them to hurt them therefore, but quietly to paſſe. Wherefore looke thou, that they may haue right, according to our priuiledge giuen them, and finding any that abſenteth himſelfe, and will not obey this our commaundement, preſently certifie vs to our porch, that we may giue order for his puniſhment: and with reuerence giue faithfull credite to this our commandement, which hauing read, thou ſhalt againe returne it vnto them that preſent it. From our pallace in Conſtantinople, the prime of June, 1584.

The Turkes letter to the King of Tripolis in Barbarie, commanding the reſtitution of an Engliſh ſhippe, called the Ieſus, with the men, and goods, ſent from Conſtantinople, by Mahomet Beg, a Iuſtice of the Great Turkes, and an Engliſh Gentleman, called Maſter Edward Barton. Anno 1584.

HOnorable, and worthy Paſſa Romadan Beglerbeg, moſt wiſe and prudent iudge of the Weſt Tripolis, we wiſh the ende of all thy enterprizes happie, and proſperous. By theſe our Highnes letters, we certifie thee, that the right Honorable, William Harebrowne, Ambaſſadour in our moſt famous porche, for the moſt excellent Queenes Maieſtie of England, in perſon, and by letters hath certified our Highnes, that a certaine ſhippe, with all her furniture, and artillerie, worth two thouſand duckets, arriuing in the port of Tripolis, and diſcharged of her lading, and marchandize, paid our cuſtome according to order, and againe, the marchants laded their ſhippe with oile, which by conſtraint they were inforced to buy of you, and hauing anſwered in like manner the cuſtome for the ſame, determined to depart: a Frenchman aſſiſtant to the Marchant, vnknowen to the Engliſhmen, caried away with him another Frenchman, indebted to a certaine Hooze in foure hundred duckets, and by force cauſed the Engliſhmen, and ſhippe to depart: who neither ſuſpecting fraude, nor deceite, hoiſed ſailes. In the meane time, this man, whoſe debter the Frenchman had ſtollen away, went to the Paſſa with the ſupplication, by whoſe meanes, and force of the Caſtle, the Engliſhmen were conſtrained to returne into the port, where the Frenchman, author of the euill, with the Maſter of the ſhippe an Engliſhman, innocent of the crime, were hanged, and fiue and twentie Engliſhmen caſt into priſon, of whom thorough famine, thirſt, and ſtinke of the priſon, eleuen died, and the reſt like to die. Further, it was ſignified to our Maieſtie alſo, that the marchandiſe and other goods, with the ſhippe, were worth 7600. duckets: which things if they be ſo, this is our commandement, which was granted and giuen by our Maieſtie, that the Engliſh ſhippe, and all the marchandize, and whatſoeuer els taken away, be wholy reſtored, and that the Engliſhmen be let goe free, and ſuffered to returne into their Countrey. Wherefore when this our commandement ſhall come vnto thee, we ſtraightly command, that the foreſaid buſines be diligently looked vnto, and diſcharged. And if it be ſo, that a Frenchman, and no Engliſhman, hath done this craft, and wickednes vnknowen to the Engliſhmen, and as author of the wickednes is puniſhed, and that the Engliſhmen committed nothing againſt the peace and league, or their articles: alſo if they paid cuſtome according to order, it is againſt law, cuſtome of Countries, and their priuiledge, to hinder or hurt them. Neither is it meete, their ſhippe, marchandize, and all their goods taken, ſhould be withholden. Wee will therefore, that the Engliſh ſhippe, marchandize, and all other their goods, without exception, be reſtored to the Engliſhmen: alſo that the men be let goe free, and if they will, let none hinder them, to returne peaceably into their Countrey: doe not commit, that they another time complaine of this matter, and howe this buſines is diſpatched, certifie vs at our moſt famous porche. Dated in the Citie of Conſtantinople, in the 992. yeere of Mahomet, and in the ende of the moneth of October, and the yeere of Ieſus, 1584.

A letter of Maister William Harebrowne, the Englisth Ambassadour, Ligier in Constantinople to the Bassa Romadan, the Beglerbeg of Tripolis in Barbarie, for the restoring of an Englisth shippe, called the Iesus, with the goods, and men, detained as slaues, 1585.

Molto magnifico Signor,

Noi hastato significato per diuerse lettere di quanto ha passato circa di vna naue nostra chiamata Iesus, sopra il quale in agiuto di Ricciardo Skegs, vno de gli nostri mercanti di esse gia morto, venima vn certo Francese per sopra cargo chiamato Romano Sonings, il quale per non esser ben portato secondo che douena, volendo importar seco vn altro Francese debitore a certi vostri senza pagarceni, per giustitia era appiccato col patron Inglese Andre Dier, che come simplice credendo al detto Francese senza auedercene de la sua ria malitia non retornana, quando da vostra magnifica Signoria gli era mandato. La morte del detto tristo Francese approuamo como cosa ben fatta. Ma al contrario, done lei ha confiscato la detta naue e mercantia en essa, & fatto sciaui li mornari, como cosa molto contraria a li priuilegij dal Gran Signor quattro anni passati concessi, & da noi confirmati di parte de la Serenissima Magesta d'Ingilterra nostra patrona, e molto contraria a la liga del detto Gran Signor, il quale essendo dal sopra detto a pieno informato, noi a conceduto il suo regale mandamento di restitutione, la qual mandiamo a vostra magnifica Signoria col presente portator E-

Edoardo Barton & Mahumed Beg.

doardo Bartõ, nostro Secretario, & Mahumed Beg, drogueman di sua porta excelsa, con altre lettere del excellentissimo Vizir, & inuictissimo capitan di mar: chiedendo, tanto di parte del Gran Signor, quanto di sua Serenissima Magesta di V.S.M. che gli huomini, oglij, naue col formimento, danari, & tutti altri beni qualconque da lei, & per vestro ordine da gli nostri tolti siano resi à questo mio Secretario liberamente senza empacho alcuno, como il Gran Signor da sua gratia noi ha concesso, specialmente per esser detti oglij comprati per ordine di sua Serenissima Magesta, per prouision della Corte sua. Il qual non facendo, protestiamo per questa nostra al incontra di esso tutti futuri danni che puono succedere per questa cagione, como authore di quelli, contrario à la Santa liga giurata da li duoi Rei, patroni nostri, como per li priuilegij, che lei mostrerà il nostro, consta: per obseruatione de gli quali noi stiamo di fermo en questa excelsa Porta. Et cosi responderete nel altro mondo al solo Iddio, & quà al Gran Signor questo massimo peccato commesso da lei al incontra di tanti poueracchi, chi per questa crudelta sono in parte morti, en parte retenuti da esso en duro cattiuerio. Al contrario, piacendo lei euitar questo incommodo & restarcene en gratia del Signor Iddio, & li nostri patroni, amichevolmente, (como conuien à par vostro di mostrarsi prudente gouernatore, & fidel seruitor al patron) adimpirete questa nostra giustissima domanda, per poter resultarui à grand honore & commodo per la tratta di marchantia, che faronno a laduenire li nostri in quella vostra prouincia. Li quali generalmente, tanto quelli, como tutti altri che nel mar riscõtrarete, siano secondo che manda il Grand Signor, de vostra Signoria magnifica amichevolmente recolti & riceuuti: Et noi non mancheremo al debito di ottimo amico en qualconche occurrenza vostra, piacendo lei amicitia nostra, como desideramo. Il Signor Iddio lei conceda (adimpiendo questa nostra giusta rechiesta, per canar noi di pui futura fatica in questo negocio, & lei di disgratia) ogni vera felicità, & supremo honore. Data in palazzo nostro che fu da Capamat appresso Pera di 15. di Genaro, 1585.

Il Ambassiatore de la Magesta Serenissima d'Ingilterra, amico de vostra Signoria magnifica, piacendo lei.

¶ The same in Englisth.

RIght honorable Lord, it hath bene signified vnto vs by diuerse letters, what hath fallen out concerning a certaine shippe of ours, called the Iesus, into which, for the helpe of Richard Skegs, one of our marchants in the same, now deceased, there was admitted a certaine Frenchman, called Romane Sonnings, which for his ill behauiour, according to his deserts, seeking to carry away with him another Frenchman, which was indebted to certaine of your people, without paying his creditors, was hanged by sentence of iustice, together with Andrew Dier, the Maister of the said shp, who simply, and without fraude, giuing credite to the saide Frenchman, without any knowledge of his euill fact, did not returne when he was commanded, by your honorable Lordshippe. The death of the saide lewde Frenchman, wee approoue as a thing well done, but contrariwise, whereas your Lordeshippe hath confiscated, the sayde shippe, with the goods therein, and hath made slaues of the Marriners, as a thing altogether contrarie to the priuiledges of the Grand Signior, granted foure yeeres since, and confirmed by vs on the behalfe of

of the moſt excellent, the Queenes Maieſtie of England, our Maiſtres, and altogether contrarie to the league of the ſaide Grand Signior, who being fully informed of the aforeſayd cauſe, hath granted vnto vs his royall commaundement of reſtitution, which wee ſende vnto your honorable Lordſhippe, by the preſent bearer Edward Barton, our Secretarie, and Mahomet Beg, one of the Juſtices of his ſtately Court, with other letters of the moſt excellent Admirall, and moſt valiant Captaine of the Sea, requiring your honorable Lordſhip, as well on the behalfe of the Grand Signior, as of the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie my Maiſtres, that the men, oiles, ſhippe, furniture, money, and all other goods what ſoeuer, by your Lordſhippe, and your order taken from our men, be reſtored vnto this my Secretarie freely, without delay, as the Grand Signior of his goodnes hath granted vnto vs, eſpecially in regard that the ſame oiles were bought by the commandement of our Queenes moſt excellent Maieſty, for the prouiſion of her Court. Which if you perfoyme not, we proteſt by theſe our letters againſt you, that you are the cauſe of all the inconueniences which may enſue vpon this occaſion, as the author thereof, contrary to the holy league ſworne by both our Princes, as by the priuiledges, which this our ſeruant will ſhewe you, may appeare. For the ſeeing of which league performed, wee remaine here as Ligier in this ſtately Court. And by this meanes you ſhal anſwere in another world, vnto God aloue, and in this world vnto the Grand Signior, for this hainous ſinne committed by you againſt ſo many poore ſoules, which by this your crueltie are in part dead, and in part detained by you in moſt miſerable captiuitie. Contrariwiſe, if it ſhall pleaſe you to auoid this miſchiefe, and to remaine in the fauour of Almightie God, and of our Princes, you ſhall friendly fulfill this our iuſt demand (as it behoueth you to ſhew your ſelfe a prudent Gouernour, and faithful ſeruant vnto your Lord,) & the ſame may turne to your great honour, and profite, by the trade of marchandize, which our men in time to come, may vſe in that gouernment of yours: which generally, as well thoſe poore men, as all others, which you ſhall meete at the ſea, ought to be according to the commandement of the Grand Signior, friendly entertained and receiued of your honorable Lordſhip, and we will not faile in the duties of a ſpeciall friend, whenſoeuer you ſhall haue occaſion to vſe vs, as we deſire. Almightie God grant vnto your Lordſhip, (in the fulfilling of this our iuſt requeſt, whereby we may be deliuered from further trouble in this matter, and your ſelfe from further diſpleaſure) all true felicitie, and increaſe of honour. Giuen in our Pallace from Capamat in Pera, the 15. of Januarie, 1585.

Arabi-

Ambaſſadors allowances.

The amballadour of the Emperor is allowed one thouſand Aſpers the day.

The amballadour of the French king heretofore enioied the like: but of late yeeres by meanes of diſpleaſure conceiued by Mahumet then Uicetoy, it was reduced to ſixe crownes the day, beſides the prouiſion of his Eſquier of ſtable.

The amballadour of Poland, and for the ſtate of Uenice are not Lodgers as theſe two aboue ſaid. The ſaid Polack is allowed twelue French crownes the day, during his abode, which may be for a moneth. Uery ſeldome doe the ſtate of Uenice ſend any amballadour otherwiſe, then enforced of vrgent neceſſitie: but in ſtead thereof keepe there their Agent, preſident ouer their merchants, of the termed a Bailie, who hath none allowance of the Grand Signior, although his port & ſtate is in maner as magnificall as ỹ other aforeſaid amballadors. The Spaniſh amballadour was equall with others in Janiſſaries: but for ſo much as he would not according to cuſtome follow the liſt of other amballadors in making preſent to the Grand Signor, he had none allowance. His abode there was 3. yeeres, at the end wherof hauing concluded a truce for 6. yeers, taking place from his firſt comming in Nouember laſt paſt, 158. he was neuer admitted to ỹ preſence of the Grand ſignior.

A letter written from the Queenes maieſtie, to Yeladin el Kubar king of Cambaia, by Iohn Newberie. In February. An. 1583.

Elizabeth by the grace of God, &c. To the moſt inuincible, and moſt mightie prince, lord Yeladin el Kubar king of Cambaya. Inuincible Emperor, &c. The great affection which our ſubiects haue, to viſit the moſt diſtant places of the world, not without good will and intention to introduce the trade of merchandize of all nations whatſoeuer they can, by which meanes the mutuall and friendly traffique of merchandize on both ſides may come, is the cauſe that the bearer of this letter Iohn Newberie, ioinely with thoſe that bee in his company, with a curteous and honeſt boldnes, doe repaire to the borders and countries of your Empire, we doubt not but that your imperiall maieſtie through your roiall grace, will fauourably and friendly accept him. And that you would doe it the rather for our ſake, to make vs greatly beholding to your maieſtie. We ſhould more earneſtly, & with more words require it if we did thinke it needfull. But by the ſingular report that is of your imperiall maieſties humanitie in theſe vttermoſt partes of the world, we are greatly eaſed of that burden, and therefore we vſe fewer & leſſe words: onely we requeſt that becauſe they are our ſubiects, they may be honeſtly intreated and receiued. And that in reſpect of the hard iourney which they haue vndertaken to places ſo far diſtant, it would pleaſe your maieſtie with ſome libertie and ſecuritie of voiage to gratifie it, with ſuch priuiledges as to you ſhall ſeeme good: which curteſie if your imperiall maieſtie ſhall to our ſubiects at our requeſts performe, we, according to our roiall honour will recompence the ſame with as many deſerts as we can. And herewith we bid your Imperiall maieſtie to farewell.

A letter written by her maieſtie to the king of China, in Febr. 1583.

Elizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England. Moſt Imperiall and inuincible prince, our honeſt ſubiect Iohn Newberie the bringer hereof, who with our fauor hath taken in hand the voiage which now he purſueth to the partes & countries of your empire, not truſting vpon any other ground then vpon the fauor of your imperiall clemencie and humanitie, is mooued to vndertake a thing of ſo much difficultie, being perſwaded that he hauing entred into ſo many perils, your maieſtie wil not diſlike the ſame, eſpecially, if it may appeare that it be not damageable vnto your roiall maieſtie, & that to your people it will bring ſome profit: of both which things he not doubting, with more willing mind hath prepared himſelfe for his deſtinated voiage vnto vs wel liked of. For by this means we perceiue, that ỹ profit which by ỹ mutual trade on both ſides, all the princes our neighbors in the Weſt do receiue, your imperial maieſtie and thoſe that be ſubiect vnder your dominion, to their great ioy & benefit ſhal haue the ſame, which conſiſteth in the tranſporting outward of ſuch things wherof we haue plentie, and in bringing in ſuch things as we ſtand in need of. It cannot otherwiſe be, but that ſeeing we are borne and made to haue neede one of another, & that we are bound to aide one another, but that your impetial maieſtie wil wel like of it, & by your ſubiects with like indeuor wil be accepted. For the increaſe whereof, if your imperiall maieſtie ſhall adde the ſecuritie of paſſage, with other priuiledges moſt neceſſary to vſe the trade with your men, your maieſtie ſhal do that which belongeth to a moſt honorable & liberal prince, and deſerue ſo much of vs, as by no continuance or length of time ſhall be forgotten. Which requeſt of ours, we do moſt inſtantly deſire to be taken in good part of your maieſtie, and ſo great a benefit towards vs and our men, we ſhall endeuor by diligence to requite when time ſhall ſerue thereunto. The God almightie long preſerue your imperiall maieſtie.

A Letter of M. Iohn Newberie, written from Aleppo, to M. Richard Hakluit of Oxford, the 28. of May, An. 1583.

RIght welbeloued, and my assured good friend, I heartily commend me vnto you, hoping of your good health, &c. After we set saile from Graueſende, which was the 13. day of Febʒuary last, we remained vpon our coast vntill the 11. day of March, and that day we set saile from Falmouth, and neuer ankered till we arriued in the road of Tripolis in Syria, which was the last day of Apʒill last past, where we staped 14. dayes: and the 20. of this pʒesent we came hither to Aleppo, and with Gods helpe, within fiue oʒ sixe dayes goe from hence towards the Indies. Since my comming to Tripolis I haue made very earnest inquirie both there and here, foʒ the booke of Cosmographie of Abilfada Ismael, but by no means can heare of it. Some say that possibly it may be had in Persia, but notwithstanding I will not faile to make inquirie foʒ it, both in Babylon, and in Balsara, and if I can finde it in any of these places, I will send it you from thence. The letter which you deliuered me foʒ to copy out, that came from master Thomas Steuens in Goa, as also the note you gaue me of Francis Fernandes the Portingall, I bʒought thence with me among other writings vnawares, the which I haue sent you here inclosed. Here is great pʒeparation foʒ the warres in Persia, and from hence is gone the Bassha of a towne called Rahemet, and shortly after goeth the Bassha of Tripolis, and the Bassha of Damasco, but they haue not all with them about 6000. men from hence, and they goe to a towne called Asmerome, which is three dayes iourney from Trapezunde, where they shall meete with diuers Capitains and souldiours that come from Constantinople and other places thereabout, which goe altogether into Persia. This yeere many men goe into the warres, and so hath there euery yeere since the beginning thereof, which is eight yeeres oʒ thereabouts, but very few of them returne againe. Notwithstanding, they get of the Persians, and make castles and holds in their countrey. I pʒay you make my heartie commendations to M. Peter Guillame, and M. Philip Iones, and to M. Walter Warner, and to all the rest of our friends. Master Fitch hath him heartily commended vnto you: and so I commit you to the tuition of the almightie, who blesse and keepe you, and send vs a ioyfull meeting. From Aleppo, the 28. of May, 1583.

Abilfada Ismael his Cosmographie.

Your louing friend to command in all that I may,
Iohn Newberie.

Another letter of the sayd M. Newbery, written to Master Leonard Poore of London, from Aleppo.

RIght welbeloued, my very heartie commendations vnto you, and the rest of my friends remembʒed. My last I sent you was of the 25. of Febʒuary last, from Deele out of the Downes, after which time with contrary windes we remained vpon our owne coast, vntill the 11. day of March, and then wee set saile from Falmouth, and the 13. day the winde came contrary with a very great stoʒme, which continued 8. dayes, and in this great stoʒme we had some of our goods wet, but God be thanked no great hurt done. After which time we sailed with a faire wind within the Streicts, and so remained at sea, and ankered at no place vntill our comming into the road of Tripolis in Syria, which was the last day of Apʒill. This was a very good passage, God make vs thankfull foʒ it. The 14. day of this pʒesent we came from Tripolis, and the 20. day arriued here in Aleppo, and with the helpe of God to moʒow oʒ next day, we begin our voiage towards Babylon and Balsara, and so into India. Our good friend master Barret hath him commended to you, who hath sent you in the Emanuell a ball of nutmegs foʒ the small trifles you sent him, which I hope long since you haue receiued. Also he hath by his letter certified you in what oʒder he sold those things, whereof I can say nothing, because I haue not seene the accompt thereof, neither haue demanded it: foʒ euer since our comming hither he hath bene still busie about the dispatch of the ship, and our voiage, and I likewise in buying of things here to cary to Balsara, and the Indies. We haue bought in currall foʒ 1200. and odde ducats, and amber foʒ 400. ducats, and some sope and bʒoken glasse, with all other small trifles, all which things I hope will serue very well in those places that we shall goe vnto. All the rest of the account of the Barke Reinolds, was sent home in the Emanuell, which was 3600. ducats, which is 200. pound moʒe then it was rated. Foʒ master Stapers rated it but at 1100. li. and it is 1300. pound, so that our part is 200. pound.

March. 11.

The last of Apʒill.

Besides

Beſides ſuch profit as it ſhall pleaſe God to ſend thereof: wherefore you ſhall doe very well to ſpeake to maſter Stapers for the account. And if you would content your ſelfe to trauell for three or foure yeres, I would wiſh you to come hither or go to Cair, if any go thither. For we doubt not if you had remained there but three or foure moneths, you would like ſo well of the place, that I thinke you would not deſire to returne againe in 3. or 4. yeeres. And, if it ſhould be my chance to remaine in any place out of England, I would chooſe this before all other that I know. My reaſon is, the place is healthfull and pleaſant, and the gaines very good, and no doubt the profit wil be hereafter better, things being vſed in good order: for there ſhould come in euery ſhip the fourth part of her Cargeſon in money, which would helpe to put away our commodities at a very good price. Alſo to haue two very good ſhips to come together, would doe very well: for in ſo doing, the danger of the voyage might be accounted as little as from London to Antwerpe. Maſter Giles Porter and maſter Edmund Porter, went from Tripolis in a ſmall barke to Iaffa, the ſame day that we came from thence, which was the 14. day of this preſent, ſo that no doubt but long ſince they are in Jeruſalem: God ſend them and vs ſafe returne. At this inſtant I haue receiued the account of M. Barret, and the reſt of the rings, with two & twentie ducats, two medins in ready monie. So there is nothing remaining in his hands but a few bookes, and with Thomas Boſtocke I left certaine ſmall trifles, which I pray you demaund. And ſo once againe with my heartie commendations I commit you to the tuition of the almightie, who alwayes preſerue vs. From Aleppo the 29. of May, 1583.

Yours aſſured, Iohn Newbery.

Another letter of M. Newberie to the aforeſayd M. Poore, written from Babylon.

MY laſt I ſent you, was the 29. of May laſt paſt from Aleppo, by George Gill the purſer of the Tiger, which the laſt day of the ſame moneth came from thence, and arriued at Feluge the 19. day of June, which Feluge is one dayes iourney from hence. Notwithſtanding ſome of our company came not hither till the laſt day of the laſt moneth, which was for want of Camels to cary our goods: for at this time of the yeere, by reaſon of the great heate that is here, Camels are very ſkant to be gotten. And ſince our comming hither wee haue found very ſmall ſales, but diuers ſay that in the Winter our commodities will be very well ſold, I pray God their words may prooue true. I thinke cloth, kerſies and tinne, haue neuer bene here at ſo lowe prices as they are now. Notwithſtanding, if I had here ſo much readie money as the commodities are woorth, I would not doubt to make a very good profite of this voiage hither, and to Balſara, and ſo by Gods helpe there will be reaſonable profite made of the voiage. But with halfe money and halfe commoditie, may be bought here the beſt ſort of ſpices, and other commodities that are brought from the Indies, & without money there is here at this inſtant ſmall good to be done. With Gods helpe two daies hence, I mind to go from hence to Balſara, & from thence of force I muſt goe to Ormuz for want of a man that ſpeaketh the Indian tongue. At my being in Aleppo I hired two Naſtaranies, and one of them hath bene twiſe in the Indies, and hath the language very well, but he is a very lewd felow, and therefore I will not take him with me.

The beſt ſort of ſpices at Babylon. Balſara. Ormus.

Here follow the prices of Wares as they are woorth here at this inſtant.

The prices of ſpices at Babylon.

Cloues and Maces, the bateman, 5. ducats.
Cynamom 6. ducats, and few to be gotten.
Nutmegs, the bateman, 45. medins, and 40. medins maketh a ducat.
Ginger, 40. medins.
Pepper, 75. medins.
Turbeta, the bateman, 50. medins.
Neel the churle, 70. ducats, and a churle is 27. rottils and a halfe of Aleppo.
Silke, much better then that which commeth from Perſia, 11. ducats and a halfe the bateman, and euery bateman here maketh 7. pound and 5. ounces Engliſh waight. From Babylon the 20. day of July, 1583.

Yours, Iohn Newbery.

Master Newberie his letter from Ormuz, to Iohn Eldred and William Shals at Balsara.

RIght welbeloued and my assured good friends, I hartely commend me vnto you, hoping of your good healths, &c. To certifie you of my voiage, after I departed fro you, time will not permit: but the 4. of this present we arriued here, and the tenth day I with the rest were committed to prison, and about the middle of the next moneth, the Capitaine will send vs all in his ship for Goa. The cause why we are taken, as they say, is, for that I brought letters from Don Anthonio. But the trueth is, Michael Stropene was the only cause, vpon letters that his brother wrote him from Aleppo. God knoweth how we shall be delt withall in Goa, and therefore if you can procure our masters to send the king of Spaine his letters for our releasement, you should doe vs great good: for they cannot with iustice put vs to death. It may be that they will cut our throtes, or keepe vs long in prison: Gods will be done. All those commodities that I brought hither, had bene very well sold, if this trouble had not chanced. You shall doe well to send with all speed a messenger by land from Balsara to Aleppo, for to certifie of this mischance, although it cost 30. or 40. crownes, for that we may be the sooner released, and I shall be the better able to profite this againe which is now like to be lost: I pray you make my heartie commendations, &c. From out of the prison in Ormuz, this 21. of September, 1583.

His second Letter to the foresaid Iohn Eldred, and William Shals.

THe barke of the Iewes is arriued here two dayes past, by whom I knowe you did write, but your letters are not like to come to my handes. This bringer hath shewed me here very great curtesie, wherefore I pray you shew him what fauour you may. About the middle of the next moneth I thinke wee shall depart from hence, God be our guide. I thinke Andrew will goe by land to Aleppo, wherein I pray you further him what you may: but if he should not goe, then I pray you dispatch away a messenger with as much speed as possibly you may. I can say no more, but doe for me as you would I should doe for you in the like cause, and so with my very heartie commendations, &c. From out of the prison in Ormuz, this 24. day of September, 1583.

Yours, Iohn Newberie.

His third letter to Master Leonard Poore, written from Goa.

MY last I sent you was from Ormuz, whereby I certified you what had happened there vnto me, and the rest of my company, which was, that foure dayes after our arriuall there, wee were all committed to prison, except one Italian which came with me from Aleppo, whom the Capitaine neuer examined, onely he maunded what countreyman he was, but I make account Michael Stropene, who accused vs, had informed the Capitaine of him. The first day wee arriued there, this Stropene accused vs that we were spies sent from Don Antonio, besides diuers other lies: notwithstanding if we had bene of any other countrey then of England, wee might freely haue traded with them. And although we be Englishmen, I know no reason to the contrary, but that we may trade hither and thither as well as other nations, for all nations doe, and may come freely to Ormuz, as Frenchmen, Flemmings, Almains, Hungarians, Italians, Greekes, Armenians, Nastaranies, Turkes and Moores, Iewes and Gentiles, Persians, Moscouites, and there is no nation that they seeke for to trouble, except ours: wherefore it were contrary to all iustice and reason that they should suffer all nations to trade with them, and to forbid vs. But now I haue as great libertie as any other nation, except it be to goe out of the countrey, which thing as yet I desire not. But I thinke hereafter, and before it be long, if I shall be desirous to goe from hence, that they will not denie me licence. Before we might be suffered to come out of prison, I was forced to put in suerties for 2000. pardoas, not to depart from hence without licence of the Uiceroy: otherwise except this, we haue as much libertie as any other nation, for I haue our goods again, and haue taken an house in the chiefest streete in the towne, called the Rue drette, where we sell our goods.

Michael Stropene an Italian accused our men to be spies.

Then

There were two causes which moued the capteine of Ormuz to imprison vs, & afterwards to send vs hither. The first was, because Michael Stropene had accused vs of many matters, which were most false. And the second was for that M. Drake at his being at Maluco, caused two pieces of his ordinance to be shot at a gallion of the kinges of Portingall, as they say. But of these things I did not know at Ormuz: and in the shippe that we were sent in came the chiefest iustice of Ormuz, who was called Aueador generall of that place, he had beene there three yeeres, so that now his time was expired: which Aueador is a great friend to the capteine in Ormuz, who, certeine dayes after our comming from thence, sent for me into his chamber, and there began to demand of me many thinges, to the which I answered: and amongst the rest, he said, that M. Drake was sent out of England with many shippes, and came to Maluco, and there laded cloues, and finding a gallion there of the kinges of Portingall, he caused two pieces of his greatest ordinance to be shot at the same: and so perceiuing that this did greatlie grieue them, I asked, if they would be reuenged of me for that which M. Drake had done to the which he answered, No: although his meaning was to the contrary. Two causes of our more imprisonment at Ormuz.

He said moreouer, that the cause why the capteine of Ormuz did send me for Goa, was, for that the Viceroy would vnderstand of me, what newes there was of Don Antonio, and whether he were in England, yea or no, and that it might be all for the best that I was sent hither, the which I trust in God will so fall out, although contrary to his expectation: for had it not pleased God to put into the mindes of the archbishop and other two Padres or Iesuits of S. Pauls college to stand our friends, we might haue rotted in prison. The archbishop is a very good man, who hath two yong men to his seruants, the one of them was borne at Hamborough, and is called Bernard Borgers: and the other was borne at Enchusen, whose name is John Lenscot, who did vs great pleasure: for by them the archbishop was many times put in minde of vs. And the two good fathers of S. Paul, who trauelled very much for vs, the one of thē is called Padre Marke, who was borne in Bruges in Flanders, & the other was borne in Wilshire in England, and is called ‖ Padre Thomas Steuens. ‖ This is he whose letters to his father from Goa are before put downe, and he was sometimes of New college in Oxford.

Also I chanced to finde heere a yong man, who was borne in Antwerpe, but the most part of his bringing vp hath beene in London, his name is Francis de Rea, and with him it was my hap to be acquainted in Aleppo, who also hath done me great pleasure heere.

In the prison at Ormuz we remained many dayes, also we lay a long time at sea comming hither, and forthwith at our arriuall heere were caried to prison, and the next day after were sent for before the Aueador, who is the chiefest iustice, to be examined: and when we were examined, he presently sent vs backe againe to prison.

And after our being heere in prison thirteene dayes, James Storie went into the monasterie of S. Paul, where he remaineth, and is made one of the companie, which life he liketh very well. James Storie their painter.

And vpon S. Thomas day (which was two and twentie dayes after our arriuall here) I came out of prison, and the next day after came out Ralph Fitch and William Bets. They arriued at Goa the 20 of November 1583.

If these troubles had not chanced, I had beene in possibilitie to haue made as good a voyage as euer any man made with so much money. Many of our things I haue solde very well, both heere and at Ormuz in prison, notwithstanding the capteine willed me (if I would) to sell what I could before we imbarked: and so with officers I went diuers times out of the castle in the morning, and solde things, and at night returned againe to the prison, and all thinges that I solde they did write, and at our imbarking from thence, the capteine gaue order that I should deliuer all my mony with the goods into the hands of the scriuano, or purser of the ship, which I did, and the scriuano made a remembrance, which he left there with the capteine, that my selfe and the rest with money & goods he should deliuer into the hands of the Aueador generall of India: but at our arriuall heere, the Aueador would neither meddle with goods nor money, for that he could not proue any thing against vs: wherefore the goods remained in the ship nine or ten dayes after our arriual, and then, for that the ship was to saile from hence, the scriuano sent the goods on shore, and heere they remained a day and a night, and no body to receiue them. In the end they suffered this bringer to receiue them, who came with me from Ormuz, and put them into an house which he had hyred for me, where they remained foure or fiue dayes. But afterward when they should deliuer the money, it was concluded by the iustice, that both the money and goods should be deliuered into the positors hands, where they remained fourteene dayes after my comming out of prison. At my being in Aleppo, I bought a fountaine of siluer and gilt, sixe kniues, sixe spoones, and one forke trimmed with coral for fiue and twentie chekins, which the capteine of Ormuz did take, and payed for the same twentie pardaos, which is one hundred larines, and was worth there or heere one hundred chekins. Also he had fiue emrauds set in golde, which were worth fiue hundred or sixe hundred crownes, and payed

for

for the same an hundred pardas. Also he had nineteene & a halfe pikes of cloth, which cost in London twentie shillings the pike, and was worth nine or tenne crownes the pike, and he payed for the same twelue larines a pike. Also he had two pieces of greene Kersies, which were worth foure and twentie pardas the piece, and payed for them sixteene pardas a piece: besides diuers other trifles, that the officers and others had in the like order, and some for nothing at all. But the cause of all this was Michael Stropene, which came to Ormuz not worth a penie, and now hath thirtie or fortie thousand crownes, and he grieueth that any other stranger should trade thither but himselfe. But that shall not skill, for I trust in God to goe both thither and hither, and to buy and sell as freelie as he or any other. Heere is verie great good to be done in diuers of our commodities, and in like maner there is great profit to be made with commodities of this countrey, to be carried to Aleppo.

It were long for me to write, and tedious for you to read of all things that haue passed since my parting from you. But for all the troubles that haue chanced since mine arriuall in Ormuz, this bringer is able to certifie you. I minde to stay heere: wherefore if you will write vnto me, you may send your letters to some friend at Lisbone, and from thence by the shippes they may be conueyed hither. Let the direction of your letters be either in Portiguise or Spanish, whereby they may come the better to my hands. From Goa this 20 day of Januarie. 1584.

A Letter written from Goa by Ralph Fitch to M. Leonard Poore aboue said.

LOuing friend Maister Poore, &c. Since my departure from Aleppo, I haue not written vnto you any letters, by reason that at Babylon I was sicke of the flixe, and being sicke, I went from thence for Balsara, which was twelue dayes iourney downe the riuer Tygris, where we had extreame hotte weather, which was good for my disease, ill fare, and woorse lodging, by reason our boate was pestered with people. In eight dayes, that which I did eate was very small, so that if we had staied two dayes longer vpon the water, I thinke I had died: but comming to Balsara, presently I mended, I thanke God. There we staied foureteene dayes, and then we imbarked our selues for Ormuz, where we arriued the fifth of September, and were put in prison the ninth of the same moneth, where we continued vntill the eleuenth of October, and then were shipt for this citie of Goa in the capteines shippe, with an hundred and foureteene horses, and about two hundred men: and passing by Diu and Chaul, where we went on land to water the twentith of Nouember, we arriued at Goa the nine and twentith of the said moneth, where for our better intertainment we were presently put into a fayre strong prison, where we continued vntill the two & twentith of December. It was the will of God that we found there two Padres, the one an Englishman, the other a Flemming. The English mans name is Padre Thomas Stephens, the others Padre Marco, of the order of S. Paul. These did sue for vs vnto the Viceroy and other officers, and stood vs in as much stead, as our liues and goods were worth: for if they had not stucke to vs, if we had escaped with our liues, yet we had had long imprisonment.

October 11.

Diu. Chaul.

After foureteene dayes imprisonment they offered vs, if we could put in sureties for two thousand duckets, we should goe abroad in the towne: which when we could not doe, the said Padres found sureties for vs, that we should not depart the countrey without the licence of the Viceroy. It doth spite the Italians to see vs abroad: and many maruell at our deliuery. The painter is in the cloister of Saint Paul, and is of their order, and liketh there verie well. While we were in prison, both at Ormuz and heere, there was a great deale of our goods pilfered and lost, and we haue beene at great charges in gifts and otherwise, so that a great deale of our goodes is consumed. There is much of our thinges which will sell very well, and some we shall get nothing for. I hope in God that at the returne of the Viceroy, which is gone to Chaul and to Diu, they say, to winne a castle of the Moores, whose returne is thought will be about Easter, that we shall get our libertie, and our sureties discharged. Then I thinke it will be our best way, either one or both to returne, because our troubles haue beene so great, and so much of our goods spoyled and lost. But if it please God that I come into England, by Gods helpe, I will returne hither againe. It is a braue and pleasant countrey, and very fruitfull. The Summer is almost all the yeere long, but the chiefest at Christmas.

The Italians our great enemies for the trade in the East.

The day and the night are all of one length, very litle difference, and maruellous great store of fruits. For all our great troubles, yet are we fat and well liking, for victualles are heere plen-

ti

tie and good cheape. And here I will passe ouer to certifie you of strange things, vntill our meeting, for it would be too long to write thereof. And thus I commit you to God, who euer preserue you and vs all. From Goa in the East Indies the 25 of Januarie 1584.

Yours to command
RALPH FITCH.

The money and measures of Babylon, Balsara, and the Indies, with the customes, &c. written from Aleppo in Syria, Anno 1584: by William Barret.

BABYLON:

The weight, measure, and money currant there, and the customes of merchandize.

A Mana of Babylon is of Aleppo 1 roue 5 ounces and a halfe: and 68 manaes & three seuenth parts, make a quintall of Aleppo, which is 494 li. 8 ounces of London: and 100 manaes is a quintall of Babylon, which maketh in Aleppo 146 roues, and of London 722 li. and so much is the said quintall: but the merchants accord is by so much the mana, & in the said place they bate the tare in all sorts of commodities, according to the order of Aleppo touching the tare.

The measure of Babylon is greater then that of Aleppo 21 in ȳ 100. For bringing 100 pikes of any measurable ware from Aleppo thither, there is found but 82 pikes in Babylon, so that the 100 pikes of Babylon is of Aleppo 121 pikes, very litle lesse.

The currant mony of Babylō are Sayes, which Say is 5 medines as in Aleppo, & 40 medines being 8 sayes maketh a ducket currant, and 47 medines passeth in value as the ducket of golde of Uenice, and the dollers of the best sort are worth 33 medines. The rials of plate are sold by the 100 drams at prise, according as they be in request: but among the merchants they bargen by the 100 metrals, which are 150 drams of Aleppo, which 150 drams are 135 single rials of plate: but in the mint or castle, they take them by the hundred drams, which is 90 rials of plate, & those of the mint giue 5 medines lesse in ech 100 drāmes then they are worth to be solde among the merchants, and make paiment at the the terme of 40 dayes in Sayes.

The custome in Babylon as well inward as outward, is in this maner: Small wares at 6 per 100. Coral, and amber at 5 and a halfe per 100. Uenice cloth, English cloth, Kersies, Mokayres, Chamblets, Silks, Ueluets, Damasks, Sattins, & such like at 5 per 100: and they rate the goods without reason as they lust themselues. The Toaka, Boabo, and other exactions 6 medines per bale, all which they pay presently in readie mony, according to the custome and vse of the Emperor.

To the Ermin of the mint the ordinarie vse is to giue 30 Sayes in curtesie, otherwise he would by authoritie of his office come aboord, and for despight make such search in the barke, that he would turne all things topsie turuie.

BALSARA:

The weight, measure, and money in the citie of Balsara.

A Mana of Balsara answereth 5 roues 2 oūces & a halfe of Aleppo weight, and 19 manaes & one fourth part of Balsara answereth the quintall of Aleppo, which is 494 roues, 8 ounces English, & 20 manaes is the quintall of Balsara, which is 104 Alepine, and of London 514 li. 8 oūces, and so much is the sayd quintall, but the merchants bargen at so much the mana or wollene (which is all one) and they abate the tare in euery mana, as the sort of spice is, and the order taken therfore in that place.

The measure of Balsara is called a pike, which is iust as the measure of Babylon, to say, 100 pikes of Balsara maketh of Aleppo 121 pikes, vt supra in the rate of Babylon.

The currant mony of Balsara is as followeth. There is a sort of slulles of copper called Estiui, whereof 12 make a mamedine, which is the value of one medine Aleppine, the said mamedine is of siluer, hauing the Moresco stampe on both sides, and two of these make a danine, which is 2 medines Aleppine.

The said danine is of siluer, hauing the Turkesco stampe on both sides, and 2 & a halfe of these make a say, which is iust in value as the say of Aleppo.

The said say is of the similitude and stampe of Aleppo, being (as appeeres) 60 Estiues. Also one say and 20 estiues make a larine, which is of Aleppo money 6 medines and a halfe.

The said larine is a strange piece of money, not being round as all other currant money in Christiamitie, Christianitie, but is a small rod of siluer of the greatnesse of the penne of a goose fether, wherwith we vse to write, and in length about one eight part thereof, which is wrested, so that the two ends meet at the iust halfe part, and in the head thereof is a stampe Turkesco, and these be the best currant money in all the Indias, and 6 of these larines make a ducket, which is 40 medines or eight sayes of Aleppo.

The ducket of golde is worth there 7 larines, and one danine, which is of Aleppo money 48 medines and a halfe.

The Venetian money is worth larines 88 per 100 meticals, which is 150 drams of Aleppo, vt supra.

The rials of plate are worth 88 larines by the 100 meticals, and albeit among the merchants they sell by the 100 meticals, yet in the mint or castle, they sell by the 100 drams, hauing there lesse then the worth 5 medines in eth hundred drams, and haue their paiment made in 40 dayes, made them in sayes or larines.

The custome of the said places, aswell in ward as out ward, are alike of all sorts of goods, to say 6 by the 100, and Toafo, Boabo, & seruian medines 6 by the bale inward and outward, to say, 3 inward, and as much out ward: but who so leaueth his goods in the custome house payeth nothing, where otherwise at the taking thereof away, he should pay 3 med. by the bale, and of the said goods there is no other duty to pay, and this commeth to passe when the customers esteeme the goods too high. For in such a case they may be driuen to take so much commoditie as the custome amounteth to, and not to pay them in mony, for such is the order from the Grand Signior.

Hauing paid the custome, it behoueth to haue a quittance or cocket sealed and firmed with the customers hand, in confirmation of the dispatch and cleering, and before departure thence, to cause the said customer to cause search to be made, to the end that at the voyages returne there be no cauillation made, as it often times happeneth.

Note that 100 meticals of Balsara weigh 17 ounces and a halfe sottile Venetian, and of Aleppo drams 150, vt supra.

The fraighe of the barks from Ormuz to Balsara, I would say from Balsara to Ormuz, they pay according to the greatnesse thereof. To say, for cariage of 10 cares 180 larines, those of 15 cares 270 larines, those of 20 cares 360 larines, those of 30 cares 540 larines. Note that a care is 4 quintals of Balsara. They pay also to the pilot of the barke for his owne cariage one chare, and to all the rest of the mariners amongst them 3 cares fraight, which is in the whole 4 cares, and paying the abouesaid rules and fraighes, they are at no charges of victualles with them, but it is requisite that the same be declared in the charter partie, with the condition that they lade not aboue one rotilo more thē the fraight, vnder paines that finding more in Ormuz, it is forfeit, and besides that to pay the fraight of that which they haue laden.

And in this accord, it behoueth to deale warilie, and in the presence of the Ermin or some other honest man (whereof there are but few) for they are the worst people in all Arabia. And this diligence must be put in execution, to the end the barks may not be ouerladen, because they are to passe many sands betwixt Balsara and Ormuz.

ORMVZ:

The weight, measure, and money currant in the kingdome of Ormuz.

SPices and drugs they weigh by the bar, and of euery sort of goods the weight is different. To say, of some drugs 5 quintals, and 3 erubi or roues, and other some 4 quintals 25 rotiloes, and yet both is called a barre, which barre, aswell great as litle, is 20 fraseli, and euery fraseli is 10 manaes, and euery mana 23 chiansi, and euery chiansi 10 meticals and a halfe. Note that euery quintall maketh 4 erubi or roues, and euery roue 32 rotiloes, & euery rotilo 16 ounces, and euery ounce 7 meticals, so that the quintall commeth to be 128 rotiloes, which is Aleppine 26 rotiloes and one third part, which is 132 li. English weight. And contrariwise the quintall of Aleppo (which is 494 rotiloes 8 ounces English) maketh 477 rotiloes and a halfe of Ormuz, which is 3 quintals 2 roues, 29 rotiloes and a halfe.

What a rotilo is.

Note that there are bars of diuers weights, vt supra, of which they bargen simplie, according the sort of commoditie, but if they bargen of the great barre, the same is 7 quintals and 24 rotiloes, which is 958 li. 9 ounces of London weight, and of Aleppo 193 rotiloes and a halfe.

Touching the money of Ormuz, they bargen in merchandize at so many leches by the barre, which lech is 100 Asarie, and maketh larines 190 & a halfe, which maketh pardaes 38, & larines one halfe, at larines 5 by the pardao. One asarie is sadines 10, and euery sadine is 100 danarie.

The larine is worth 5 sadines and one fourth part, so that the sadine is worth of Aleppo money

1 medine

1 medine & 1 fourth part, & the larine as in Balsara worth of Aleppo money 6 medines & a halfe.

The pardao is 5 larines of Balsara.

There is also stamped in Ormuz a seraphine of golde, which is licle and round, and is worth 24 sardines, which maketh 30 medines of Aleppo.

The Venetian mony is worth in Ormuz larines 88 per 100: meticals, and the rials are worth larines 86 lesse one saedine, which is euery thousand meticals, 382 asures: but those that will not sell them, vse to melt them, and make them so many larines in the king of Ormus his mint, whereby they cleere 2 per 100, and somewhat more: and this they do because neither Venetian money nor rials runne as currant in Ormuz, per aduise.

The measure of Ormuz is of 2 sorts, the one called Codo which increaseth vpon the measure of Aleppo 3 per 100, for bringing 100 pikes of any measurable wares from Aleppo to Ormuz, it is found in Ormuz to be be 103 Codes. Also these measures of Ormuz increase vpon those of Balsara and Babylon 25 and two third parts per 100: for bringing 100 pikes of any measurable wares from Balsara or Babylon, there is found in Ormuz 125 codes and two third parts.

The other measure is called a vare, which was sent from the king of Portingall to the India, by which they sell things of small value, which measure is of 5 palmes or spannes, and is one code and two third parts, so that buying 100 codes of any measurable wares, and returning to measure it by the said vare, there is found but 60 vares, contrariwise 100 vares maketh 166 codes & 2 third parts.

Note that all such ships as lade horses in Ormuz for Goa or any other place of India, lading 10 horses or vpwards, in what places soeuer the said horses be taken a shore in the India, the merchandize which is to be discharged out of that shippe wherein the said horses come, are bound to pay no custome at all, but if they lade one horse lesse then tenne, then the goods are bound to pay the whole custome. And this law was made by Don Emanuel king of Portingall, but it is to be diligentlie foreseene, whether all those horses laden be bound to pay the king his custome: for many times by the king of Portingall his commandement there is fauor shewed to the king of Cochin his brother of Armes, so that his horses that come in the same shippe, are not to answere custome: as for example, If there were foure horses laden in one shippe, all which were to pay custome to the king, and one other of the king of Cochins which were not to pay any custome, the same causeth all the merchandize of that shippe to be subiect to pay custome, per aduise. But if they lade ten horses vpon purpose to pay the king his custome in Goa, and in the voyage any of them should die in that case, if they bring the taile of the dead horse to the custome in Goa, then the merchandize is free from all custome, because they were laden in Ormuz to pay custome in Goa. Moreouer if the horses should die before the middest of the voyage, they pay no custome at all, and if they die in the mids of the voyage, then they pay halfe custome, but if any horse die after the mid voyage, they pay custome no lesse then if they arriue safe. Notwithstanding, the merchandize (whether the said horses die before or in the mid voyage or after the mid voyage) are free from all custome.

The custome of Ormuz is a leuen in the 100, to say, 10 for the king, and one for the arming of the foists: but for small wares as glasses, and looking glasses of all sorts, and such like, made for apparell, pay no custome. But cloth of Wooll, Karsies, Mokayres, Chamlets, and all sortes of Silke, Saffron, and such like, pay custome, being esteemed reasonable.

There is also another custome, which they call caida, which is, that one bringing his goods into Ormus, with purpose to send the same further into India, the same is bound to pay 3 by the 100, but none other are bound to pay this custome, except the Armenians, Moores, and Iewes: for the Portingalles and Venetians pay nothing thereof.

Note that in Ormuz they abate tare of all sorts of commodities, by an order obserued of custome.

The fraight from Ormuz to Chaull, Goa, and Cochin, as followeth: Mokayres larines 6 per table of 60 pikes. Aquariosa 8 larines by ordinarie chist, reasings 10 larines by chist, which is a quintall of roues 128. Ruuia of Chalangi larines 10 per quintall, glasses larines 8 per chist, of 4 foot & a halfe, glasses in great chist 14 & 15 larines by chist. Small wares larines 12 by chist of 5 foote. Tamari for Malchat sadines 2 and a halfe, and 3 by the fardle. Tamarie for Diu and Chaull 4 sadines, and 4 and a halfe by bale. Other drugges and things which come from Persia, pay according to the greatnesse of the bales.

The fraight mentioned, they pay as appereth, whē they ship ꝑ said goods in ships where horses go: otherwise, not hauing horses, they pay somewhat lesse, because of the custome which they are to pay.

The vse of the India shippes is, that the patrons therof are not at any charge neither with any passenger nor yet with any mariner in the shippe, but that euery one at the beginning of the voyage do furnish to maintein his owne table (if he will eat) & for drinke they haue a great iarre of water, which is garded with great custodie.

GOA:

GOA:

The weight, measure, and money currant in Goa.

THe quintall of Goa is 5 manaes, and 8 larines, & the mana is 24 rotiloes, so that the quintall of Goa is 128 rot. and euery rot. is 16 ounces, which is of Venice weight 1 li. and a halfe, so that the quintall of Goa is 192 li. sotile Venice, which is 26 rotiloes 8 ounces Aleppine, and of London weight 132 li. English, as the weight of Ormuz.

All the merchandize, spices and drugs, are solde by this quintall, except some drugs, as lignũ de China, Galanga, & others, wherof they bargen at so much per candill, aduertising that there be two sorts of candill, one of 16 manaes, the other of 20 manaes, that of 16 manaes commeth to be iust 3 quintals, and that of 20 manaes, 3 quintals, 3 roues. Note that 4 roues make a quintall, and the roue is 32 rotiloes, as in Ormuz.

Note that 4 roues make a quintall.

There is also another weight, which they call Marco, which is 8 ounces or one halfe a rotilo of Goa, & 9 ounces of Venice sotile: with this they weigh amber, coyall, muske, ambracan, ciuet, and other fine wares.

There is also another sort of weight called Mangiallino, which is 5 graines of Venice weight, & therewith they weigh diamonds, and other iewels.

Note that in Goa they vse not to abate any tare of any goods, except of sacks or wraps, & therfore it requireth great aduisement in buying of the goods, especially in the muske of Tartaria which commeth by way of China, in bladders, and so weigh it without any tare rebating.

Muske of Tartaria by the way of China.

The measure of Goa is called a code, which increaseth vpon the measure of Babylon & Balsora after the rate of 17 & one eight part by the 100, so that bringing 100 pikes of any measurable ware from thence to Goa, it is found 117 pikes 7 eight parts, and bringing 100 codes from Ormuz to Goa there is found but 93 codes and one fourth part.

There is also the vare in Goa, which is iust as the vare of Ormuz, and therewith they measure onely things that are of small value.

For the mony of Goa, there is a kinde of mony made of lead and tin mingled, being thicke and round, and stamped on the one side with the spheare or map of the world, and on the other side two arrowes, & 5 rounds: and this kinde of mony is called Basaruchi, and 15 of these make a vintena of naughtie mony, and 5 vintons make a tanga, and 4 vintenas make a tanga of base mony: so the tanga of base mony is 60 basaruchies, and the tanga of good mony 75 basaruchs, and 5 tangas make a seraphine of golde, which in merchandize is worth 5 tangaes good mony: but if one would change them into basaruchies, he may haue 5 tangaes, and 16 basaruchies, which ouerplus they call cerafagio, & when they bargen of the pardap of golde, each pardap is ment to be 6 tangaes good mony, but in merchandize they vse not to demand pardayes of golde in Goa, except it be for iewels and horses, for all the rest they take of seraphins of siluer peraduiso.

The rials of plate, I say the riall of 8 is worth per custome and commandement of the king of Portingall, 400 reyes, and euery rey is one barasuce and one fourth part, which makes tangaes 6, and 53 barasuchies as their iust value, but for that the said rials are excellent siluer and currant in diuers places of the India, and chiefly in Malacha, when the ships are to depart at their due times (called Monsons) euery one to haue the said rials pay more then they are worth, and the ouerplus, as is aboue said they call serafagio. And first they giue the iust value of the 100 rials, of 8 at 5 tangaes 50 basaruchies a piece, which done, they giue seraphins 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 15, vntill 22 by the 100, according as they are in request.

The duccket of golde is worth 9 tangaes and a halfe good money, and yet not stable in price, for that when the ships depart from Goa to Cochin they pay them at 9 tangaes and 3 fourth parts, and 10 tangaes, and that is the most that they are worth.

The larines are worth by iust value basaruchies 93 and 3 fourth parts, and 4 larines make 1 seraphine of siluer, which is 5 tangaes of good money, and these also haue serafagion of 6, 7, 8, 10, vntill 16, by the 100, for when the shippers depart for the North, to say, for Chaul, Diu, Cambaia, or Bassani, all carry of the same, because it is money more currant then any other.

There is also a sort of seraphins of golde of the stampe of Ormuz, whereof there are but few in Goa, but being there, they are worth 5 larines & somewhat more, according as they are in request.

There is also another litle sort of money, round, hauing on the one side a crosse, and on the other side a crowne, which is worth one halfe a tanga of good money, and another of the same stampe lesse then that which they call Imitiuo de buona moneda, which is worth 18 basaruches 3 fourth parts a piece.

Note that if a man bargaine in marchandize, it behoueth to demaunde tangaes of good mony: for for by nominating tanges onely, is vnderstoode to be base money of 60. basaruches, which wanteth of the good money vt supra.

The custome of Goa is 8. in the 100. inward, and as much outwarde, and the goods are estemed iustly rather to the marchants aduantage then the kings. The custome they paye in this order. Comming with a shippe from Ormuz to Goa without horses, they pay 8. in the 100. whether they sell part or all, but if they would carie of the saide marchandise to any other place, they pay none other custome, except others buy it and carie it fourth of the countrey, and then they pay 8. in the 100. And if one hauing payd the custome should sell to another with composition to passe it fourth as for his proper account to saue the custome, this may not be, because the seller is put to his oth, whether he sende the goods for his owne accompt, or for the accompt of any others, that haue bought the same, and being found to the contrary, they pay custome as aboue saide. And in this order the marchants pay of all the goods which come from any part of the Indies. But if they come from Ormuz to Goa with horses, they are not subiect to pay any custome inward, notwithstanding if they send all or any part therof for any other place, or returne it to Ormuz, they pay the custome outward, although they could not sell.

They vse also in Goa amongst the cõmon sort, to bargaine for coales, wood, lime & such like, at so many braganines, accounting 24. basaruches for one braganine, albeit there is no such money stamped. The custome of the Portingals, is, that any Moore or Gentile, of what cõdition or state soeuer he be, may not depart from Goa to go within the land, without licence of certaine deputies deputed for that office, who (if they be Moores or Gentiles) doe set a seale vpon the arme, hauing therein the armes of Portingal, to be knowen of the porters of the citie, whether they haue the said licence or no.

COCHIN.

The waight, measure, and money, currant in Cochin.

ALl the marchandise which they sell or buy within the said citie, they bargaine for it at so many serafines per quintal, which is 128. rotilos of iust waight with the quintal & Rotilo of Goa, and Ormuz: aduertising ỹ there are diuers sorts of barres according to the sorts of cõmodities, and in traficquing they reason at so much the barre. Note that there are barres of 3. quintals & 3. quintals and a halfe, and 4. quintals. They abate a vsed tare of all marchandise, according to the sort of goods, and order taken for the same.

The measure of Goa, and Cochin are all one.

The money of Cochin are all the same sorts which are currant in Goa, but the ducat of golde value is 10. tanges of good money.

The custome of Cochin as well inward, as outward for all strangers, is 8. in the hundred, but those that haue bene maried 4. yeers in the countrey pay but 4. in the hundred per aduiso.

MALACHA.

The waight, measure, and money of Malaca.

FOr the marchandise bought and solde in the citie, they reason at so much the barre, which barre is of diuers sorts, great and small, according to the ancient custome of the said citie, and diuersitie of the goods. But for the cloues they bargaine at so much the barre, which barre is 3. quintals 2. roues, and 10. rotilos. As I haue aboue said, all kind of drugs haue their sorts of barres limited. Note that euery quintal is 4. roues, and euery roue 32. rotilos, which is 128. rotilos the quintal, the which answereth to Aleppo 95. rotilos, and to London 472. li. per quintal.

The measures of Malaca are as the measures of Goa. In Malaca they abate tare according to their distinction and agreement, for that there is no iust tare limitted.

For the money of Malaca, the least money currant is of tinne stamped with the armes of Portingall, and 12. of these make a Chazza.

The Chazza is also of tinne with the said armes, and 2. of these make a challaine.

The Challaine is of tinne with the said armes, and 40. of these make a Tanga of Goa good money, but not stamped in Malaca.

There is also a sort of siluer money which they call Patachynes, and is worth 6. tanges of good money, which is 360. reyes, and is stamped with two letters, S. T. which is S. Thomas on the one side, and the armes of Portingall on the other side.

There is also a kinde of money called cruzados stamped with the armes of Portingal, and is worth 6. tanges good money, the larines are euery 9. of them worth 2. cruzados, which is 12. tanges good money, and these larines be of those which are stamped in Balsara, and Ormuz.

The ryals of 8. they call Pardaos de Reales, and are worth 7. tanges of good money.

The custome of Malaca is 10. in the 100. as well inwarde as outwarde, and those which pay the custome inwards, if in case they send the same goods for eny other place within terme of a yere and a day, pay no custome for the same.

The times or ſeaſonable windes called monſons, where-in the ſhips depart from place to place in the Eaſt Indies.

NOte that the citie of Goa, is the principall place of all the Oriental India, & the winter there beginneth the 15. of May with very great raine, & ſo continueth till the 1. of Auguſt, ſo that during that ſpace, no ſhip can paſſe ouer þ bar of Goa, becauſe through the cõtinual ſhoures of raine all the ſands ioyne together neere vnto a mountaine called Oghane, & all theſe ſands being ioyned together, runne into the ſhoales of the barre and port of Goa, and can haue no other iſſue, but to remaine in that port, and therefore is ſhut vp vntil the firſt of Auguſt, but at the 10. of Auguſt it openeth by reaſon of the raine which ceaſeth, and the ſea doeth then ſcoure the ſands away againe.

The monson from Goa to the Northward, to say, for Chaul, Diu, Cambaia, Daman, Bassani, and other places.

The shippes depart betwixt the tenth and 24. of August, for the Northwarde places abouesaide, and to these places they may saile all times of the yeere, except in the winter, which beginneth and endeth at the times abouesaide.

The monson from the North parts, for Goa.

The shippes depart from Chaul, Diu, Cambaia, and other places Northwardes for Goa, betwixt the 8. and 15. of Januarie, and come to Goa about the ende of Februarie.

The first monson from Diu for the straight of Mecca.

The ships depart from Diu about the 15. of Januarie, and returne from the Straights to Diu in the moneth of August.

The second monson from Diu for the straight of Mecca.

The ships depart betwixt the 25. and first of September, and returne from the Straights to Diu, the 1. and 15. of May.

The monson from Secutra for Ormuz.

The ships depart about the tenth of August for Ormuz: albeit Secutra is an Islande and but few ships, which depart as abouesaid.

The monson wherein the Moores of the firme land come to Goa.

About the 15. of September the Moores of the firme lande beginne to come to Goa, and they come from all parts, as well from Balgatte, Lezanegar, as also from Sudalcao, and other places.

The monson wherein the Moores of the firme land depart from Goa.

They depart from Goa betwixt the 10. and 15. day of Nouember. Note that by going to the North is ment the departing from Goa, for Chaul, Diu, Cambaia, Daman, Bassani, Ghassain, and other places vnto Zindi, and by the South is vnderstoode, departing from Goa, for Cochin, and all that coast vnto Cape Comorin.

The first monson from Goa for Ormuz.

The shippes depart in the moneth of October from Goa, for Ormuz, passing with Easterly windes along the coast of Persia.

The second monson from Goa to Ormuz.

The ships depart about the 20. of Januarie passing by the like nauigation and windes as in the first monson, and this is called of the Portingals and Indians Entremonson.

The 3. monson from Goa to Ormuz.

The ships depart betwixt the 25. of March, and 6. of Aprill, hauing Easterly windes, till they passe Secutra, and then they finde Westerly windes, and therefore they set their course ouer to the coast of Arabia, till they come to Cape Rasalgate and the Straight of Ormus, and this monson is most troublesome of all: for they make 2. nauigations in the height of Seylan, which is 6. degrees and somewhat lower.

The first monson from Ormuz for Chaul and Goa.

The ships depart from Ormuz for Chaul, and Goa in the moneth of September, with North, and Northeast windes.

The second monson from Ormuz for Chaul, and Goa.

The second monson is betwixt the 25. and last of December, with like windes as the former monson.

The 3. monson from Ormuz for Chaul, and Goa.

The 3. monson the ships depart from Ormuz, for Chaul, and Goa, betwixt the 1. and 15. of Aprill, & they saile with Southeast winds, East & Northeast windes, coasting vpon the Arabian shore from Cape Mosandon vnto Cape Rasalgate, and hauing lost sight of Cape Rasalgate, they haue Westerly windes, and so come for Chaul and Goa, and if the said ships depart not before the 25. of Aprill, they are not then to depart that monson, but to winter in Ormuz because of the winter.

The first monson from Ormuz for Zindi.

The ships depart for Ormuz betwixt the 15. and 20. of Aprill.

The 2. monson from Ormuz for Zindi.

The ships depart betwixt the 10. and 20. of October for Zindi from Ormuz.

The monson from Ormuz for the red sea.

The ships depart from Ormus betwixt the 1. and last of Januarie.

Hithero I haue noted the monsons of the ships departing from Goa to the Northward: Now folowe the monsons wherein the ships depart from Goa to the Southward.

¶The monson from Goa for Calicut, Cochin, Seilan, and all that coast.

The ships depart from those places betwixt the 1. and 15. of August, and there they finde it nauigable all the yeere except in the winter, which continueth as is abouesaid, from the 15. of May, till the 10. of August. In like maner the ships come from these places for Goa at euery time in the yeere except in the winter, but of all other the best time is to come in November, December and Januarie. Note.

The first monson from Goa, for Pegu.

The ships depart from Goa betwixt the 15. and 20. of April, and winter at S. Thomas, and after the 5. of August, they depart from S. Thomas for Pegu.

The 2. monson from Goa for Pegu.

The ships depart from Goa, betwixt the 8. and 24. of August, going straight for Pegu, and if they passe the 24. of August, they cannot passe that monson, neither is there any more monsons til April as is afore said. Note that the chiefest trade is, to take money of S. Thomas rials, and patechoni, and to goe to S. Thomas, and there to buy Tellami, which is fine cloth of India, whereof there is great quantitie made in Chara Mandel, and brought thither, and other marchandize are not good for that place except some dozen of very faire Emeraulds oriental. For of golde, siluer, and Rubies, there is sufficient store in Pegu. Marchandize good for Pegu.

The monson from Pegu for the Indies.

The ships depart from Pegu betwixt the 15. & 25. of Januarie, and come to Goa about the 25. of March, or in the beginning of April. Note, that if it passe the 10. of May before the saide ships be arriued in Goa, they can not come thither that monson, and if they haue not then ser the coast of India, they shall with great peril fetch S. Thomas.

The first monson from Goa, for Malaca.

The ships depart betwixt the 15. and last of September, and arriue in Malaca about the ende of October.

The second monson from Goa to Malaca.

The ships depart about the 5. of May from Goa, and arriue in Malaca about the 15. of June.

The first monson from Malaca to Goa.

The ships depart about the 10. of September, and come to Goa about the ende of October.

The second monson from Malaca to Goa.

The ships depart from Malaca about the 10. of Februarie, and come to Goa about the ende of March. But if the said ships should stay till the 10. of May, they can not enter into Goa, and if at that time also they should not be arriued at Cochin, they are forced to returne to Malaca, because the winter and contrary windes then come vpon them.

The monson from Goa, for China.

The ships depart from Goa in the moneth of April.

The monson from China for Goa.

The ships depart to be the 10. of May in Goa, and being not then arriued, they turne backe to Cochin, and if they cannot fetch Cochin, they returne to Malaca.

The monson from Goa to the Moluccaes.

The ships depart about the 10. or 15. of May, which time being past, the shippes can not passe ouer the bar of Goa for the cause abouesaid.

The monson of the ships of the Molluccaes arriuall in Goa.

The ships which come from Moluccaes arriue vpon the barre of Goa about the 15. of April.

The monsons of the Portingall ships for the Indies.

The ships which come frō Portingall depart thence ordinarily betwixt the 10. & 15. of March, comming the straight way during the moneth of July to the coast of Melinde, and Mosambique, and from thence goe straight for Goa, and if in the moneth of July they should not be at the coast of Melinde, they can in no wise that yeere fetche Melinde, but returne to the Isle of S. Helena, and so are not able that time being past to fetche the coast of India, and to come straight for Goa. Therefore (as is aboue said) they returne to the Islande of S. Helena, and if they cannot make the saide Iland, then they runne as lost vpon the coast of Guinea: but if the saide shippes bee arriued in time vpon the coast of Melinde, they set forwardes for Goa, and if by the fifteene of Note.

September they can not fetch Goa, they then goe for Cochin, but if they see they can not fetch Cochin, they returne to Mosambique to winter there vpon the saide coast. Albeit in the yeere of our Lord 1580. there arriued the ship called San Lorenzo, being wonderfull sore sea beaten, the 1. of October, which was accounted as a myracle for that the like had not bene seene before.

Note.

The monson from India for Portingall.

The shippes depart from Cochin betweene the 15. and last of January, going on til they haue sight of Capo de buona speranza, and the Isle of S. Helena, which Islande is about the middes, being in 16. degrees to the South. And it is a litle Island being fruitfull of all things which a man can imagine, with great store of fruite: and this Islande is a great succour to the shippes which returne for Portingall. And not long since, the said Island was founde by the Portingals, and was discouered by a shippe that came from the Indies in a great stormе, in which they found such abundance of wilde beasts, and boares, and all sort of fruite, that by meanes thereof that poore shippe, which had bene 4. moneths at sea, refreshed themselues both with water and meate very well, and this Island they called S. Helens, because it was discouered vpon S. Helens day. And no doubtedly this Island is a great succour, and so great an ayde to the ships of Portingall, that many would surely perish if that helpe wanted. And therefore the king of Portingal caused a Church to be made there for deuotion of S. Helena: where there are onely resident Eremits, and all other are forbidden to inhabite there by the kings commaundement, to the ende that the shippes may be the more sufficiently furnished with victuals, because the ships which come from India come but slenderly victualled, because there groweth no corne there, neither make they any wine: but the ships which come from Portingal to the Indies touch not in the saide Island, because they set out being sufficiently furnished with bread, and water from Portingal for 8. moneths voyage. Any other people then the 2. Eremites aboue saide, can not inhabite this Island, except some sicke man that may be set there a shoare to remaine in the Eremites companie, for his helpe and recouerie.

Note.

The monson from Goa to Mosambique.

The ships depart betwixt the 10. and 15. of Januarie.

The monson from Mosambique to Goa.

The ships depart betweene the 8. and last of August, and arriue in Chaul or Goa in the month of October, till the 15. of November.

The monson from Ormuz to Bengala.

The ships depart betwixt the 15. and 20. of June, and goe to winter at Teue and depart thence about the 15. of August for Bengala.

The voyage passed by sea into Egypt, by Iohn Euesham Gentleman. Anno 1586.

THe 5. of December 1586. we departed from Grauesend in the Tiger of London, wherein was Master vnder God for the voyage Robert Rickman, and the 11. day at night wee came to the Isle of Wight: departing from thence in the morning following we had a faire winde, so that on the 27. day wee came in sight of the rocke of Lisbone, and so sayling along we came in sight of the South Cape, the 29. of the same, and on the morrow we with a Westerly winde wee entred the Straights: and the 2. of Januarie we being as high as Cape de Gate, we departed from our fleet towards Argier. And the 4. day we arriued at the port of Argier aforesaid, where we stayed till the first of March. At which time we set saile towardes a place called Tunis, to the Eastwarde of Argier 100. leagues, where we arriued the 8. of the same. This Tunis is a small citie vp 12. miles from the sea, and at the port or rode where shipping doe ride, is a castle or fort called the Golem, sometimes in the handes of the Christians, but now in the Turkes: at which place we remained till the three of Aprill: at which time we set saile towardes Alexandria, and hauing sometime faire windes, sometime contrary, wee passed on the 12. day betweene Sicilia and Malta, (where neere adioyning hath bene the fort and holde of the Knights of the Rhodes) and so the 19. day we fell with the Isle of Candie, and from thence to Alexandria, where we arriued the 27. of Aprill, and there continued till the 5. of October.

The description of Alexandria.

The said citie of Alexandria is an olde thing decayed or ruinated, hauing bene a faire and great citie neere two miles in length, being all vaulted vnderneath for prouision of fresh water, which water water commeth thither but once euery yeere, out of one of the foure riuers of paradise (as it is termed) called Nilus, which in September floweth neere eighteene foote vpright higher, then his accustomed manner, and so the banke being cut, as it were a sluce, about thirtie miles from Alexandria, at a towne called Rocetto, it doth so come to the saide Citie, with such aboundance, that barkes of twelue tunne doe come vpon the same water, which water doth fill all the dawes, setternes, and wels in the said Citie, with very good water, and doth so continue good, till the next yeere following: for they haue there very litle raine, or none at all, yet haue they exceeding great dewes. Also they haue very good corne, and very plentifull: all the Countrey is very hot, especially in the moneths of August, September, and October. Also, within the saide Citie, there is a pillar of Marble, called by the Turkes, King Pharoes needle, and it is foure square, euery square is twelue foote, and it is in heigth 90. foote. Also, there is without the wals of the said Citie, about twentie score paces, another marble pillar, being rounde, called Pompey his pillar: this pillar standeth vpon a great square stone, euery square is fifteene foote, and the same stone is fifteene foote high, and the compasse of the pillar is 27. foote, and the heigth of it is 101. feete, which is a wonder to thinke how euer it was possible to set the said pillar vpon the said square stone. The port of the said Citie is strongly fortified with two strong Castles, and one other Castle within the Citie, being all very well planted with munition: and there is to the Eastward of this Citie, about three daies iourney the Citie of Grand Cayro, otherwise called Memphis: it hath in it by report of the registers bookes, which we did see, to the number of 2400. Churches, and is wonderfully populous, and is one daies iourney about the wals, which was iourneied by one of our Marriners, for triall thereof. Also, neere to the said Citie, there is a place called the Pyrammides, being, as I may well terme it, one of the nine wonders of the world: that is, seuen seuerall places of flint and marble stone, foure square, the wals thereof are seuen yardes thicke in those places that we did see: the squarenes is in length about twentie score euery square, being built as it were a pointed diamond, broad at the foote, and small or narrow at the toppe: the heigth of them, to our iudgement, doth surmount twise the heigth of Paules steeple: within the saide Pyrammides, no man doth know what there is, for that they haue no entrance, but in the one of them, there is a hole where the wall is broken, and so we went in there, hauing torch light with vs, for that it hath no light to it, and within the same, is at it were a great hall, in the which there is a costly tombe, which tombe they say, was made for King Pharao in his life time, but he was not buried there, being drowned in the red sea: also there are certaine dawes, or dungeons, which goe downe very deepe vnder those Pyrammides, with faire staires, but no man dare venter to go down into them, by reason that they can carry no light with them, for the dampe of the earth doth put out the light: the red sea is but three daies iourney from this place, and Ierusalem about seuen daies iourney from thence: but to returne to Cayro. There is a Castle, wherein is the house that Pharoes wiues were kept in, and in the Pallace or Court thereof, standeth 55. marble pillars, in such order, as our Exchange standeth in London: the saide pillars are in heigth 60. foote, and in compasse 14. foote: also in the sayd Citie, is the Castle where Ioseph was in prison, where to this day they put in rich men, when the King would haue any summe of money of them: there are seuen gates to the sayd prison, and it goeth neere 50. yardes downe right: also, the water that serueth this Castle, commeth out of the foresaid riuer of Nilus, vpon a wal made with arches, fiue miles long, and it is twelue foote thicke. Also there are in old Cayro two Monasteries, the one called S. Georges, the other S. Maries: & in the Courts where the Churches be, was the house of King Pharao. In this Citie is great store of marchandize, especially pepper, and nutmegs, which come thither by land, out of the East India: and it is very plentifull of all manner of victuals, especially of bread, rootes, and herbes: to the Eastwards of Cayro, there is a Well, fiue miles of, called Matria, and as they say, when the Virgin Marie fled from Bethleem, and came into Aegypt, and being there, had neither water, nor any other thing to sustaine them, by the prouidence of God, an Angel came from heauen, and strake the ground with his wings, where presently issued out a fountaine of water: and the wall did open, where the Israelites did hide themselues, which fountaine or wel, is walled foure square, to this day. Also we were at an olde Citie, all ruinated and destroied, called in olde time, the great Citie of Carthage, where Hannibal, and Queene Dido dwelt: this citie was but narrowe, but was very long: for there was, and is yet to bee seene, one streete three mile long, to which Citie fresh water was brought vpon arches (as afore) aboue 25. miles, of which arches, some are standing to this day. Also we were at diuers other places, on the coast, as we came from Cayro, but of other antiquities, we saw but fewe. The towne of Argier, which was our first & last port, within the streights, standeth vpon the side of an hill, close vpon the sea shoare: it is very strong both by sea, and land, and it is very well victualled with all manner of fruites, bread, and fiſhe, good ſtore, and very cheape. It is inhabited with Turkes, Moores, and Iewes, and ſo are Alexandria and Cayro. In this towne are a great number of Chriſtian captiues, whereof there are of Engliſhmen onely 15. from which port we ſet ſaile towards England, the ſeuenth of Ianuarie, Anno 1587. and the 30. day of the ſaid moneth, we arriued at Dartmouth, on the coaſt of England.

The ſecond voyage of Maſter Laurence Alderſey, to the Cities of Alexandria, and Cayro in Aegypt. Anno 1586.

I Embarked my ſelfe at Briſtoll, in the Hercules, a good ſhip of London, and ſet ſaile the 21. day of Februarie, about ten of the clocke in the morning, hauing a merry wind: but the 23. day, there aroſe a very great ſtorme, and in the midſt of it we deſcried a ſmall boate of the burden of ten tunnes, with foure men in her, in very great danger, who called a maine for our helpe. Whereupon our Maſter made towards them, and tooke them into our ſhippe, and let the boate, which was laden with timber, and appertained to Chepſtow, to runne a drift. The ſame night, about midnight, aroſe another great ſtorme, but the wind was large with vs, vntill the 27. of the ſame moneth, which then grew ſomewhat contrary: yet notwithſtanding, we held on our courſe, and the tenth day of March, we deſcried a ſaile about Cape Sprat, which is a little on this ſide the ſtreight of Gibraltare, but we ſpake not with her. The next day we deſcried twelue ſaile more, with whome we thought to haue ſpoken, to haue learned what they were, but they made very faſt away, and we gaue them ouer.

Thurſday the 16. of March, we had ſight of the ſtreights, and of the coaſt of Barbarie. The 18. day we paſſed them, and ſailed towards Petras. Vpon the 23. of March, we met with the Centurion of London, which came from Genoa, by whome we ſent letters to England, and the foure men alſo which we tooke in, vpon the coaſt of England, before mentioned.

Goletta. The 29. of March, we came to Goleta, a ſmall Iland, and had ſight of two ſhippes, which we iudged to be of England.

Malta. Tueſday the fourth of Aprill, we were before Malta, and being there becalmed, our Maſter cauſed the two ſhippe boates to be had out, and they towed the ſhippe, till we were out of ſight of the Xante. Caſtle of Malta. The 9. day of Aprill, we came to Zante, and being before the towne, William Aldridge, ſeruant to Maſter Thomas Cordall of London, came aboord vs, with whome our Maſter, and 12. more of our companie, thought to haue gone on ſhoare, but they could not be permitted: ſo we all came aboord againe, and went to Petraſſe. Petras, where we arriued vpon good Friday, and lay there with good entertainement, at the Engliſh houſe, where was the Conſul Maſter Grime, Ralfe Aſhley, & Iohn Doddington, who very kindly went with vs, and ſhewed vs the pleaſures of the towne.

They brought vs to the houſe of the Cady, who was made then to vnderſtand of the 20. Turkes that we had aboord, which were to go to Conſtantinople, being redeemed out of captiuitie, by Sir Francis Drake, in the weſt Indias, and brought with him into England, & by order of the Queenes Maieſtie, ſent now into their Countrey. Whereupon the Cady commanded them to be brought before him, that he might ſee them: and when he had talked with them, and vnderſtoode how ſtrangely they were deliuered, he marualled much, and admired the Queenes Maieſtie of England, who being but a woman, is notwithſtanding of ſuch power and renowme amongſt all the princes of Chriſtendome, with many other honorable words of commending her Maieſtie. So he tooke the names of thoſe 20. Turkes, and recorded them in their great bookes, to remaine in perpetuall memorie. After this, our foreſaid countrey men brought me to the Chappell of S. Andrew, where his tombe or ſepulchre is, and the boord vpon which he was beheaded, which boord is now ſo rotten, that if any man offer to cut it, it falleth to powder, yet I brought ſome of it away with me. Vpon Tueſday in Eaſter weeke, we ſet out towards Zante againe, and the 24. of Aprill, with much adoe, we were all permitted to come on ſhoare, and I was caried to the Engliſh houſe in Zante, where I was very well entertained. The commodities of Zante, are currans, and oile: the ſituation of the towne is vnder a very great high hill, vpon which ſtandeth a very ſtrong Caſtle, which commandeth the towne. At Zante we tooke in a captaine, and 16. ſouldiers, with other paſſengers. We departed from Zante, vpon Tueſday the 15. of Aprill, & the next day we

Strinalia. anchred at a ſmal Iſland, called Striualia, which is deſolate of people, ſauing a few religious men, who entertained vs wel, wout taking any mone: but of curteſie we beſtowed ſomwhat vpō them

for

for their maintenance, and then they gaue vs a couple of leane ſheepe, which we caried aboord.

The laſt day of Aprill, we arriued at Candie, at a Caſtle, called Sowdaye, where we ſette the Captaine, ſouldiers, and marriners a ſhoare, which we tooke in at Zante, with all their carriage. Candie.

The ſecond day of May we ſet ſaile againe, and the fourth day came to the Iſlands of Milo, where we ankered, and found the people there very curteous, and tooke in ſuch neceſſaries as we wanted. The Iſlands are in my iudgement a hundred in number, and all within the compaſſe of a hundred miles. May. The Iſlands of Milo in old time called Sporades.

The 11. day the Chaus, which is the greateſt man there in authoritie, for certaine offences done in a little Chappell by the water ſide, which they ſaid one of our ſhippe had done, and imputed it to me, becauſe I was ſeene goe into it three daies before, came to vs, and made much a doe, ſo that we were faine to come out of our ſhippe armed, but by three peeces of golde the brabling was ended, and we came to our ſhippe. This day we alſo ſet ſaile, and the next day paſſed by the Caſtle of Serpeto, which is an olde ruinated thing, and ſtandeth vnder a hils ſide.

The 13. day, we paſſed by the Iſland of Paris, and the Iſland of the bankes of Helicon, and the Iſland called Ditter, where are many Boares, and the women be Witches. The ſame day alſo we paſſed by the Caſtle of Tino, ſtanding vpon a very high mountaine, and neere vnto it is the Iſland of Diana.

The 15. of May, we came to Sio, where I ſtaied 33. daies. In it is a very proper towne, after the building of that Countrey, and the people are ciuill: and while we were here, there came in ſixe gallies, which had bene at Alexandria, and one of them which was the Admirall, had a Prince of the Moores priſoner, whome they tooke about Alexandria, and they ment to preſent him to the Turke. The towne ſtandeth in a valley, and along the water ſide pleaſantly. There are about 26. windemils about it, and the commodities of it, are cotton wooll, cotton parne, maſtike, and ſome other drugs. Sio.

As we remained at Sio, there grew a great controuerſie betweene the marriners of the Hercules, and the Greekes of the towne of Sio, about the bringing home of the Turkes, which the Greekes tooke in ill part, and the boies cried out, Viue el Re Philippi: whereupon our men beate the boies, and they threw ſtones, and ſo a broile began, and ſome of our men were hurt: but the Greekes were fetcht out of their houſes, and manacled together with pyons, and threatned to the gallies: about fortie of them were ſent to the priſon, and what became of them, when wee were gone, we know not, for we went thence within 2. daies after, which was the nineteenth of June.

The 20. day we paſſed by the Iſland of Singonina, an Iſland riſen by the caſting of ſtones in that place: the ſubſtance of the ground there is brimſtone, and burneth ſometimes ſo much, that it bloweth vp the rockes. Singonina.

The 24. of June, we came to Cyprus, and had ſight in the way of the aforeſaide ſixe gallies, that came from Alexandria, one whereof came vnto vs, and required a preſent for himſelfe, and for two of the other gallies, which we for quietnes ſake gaue them.

The 27. of June, we came to Tripolis, where I ſtaied till the firſt of July, and then tooke paſſage in a ſmall barke, called a Caramaſate, which was a paſſage boate, and was bound for Bickberre, thirteene miles on this ſide Alexandria, which boate was freighted with Turkes, Moores, and Iewes.

The 20. day of July, this barke which I paſſed in, ranne vpon a rocke, and was in very great danger, ſo that we all began, ſome to be ready to ſwimme, ſome to leape into the ſhippe boate, but it pleaſed God to ſet vs quickly off the rocke, and without much harme.

The 28. of July, I came to Bickbert, where I was well entertained of a Iewe, which was the Cuſtomer there, giuing me Muſkadine, and drinking water himſelfe: hauing broken my faſt with him, he prouided me a Camell for my carriage, and a Mule for me to ride vpon, and a Moore to runne by me, to the Citie of Alexandria, who had charge to ſee me ſafe in the Engliſh houſe, whether I came, but found no Engliſh men there: but then my guide brought me aboord a ſhippe of Alderman Martyns, called the Tyger of London, where I was well receaued of the Maſter of the ſaid ſhippe, whoſe name was Thomas Rickman, and of all the companie. Bickbert. The Engliſh houſe in Alexandria.

The ſaid Maſter hauing made me good cheere, and made me alſo to drinke of the water of Nilus, hauing the keies of the Engliſh houſe, went thither with me himſelfe, and appointed me a faire Chamber, and left a man with me, to prouide me all things that I needed, and euery day came himſelfe to me, and caried me into the Citie, and ſhewed me the monuments thereof, which be theſe.

He brought me firſt to Pompey his pillar, which is a mightie thing, of gray marble, and all of one The monuments of Alexandria.

one ſtone, in heigth by eſtimation, aboue 52. yardes, and the compaſſe about fiue fadome.

The Citie hath three gates, one called the gate of Barbaria, the other of Merina, and the third of Roſetto.

He brought me to a ſtone in a ſtreete of the Citie, whereupon S. Marke was beheaded: and the place where S. Catherine died, hauing there hid her ſelfe, becauſe ſhe would not marrie: alſo ſee the Bath of S. Catherine.

I ſawe there alſo Pharoes needle, which is a thing in heigth almoſt equall with Pompeys pillar, and is in compaſſe fiue fadom, and a halfe, and all of one ſtone.

I was brought alſo to a moſt braue and daintie Bath, where we waſhed our ſelues: the Bath being of marble, and of very curious workemanſhip.

The Citie ſtandeth vpon great arches, or vawtes, like vnto Churches, with mightie pillars of marble, to holde vp the foundation: which arches are built to receaue the water of the riuer of Nilus, which is for the vſe of the Citie. It hath three Caſtles, and a hundred Churches: but the part that is deſtroied of it, is fiue times more then that part which ſtandeth.

Roſſetto. The laſt day of July, I departed from Alexandria, towards Cayro, in a paſſage boate, wherein firſt I went to Roſſetto, ſtanding by the riuer ſide, hauing thirteene or foureteene great Churches in it, their building there is of ſtone & bricke, but as for lodging, there is little, except we bring it with vs.

From Roſſetto, we paſſed along the riuer of Nilus, which is ſo famous in the world, twice as broad as the Thames at London: on both ſides growe Date trees, in great aboundance. The people be rude, inſomuch that a man can not trauell without a Ianiſſar, to conduct him.

The Turkes Lent. The time that I ſtaied in Aegypt, was the Turkes and Moores Lent, in all which time they burne lamps in their Churches, as many as may hang in them: their Lent indureth 40. daies, and they haue three Lents in the yeere: during which time, they neither eate nor drinke in the day time, but all the night they doe nothing els.

Betwixt Roſſetto, and Cayro, there are along the water ſide three hundred cities and townes, and the length of the way is not aboue three hundred miles.

Cayre. To this famous Citie of Cayro, I came the firſt day of Auguſt, where I found Maſter William Alday, and William Cæſar, who intertained me in very good ſorte. Maſter Cæſar brought me to ſee the Pyrammides, which are three in number, one whereof King Pharao made for his owne tombe, the tombe it ſelfe is almoſt in the top of it: the monuments be high, and in forme 4. ſquare, and euery of the ſquares is as long, as a man may ſhoot a roving arrowe, and as high as a church. I ſawe alſo the ruines of the Citie of Memphis, hard by thoſe Pyrammides.

The houſe of Ioſeph is yet ſtanding in Cayro, which is a ſumptuous thing, hauing a plaine walke in of 56. mightie pillars, all gilt with gold, but I ſawe it not, being then lame.

The 11. day of Auguſt, the land was cut at Cayro, to let in the water of the riuer of Nilus, which was done with great ioy, and triumph.

The 12. of Auguſt, I ſet from Cayro, towards Alexandria againe, and came thither the 14. of Auguſt. The 26. day, there was kept a great feaſt of the Turkes, and Moores, which laſted two daies, and for a day they neuer ceaſed ſhooting off of great Ordinance.

The Engliſh Conſul at Argier. From Alexandria I ſailed to Argier, where I lay with Maſter Typton, Conſul of the Engliſh nation, who vſed me moſt kindly, and at his owne charge. He brought me to the kings Court, and into the preſence of the King, to ſee him, and the manners of the Court: the King doth onely beare the name of a King, but the greateſt gouernment is in the hands of the ſouldiers.

The King of Potanca is priſoner in Argier, who comming to Conſtantinople, to acknowledge a dutie to the great Turke, was betraied by his owne Nephew, who wrote to the Turke, that he went onely as a ſpie, by that meanes to get his kingdome. I heard at Argier of ſeuen gallies that were at that time caſt away, at a towne called Formentera, three of them were of Argier, the other foure were the Chriſtians.

We found here alſo thirteene Engliſh men, which were by force of weather put into the Bay of Tunes, where they were very ill vſed by the Moores, who forced them to leaue their barke: whereupon they went to ỹ Councel of Argier, to require a redreſſe and remedie for the iniury. They were all belonging to the ſhippe, called the Golden Noble of London, whereof Maſter Birde is owner. The Maſter was Stephen Haſelwood, and the Captaine Edmond Bence.

The third day of December, the pinneſſe called the Mooneſhine of London, came to Argier with a prize, which they tooke vpon the coaſt of Spaine, laden with ſugar, hides, and ginger: the pinneſſe alſo belonging to the Golden Noble: and at Argier they made ſale both of ſhippe and goods, where we left them at our comming away, which was the ſeuenth day of Ianuarie:

and

and the firſt day of Februarie, I landed at Dartmouth, and the ſeuenth day came to London, with humble thankes to Almightie God, for my ſafe arriuall.

A true report of a worthie fight, performed in the voyage from Turkie, by fiue ſhippes of London, againſt eleuen gallies, and two frigats of the King of Spaines, at Pantalarea within the Streights, Anno, 1586. Written by Philip Ionas.

THe Marchants of London, being of the incorporation for the Turkie trade, hauing receaued intelligences, and aduertiſements, from time to time, that the King of Spaine grudging at the proſperitie of this kingdome, had not onely of late arreſted all Engliſh ſhippes, bodies, and goods, in Spaine, but alſo maligning the quiet traffike which they vſed to and in the dominions, and prouinces, vnder the obedience of the Great Turke, had giuen order to the Captaines of his gallies, in the Leuant, to hinder the paſſage of all Engliſh ſhippes, and to endeuour by their beſt meanes, to intercept, take, and ſpoile them, their perſons, and goods: they hereupon thought it their beſt courſe to ſette out their fleete for Turkie, in ſuch ſtrength and abilitie for their defenſe, that the purpoſe of their Spaniſh enemie, might the better be preuented, and the voyage accomplished with greater ſecuritie to the men and ſhippes. For which cauſe, fiue tall, and ſtoute ſhippes, appertaining to London, and intending onely a Marchants voyage, were prouided and furniſhed with all things belonging to the ſeas, the names whereof were theſe.

1. The Marchant Royall, a very braue and goodly ſhippe, and of great report.
2. The Tobie.
3. The Edward Bonauenture.
4. The William, and Iohn.
5. The Suſan.

Theſe fiue departing from the coaſt of England, in the moneth of Nouember, 1585. kept together as one fleete, till they came as high as the Iſle of Sicilie, within the Leuant. And there according to the order and direction of the voyage, each ſhippe began to take leaue of the reſt, and to ſeparate himſelfe, ſetting his courſe for the particular porte, whereunto he was bound: one for Tripolis in Syria, another for Conſtantinople, the chiefe Citie of the Turkes Empire, ſituated vpon the coaſt of Romania, called of olde Thracia, and the reſt to thoſe places, whereunto they were priuatly appointed. But before they deuided themſelues, they altogether conſulted, of and about a certaine and ſpeciall place for their meeting againe after the lading of their goods at their ſeuerall portes. And in concluſion, the generall agreement was to meete at Zante, an Iſlande neere to the maine continent of the Weſt part of Morea, well knowen of all the Pilots, & thought to be the fitteſt place for their Rendeuous. Concerning which meeting, it was alſo couenanted on eche ſide, and promiſed, that whatſoeuer ſhip of theſe 5. ſhould firſt arriue at Zante, ſhould there ſtay and expect the comming of the reſt of the fleete, for the ſpace of 20. dayes. This being done, eche man made his beſt haſt according as winde and wether would ſerue him to fulfill his courſe, and to diſpatch his buſineſſe; and no neede was there to admoniſh or incourage any man, ſeeing no time was ill ſpent, nor opportunitie omitted on any ſide, in the performance of eche mans duetie, according to his place.

It fell out that the Tobie which was bound for Conſtantinople had made ſuch good ſpeede, and gotten ſuch good weather, that ſhe firſt of all the reſt came backe to the appointed place of Zante, and not forgetting the former concluſion, did there caſt ancre, attending the arriuall of the reſt of the fleete, which accordingly (their buſines firſt performed) failed not to keepe promiſe. The firſt next after the Tobie was ꝑ Royal marchant, which together with the William & Iohn came from Tripolis in Syria, and arriued at Zante within the compaſſe of the foreſaide time limitted. Theſe ſhips in token of the ioy on al parts conceiued for their happy meeting, ſpared not ꝑ diſcharging of their ordinance, the ſounding of drummes and trumpets, the ſpreading of Enſignes, with other warlike and ioyfull behauiours, expreſſing by theſe outward ſignes, the inwarde gladneſſe of their mindes, being all as readie to ioyne together in mutuall conſent to reſiſt the cruel enemie, as wone in ſporting maner they made myrthe and paſtime among themſelues. Theſe three had not bene long in the hauen, but the Edward Bonauenture alſo, together with the Suſan her conſort, were come from Venice with their lading: the ſight of whom increaſed the ioy of the reſt, and they no leſſe glad of the preſence of the others, ſaluted them in moſt friendly and kinde ſort, according to the maner of the ſeas: and whereas ſome of theſe ſhips ſtoode at that inſtant in ſome want one stone, in heigth by estimation, aboue 52. pases, and the compasse about sixe fadome.

The Citie hath three gates, one called the gate of Barbaria, the other of Merina, and the third of Rosetto.

He brought me to a stone in a streete of the Citie, whereupon S. Marke was beheaded: to the place where S. Catherine died, hauing there hid her selfe, because she would not marrie: also to the Bath of S. Catherine.

I sawe there also, Pharoes needle, which is a thing in heigth almost equall with Pompeys pillar, and is in compasse fiue fadom, and a halfe, and all of one stone.

I was brought also to a most braue and daintie Bath, where we washed our selues: the Bath being of marble, and of very curious workemanship.

The Citie standeth vpon great arches, or vawtes, like vnto Churches, with mightie pillars of marble, to holde vp the foundation: which arches are built to receaue the water of the riuer Nilus, which is for the vse of the Citie. It hath three Castles, and a hundred Churches: but the part that is destroied of it, is sixe times more then that part which standeth.

Rosetto. The last day of July, I departed from Alexandria, towards Cayro, in a passage boate, wherein first I went to Rosetto, standing by the riuer side, hauing thirteene or foureteene great Churches in it, their building there is of stone & bricke, but as for lodging, there is little, except we bring it with vs.

From Rosetto, we passed along the riuer of Nilus, which is so famous in the world, twise as broad as the Thames at London: on both sides growe Date trees, in great aboundance. The people be rude, insomuch that a man can not trauell without a Ianissar, to conduct him.

The Turkes Lent. The time that I staied in Aegypt, was the Turkes and Moores Lent, in all which time they burne lamps in their Churches, as many as may hang in them: their Lent endureth 40. daies, and they haue three Lents in the yeere: during which time, they neither eate nor drinke in the day time, but all the night they doe nothing els.

Betwixt Rosetto, and Cayro, there are along the water side three hundred cities and townes, and the length of the way is not aboue three hundred miles.

Cayre. To this famous Citie of Cayro, I came the first day of August, where I found Master William Alday, and William Cæsar, who intertained me in very good sorte. Master Cæsar brought me to see the Pyrammides, which are three in number, one whereof King Pharao made for his owne tombe, the tombe it selfe is almost in the top of it: the monumentes be high, and in forme 4. square, and euery of the squares is as long, as a man may shoot a roving arrowe, and as high as a church. I sawe also the ruines of the Citie of Memphis, hard by those Pyrammides.

The house of Ioseph is yet standing in Cayro, which is a sumptuous thing, hauing a plaine walke in of 56. mightie pillars, all gilt with gold, but I sawe it not, being then lame.

The 11. day of August, the land was cut at Cayro, to let in the water of the riuer of Nilus, which was done with great ioy, and triumph.

The 12. of August, I set from Cayro, towards Alexandria againe, and came thither the 14. of August. The 26. day, there was kept a great feast of the Turkes, and Moores, which lasted two daies, and for a day they neuer ceased shooting off of great Ordinance.

The English Consul at Argier. From Alexandria I sailed to Argier, where I lay with Master Typton, Consul of the English nation, who vsed me most kindly, and at his owne charge. He brought me to the kings Court, and into the presence of the King, to see him, and the manners of the Court: the King doth only beare the name of a King, but the greatest gouernment is in the hands of the souldiers.

The King of Potanca is prisoner in Argier, who comming to Constantinople, to acknowledge a dutie to the great Turke, was betraied by his owne Nephew, who wrote to the Turke, that he went onely as a spie, by that meanes to get his kingdome. It fell out that the Tobie which was bound for Conſtantinople had made ſuch good ſpeede, and gotten ſuch good weather, that ſhe firſt of all the reſt came backe to the appointed place of Zante, and not forgetting the former concluſion, did there caſt ancre, attending the arriuall of the reſt of the fleete, which accordingly (their buſines firſt performed) failed not to keepe promiſe. The firſt next after the Tobie was ꝑ Royal marchant, which together with the William & Iohn came from Tripolis in Syria, and arriued at Zante within the compaſſe of the foreſaide time limitted. Theſe ſhips in token of the ioy on al parts conceiued for their happy meeting, ſpared not ꝑ diſcharging of their ordinance, the ſounding of drummes and trumpets, the ſpreading of Enſignes, with other warlike and ioyfull behauiours, expreſſing by theſe outward ſignes, the inwarde gladneſſe of their mindes, being all as readie to ioyne together in mutuall conſent to reſiſt the cruel enemie, as wee in ſporting maner they made mirthe and paſtime among themſelues. Theſe three had not bene long in the hauen, but the Edward Bonauenture alſo, together with the Suſan her conſort, were come from Venice with their lading, the ſight of whom increaſed the ioy of the reſt, and they no leſſe glad of the preſence of the others, ſaluted them in moſt friendly and kinde ſort, according to the maner of the ſeas: and whereas ſome of theſe ſhips ſtoode at that inſtant in ſome want of victuals, they were all content to stay in the port, till the necessities of each shippe were supplied, and nothing wanted to set out for their returne.

In this porte of Zante, the newes was fresh and currant, of two seuerall armies, and fleetes, prouided by the King of Spaine, and lying in waite to intercepte them: the one consisting of 30. strong gallies, so well appointed in all respects for the warre, that no necessarie thing wanted: and this fleete houered about the Streights of Gibraltare. The other armie had in it 20. Gallies, whereof some were of Sicilie, and some of the Iland of Malta, vnder the charge and gouernment of Iohn Andreas Dorea, a Captaine of name, seruing the King of Spaine. These two diuers and strong fleetes, waited and attended in the Seas for none, but the English shippes, and no doubt, made their accompt and sure reckoning, that not a shippe should escape their furie. And the opinion also of the Inhabitants of the Isle of Zante, was, that in respect of the number of gallies in both these armies, hauing receaued such streight commandement from the king, our ships and men being but few, and little, in comparison of them, it was a thing in humane reason impossible, that we should passe either without spoiling, if we resisted, or without composition at the least, and acknowledgement of dutie to the Spanish king.

But it was neither the report of the attendance of these armies, nor the opinions of the people, nor any thing els, that could daunt, or dismay the courages of our men, who grounding themselues vpon the goodnes of their cause, & the promise of God, to be deliuered from such as without reason, sought their destruction, caried resolute mindes, notwithstanding all impediments to aduenture thorough the seas, and to finish their nauigation, maugre the beardes of the Spanish souldiers. But least they should seeme too carelesse, and too secure of their estate, and by laying the whole and entire burden of their safetie, vpon Gods prouidence, should foolishly presume altogether of his helpe, and neglect the meanes which was put into their hands, they failed not to enter into counsell among themselues, and to deliberate aduisedly for their best defense. And in the end, with generall consent, the Marchant Royall was appointed Admirall of the Fleete, and the Tobie Viceadmirall, by whose orders the rest promised to be directed, and each shippe vowed not to breake from another, whatsoeuer extremitie should fall out, but to stand to it to the death, for the honour of their Countrey, and the frustrating of the hope of the ambitious, and proud enemie.

Thus in good order they left Zante, and the Castle of Grecia, and committed themselues againe to the seas, and proceeded in their course and voyage, in quietnes, without sight of any enmie, till they came neere to Pantalarea, an Iland so called, betwixt Sicilie, and the coast of Affrike: into sight whereof they came the 13. day of July, 1586. And the same day in the morning, about 7. of the clocke, they descried 13. sailes in number, which were of the gallies, lying in waite of purpose for them, in and about that place. As soone as the English shippes had spied them, they by and by, according to a common order, made themselues ready for a fight, laid out their Ordnance, scowred, charged, and primed them, displaied their ensignes, and left nothing vndone to arme themselues thoroughly. In the meane time, the gallies more and more approched the ships, and in their banners there appeared the armes of the Iles of Sicilia, and Malta, being all as then in the seruice and pay of the Spaniard. Immediatly, both the Admirals of the gallies, sent from each of them a frigat, to the Admiral of our English ships, which being come neere them, the Sicilian frigat first hailed them, and demanded of them whence they were: they answered that they were of England, the armes whereof appeared in their colours. Whereupon the said frigat expostulated with them, & asked, why they delaied to send or come with their captaines and pursers to Don Pedro de Leiua, their Generall, to acknowledge their dutie, & obedience to him, in the name of the Spanish king, Lord of those seas: our men replied, & said, that they owed no such dutie nor obedience to him, & therefore would acknowledge none, but commanded the frigat to depart with that answer, & not to stay longer a brabling, vpon her perill. With that away she went, & vp comes toward them the other frigat of Malta, & she in like sort hailed the Admiral, & would needes know whence they were, & where they had bene. Our Englishmen in the Admiral, not disdaining an answere, tolde them that they were of England, Marchants of London, had bene at Turkie, & were now returning home: & to be requited in this case, they also demanded of the frigat whence he, & the rest of the gallies were: the messenger answered, we are of Malta, & for mine owne part, my name is Caualero. These gallies are in seruice, & pay to the king of Spaine, vnder ỹ conduct of Don Pedro de Leiua, a noble man of Spaine, who hath bene commanded hither by the King, with this present force and armie, of purpose to intercept you. You shal therefore (quoth he) do well to repaire to him, to know his pleasure, he is a noble man of good behauiour & curteste, & meanes you no ill. The Captaine of the English Admiral, whose name was Master Edward Wilkinson now one of the 6. masters of her Maiesties royal nauie, replied, & said, we purpose not at this time to make triall of Don Pedro his curtesie, whereof we are suspitious and doubtfull, and not without good cause: vsing withall good words to the messenger, and willing him to come aboord him, promising securitie and good vsage, that thereby he might the better know the Spanyards minde: whereupon he in deed left his frigat, and came aboord him, whom he interteined in friendly sort, and caused a cuppe of wine to be drawne for him, which he tooke and began, with his cappe in his hand, and with reuerend termes, to drinke to the health of the Queene of England, speaking very honorable of her Maiestie, and giuing good speeches of the curteous vsage, and interteinement that he himselfe had receiued in London, at the time that the Duke of Alenson, brother to the late French King was last in England: and after he had well drunke, he tooke his leaue, speaking well of the sufficiencie and goodnesse of our shippes, and especiallie of the Merchant Royall, which he confessed to haue seene before, riding in the Thames neere London. He was no sooner come to Don Pedro de Leiua, the Spanish generall, but he was sent off againe, and returned to the English Admirall, saying that the pleasure of the generall was this, that either their captaines, maisters, and pursers should come to him with speed, or els he would set vpon them, and either take them or sinke them. The replie was made by M. Wilkinson aforesaid, that not a man should come to him: and for the bragge and threat of Don Pedro, it was not that Spanish branado that should make them yeeld a iot to their hinderance, but they were as readie to make resistance, as he to offer an iniurie. Whereupon Cauallero the messenger left bragging, and began to persuade them in quiet sort, and with many words, but all his labor was to no purpose, and as his threat did nothing terrifie them, so his persuasion did nothing moue them, to doe that which he required. At the last he intreated to haue the merchant of the Admirall caried by him as a messenger to the generall, that so he might be satisfied, and assured of their mindes by one of their owne companie. But M. Wilkinson would agree to no such thing, although Richard Rowit the merchant himselfe seemed willing to be imployed in that message, and labored by reasonable persuasions to induce M. Wilkinson to grant it, as hoping to be an occasion by his presence and discreet answeres to satisfie the generall, and therby to saue the effusion of Christian bloud, if it should grow to a battell. And he seemed so much the more willing to be sent, by how much deeper the othes and protestations of this Cauallero were, that he would (as he was a true knight and a souldior) deliuer him backe againe in safetie to his companie. Albeit, M. Wilkinson, which by his long experience had receiued sufficient triall of Spanish inconstancie and periurie, wished him in no case to put his life and libertie in hazard vpon a Spanyards oth. But at last, vpon much intreatie, he yeelded to let him goe to the generall, thinking in deed that good speeches, and answeres of reason would haue contented him, whereas otherwise, refusall to doe so, might peraduenture haue prouoked the more discontentment.

Maister Rowit therefore passing to the Spanish generall, the rest of the gallies hauing espied him, thought in deed that the English were rather determined to yeeld then to fight, and therefore came flocking about ỳ frigat, euery man crying out, Que nueuas, que nueuas, Haue these English men yeelded? the frigat answered, Not so, they neither haue, nor purpose to yeeld, onely they haue sent a man of their companie to speake with our generall: and being come to the gallie wherein he was, he shewed himselfe to M. Rowit in his armor, his gard of souldiors attending vpon him in armor also, and began to speake very proudly in this sort: Thou Englishman, from whence is your fleet, why stand ye aloofe off, know ye not your dutie to the Catholike king, whose person I here represent? Where are your billes of lading, your letters, pasports, and the chiefe of your men? Thinke ye my attendance in these seas to be in vaine, or my person to no purpose? Let all these things be done out of hand as I command, vpon paine of my further displeasure & the spoile of you all? These words of the Spanish generall were not so outragiously pronounced, as they were mildly answered by maister Rowit, who, tolde him that they were all merchant men, vsing traffike in honest sort, and seeking to passe quietly, if they were not vrged further then reason: as for the king of Spaine, he thought (for his part) that there was amitie betwixt him and his soueraigne the Queene of England, so that neither he nor his officers should goe about to offer any such iniurie to English merchants, who as they were farre from giuing offence to any man, so they would be loath to take an abuse at the handes of any, or sit downe to their losse, where their ability was able to make defence. And as touching his commandement aforesaid, for the acknowledging of dutie, in such particular sort, he tolde him, that where there was no duetie owing, there none should be performed, assuring him that their whole companie, and shippes in generall, stood resolutely vpon the negatiue, and would not yeeld to any such vnreasonable demand, ioyned with such imperious and absolute maner of commanding. Why then said he, if they will neither come to yeeld, nor shew obedience to me in the name of my king, I will either sinke them or bring them to harbor, and so tell them from me. With that the frigot came away with M. Rout, and brought him aboord the English Admirall againe, according to promise: who was no sooner entred in, but by and by defiance was sounded on both sides, the Spanyards hewed off the noses of the gallies, that nothing might hinder the leuell of the shot, and the English on the other side courageously prepared themselues to the combat, euery man according to his roome, bent to performe his office with alacritie and diligence. In the meane time a cannon was discharged from out the Admirall of the gallies, which being the onset of the fight, was presently answered by the English Admirall with a culuering: so the skirmish began, and grew hot and terrible, there was no powder nor shot spared: each English shippe matched it selfe in good order against two Spanish gallies, besides the inequallitie of the frigats on the Spanyards side: and although our men performed their parts with singular valure, according to their strength, insomuch that the enemie as amased therewith would often times pause and stay, and consult what was best to be done, yet they ceased not in the midst of their businesse to make prayer to almighty God the reuenger of all euils, and the giuer of victories, that it would please him to assist them in ỳ good quarell of theirs, in defending thẽselues against his proud a tyrant, to teach their hands to war, & their fingers to fight, that ỳ glory of the victory might redound to his name, and to the honor of true religion, which the insolent enemy sought so much to ouerthrow. Contrarily, the foolish Spanyards they cryed out according to their maner, not to God, but to our Lady (as they terme the virgin Mary) saying, O Lady helpe, O blessed Lady giue vs the victory, and the honor therof shalbe thine. Thus with blowes and prayers on both sides the fight continued furious and sharpe, and doubtfull a long time to which part the victory would decline: till at the last the Admirall of the gallies of Sicilie began to warpe from the fight, & to hold vp her side for feare of sinking, and after her went also two others in like case, whom all the rest of them inclosed, laboring by all their meanes to keepe them aboue water, being ready by the force of English shot which they had receiued, to perish in the seas: and what slaughter was done among the Spanyards themselues, the English were vncertaine, but by a probable coniecture apparant a far off, they supposed their losse was so great, that they wanted men to continue the charging of their pieces: whereupon with shame and dishonor, after fiue houres spent in the battell, they withdrew themselues: and the English contented in respect of their deepe lading rather to continue their voyage then to follow the chase, ceased from further blowes, with the losse onely of two men slaine, amongst them all, and another hurt in his arme, whom M. Wilkinson with his good words & friendly promises did so comfort, that he nothing esteemed the smart of his wound in respect of the honor of the victory, and the shamefull repulse of the enemy.

A fight of fiue houres.

Thus with ductifull thanks to the mercy of God for his gracious assistance in that danger, the English ships proceeded in their nauigation, & comming as high as Algier, a port towne vpon the coast of Barbarie they fell with it, of purpose to refresh themselues after their wearinesse, & to take in such supplie of fresh water & victuals, as they needed: they were no sooner entred into the port, but immediatly the king therof sent a messenger to the ships to know what they were, with which messenger the chiefe maister of each ship repaired to the king, and acquainted him not onely with the state of their ships, in respect of marchandize, but with the late fight which they had passed with the Spanish gallies, reporting euery particular circumstance in word as it fell out in action: whereat the said king shewed himselfe maruellous glad, interteining them in the best sort, and promising abundant reliefe of all their wants, making generall proclamation in the citie vpon paine of death, that no man of what degree or state soeuer he were, should presume either to hinder them in their affaires, or to offer them any maner of iniury in body or goods. By vertue wherof they dispatched all things in excellent good sort, with all fauor and peaceablenesse: onely such prisoners & captiues of the Spanyards as were in the citie, seeing the good vsage which they receiued, & hearing also what seruice they had performed against the foresaid gallies, grudged exceedingly against them, & sought as much as they could to practise some mischiefe against them: and one amongst the rest seeing an Englishman alone in a certeine lane of the citie, came vpon him suddenly, and with his knife stroke him in the side, yet made no such great wound, but that it was easily recouered. The English company hearing of it, acquainted the king with the fact, who immediatly sent both for the party that had receiued the wound, and the offender also, and caused an executioner in the presence of himselfe and the English, to chastise the slaue euen to death, which was performed to the end that no man should presume to commit the like part, or to do any thing in contempt of his royall cõmandement.

The English hauing receiued this good iustice at the kings hands, & all other things that they wanted, or could craue for the furnishing of their shippes, tooke their leaue of him, and of the rest of their friends, that were resident in Alger, and put out to sea, looking to meet with the second armie of the Spanish king, which waited for them about the mouth of the streight of Gibaltar,

which they were of neceſſitie to paſſe. But comming neere to the ſaid ſtreight, it pleaſed God to raiſe at that inſtant, a very darke and miſtie fogge ſo that one ſhippe could not diſcerne another, if it were 40 paces off: by meanes whereof, together with the notable faire Eaſterne windes that then blew moſt fitte for their courſe, they paſſed with great ſpeed though the ſtreight, and might haue paſſed with that good gale, had there beene 500 gallies to withſtand them, and the ayre neuer ſo cleere for euery ſhippe to be ſeene. But yet the Spaniſh gallies had a ſight of them when they were come within three Engliſh miles of the towne, & made after them in all poſſible haſte, and although they ſaw that they were farre out of their reach, yet in a vaine furie & fooliſh pride, they ſhot off their ordinance, and made a ſtir in the ſea as if they had beene in the midſt of them, which vanity of theirs miniſtred to our men notable matter of pleaſure and mirth, ſeeing men to fight with ſhadowes, and to take ſo great paines to ſo ſmall purpoſe.

But thus it pleaſed God to deride, and delude all the forces of that proud Spaniſh king, which he had prouided of purpoſe to diſtreſſe the Engliſh, who notwithſtanding, paſſed though both his armies, in the one, litle hurt, and in the other nothing touched, to the glory of his immortall name, the honor of our prince and country, and the iuſt commendation of euery mans ſeruice, performed in that voyage.

The voyage of M. Iohn Eldred to Tripolis in Syria by ſea, and from thence by land and riuer to Babylon and Balſara. 1583.

I Departed out of Londō in the ſhip called the Tyger in the companie of M. Iohn Newberie, M. Ralph Fitch, and ſixe or ſeuen other honeſt merchants vpon Shroue munday 1583, and arriued in Tripolis of Syria the firſt of May next inſuing: at our landing we went on maying vpon S. Georges Iſland, a place where Chriſtians dying aboord the ſhippes are woont to be buried. In this citie our Engliſh marchants haue a conſul, & our nation abide together in one houſe with him called Fondeghi Ingles, builded of ſtone, ſquare, in maner like a cloiſter, and euery man his ſeuerall chamber, as it is the vſe of all other Chriſtians of ſeuerall nations. This towne ſtandeth vnder a part of the mountaine of Libanus two Engliſh miles diſtant from the port: on the ſide of which port, trending in forme of an halfe moone, ſtand fiue blockehouſes or ſmal forts, wherein is ſome very good artillerie, and the forts are kept with about an hundred Ianiſſaries. Right before this towne from the ſeaward, is a banke of mouing ſand, which gathereth and increaſeth with the Weſterne windes, in ſuch ſort, that, according to an olde prophecie among them, this banke is like to ſwallow vp and ouerwhelme the towne: for euery yeere it increaſeth and eateth vp many gardens, although they vſe all pollicie to diminiſh the ſame, and to make it firme ground. The citie is about the bigneſſe of Briſtow, and walled about, though the walles be of no great force. The chiefe ſtrength of the place is in a citadell, which ſtandeth on the South ſide within the walles, and ouerlooketh the whole towne, and is ſtrongly kept with 200 Ianiſſaries and good artillerie. A riuer paſſeth though the middeſt of the citie, wherewith they water their gardens and mulberie trees, on which there grow abundance of ſilke wormes, wherewith they make great quantity of very white ſilke, which is the chiefeſt naturall commoditie to be found in and about this place. This rode is more frequented with Chriſtian marchants, to wit, Venetians, Genouois, Florentines, Marſillians, Sicilians, Raguſes, and lately with Engliſhmen, then any other port of the Turks dominions. From Tripolis I departed the 14 of May with a carauan, paſſing three dayes ouer the ridge of mount Libanus, at the end whereof we arriued in a citie called Hammah, which ſtandeth on a goodly plaine replenished with corne & cotton wooll. On theſe mountaines which we paſſed, grow great quantity of gall trees, which are ſomewhat like out okes, but leſſer & more crooked: on the beſt tree a man ſhall not finde aboue a pound of galles. This towne of Hammah is fallen, and falleth more & more to decay, and at this day there is ſcarce one halfe of the wall ſtanding, which hath beene very ſtrong and faire: but becauſe it coſt many mens liues to win it, the Turke will not haue it repayred, and hath written in the Arabian tongue ouer the caſtle gate, which ſtandeth in the midſt of the towne, theſe words: Curſed be the father & the ſonne that ſhall lay their hands to the repairing heerof. Refreſhing our ſelues one day here, we paſſed forward with camels three dayes more vntill we came to Alleppo, where we arriued the 21 of May. This is the greateſt place of traffike for a dry towne that is in all thoſe parts: for hither reſort Iewes, Tartarians, Perſians, Armenians, Egyptians, Indians, & many ſorts of Chriſtians, & inioy freedome of their conſciences, & bring thither many kindes of rich merchandizes. In the midſt of this towne alſo ſtandeth a goodly caſtle raiſed on hie with a garriſon of 4 or 5 hundred Ianiſſaries. Within foure miles round about are goodly gardens and vineyardes and trees, which beare goodly fruit neere vnto the riuers side, which is but small, the walles are about three English miles in compasse, but the suburbs are almost as much more. The towne is greatly peopled. We departed from thence

Birrah. with our camels the last of May with M. John Newberie and his companie, and came to Birrah in three dayes, being a small towne situated vpon the riuer Euphrates, where it beginneth first to take his name, being heere gathered into one chanell, whereas before it commeth downe in manifolde branches, and is therefore called by the people of the countrey by a name which signifieth a thousand heads. Heere is plentie of victualles whereof we all furnished our selues for our long iourney downe the aforesaid riuer. And according to the maner of those that trauell downe by water, we prepared a small barke for the conueyance of our selues and of our goods. These boates

Euphrates shallow. are flatte bottomed, because the riuer is shallow in many places: and when men trauell in the moneth of Julie, August, and September, the water being then at the lowest, they are constrayned to carie with them a spare boate or two to lighten their owne boates if they chance to fall on the Eight & twentie dayes iourney by riuer. shoaldes. We were eight and twentie dayes vpon the water betweene Birrah and Felugia, where we disembarked our selues and our goodes. Euery night after the Sunne setteth, we tie our barke to a stake, goe on land to gather stickes, and set on our pot with rice or bruised wheat, and hauing supped, the merchants lie aboord the barke, and the mariners vpon the shores side as neere as

In many places vpon the riuers side we meete with troopes of Arabians, of whom we bought milke, butter, egges, and lambes, and gaue them in barter, (for they care not for money) glasses, combes, coral, amber, to hang about their armes and neckes, and for churned milke we gaue them bread and pomgranat peeles, wherewith they vse to tanne their goats skinnes which they churne withall. Their haire, apparell, and colour are altogether like to those vagabond

Their women all without exception, weare a great round ring in one of their nostrels, of golde, siluer, or yron, according to their ability, and about their armes & smalles of their legs they haue hoopes of golde, siluer or yron. All of them aswell women and children, as men, are very great swimmers, and often times swimming they brought vs milke to our barke in vessels vpon their heads. These people are very theeuish, which I prooued to my cost: for they stole a casket of mine, with thinges of good value in the same, from vnder my mans head as he was asleepe: and therefore trauellers keepe good watch as they passe

Euphrates described. downe the riuer. Euphrates at Birrah is about the breadth of the Thames at Lambeth, and in some places narrower, in some broader: it runneth very swiftly, almost as fast as the riuer of Trent: it hath diuers sorts of fish in it, but all are scaled, some as bigge as salmons, like barbils.

Felugia. We landed at Felugia the eight and twentith of June, where we made our abode seuen dayes, for lacke of camels to carie our goods to Babylon: the heate at that time of the yeere is such in those parts, that men are loath to let out their camels to trauell. This Felugia is a village of some hundred houses, and a place appointed for discharging of such goods as come downe the riuer: the inhabitants are Arrabians. Not finding camels here, we were constrained to vnlade our goods, and hired an hundred asses to carie our English merchandizes onely to New Babylon, ouer a short desert, in crossing whereof we spent eighteene houres trauelling by night, and part of the morning, to auoid the great heat.

The ruines of olde Babylon. In this place which we crossed ouer, stood the olde mightie citie of Babylon, many olde ruines whereof are easilie to be seene by day light, which I John Eldred haue often beheld, at my good leasure, hauing made three voyages betweene the New citie of Babylon and Aleppo ouer this desert. Heere also are yet standing the ruines of the olde tower of Babell, which being vpon a plaine ground seemeth a farre off very great, but the neerer you come to it, the lesser and lesser it appeereth: sundry times I haue gone thither to see it, and found the remnants yet standing aboue a quarter of a mile in compasse, and almost as high as the stone worke of Paules steeple in London, but it sheweth much bigger. The brickes remaining in this most auncient monument be halfe a yard thicke, and three quarters of a yard long, being dried in the Sunne onely, and betweene euery course of brickes there lieth a course of mattes made of canes, which remaine sounde and not perished, as

New Babylō. though they had beene layed within one yeere. The citie of New Babylon ioyneth vpon the foresaid small desert where the Olde citie was, and the riuer of Tygris runneth close vnder the

The riuer Tygris. wall, and they may if they will open a sluce, and let the water of the same runne round about the towne. It is about two English miles in compasse, and the inhabitants generally speake three languages, to wit, the Persian, Arabian and Turkish tongues: the people are of the Spaniards complexion: and the women generallie weare in one of the gristles of their noses a ring like a wedding ring, but somewhat greater, with a pearle and a Turkish stone set therein: and this they doe be they neuer so poore.

This

This is a place of very great traffique, and a very great throughfare from the East Indies to Aleppo. The towne is very well furnished with victuals which come downe the riuer of Tygris from Mosul which was called Ninive in olde time. They bring these victuals and diuers sortes of merchandises vpon rafts borne vpon goates skins blowen vp ful of wind in maner of bladders. And when they haue discharged their goods, they sell the rafts for fire, and let the wind out of their goates skins, and cary them home againe vpon their asses by land, to make other voyages downe the riuer. The building here is most of bricke dried in the sunne, and very litle or no stone is to bee found: their houses are all flat roofed and lowe. They haue no raine for eight moneths together, nor almost any cloudes in the skie, night nor day. Their Winter is in November, December, Januarie and Februarie, which is as warme as our Sommer in England in a maner. This I know by good experience, because my abode at seuerall times in this citie of Babylon, hath bene at the lest the space of two yeeres. As we come to the citie, we passe ouer the riuer of Tygris on a great bridge made with boates chained together with two mightie chaines of iron. From thence wee departed in flat bottomd barkes more strong and greater then those of Euphrates, and were eight and twentie dayes also in passing downe this riuer to Balsara, but we might haue done it in eighteene or lesse, if the water had bene higher. Upon the waters side by the way stand diuers townes resembling much the names of the old prophets: the first towne they call Ozeah, and another Zecchiah. Before we come to Balsara by one dayes iourney, the two riuers of Tygris and Euphrates meete, and there standeth a Castle called Curna kept by the Turkes, where all merchants pay a small custome. Here the two riuers ioined together, begin to be eight or nine miles broad: here also it beginneth to ebbe and flow, and the water ouerflowing maketh the country all about very fertile of corne, rice, pulse, and dates. The towne of Balsara is a mile and an halfe in circuit: all the buildings, castle and wals, are made of bricke dried in the sunne. The Turke hath here fiue hundred Janissaries, besides other souldiours continually in garison and pay, but his chiefe strength is of gallies which are about fiue and twentie or thirtie very faire and furnished with goodly ordinance. To this port of Balsara come monethly diuers ships from Ormuz, laden with all sortes of Indian merchandise, as spices, drugs, Indico, and Calecut cloth. These ships are vsually from fortie to three score tunnes, hauing their plankes sowed together with corde made of the barke of Date trees, and in stead of Ocam they vse the shiuerings of the barke of the said trees, and of the same they also make their tackling. They haue no kind of iron worke belonging to these vessels, saue onely their ankers. From this place fiue dayes sayling downe the Gulfe, they goe to a place called Baharem in the midway to Ormuz. There they fish for pearles foure moneths in the yeere, to wit, in June, July, August, and September. My abode in Balsara was iust fiue moneths, during which time I receiued diuers letters from master Iohn Newberie from Ormuz, who as hee passed that way with her maiesties letters to Yeladin el Kubar, that is, Yeladin the great, king of Cambaia, and vnto the mightie Emperor of China, was traiterously there arrested, and all his company by the Portingals, and afterward sent prisoner to Goa: where after a long and cruell imprisonment, he and his companions were deliuered vpon suerties, not to depart the towne without leaue, at the sute of one father Thomas Steuens, an English religious man which they found there, but what became afterward of three of them, is not knowen vnto this day. The fourth which was a painter called Iohn Stozie, became religious in the Colledge of S. Paul in Goa, as we vnderstood by their letters. I and my companion William Shales hauing dispatched our businesse at Balsara imbarked our selues in company of seuentie barkes all laden with merchandise, hauing euery barke fourteene men to draw them, like our Westerne bargemen on ye Thames, and we were fortie foure dayes comming vp against the streame to Babylon, where arriuing and paying our custome, we with all other sortes of merchants bought vs camels, hired vs men to lade and driue them, furnished our selues with rice, butter, bisket, honie made of Dates, Onions and Dates: and euery merchaunt bought a proportion of liue muttons, and hired certaine shepheards to driue them with vs: we also bought vs tentes to lie in, and to put our goods vnder, & in this our Carauan were foure thousand Camels laden with spices and other rich merchandises. These Camels will liue very well two or three dayes without water: their feeding is on Thistles, Woorme-wood, Magdalene and other strong weedes which they find vpon the way. The gouerment and deriding of all quarels and duties to be paied, the whole Carauan committeth to one speciall rich merchant of the company, of whose honestie they conceiue best. In passing from Babylon to Aleppo, we spent fortie dayes, trauailing twentie and foure and twentie miles a day, resting our selues commonly from two of the clocke in the afternoone vntill three in the morning, at which time we begin to take our iourney. Eight dayes iourney from Babylon toward Aleppo, neere vnto a towne called Hite, as we crosse the riuer Euphrates by boates, about 3. miles from the towne there is

is a valley wherein are many springs throwing out aboundantly at great mouthes, a kind of black substance like vnto tarre, which serueth all the countrey to make stanch their barkes and boates: euery one of these springs make a noise like vnto a Smithes forge in the blowing and puffing out of this matter, which neuer ceaseth night nor day, and the noise may be heard a mile off continually. This vale swalloweth vp all heauie things that come vpon it. The people of the countrey call it in their language Babil gehenham, that is to say, Hell doore. As we passed through these desarts, we saw certaine wild beasts, as wild asses all white, Roebucks, wolues, leopards, foxes, and many hares, whereof we chased and killed many. Aborise, the king of the wandring Arabians in these deserts, hath a dutie of fortie shillings sterling, vpon euery Camels lode, which he sendeth his officers to receiue of the Caruans, and in consideration hereof, he taketh vpon him to conduct the said Caruans if they need his helpe, and to defend them against certaine prowling theeues. I and my companion William Shales came to Aleppo with the Caruan the eleuenth of June, 1584. where we were ioyfully receiued twentie miles distant from the towne by master William Barret our Consul, accompanied with his people and Ianissaries, who fell sicke immediatly and departed this life within eight dayes after, and elected before his death. M. Anthonie Bate Consul of our English nation in his place, who laudably supplied the said roume three yeeres. In which meane time I made two voiages more vnto Babylon, and returned by the way aforesaid, ouer the deserts of Arabia. And afterwards as one desirous to see other partes of the countrey, I went from Aleppo to Antioch, which is distant thence 60. English miles, and from thence went downe to Tripolis, where going aboord a small vessel, I arriued at Joppe, and trauailed to Rama, Lycia, Gaza, Jerusalem, Bethlem, to the riuer of Jordan, and the sea or lake of Sodome, and returned backe to Joppe, and from thence by sea to Tripolis, of which places because many others haue published large discourses, I surcease to write. Within few dayes after imbarking my selfe at Tripolis the 22. of December, I arriued (God be thanked) in safetie here in the riuer of Thames with diuers English merchants, the 26. of March, 1588. in the Hercules of London, which was the richest ship of English merchants goods that euer was knowen to come into this realme.

The Letters patents or priuiledges granted by her Maiestie to certaine Noble men and merchants of London, for a trade to Barbarie, in the yeere, 1585.

ELizabeth by the grace of God, Queene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. to the Treasurer & Barons of our Eschequer, and to all Maiors, shirifs, constables, customers, collectors of our customes and subsidies, controllers, searchers, and keepers of our hauens and creekes, portes and passages, within this our realme of England and the dominions of the same, and to all our officers, ministers and subiects, and to all other whosoeuer to whom it shall or may appertaine, and to euery of them greeting. Whereas it is made euidently and apparantly knowen vnto vs, that of late yeeres our right trustie and right welbeloued counsellors, Ambrose Erle of Warwike, and Robert Erle of Leicester, and also our louing and naturall subiects, Thomas Starkie of our citie of London Alderman, Ierard Gore the elder, and all his sonnes, Thomas Gore the elder, Arthur Atie gentleman, Alexander Auenon, Richard Stapers, William Iennings, Arthur Dawbeney, William Sherington, Thomas Bramlie, Anthonie Garrard, Robert How, Henry Colthirst, Edward Holmden, Iohn Swinnerton, Robert Walkaden, Simon Lawrence, Nicholas Stile, Oliuer Stile, William Bond, Henry Farrington, Iohn Tedcastle, Walter Williams, William Brune, Iohn Suzan, Iohn Newton, Thomas Owen, Roger Afield, Robert Washburne, Reinold Guy, Thomas Hitchcocke, George Lydiat, Iohn Cartwright, Henrie Paiton, Iohn Boldroe, Robert Bowyer, Anthonie Dassell, Augustine Lane, Robert Lion and Thomas Dodde, all of London, merchaunts now trading into the countrey of Barbarie, in the partes of Affrica, vnder the gouernment of Muly Hammet Sheriffe, Emperor of Moroccus, and king of Fesse and Sus, haue sustained great and grieuous losses, and are like to sustaine greater if it should not be preuented: In tender consideration whereof, and for that diuers merchandise of the same countries are very necessarie and conuenient for the vse and defence of this our realme of England, and for diuers other causes vs specially mouing, minding the reliefe and benefite of our said subiects, and the quiet traffique and good gouernment to be had, and vsed among them in their said trade, of our speciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion haue giuen and granted, and by these presents for vs, our heires and successors, doe giue and graunt vnto the said Erles of Warwike and Leicester, Thomas Starkie, Ierard Gore the elder, Arthur Atie gentleman, Alexander preuented or interrupted in this their sayd trade, we doe by these presents for vs, our heyres and successours, straightly prohibite and forbid all maner of person or persons, as well strangers of what nation or countrey soeuer, as our owne Subiects, other then onely the sayd Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. and euery of them as aforesayd, that they nor any of them from henceforth during the sayd terme of 12. yeeres, doe or shall bring, or cause to be brought into this our Realme of England, or to any the dominions thereof, any maner of merchandizes whatsoeuer growing, or being made within the sayd countrey of Barbarie, or within any the dominions thereof, vnlesse it bee by and with the licence, consent and agreement of the sayd Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. or with the consent and licence of the more part of them then liuing, first had and obtained, so alwayes the said Erle of Leicester (if he be liuing) be one, vnder the paine that euery one that shall offend or doe against this our present prohibition here last aboue mentioned in these presents, shall forfeite and lose all, and singular the said merchandizes to be landed in any our realmes and dominions, contrary to the tenor and true meaning of this our prohibition in that behalfe prouided: the one moitie of all and euery which said forfeitures whatsoeuer mentioned or specified in these our present Letters patents, shall be to vs our heires and successors: And the other moitie of all and euery the sayd forfaitures, we doe by these presents of our certaine knowledge and meere motion, clerely and wholy for vs, our heires and successours, giue and grant vnto the sayd Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. And these our Letters patents vpon the only sight thereof, without any further warrant shall bee sufficient authoritie to our Treasurer of England for the time being, to our Barons of the Exchequer, and to all other our officers that shall haue to deale in this behalfe, to make full allowance vnto the sayd Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. their deputies or assignes of the one moitie of all and singular the goods, merchandizes and things whatsoeuer mentioned in these our present Letters patents, to be forfaited at any time or times during the sayd terme of twelue yeeres: which sayd allowance we doe straightly charge and commaund from time to time to bee made to the sayd Erles, Thomas Starkey, &c. and to euery of them accordingly, without any maner of delay or denniall of any of our officers whatsoeuer, as they tender our fauour and the furtherance of our good pleasure. And we doe straightly charge and commaund, and by these presents prohibite all and singular, Customers and Collectors of our customes & subsidies, and comptrollers of the same, of, and within our Citie and porte of London, and all other portes, creekes, & places within this our Realme of England, and euery of them, that they ne any of them take or perceiue, or cause, or suffer to be taken, receiued or perceiued for vs & in our name, or to our vse, or to the vses of our heires or successors of any person or persons, any summe or summes of money, or other things whatsoeuer during the sayd terme of 12. yeeres, for, and in the name & liew or place of any custome, subsidie and other thing or duties to vs, our heires or successors due or to be due for the customs & subsidies of any merchandizes whatsoeuer growing, being made or comming out of the said country of Barbarie, or out of the dominions thereof, nor make, cause, nor suffer to be made any entrie into our or their bookes of customs and subsidies, nor make any agreement for the subsidies and customs, of, and for any the said merchants, liuing onely with, and in the name of the said Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. or the most part of them, as they and euery of them wil answer at their vttermost perils to the contrary. And for the better and more sure obseruation of this our graunt, we wil, and graunt for vs our heires & successors by these presents, that the Treasurer & barons of our Exchequer for the time being, by force of this our graunt or enrolment therof in the said court, at all and euery time and times during the said terme of 12. yeeres, at & vpon request made vnto them by the said Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. or by the attorneis, factors, deputies or assignes of them, or the most part of them then liuing and trading, shal and may make and direct vnder the seale of the said Exchequer, one or moe sufficient writ or writs, close or patents, vnto euery or any of our said customers, collectors or controllers of our heires and successors in all and euery, or to any port or portes, creeke, hauen, or other places within this our realme of England, as the said Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. or any the attorneis, factors, deputies or assignes of them or the most part of them then liuing & trading, shal at any time require, commanding and straightly charging them and euery of them, that they nor any of them at any time or times during the said terme of 12. yeeres, make any entrie of any wares or merchandizes whatsoeuer growing, being made or comming out or frō the said country of Barbarie or the dominions thereof, nor receiue or take any custome, subsidie or other entrie, or make any agreement for the same, other then with or in the name of the said Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. the factor or factors, deputies or assignes of them or the most part of them then liuing and trading, according to this our graunt, and the true meaning thereof, & according to our said will and pleasure before in these presents declared. In witnes whereof we haue caused these our letters to be made patents. Witnesse our selfe at Westminster the fift day of July in the 27. yeere of our reigne.

The Ambaſſage of M. Henrie Roberts, one of the ſworne Eſquires of her Maieſties perſon, from her highneſſe to Mully Hamet Emperour of Marocco, and king of Fes, and Sus, in the yere 1585: who remained there as Liger for the ſpace of 3. yeere. Written briefly by himſelfe.

VPon an incorporation graunted to the companie of Barbarie Marchants reſident in London, I Henrie Roberts one of her Maieſties ſworne Eſquires of her perſon, was appointed her highneſſe meſſenger, and Agent vnto the aforeſaid Mully Hamet Emperour of Marocco, king of Fes and Sus. And after I had receiued my Commiſſion, inſtructions, and her Maieſties letters, I departed from London the 14. of Auguſt in the yeere 1585. in a tall ſhippe called the Aſcenſion, in companie of the Minion and Hopewel, and we all arriued in ſafetie at Aſafi a port of Barbarie, the 14. of September next following. The Alcaide of the towne (being the kings officer there, and as it were Maior of the place) receiued mee with all humanitie and honour, according to the cuſtome of the countrey, lodging me in the chiefeſt houſe of the towne, from whence I diſpatched a meſſenger (which in their language they call a Trottero) to aduertiſe the Emperour of my arriuall: who immediatly gaue order, and ſent certaine ſouldiers for my guard and conduct, and horſes for my ſelfe, and mules for mine owne and my companies carriages. Thus being accompanied with M. Richard Euans, Edward Saltcot, and other Engliſh marchants reſident there in the countrey, with my traine of Moores and cariages, I came at length to the riuer of Anſift, which is within 4. miles of Marocco: and there by the water ſide I pitched my tents vnder the Oliue trees: where I mette with all the Engliſh marchants by themſelues, and the French & Flemiſh, and diuers other Chriſtians, which attended my comming. And after we had dined, and ſpent out the heat of the day, about 4. of the clocke in the afternoone wee all ſet forwarde toward the citie of Marocco, where wee arriued the ſaid day, being the 14. of September, and I was lodged by the Emperours appointment in a faire houſe in the Iudaria or Iurie, which is the place where the Iewes haue their abode, and is the faireſt place, and quieteſt lodging in all the citie.

After I had repoſed my ſelfe three dayes, I had acceſſe to the kings preſence, deliuered my meſſage and her Maieſties letters, and was receiued with all humanitie, and had fauourable audience from time to time for three yeeres: during which ſpace I abode there in his Court, as her Maieſties Agent and Ligier: and whenſoeuer I had occaſion of buſines, I was admitted either to his Maieſtie himſelfe, or to his viceRoy, whoſe name was Alcayde Breme Saphiana, a very wiſe and diſcreete perſon, & the chiefeſt about his Maieſtie. The particulers of my ſeruice for diuers good and reaſonable cauſes, I forbeare here to put downe in writing.

After leaue obteined, and an honourable reward beſtowed by the Emperour vpon me, I departed from his Court at Marocco the 18. of Auguſt 1588. towarde a garden of his, which is called Shoresbenares, where hee promiſed mee I ſhould ſtay but one day for his letters: howbeit, vpon ſome occaſion I was ſtayed vntill the 14. of September at the kings charges, with 40. or 50. ſhotte attending vpon me for my guard and ſafetie.

From thence at length I was conducted with all things neceſſarie to the port of Santa Cruz, being ſixe dayes iourney from Marocco, and the place where our ſhippes doe commonly take in their lading, where I arriued the 21. of the ſame moneth. In this port I ſtayed 43. dayes, and at length the ſecond of Nouember I embarqued my ſelfe, and one Marshok Reiz a Captaine and a Gentleman, which the Emperour ſent with mee vpon an Embaſſage to her Maieſtie: and after much torment and foule weather at ſea, on New yeeres day I came on lande at S. Iues in Cornewall, from whence paſſing by lande both together vp towards London, we were met without the citie with the chiefeſt marchants of the Barbarie companie, well mounted all on horſe backe, to the number of 40. or 50. horſe, and ſo the Embaſſadour and my ſelfe being both in Coche, entred the Citie by torchlight, on Sunday at night the 12. of Ianuarie 1589.

¶ Eſte es vn traſlado bien y fielmente ſacado da vna carta real del Rey Muley Hamet de Fes y Emperador de Marruecos, cuyo tenor es eſte, que Segue.

ON el nombre de Dios piadoſo y miſericordioſo, &c. This is a copie well and truely translated of an edict of Mully Hamet king of Fez and Emperour of Maruecos, whose tenor is as followeth, to wit, That no Englishmen should bee molested or made slaues in any part of his Dominions, obtained by the aforesaid M. Henrie Roberts.

The same in English.

IN the name of the pitiful & the merciful God, &c. The seruant of the supreame Emperour in his cõquero in his cause, the successor aduanced by God to be Emperor of the Moores, the sonne of the Emperor of the Moores, the Iariffe, the Haçeny, whose honor God long increase & aduance his estate. This our princely commandement is deliuered into the hands of the English marchants, which remaine in the protection of our stately palaces: to the end that al men which shal see this present writing, may vnderstand that our princely counsaile will defend them by the fauor of God, from any thing that may impeach or hurt them in what sort soeuer they shalbe wronged: and that, which way soeuer they shal trauaile, no man shal take them captiues in these our kingdomes, ports, & places which belong vnto vs, which also may protect and defend them by our authoritie from any molestatiõ whatsoeuer: and that no man shal hinder them by laying violent hand vpõ them, & shall not giue occasion that they may be grieued in any sort by the fauor and assistance of God. And we charge & command our officers of our hauens & fortresses, and all such as beare any authoritie in these our dominions, and likewise al the common people, that in no wise they doe molest them, in such sort that they be no way offended or wronged. And this our commandement shall remaine inuiolable, being registred in the middest of the moneth of Rabel in the yeere of nine hundreth ninetie and sixe.

The date of this letter agreeth with the 20. of March 1587. which I Abdel Rahman el Catan interpretour for his Maiestie, haue translated and turned out of the Arabian into spanish word for word as is conteined therein: and in witnes thereof haue subscribed my name as aforesaid.

The blessing of god light vpõ our lord & prophet Mahumet, & those that are obedient vnto him.

THe seruant of God both mightie in warre & mightily exalted by the grace of God Myra Momahyn, the sonne of Myra momanyn, ỹ Iariff, ỹ Hazeni, whose kingdoms God maintein & aduance aduance his authoritie: Unto the right famous, right noble, and right highly eſteemed Earle of Leiceſter, after due praiſes giuen vnto God, & due bleſſings & ſalutations rendred vnto ỳ prophet Mahumet. Theſe are to giue you to vnderſtand, ỳ your letters arriued here in our royal Court, and we wel perceiue the cõtents therof. And your Embaſſador which remaineth here in our court told me the cauſe of the ſlownes of the gages or pledges vntil this time: which reckoning we accept of, & hold our ſelues as ſatiſfied. And as touching the matter whereof you write vnto vs concerning Iohn Herman, & the ſelfe ſame complaint which your Embaſſador hath made of him, before the cõming of your letter, we had already cõmanded him to be taken vpon ỳ complaint which your Embaſſador had made of him, whereupon he ſtil remaineth in hold, & ſhall ſo continue vntill further iuſtice be done vpon him according to his deſert. And ſo our Lorde keepe you in his ſafegarde. Written at our royal court in Maruecos, which God maintaine, the 20. day of the moneth Remodan, Anno ‖ 996. ‖ Which is with vs 1587.

The Queenes Maieſties letters to the Emperour of Marocco.

MVy alto, y muy poderoſo Señor,

Auiendo entendido de parte de nueſtro Agente la mucha aſicion, y volontad, que nos teneys, y quanta honra, y fauor le hazeys por amor nueſtro, para dar nos tanto mayor teſtimonio de vueſtra amiſtad, hemos recebido de lo vno, y de lo otro muy grande contento, y ſatisfacion: y aſſi no podemos dexar de agradeſceroslo, como mereceys. Vueſtras cartas hemos tambien recebido, y con ellas holgadonos infinitamente, por venir de parte de vn Principe, a quien tenemos tanta obligacion. Nueſtro Agẽte nos ha eſcripto ſobre ciertas coſas, que deſſeays ſer os embiadas de aqui: Y, aunque queriamos poder os en ello puntualmente cõplazer, como pidiz, ha ſuccedido, que las guerras en que ſtamos al preſente occupadas, no nos lo conſienten del todo: Hemos però mandado, que ſe os ſatisfaga en parte, y cõforme à lo que por agora la neceſſitad nos permite, como mas particularmente os lo declarará nueſtro Agente: eſperãdo, que lo recibereys en buena parte, y conforme al animo, con que os lo concedemos. Yporque nos ha ſido referido, que aueys prometido de proceder contra vn Iuan Herman vaſſallo nueſtro, (el qual nos ha grauemente offendido) de la manera, que os lo demandaremos, auemos dado orden à nueſtro dicho Agente de deziros mas parcularmente lo que deſſeamos ſer hecho a cerca deſte negocio, rogando os, que lo mandeys aſſi complir: y que ſeays ſeruido de fauoreſcer ſiempre al dicho Agente, y tener lo en buen credito, como haſta agora aueys hecho, ſin permiter, que nadie os haga mudar de parecer a cerca de las calumnias, que le podran lenantar, ny dudar, que no complamos muy por entero todo, lo que de nueſtra parte os prometiere. Nueſtro Sennor guarde voſtra muy alta y muy poderoſa perſona. Hecha en nueſtra Corte Real de Grenewich a 20. de Iulio 1587. The Queenes letters to the Emperour.

¶ The ſame in Engliſh.

RIght high and mightie Prince, Hauing vnderſtoode from our Agent the great affection & good wil which you beare vs, and how great honour and fauor you ſhewe him for our ſake, to the ende to giue vs more ample teſtimonie of your friendſhip, we haue receiued very great contentment & ſatiſfaction, aſwel of the one as of the other: and withall we could not omit to magnifie you, according to your deſert. We haue alſo receiued your letters, and do not a litle reioyce thereof, becauſe they come from a prince vnto whome we are ſo much beholden. Our Agent hath written vnto vs concerning certaine things which you deſire to be ſent vnto you from hence. And albeit we wiſh that wee could particularly ſatiſfie you, as you deſire, yet it is fallen out, that the warres, wherein at this preſent we be buſied, will not ſuffer vs fully to doe the ſame: neuertheleſſe, we haue commanded to ſatiſfie you in part, and according as the preſent neceſſitie doeth permit vs, as our Agent will declare vnto you more particularly, hoping you will receiue it in good part, and according to the good will wherewith we graunt the ſame. And becauſe it hath bene ſignified vnto vs that you haue promiſed to proceede in iuſtice againſt one Iohn Herman our ſubiect, which hath grieuouſly offended vs, in ſuch ſort as we haue ſent word vnto you, we haue giuen order to our ſaide Agent to informe you more particularly in that which we deſire to be done in this buſines, praying you alſo to command the ſame to be put in execution: and that it would pleaſe you alwayes to fauour our ſaid Agent and to hold him in good credite, as you haue done hitherto, not ſuffring your ſelfe to be changed in your opinion, for all ỳ falſe reports which they may raiſe againſt him, nor to doubt that we wil not accompliſh at large all that he ſhal promiſe you on our behalfe. Our Lord keepe and preſerue your right high and mightie perſon. Written in our royal Court at Greenwich the 20. of July, 1587. John Herman an Engliſh rebel.

A Patent graunted to certaine marchants of Exceter, and others of the VVest parts, and of London, for a trade to the riuer of Senega and Gambia in Guinea, 1588.

ELizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, Fraunce and Ireland, defendour of the faith, &c. To our Treasurer and Admiral of England, our Treasurer and Barons of our Exchequer, and all and euery our officers, ministers and subiects whatsoeuer, greeting. Whereas our welbeloued subiects William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicolas Spicer, and Iohn Doricot of our Citie of Exeter marchants, Iohn Yong of Coliton in our Countie of Deuon marchant, Richard Doderidge of Barnestable in our saide Countie of Deuon Marchant, Antonie Dassell, and Nicolas Turner of our citie of London marchants, haue bene perswaded and earnestly mooued by certaine Portingals resident within our Dominions, to vndertake and set forwarde a voyage to certaine places on the coast of Guinea: videlicet, from the Northermost part of the Riuer commonly called by the name of the Riuer of Senega, and from and within that Riuer all along that coast vnto the Southermost part of another Riuer commonly called by the name of ‖Gambia, and within that Riuer: which, as we are informed, they haue alreadie ones perfourmed accordingly: And for that we are credibly giuen to vnderstand that the further prosecuting of the same voyage, and the due and orderly establishing of an orderly trafique and trade of marchandise into those countreis, will not onely in time be very beneficial to these our Realmes and dominions, but also be a great succour and relefe vnto the present distressed estate of those Portingals, who by our princely fauour liue and continue here vnder our protection: And considering that the aduenturing and enterprising of a newe trade can not be a matter of small charge and hazard to the aduenturers in the beginning: we haue therefore thought it conuenient, that our said louing subiects William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yong, Richard Doderige, Anthonie Dassell, and Nicholas Turner, for the better incouragement to proceede in their saide aduenture and trade in the saide countreis, shall haue the sole vse and exercise thereof for a certaine time. In consideration whereof, and for other waightie reasons and considerations vs specially moouing, of our speciall grace, certaine knowledge and meere motion, we haue giuen & graunted, and by these presents for vs, our heires and successors doe giue and graunt vnto the saide William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Young, Richard Doderige, Anthonie Dassel and Nicholas Turner, and to euery of them, and to such other our subiects as they or the most part of them shall thinke conuenient to receiue into their companie and societie to be the traders with them into the saide countreis, that they and euery of them by themselues or by their seruants or Factors and none others, shall and may for and during the full space and terme of tenne yeeres next ensuing the date of these presents, haue and enioy the free & whole trafique, trade and feate of marchandise, to & from the saide Northermost part of the said Riuer, commonly called by the name of the Riuer of Senega: and from and within that Riuer all along the coast of Guinea, vnto the Southermost part of the said Riuer, cõmonly called by the name of the Riuer of ‖Gambia, and within that Riuer also. And that they the said William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yong, Richard Doderige, Anthonie Dassel and Nicholas Turner, & euery of them, by themselues or by their seruants or Factors, & such as they or the most part of them shall receiue into their companie and societie, to be traders with them into the saide Countreis (as is aforesaid) and none others, shal and may, for, and during the said space and terme of 10. yeres, haue and enioy the sole & whole trafique or trade of marchandise into & from the saide places afore limitted and described, for the buying & selling, bartering and changing of and with any goods, wares, and marchandises whatsoeuer, to be vented had or found, at or within any the cities, townes, or places situated or being in the countreis, parts & coasts of Guinea before limitted, any law, statute, or graunt, matter, custome or priuiledges to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding. And for the better ordering, establishing, and gouerning of the said societie & companie in the said trade and trafique of marchandises, and the quiet, orderly and lawful exercise of the same, We for vs, our heires, and successors, doe by these presents giue and graunt full license and authoritie vnto the said William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yong, Richard Doderige, Anthonie Dassell, and Nicholas Turner, and to such others as they shall receiue into their said societie and company to be traders into the said countreis, as is aforesaid, and to euery of them, that they or the most part of them shall and may at all conuenient times at their pleasures, assemble and meete together in any place or places conuenient, as well within our citie of Exeter, as elſewhere within this our Realme of England, or other our dominions, during the ſaid terme of ten yeeres, to conſult of, for, and concerning the ſaide trade and traffike of marchandize, and from time to time to make, ordaine, and ſtabliſh good, neceſſarie, and reaſonable orders, conſtitutions, and ordinances, for, and touching the ſame trade. And all ſuch orders, conſtitutions, and ordinances ſo to be made, to put in vre and execute, and them, or any of them, to alter, change, and make voide, and, if neede be, to make newe, as at any time, during the ſaid terme of ten yeeres, to them, or the moſt part of them then trading, as is aforeſaid, ſhall be thought neceſſary & conuenient. Vnto all & euery which ſaid orders, conſtitutions, & ordinances, they, & euery of them, & all other perſons which ſhal hereafter be receaued into the ſaid societie & company, ſhall ſubmit themſelues, & ſhal wel & duely obſerue, performe, and obey the ſame, ſo long as they ſhall ſtand in force, or els ſhal pay and incurre ſuch forfeitures, paines, and penalties, for the breach thereof, & in ſuch manner and forme, and to ſuch vſes and intents, as by the ſaid orders, conſtitutions, and ordinances ſhall be aſſeſſed, limited, and appointed. So alwaies, as the ſame orders, conſtitutions, and ordinances, be not repugnant or contrarie to the lawes, ſtatutes, and cuſtomes of this Realme of England, nor any penaltie to exceede the reaſonable forme of other penalties, aſſeſſed by the companie of our Marchants, named Aduenturers. And to the intent that they onely, to whome the ſaid power and libertie of traffike and trade of marchandize is granted by theſe our letters patents aforeſaid, and none others whatſoeuer, without their ſpeciall conſent and licenſe before had, ſhall, during the ſaid terme of ten yeeres, vſe, or haue trade or traffike, with or for any manner of goods or marchandizes, to and from the ſaid coaſtes or partes of Guinea, afore limited: We doe by theſe preſents, by our royall and ſupreame authoritie, ſtraightly charge, and command that no perſon, or perſons whatſoeuer, by themſelues, or by their factors, or ſeruants, during the ſaid terme of ten yeeres, ſhall in any wiſe trade or traffike, for or with any goods or marchandizes, to or from the ſaid coaſtes and partes of Guinea, afore limited, other then the ſaide William Brailey, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yong, Richard Doderige, Antony Daſſel, and Nicholas Turner, and ſuch as from time to time, they, or the moſt part of them, ſhall receaue into their societie and companie, to be traders with them, as is aforeſaid, as they tender our fauour, and will auoid our high diſpleaſure, and vpon paine of impriſonment of his or their bodies, at our will and pleaſure, and to loſe and forfeit the ſhippe or ſhippes, and all the goods, wares, and marchandizes, wherewith they, or any of them, ſhall, during the ſaide terme of tenne yeeres, trade, or traffike to or from the ſaid Countreies, or any part thereof, according to the limitation aboue mentioned, contrarie to our expreſſe prohibition and reſtraint, in that behalfe. And further, we doe by theſe preſents, giue and grant full power and authoritie, to the ſaide William Brailey, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yonge, Richard Doderige, Anthony Daſſell, and Nicholas Turner, and to ſuch other perſons, as they ſhall receaue into their ſocietie and companie, to be traders with them, as is aforeſaid, and the moſt part of them, for the time being: that they, and euery of them, by themſelues, their factors, deputies, or aſſignes, ſhall and may, from time to time, during the ſaid terme of ten yeeres, attach, arreſt, take, and ſeaſe all, and all manner of ſhippe, and ſhippes, goods, wares, and marchandizes whatſoeuer, which ſhall be brought from, or caried to the ſaid coaſtes and parts of Guinea, afore limited, contrarie to our will and pleaſure, and the true meaning of the ſame, declared and expreſſed in theſe our letters patents. Of all and euery which ſaid forfeitures whatſoeuer, the one third part ſhall be vnto vs, our heires, and ſucceſſors, and another third part thereof, we giue and grant by theſe preſents, for and towards the reliefe of the ſaid Portingals, continuing here vnder our protection, as is aforeſayd. And the other third part of all the ſame forfeitures, we doe by theſe preſents, of our certaine knowledge and meere motion, for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, giue and grant cleerely and wholy vnto the ſaid William Brailey, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yonge, Richard Doderige, Anthony Daſſell, and Nicholas Turner, and ſuch other perſons, as they ſhall receaue into their ſocietie, and companie, as is aforeſaid. And theſe our letters patents, or the inrolment or exemplification of the ſame, without any further or other warrant, ſhall from time to time, during the ſaid tenne yeeres, be a ſufficient warrant and authoritie to our Treaſurer of England, for the time being, and to the Barons of our Exchequer, and to all other our officers and miniſters whatſoeuer, to whome it ſhall or may appertaine, to allow, deliuer, and pay one third part of all the ſaid forfeitures, to the vſe of the ſaide Portingals, and one other third part of the ſame forfeitures, to the ſaid William Brailey, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yonge, Richard Doderige, Anthony Daſſell, and Nicholas Turner, and ſuch other perſons, as they ſhall receaue into their ſocietie and companie, to be traders with them, as aforeſaid, to their owne proper vſe and behoofe: which ſaide allowances and paiments thereof, our will and pleaſure is, and we doe ſtraightly charge and command, to be

from time to time duely made and performed accordingly, without any delay or denial of any our officers aforesaid, or any other our officers or ministers whatsoeuer. And we doe straightly charge and command, and by these presents prohibite, all and singular our customers, collectors, and farmers of our customes and subsidies, and controllers of the same, of and within our ports of the citie of London, and the Citie of Exeter, and all other ports, creekes, and places, within this our Realme of England, and euery of them, and all other our officers and ministers whatsoeuer, which haue or shall haue any dealing or intermedling, touching our said customes or subsidies, that they, ne any of them by themselues, their clarkes, deputies, or substitutes, or any of them take or receaue, or in any wise cause or suffer to be taken or receaued for vs, or in our name, or to our vse, or for, or in the names or to the vses of our heires or successors, of any person, or persons, any summe or summes of money, or other things whatsoeuer, during the said terme of ten yeeres, for, or in the name, lieu, or place of any custome, subsidie, or other thing or dutie, to vs, our heires, or successors, due, or to be due, for the customes or subsidies of any such goods, wares, or marchandizes, to be transported, caried, or brought to or from the priuileged places, before in these presents mentioned, or any of them: nor make, nor cause to be made any entry into, or of the bookes of subsidies or customes, nor make any agreement for the customes or subsidies, of, or for any goods, wares, or marchandizes, to be sent to, or returned from any the priuileged places, before in these presents mentioned, sauing onely with, and in the name, and by the consent of the saide William Brailey, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, John Doricot, John Yonge, Richard Doderige, Anthony Dassel, & Nicholas Turner, or of some of them, or of such as they, or the most part of them, shall receaue into their societie and company, as aforesaid. Prouided alwaies, that if at any time hereafter, we our selues, by our writing signed with our proper hand, or any sixe or more of our priuie Councell, for the time being, shall, by our direction, and by writing signed and subscribed with their hands, signifie and notifie to the said William Brailey, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, John Doricot, John Yonge, Richard Doderige, Anthony Dassell, and Nicholas Turner, or to any of them, or to any other, whom they, or the most part of them shall receaue into their companie and societie, as is aforesaid, or otherwise to our officers in our ports of Exeter, or Plimouth, by them to be notified to such as shall haue interest in this speciall priuiledge, that our will and pleasure is, that the said trade and traffike shall cease, and be no longer continued into the said coastes and partes of Guinea, before limited: then immediatly from and after the ende of sixe moneths next insuing, after such signification and notification so to be giuen to any of the saide companie and societie, as is aforesaid, or otherwise to our officers in our ports of Exeter, or Plimouth, by them to be notified to such as shall haue interest in this speciall priuiledge, these our present letters patents, and our grant therein contained, shall be vtterly voide, and of none effect, ne validitie in the lawe, to all intents and purposes: any thing before mentioned to the contrarie in any wise notwithstanding. Witnesse our selfe at Westminster, the third day of May, in the thirtieth yeere of our Raigne. 1588.

THE SECOND PART OF THE principall Nauigations, Voyages and Diſcoueries of the Engliſh nation, made to the North and Northeaſt quarters of the VVorld, with the directions, letters, priuiledges, diſcourſes & obſeruations incident to the ſame.

Certaine teſtimonies concerning king Arthur and his Conqueſts of the North Regions, taken out of the hiſtorie of the Kings of England, written by Galfridus Monumetenſis, and newly printed at Heidelberge, An. 1587.

Lib. 9. cap. 10.

ANno Chriſti, 517. Arthurus, ſecundo regni ſui anno, ſubiugatis totius Hyberniæ partibus, claſſem ſuam direxit in Iſlandiam, eámque debellato populo ſubiugauit. Exin diuulgato per cæteras inſulas rumore, quòd ei nulla Prouincia reſiſtere poterat, Doldauius Rex Gotlandiæ, & Gunfacius Rex Orcadum vltrò venerunt, promiſſóq; vectigali ſubiectionem fecerunt. Emenſa deinde hyeme, reuerſus eſt in Britanniam, ſtatúmq; Regni in firmam pacem renouans, moram duodecim annis ibidem fecit.

IN the yeere of Chriſt, 517. king Arthur in the ſecond yeere of his raigne, hauing ſubdued all partes of Ireland, ſayled with his fleete into Iſland, and brought it and the people thereof vnder his ſubiection. The rumor afterwards being ſpred throughout all the other Iſlands, that no countrey was able to withſtand him, Doldauius the king of Gotland, and Gunfacius the king of Orkney, came voluntarily vnto him and yelded him their obedience, promiſing to pay him tribute. The Winter being ſpent, he returned into England, and eſtabliſhing his kingdom in perfect peace, he continued there for the ſpace of 12. yeeres.

Lib. 9. cap. 12.

MIſſis deinde in diuerſa regna Legatis, inuitantur tam ex Gallijs, quàm ex collateralibus Inſulis Oceani, qui ad curiam venire deberent, &c. Et paulò poſt: Ex collateralibus autem Inſulis, Guillaumurius Rex Hyberniæ, Maluaſius Rex Iſlandiæ, Doldauius Rex Gotlandiæ, Gunnaſius Rex Orchadum, Lot Rex Norwegiæ, Aſchilius Rex Danorum.

¶ The ſame in Engliſh.

AFter that king Arthur ſending his meſſengers into diuers kingdoms, he ſummoned ſuch as were to come to his Court, as well out of France, as out of the adiacent Iſlands of the ſea, &c. and a little after. From thoſe adiacent Iſlands came Guillaumurius king of Ireland, Maluaſius king of Iſland, Doldauius king of Gotland, Gunnaſius king of Orkney, Lot the king of Norway, and Aſchilius the king of Denmarke.

Lib. 9. cap. 19.

AT Reges cæterarum insularum, quoniam non duxerant in morem Equites habere, pedites quot quisque debebat promittunt, ita vt ex sex Insulis, videlicet, Hyberniæ, Islandiæ, Gotlandiæ, Orcadum, Noruegiæ, atque Daciæ, sexies viginti millia essent annumerata.

BVt the kings of the other Islands, because it was not their custome to breed vp horses, promised the king as many footmen, as euery man was bound to send: so that out of the six Islands, namely, of Ireland, Island, Gotland, Orkney, Norway, and Denmarke, the king had sixe score thousand souldiers sent him.

A testimonie out of the foresaid Galfridus Monumetensis, concerning the Conquests of Malgo, king of England.

Lib. 11. cap. 7.

VOrtiporio successit Malgo, omnium ferè Britanniæ pulcherrimus, multorum tyrannorum depulsor, robustus armis, largior cæteris, & vltra modum probitate præclarus. Hic etiam totam Insulam obtinuit, & sex conprouinciales Oceani Insulas: Hyberniam videlicet, atque Islandiam, Gotlandiam, Orcades, Noruegiam, Daciam, adiecit dirissimis prælijs potestati suæ.

MAlgo succeeded Vortiporius which was the goodliest man in person of all Britaine, a prince that expulsed many tyrants. He was strong and valiant in warre, taller then most men that then liued, and exceeding famous for his vertues. This king also obtained the gouernment of the whole Island of Britaine, and by most sharpe warres he recouered to his Empire the sixe Islands of the Ocean sea, which before had bene made tributaries by king Arthur, namely, Ireland, Island, Gotland, Orkney, Norway and Denmarke.

A testimonie of the right and appendances of the crowne of the kingdome of Britaine, taken out of Master Lambard his Archaionomia, fol. 137. pag. 2.

ARthurus qui fuit quondam inclitissimus Rex Britonum, vir magnus fuit & animosus, & miles illustris. Parum fuit ei regnum istud, non fuit animus eius contentus regno Britanniæ. Subiugauit igitur sibi strenuè Scantiam totam, quę modo Norweia vocatur, & omnes insulas vltra Scantiam, scz. Islandiam, & Grenlandiam, quæ sunt de appendicijs Norweiæ, & Suechordam, & Hyberniam, & Gutlandiam, & Daciam, Semelandiam, Winlandiam, Curlandiam, Roe, Femelandiam, Wirelandiam, Flandriam, Cherelam, Lappam, & omnes alias terras & insulas Orientalis Oceani vsq; Russiam (in Lappa scilicet posuit Orientalem metam regni Britanniæ) & multas insulas vltra Scantiam, vsq; dum sub Septentrione, quæ sunt de appendicibus Scantiæ, quæ modo Norweia vocatur. Fuerunt autem ibi Christiani occultè. Arthurus autem Christianus optimus fuit, & fecit eos baptizari, & vnum Deum per totam Norweiam venerari, & vnam fidem Christi semper inuiolatam custodire, & suscipere. Ceperunt vniuersi proceres Norweiæ vxores suas de nobili gente Britonum tempore illo, vnde Norwegienses dicunt se exijsse de gente & sanguine regni huius. Impetrauit enim tẽporibus illis Arthurus Rex à domino Papa, & à Curia Romana, quod confirmata sit Norweia, in perpetuum coronę Britannię in augmentum regni huius, vocauitq; illam dictus Arthurus Cameram Britanniæ. Hac verò de causa dicunt Norwegienses, se debere in regno isto cohabitare & dicunt se esse de corpore regni huius, scilicet de corona Britanniæ. Maluerunt enim manere in regno isto, quam in terra eorum propria. Terra enim eorũ aridа est, & montuosa, & sterilis, & non sunt ibi segetes nisi per loca. Ista verò opulenta est, & fertilis, & crescunt hic segetes, & cætera vniuersa. Qua ex causa sæpius per vices gesta sunt bella atrocissima inter Anglos & Norwegienses, & interfecti sunt innumerabiles. Occupauerũt verò Norwegienses terras multas & insulas regni huius, quas adhuc detinent occupatas, nec potuerunt vnquam postea penitus euelli. Tandem modò confederati sunt nobis fide, & sacramento, & per vxores suas, quas postea cepetunt de sanguine nostro, & per affinitates, & coniugia. Ita demum constituit, & eis cõcessit bonus rex Edouardus propinquus noster (qui fuit optimus filius pacis) per commune consilium totius regni. Qua de causa possent, & debent prædicti de cætero nobiscum cohabitare, & remanere in regno, sicut coniurati fratres nostri.

The

¶ The ſame in Engliſh.

ARthur which was ſometimes the moſt renowmed king of the Britains, was a mightie, and valiant man, and a famous warrior. This kingdome was too litle for him, and his mind was not contented with it. He therefore valiantly ſubdued all Scantia, which is now called Norway, and all the Iſlands beyond Norway, to wit Iſland and Greenland, which are appertaining vnto Norway, Sweueland, Ireland, Gotland, Denmarke, Semeland, Windland, Curland, Roe, Femeland, Wireland, Flanders, Cherilland, Lapland, and all the other lands and Iſlands of the Eaſt ſea euen vnto Ruſſia (in which Lapland he placed the Eaſterly bounds of his Britiſh Empire) and many other Iſlands beyond Norway, euen vnder the North pole, which are appendances of Scantia, now called Norway. Theſe people were wild and ſauage, and had not in them the loue of God nor of their neighbors, becauſe all euill commeth from the North, yet there were among them certaine Chriſtians liuing in ſecret. But king Arthur was an exceeding good Chriſtian, and cauſed them to be baptized, and throughout all Norway to worſhip one God, and to receiue and keepe inuiolably for euer, faith in Chriſt onely. At that time all the noble men of Norway tooke wiues of the noble nation of the Britaines, whereupon the Norſes ſay, that they are deſcended of the race and blood of this kingdome. The aforeſayd king Arthur obteined alſo in thoſe dayes of the Pope & court of Rome, that Norway ſhould be for euer annexed to the crown of Britaine for the inlargement of this kingdome, and be called it the chamber of Britaine. For this cauſe the Norſes ſay, that they ought to dwell with vs in this kingdome, to wit, that they belong to the crowne of Britaine: for they had rather dwell here then in their owne natiue countrey, which is drie and full of mountaines, and barren, and no graine growing there, but in certaine places. But this countrey of Britaine is fruitfull, wherein come and all other good things doe grow and increaſe: for which cauſe many cruell battels haue bene oftentimes fought betwixt the Engliſhmen and the people of Norway, and infinite numbers of people haue bene ſlain, and the Norſes haue poſſeſſed many lands and Iſlands of this Empire, which vnto this day they doe poſſeſſe, neither could they euer afterwards be fully expelled. But now at length they are incorporated with vs by the receiuing of our religion and ſacraments, and by taking wiues of our nation, and by affinitie, and mariages. For ſo the good king Edward (who was a notable maintainer of peace) ordained and granted vnto them by the generall conſent of the whole kingdome, ſo that the people may, and ought from henceforth dwell and remaine in this kingdome with vs as our louing and ſworne brethren.

The nauigation of king Edgar, taken out of M. Dee his diſcourſe of the Britiſh Monarchie, pag. 54, 55, &c.

I Haue oftentimes (ſaid he) and many waies looked into the ſtate of earthly kingdomes, generally the whole world ouer (as farre as it may be yet knowen to chriſtian men commonly) being a ſtudie of no great difficultie, but rather a purpoſe ſomewhat anſwerable to a perfect Coſmographer, to find himſelfe Coſmopolites, a citizen and member of the whole and onely one myſticall citie vniuerſall, and ſo conſequently to meditate of the Coſmopoliticall gouernment thereof, vnder the king almightie, paſſing on very ſwiftly toward the moſt dreadfull and moſt comfortable terme preſixed.

And I find (ſaid he) that if this Britiſh Monarchie would heretofore haue followed the aduantages which they haue had onward, they might very well, ere this, haue ſurpaſſed by iuſtice, and godly ſort, any particular Monarchie els, that euer was on earth ſince mans creation: and that to all ſuch purpoſes as to God are moſt acceptable, and to all perfect common wealths, moſt honourable, profitable, and comfortable.

But yet (ſaid he) there is a little locke of Lady Occaſion, flickering in the aire, by our handes to catch hold on, whereby we may yet once more (before all be vtterly paſt, and for euer) diſcreetly and valiantly recouer and enioy, if not all our ancient and due appurtenances to this Imperial Britiſh monarchie, yet at the leaſt ſome ſuch notable portion thereof, as (all circumſtances duly and iuſtly appertaining to peace and amitie with forren princes being offred & vſed) this may become the moſt peaceable, moſt rich, moſt puiſſant, & moſt flouriſhing monarchie of all els (this day) in chriſtendome. Peaceable, I ſay, euen with the moſt part of the ſelfe ſame reſpects that good king Edgar had (being but a Saxon) and by ſundry ſuch means, as he chiefly in this Empire did put in proofe and bre triumphantly, whereupon his ſirname was Pacificus, moſt aptly and iuſtly. This peaceable king Edgar had in his minde about ſixe hundred yeeres paſt, the repreſentation of a great part of the ſelf ſame Idæa, which from aboue only, & by no mans deuiſe hath ſtreamed down into my imagination, being as it becommeth a Subiect carefull for the godly prosperitie of this British Empire vnder our most peaceable Queene Elizabeth.

Flores Histor. For, AEdgarus pacificus, Regni sui prospiciens vtilitati, pariter & quieti, quatuor millia octingentas sibi robustas cõgregauit naues, è quibus mille ducentas, in plaga Angliæ Orientali, mille ducẽtas in Occidentali, mille ducentas in Australi, mille ducẽtas in Septentrionali pelago cõstituit, vt ad defensionẽ regni sui, contra exteras nationes, bellorũ discrimina sustineret.

O wisedome imperiall, most diligently to be imitated, videlicet, prospicere, to foresee. O charitable kingly parent, that was touched with ardent zeale, for procuring the publike profite of his kingdome, yea and also the peaceable inioying thereof. O, of an incredible masse of treasure, a kingly portion, yet, in his coffers remayning: if then he had, (or late before) any warres, seeing no notable taxe, or contribution publike is hystorically mentioned to haue bin for the charges leuied: if in peace he himselfe flourished so wealthily: O maruellous politicall, and princely prudencie, in time of peace to foresee, and preuent, (and that most puissantly, and inuincibly) all possible malice, fraude, force, and mischiefe forraine. O most discrete liberalitie to such excellent vses, powring out his treasure so abundantly. O faithfull English people (then,) and worthie subiects, of such an Imperiall and godlie Gouernour. O your true, and willing hearts, and blessed readie handes (then,) so to impart such abundance of victuals for those huge Nauies maintenance: so (I say) as neither death or famine, seemed (foolishly) to be feared of you, for any intollerable want likely to ensue thereby, any prices of victuals complained of to be vnreasonably enhaunsed by you, finding for their great gaines so good, and rare opportunitie.

This peaceable king Edgar, was one of the perfect Imperiall Monarches of this British Empire, and therefore thus his fame remaineth (for euer) recorded.

Charta Regia, Henrici secundi. Anglici orbis Basileus, flos, & Decus AEdgarus, non minùs memorabilis Anglis, quàm Cyrus Persis, Romulus Romanis, Alexander Macedonibus, Arsaces Parthis, Carolus Francis. Anno vitæ 37. Regni sui cum fratre, & post 21. Idibus Iulij obijt, & apud Glascon sepelitur.

O Glastonbury, Glastonbury, the treasurie of the carcasses of so famous, and so many persons (Quæ olim mater sanctorum dicta es, & ab alijs, tumulus sanctorum, quam ab ipsis discipulis Domini, ædificatam fuisse venerabilis habet Antiquorum authoritas) How lamentable is thy case now we: how we hath hypocrisie and pride wrought thy desolation: though I omitte here the names of very many other, both excellent holy men, and mighty princes, whose carcases are committed to thy custody, yet that Apostolike Ioseph, that triumphant British Arthur, & now this peaceable and prouident Saxon king Edgar, doe force me with a certaine sorowful reuerence, here to celebrate thy memorie.

This peaceable king Edgar (as by auncient Records may appeare) his Sommer progresse, and yeerely chiefe pastimes were, the sayling round about this whole Isle of Albion, garded with his grand nauie of 4000. sayle at the least, parted into 4. equall partes of petie Nauies, each one being of 1000. ships, for so it is anciently recorded.

Ranulphus Cestrensis. Idem quoque AEdgarus, 4000. naues congregauit, ex quibus omni anno, post festum Paschale, 1000. naues ad quamlibet Angliæ partem statuit, sic, æstate Insulam circumnauigauit: hyeme verò, iudicia in Prouincia exercuit: & hæc omnia ad sui exercitium, & ad hostium feciterrorem.

COuld, and would that peaceable and wise king Edgar, before need, as being in peace and quiet with all nations about him, and notwithstanding mistrusting his possible enemies, make his pastimes so roially, politically, and triumphantly, with so many thousand ships, and at the least with ten times so many men as ships, and that yeerely: and shal we being not assured of such neighbors friendship, as may become to vs as cruel and tyrannicall enemies as neuer king Edgar needed to dread the like, and they as many and mightie princes, as neuer king Edgar coped with the like, shall we (said he) not iudge it some part of wisdome, to imitate carefully in some little proportion (though not with so many thousands) the prosperous pastimes of peaceable king Edgar, that Saxonicall Alexander? yea prosperous pastimes these may be iustly counted, by which he also made euident to the whole world, that as he wisely knew the ancient bounds and limits of this Brittish Empire, so that he could and would roially, iustly, & triumphantly enioy the same, spite of the deuil, & maugre the force of any forren potentate. And all that, so highly and faithfully to the glory of God finally intended and brought to passe, as the wisest and godliest prelates and counsellors of those dayes (so counted of and recorded) could best aduise & direct him, or perchance, but sincerely commend and ciuilly incourage him in, he being of himselfe so bent, as purposing first inuincible to fortifie the chiefe and vttermost wals of his Islandish Monarchie, against all forren encombrance possible.

Ina

And in that fortification furthering and assuring to trust best his owne ouersight and iudgement, in yeerely viewing the same in euery quarter thereof, and that as it were for his pastime imperiall, also in Summer time, to the end that afterward in all securitie, he might in Winter time (vacare) be at conuenient laisure on land, chiefly to set foorth Gods due honour, and secondly to vnderstand, and diligently to listen to the causes & complaints of his commons. For as Matthæus Westmonasterienſis of him to his imperiall commendation hath left vs a remembrance.

Habebat autem præterea consuetudinem, per omnes Regni prouincias transire, vt intelligeret quomodo legum iura, & suorum statuta decretorum, à principibus obseruarentur, & ne pauperes à potentibus prejudicium passi, opprimerentur, diligenter inuestigare solebat: in vno fortitudini, in altero Iusticię studens, & Reipub. regniq; vtilitati consulens in vtroque. Hinc hostibus circumquáq; timor, & amor omnium erga eum excreuerat subditorum.

Thus we see how in opportunitie, this peaceable Edgar procured to this Empire such prosperous securitie, that his true and faithfull subiects, all maner of wayes (that is at home and also at sea, both outward and inward) might peaceably, safely and securely employ their wits and trauels for the maruelous enriching of this kingdome, and pleasuring very many other, carying foorth the naturall commodities of this land, abounding here aboue our necessarie vses (and due store reserued) and likewise againe furnishing the same with all necessarie and not superfluous forren commodities, set from farre or forren countreys. This was in deed (as before is recorded) a kingly prouidence, Reipub. Regniq; vtilitati consulens, &c. besides with great vtilitie and profite publique forsene, and by his meanes enioyed, he himselfe vsed most gladly the aduantage of that securitie, in ministring of iustice, or causing the same to be executed all his kingdome ouer, not squemishly, frowningly or scornefully shunning the ragged and tattered serue of any suppliant, holding vp to him a simple soiled bill of complaint or petition, and that homely contriued, or afraied at, and timerously hasting from the sickly pale face or feeble limmed suter, extreemely constrained so to speake for himselfe, nor parcially smoothering his owne conscience, to fauour or maintaine the foule fault and trespasse vnlawfull of any his subiects, how mightie or necessarie soeuer, they (els) were, but diligently made search, least Pauperes à potentibus prædiudicium passi, opprimerentur.

Thus did publique securitie frō forren foe abroad, and true loue of his owne subiects, garding him at home, and the heauenly spirite directing all his good purposes, cause iustice and equitie in all quarters of this Albion to flourish. For which his peaceable and prosperous benefits at the eternall king his hand obteined, he became not insolent or declined to tyrannicall regiment (as some princes in other countries haue made their liues Comicotragicall) but with all his foresaid inuincible Sea force, aboundant wealth, triumphant peace, with securitie and Iustice ouer all his Monarchie preuailing, his heart was continually, and most zealously bent to set foorth the glory, laud and honour of the almightie Creator, the heauenly and euerlasting king, by such principall and princely meanes, as (then) were deemed to God most acceptable, as many monuments yet to our dayes remaining, doe of him vndoubtedly testifie: As this, for one.

Altitonantis Dei largiflua clementia, qui est rex Regum, Ego AEdgarus Anglorum Basileus omniúmq; Regum Insularum, Oceaníque Britanniam circumiacentis, cunctarúmq; nationum, quæ infra eam includuntur Imperator, & Dóminus, grátias ago ipsi Deo omnipotenti, Regi meo, qui meum Imperium sic ampliauit, & exaltauit super regnum patrum meorum: qui licet Monarchiam totius Angliæ adepti sunt à tempore Athelstam (qui primus regnum Anglorum, & omnes Nationes, quæ Britanniam incolunt, sibi Armis subegit) nullus tamen eorum vltra eius fines imperium suum dilatare aggressus est. Mihi autem concessit propitia Diuinitas, cum Anglorum Imperio, omnia regna Insularum Oceani, cum suis ferocissimis Regibus, vsque Noruegiam, maximámq; partem Hyberniæ, cum sua nobilissima Ciuitate Dublinia, Anglorum regno subiugare: Quos etiam omnes, meis Imperijs colla subdere (Dei fauente gratia) coegi. occupor addendis: Ne nunc inertia, nostriq; diebus (plus æquo) seruitus eius tepescere videatur, &c. 18. mei terreni Imperij anno, &c. Anno Incarnationis Dominicæ, 973.

Ego AEdgarus totius Albionis Basileus hoc priuilegium (tanta roboratum authoritate) crucis Thaumate confirmaui.

So that by all these rehersed Records it is most euident þ the peaceable king Edgar, was one of those Monarchs, in whose hands (if life had fulfilled) the incredible value and priuiledge granted by God and nature vnto this British monarchie, might haue bene peaceably purchased in such sort, as the very blessing and fauour of the diuine Trinitie hath laid meanes for our industrie to attaine to, and enioyed the same by.

And though sundry other valiant princes and kings of this land I could recite, which in times past haue either by intent gone about, or by wise and valiant exploit, haue meerely well prospered towards this Islandish appropriate supremacie attaining, yet neuer any other reasonable meanes was vsed, or by humane wit, or industrie can be contriued, to all purposes sufficient, but only by our sea forces preuailing, and so by our inuincible enioying all within the sea limites of our Britishe royaltie contained.

To which incredible political mistrie attaining, no easier, readier, or perfecter plat and introduction, is (as yet) come to my imagination, then is the present and continuall seruice of these our good and tall warlike shippes, with twentie smaller barkes, and those 80. ships (great and small) with 6660. apt men furnished, and all singularly well appointed for seruice both on sea and land, faithfully and diligently to be done in such circumspect and discreet order, as partly I haue in other places declared, and further (vpon good occasion offred) may declare.

This grand naute of peaceable king Edgar, of so many thousand shippes, and they furnished with an hundred thousand men at the least, with all the small intents of those sea forces, so inuincible, continually maintained, the order of the execution of their seruice, the godly and imperiall successe thereof, are in a maner kingly lessons and prophetical incouragements to vs left, euen now be as prouident for publique securitie as he was, to be as skilfull of our sea right and royall limits, and wisely to find our selues as able to recouer and enioy the same as he was, who could not chuse, but with the passing and peerely sayling about this Britishe Albion, with all the lesser Iles next adiacent round about it, he could not chuse I say, but by such full and peaceable possession, finde himself (according to right, and his hearts desire) the true and seueraigne Monarch of all the British Ocean, enuironing any way his empire of Albion and Ireland, with the lesser Islands next adiacent: with memoriall whereof, as with one very precious iewell Imperiall, he adorned the title and crowne of his regalitie, as with the testimonie annexed of the states and nobles of his Empire, to commit to perpetuall memorie, the stile of his chiefe worldly dignitie, in this very tenor of words before also remembred.

Note the Queenes maiesties royaltie ouer the Britishe Ocean sea, round about the Britishe Empire.

Ego AEdgarus Anglorum Basileus, omniumq; Regum, Insularum, Oceaniq; Britannium circumiacentis, cunctarumq; nationum, quæ infra eam includuntur, Imperator, & Dominus.

¶ The same in English.

TOuching the description of the North parts I haue taken the same out of the voyage of James Cnoyen of Hartzcuan Buske, which alleageth certaine conquests of Arthur king of Britaine: and the most part, and chiefest things among the rest, he learned of a certaine priest in the king of Norwayes court, in the yeere 1364. This priest was descended from them which king Arthur had sent to inhabite these islands, and he reported that in the yeere 1360, a certaine English frier, a Franciscan, and a Mathematician of Oxford, came into those islandes, who leauing them, and passing further by his Magicall Arte, described all those places that he saw, and tooke the height of them with his Astrolobe, according to the forme that I (Gerard Mercator) haue set downe, in my mappe, and as I haue taken it out of the aforesaid James Cnoyen. He said that those foure Indraughts were drawne into an inward gulfe or whirlpoole, with so great a force, that the shippes which once entred therein, could by no meanes be driuen backe againe, and that there is neuer in those partes so much winde blowing, as might be sufficient to driue a corne mill.

Giraldus Cambrensis (who flourished in the yeere 1210, vnder king John) in his booke of the miracles of Ireland, hath certeine words altogether alike with these, videlicet:

Not farre from these islands (namely the Hebrides, Island &c.) towardes the North there is a certaine woonderfull whirlpoole of the sea, whereinto all the waues of the sea from farre haue their course and recourse, as it were without stoppe: which, there conueying themselues into the secret receptacles of nature, are swallowed vp, as it were, into a bottomlesse pit, and if it chance that any shippe do passe this way, it is pulled, and drawne with such a violence of the waues, that eftsoones without remedy, the force of the whirlpoole deuoureth the same.

There is a notable whirlpoole on the coast of Norway, called Malestrande, about the latitude of 68.

The Philosophers describe foure indraughts of this Ocean sea, in the foure opposite quarters of the world, from whence many do coniecture that as well the flowing of the sea, as the blasts of the winde, haue their first originall.

A Testimonie of the learned Mathematician, maister Iohn Dee, touching the foresaid voyage of Nicholas de Linna.

ANno 1360 (that is to wit, in the 34 yeere of the reigne of the triumphant king Edward the third) a frier of Oxford, being a good Astronomer, went in companie with others to the most Northren islands of the world, and there leauing his company together, he trauelled alone, and purposely described all the Northern islands, with the indrawing seas: and the record therof at his returne he deliuered to the king of England. The name of which booke is Inuentio Fortunata (aliter fortunæ) qui liber incipit a gradu 54 vsq; ad polum. Which frier for sundry purposes after that, did fiue times passe from England thither, and home againe. Inuentio Fortunata.

It is to be noted, that from the hauen of Linne in Norfolke (whereof the foresaid Franciscan frier tooke his name) to Island, it is not aboue a fortnights sayling with an ordinary winde, and hath beene of many yeeres a very common and vsuall trade: which further appeareth by the priuileges granted to the Fishermen of the towne of Blacknie in the said countie of Norfolke, by king Edward the third, for their exemption and freedome from his ordinary seruice, in respect of their trade to Island. An. 2. & 4. & 31. Edwardi tertij.

A declaration of the Indies and landes discouered, and subdued vnto the Emperour, and the king of Portingall: And also of other partes of the Indies and rich Countries to be discouered, which the worshipfull M. Robert Thorne merchant of London (who dwelt long in the citie of Siuill in Spaine) exhorted king Henrie the eight to take in hand.

MOST EXCELLENT PRINCE,

EXperience prooueth that naturally all Princes be desirous to extend and enlarge their dominions and kingdomes. Wherefor it is not to be maruelled, to see them euery day procure the same, not regarding any cost, perill, and labour, that may thereby chance, but rather it is to be maruelled, if there be any prince content to liue quiet with his owne dominions. For surely the people would thinke he lacketh the noble courage and spirit of all other.

The world knoweth that the desires of Princes haue beene so feruent to obtaine their purpose, that they haue aduentured and prooued thinges to mans coniecture [illegible], the which they haue made possible, and also thinges difficult haue made facill: and [illegible] to obtaine their purpose, haue in maner turned vp and downe the whole world so many times, that the people inhabiting in the farthest region of the Occident haue pursued with great distresse, labours and perils, to penetrate and enter into the farthest regions of the Orient: and in likewise those people of the saide partes of the Orient, haue had no lesse labour and desire to enter and penetrate into the farthest land of the Occident, and so following their purchase haue not ceased vntill they could passe no farther by reason of the great seas.

This naturall inclination is cause, that scarsely it may be said, there is any kingdome stable, nor king quiet, but that his owne imagination, or other Princes his neighbours doe trouble him. God and nature hath prouided to your Grace, and to your Gracious progenitours, this Realme of England, and set it in so fruitfull a place, and within such limits, that it should seeme to be a place quiet and apaired from all the forsaid desire. One speciall cause is, for that it is compassed with the Sea: by reason thereof it seemes, this notwithstanding, their desires and noble courages haue beene most commonly like vnto others: and with marueilous great labours, costes and perils, they haue trauelled and passed the Seas, making warre, not onely with Kinges and dominions nigh neighbours, but also with them of farre countreys, and so haue woonne and conquered many rich and fayre dominions, and amplified this your Graces Realme with great victorie and glory. And also now of late your Grace hauing like courage and desire, and not without iust cause, to enlarge this your kingdome, and demand your limits and tribute of the French king, which at that present he withstayned, your Grace in person passed with a great power into France, putting your Graces person to great paine and labour, and without doubt victoriously you had conquered the said Realme of France, as ye began, if your aduersarie had not reconciled himselfe, and knowledged your Graces right and title: and so promised truely to pay the tribute then due, and fulfill your requests in all things, and also desired your Grace for peace, the which of your clemencie you could not refuse.

Now I considering this your noble courage and desire, and also perceiuing that your Grace may at your pleasure, to your greater glory, by a godly meane, with little cost, perill, or labour to your Grace or any of your subiects, amplifie and inrich this your said Realme, I know it is my bounden dutie to manifest this secret vnto your Grace, which hitherto, as I suppose, hath beene hid: which is, that with a small number of ships there may be discouered diuers New lands and kingdomes, in the which without doubt your Grace shall winne perpetuall glory, and your subiectes infinite profite. To which places there is left one way to discouer, which is into the North: for that of the foure parts of the world, it seemeth three parts are discouered by other Princes. For out of Spaine they haue discouered all the Indies and Seas Occidentall, and out of Portingall all the Indies and Seas Orientall: so that by this part of the Orient and Occident, they haue compassed the world. For the one of them departing toward the Orient, and the other toward the Occident, met againe in the course or way of the middest of the day, and so then was discouered a great part of the same Seas and coastes by the Spanyards. So that now rest to be discouered the said North partes, the which it seemeth to me, is onely your charge and dutie. Because the situation of this your Realme is thereunto nerest and apest of all other: and also for that you haue ‖ alreadie taken it in hande. And in mine opinion it will not seeme well to

A Secret.

The discouerie of the North.

‖ By Sebastia Cabot and sir Thomas Pert in the eight yeere of his reigne. And this is the voyage spoken of by Conlalus Quirdo, that came to S. Domingo.

to leaue ſo great and profitable an enterpriſe, ſeeing it may ſo eaſily and with ſo litle coſt, labour, and danger, be followed and obteined: though heeretofore your Grace hath made thereof a proofe, and found not the commoditie therby as you truſted, at this time it ſhall be no impediment. For there may be now prouided remedies for thinges, then lacked, and the inconueniences and lets remooued, that then were cauſe your Graces deſire tooke no full effect, which is, the courſes to be changed, and follow the aforeſaid new courſes. And concerning the mariners, ſhippes, and prouiſion, an order may be deuiſed and taken meet & conuenient, much better then hitherto. By reaſon whereof, and by Gods grace, no doubt your purpoſe ſhall take effect. Surely the coſt herein will be nothing, in compariſon to the great profit. The labour is much leſſe, yea nothing at all, where ſo great honour and glory is hoped for: and conſidering well the courſes, truely the danger and way is ſhorter to vs, then to Spaine or Portingall, as by euident reaſons appeareth.

And now to declare ſomething of the commoditie and vtilitie of this Nauigation and diſcouerie, it is very cleere and certaine, that the Seas that commonly men ſay, without great danger, difficultie and perill, yea rather it is impoſſible to paſſe, that thoſe ſame ſeas be nauigable and without any ſuch danger, but that ſhippes may paſſe and haue in them perpetuall cleerenеſſe of the day without any darkeneſſe of the night: which thing is a great commoditie for the nauigants, to ſee at all times round about them, as well the ſafegardes as daungers, and how great difference it is betweene the commoditie and perils of other which leeſe the moſt part of euery foure and twentie houres the ſaid light, and goe in darkeneſſe groping their way, I thinke there is none ſo ignorant but perceiueth this more plainely, then it can be expreſſed. Yea what a vantage ſhall your Graces ſubiects haue alſo by this light to diſcouer the ſtrange landes, countries, and coaſtes: for if they that be diſcouered, to ſaile by them in darkeneſſe is with great danger, much more then the coaſtes not diſcouered be dangerous to trauell by night or in darkeneſſe. Yet theſe dangers or darkeneſſe hath not letted the Spaniards and Portingals and other, to diſcouer many vnknowen Realmes, to their great perill. Which conſidered (and that your Graces ſubiectes may haue the ſame light) it will ſeeme your Graces ſubiects to be without actiuitie or courage, in leauing to do this glorious and noble enterpriſe. For they being paſt this litle way which they named ſo dangerous, (which may be two or three leagues before they come to the Pole, and as much more after they paſſe the Pole) it is cleere that from thence forth the ſeas and landes are as temperate as in theſe partes, and that then it may be at the will and pleaſure of the mariners, to chooſe whether they will ſaile by the coaſtes that be colde, temperate or hot. For they being paſt the Pole, it is plaine, they may decline to what part they liſt. Note.

If they will goe toward the Orient, they ſhall inioy the regions of all the Tartarians that extend toward the midday, and from thence they may goe and proceed to the land of the Chinas, and from thence to the land of Cathaio Orientall, which is of all the maine land moſt Orientall that can be reckoned from our habitation. And if from thence they doe continue their nauigation, following the coaſts that returne toward the Occident, they ſhall fall in with Malaca, and ſo with all the Indies which we call Orientall, and following that way, may returne hither by the Cape of Buona Speranſa: and thus they ſhall compaſſe the whole worlde. And if they will take their courſe after they be paſt the Pole, toward the Occident, they ſhall goe in the backe ſide of the new found land, which of late was diſcouered by your Graces ſubiectes, vntill they come to the backe ſide and South Seas of the Indies Occidentall. And ſo continuing their voyage they may returne thorow the ſtreight of Magellan to this countrey, and ſo they compaſſe alſo the worlde by that way: and if they goe this third way, and after they be paſt the Pole, goe right toward the Pole Antarctike, and then decline toward the lands and Iſlands ſituated betweene the Tropikes, and vnder the Equinoctiall, without doubt they ſhall finde there the richeſt landes and Iſlands of the world of golde, precious ſtones, balmes, ſpices, and other thinges that we heere eſteeme moſt: which come out of ſtrange countreyes, and may returne the ſame way. Tartaria. China. New found land diſcouered by the Engliſh.

By this it appeareth, your Grace hath not onely a great aduauntage of the riches, but alſo your ſubiectes ſhall not trauell halfe of the way that other doe, which goe round about as aforeſaide.

The

The booke made by the right worshipfull M. Robert Thorne in the yeere 1527, in Siuill, to Doctour Ley, Lord ambassadour for king Henrie the eight, to Charles the Emperour, being an information of the parts of the world, discouered by him and the king of Portingall: and also of the way to the Moluccaes by the North.

RIght noble and reuerend in &c. I haue receiued your letters, and haue procured and sent to know of your seruant, who, your Lordshippe wrote, should be sicke in Merchena. I cannot there or els where heare of him, without he be returned to you, or gone to S. Lucar, and shipt. I cannot iudge but that of some contagious sickenesse he died, so that the owner of the house for defeming his house would bury him secretly, and not be knowne of it. For such things haue often times happened in this countrey.

Also to write vnto your Lordshippe of the new trade of Spicerie of the Emperour, there is no doubt but that the Islands are fertile of Cloues, Nutmegs, Mace, and Cinnamom: and that the said Islandes, with other there about, abound with golde, Rubies, Diamonds, Balasses, Granates, Iacincts, and other stones & pearles, as all other lands that are vnder and neere the Equinoctiall. For we see, where nature giueth anything, she is no nigard. For as with vs and other, that are aparted from the said Equinoctiall, our mettals be Lead, Tinne, and Yron, so theirs be Golde, Siluer, and Copper. And as our fruites and graines be Apples, Nuts, and Corne, so theirs be Dates, Nutmegs, Pepper, Cloues, and other Spices. And as we haue Ieat, Amber, Cristall, Iasper, and other like stones, so haue they Rubies, Diamonds, Ballasses, Saphyres, Iacincts, and other like. And though some say that of such precious mettals, graines, or kinde of spices, and precious stones, the abundance and quantitie is nothing so great, as our mettals, fruits or stones aboue rehearsed: yet if it be well considered, how the quantitie of the earth vnder the Equinoctiall to both the Tropicall lines, (in which space is found the said Golde, spices and precious stones) is as much in quantitie, as almost all the earth from the Tropickes to both the Poles: it can not be denied but there is more quantitie of the said mettals, fruites, spices, and precious stones, then there is of the other mettals and other thinges before rehearsed. And I see that the preciousnesse of these things is measured after the distance that is betweene vs, and the things that we haue appetite vnto. For in this nauigation of the Spicerie was discouered, that their Islands nothing set by Golde, but set more by a knife and a naile of yron, then by his quantitie of Golde: and with reason, as the thing more necessarie for mans seruice. And I doubt not but in them should be as precious our corne and seeds, if they might haue them, as to vs their spices: and likewise the pieces of glasse that here we haue counterfeited, are as precious to them, as to vs their stones: which by experience is seene dayly by them that haue trade thither. This of the riches of those countries is sufficient.

Doctor Leys letters.

Touching that your Lordshippe wrote, whether it may be profitable to the Emperour or no, it may be without doubt of great profit: if as the king of Portingall doth, he would become a merchant, and prouide shippes and their lading, and trade thither alone, and defend the trade of their Ilands for himselfe. But other greater businesse withholdeth him from this. But still, as now it is begunne to be occupied, it would come to much. For the shippes comming in safetie, there would thither many euery yeere, of which to the Emperour is due of all the wares and iewels that come from thence the fift part for his custome cleare without any cost. And besides this he putteth in euery flote a certeine quantitie of money, of which he enioyeth of the gaines pound and pounde like as other aduenturers doe. In a flote of three shippes and a carauell that went from this citie armed by the merchants of it, which departed in Aprill last past, I and my partener haue one thousand foure hundred duckets that we employed in the said fleete, principally for that two Englishmen, friends of mine, which are somewhat learned in Cosmographie, should goe in the same shippes, to bring me certaine relation of the situation of the countrey, and to be expert in the nauigation of those seas, and there to haue informations of many other thinges, and aduise that I desire to know especially. Seeing in these quarters are shippes, and mariners of that country, and cardes by which they saile, though much vnlike ours: that they should procure to haue the said cards, and learne how they vnderstand them, and especially to know what nauigation they haue for those Islands Northwards, and Northeastward.

This was the fleet wherein Cabot discouered the riuer of Plate, 1526.

Note.

For if from the said Islandes the sea did extend, without interposition of land, to saile from the North point to the Northeast point one thousand seuen hundred or one thousand eight hundred leagues, leagues, they ſhould come to the New founde ilandes that wee diſcouered, and ſo we ſhould be neerer to the ſaid Spicerie by almoſt two thouſand leagues then the Emperour, or the king of Portingall are. And to aduiſe your Lordſhippe whether of theſe Spiceries of the king of Portingall or the Emperours is neerer, and alſo of the titles that either of them hath, and how our New found landes are parted from it, (for that by writing without ſome demonſtration, it were hard to giue any declaration of it) I haue cauſed that your Lordſhippe ſhall receiue herewith a litle Mappe or Carde of the world: the which, I feare me, ſhall put your Lordſhippe to more labour to vnderſtand, then me to make it, onely for that it is made in ſo little roome that it cannot be but obſcurely ſet out, that is deſired to be ſeene in it, and alſo for that I am in this ſcience little expert: Yet to remedy in part this difficultie, it is neceſſary to declare to your Lordſhippe my intent, with which I truſt you ſhall perceiue in this Card part of your deſire, if, for that I can not expreſſe mine intent, with my declaration I do not make it more obſcure.

The New found ilands diſcouered by the Engliſh.

A Mappe of the world.

Firſt, your Lordſhippe knoweth that the Coſmographers haue diuided the earth by 360 degrees in latitude, and as many in longitude, vnder the which is comprehended all the roundneſſe of the earth: the latitude being diuided into foure quarters, ninetie degrees amount to euery quarter, which they meaſure by the altitude of the Poles, that is the North and South ſtarres, being from the line Equinoctiall till they come right vnder the North ſtarre the ſaid ninetie degrees: and as much from the ſaid line Equinoctiall to the South ſtarre be other ninetie degrees. And as much more is alſo from either of the ſaid ſtarres againe to the Equinoctiall. Which imagined to be roũd, is ſoone perceiued thus, 360 degrees of latitude to be conſumed in the ſaid foure quarters of ninetie degrees a quarter, ſo that this latitude is the meaſure of the world from North to South, and from South to North. And the longitude, in which are alſo counted other 360, is counted from Weſt to Eaſt, or from Eaſt to Weſt, as in the Card is ſet.

To know the latitudes.

The ſaid latitude your Lordſhippe may ſee marked and diuided in the end of this Card on the left hand: ſo that if you would know in what degrees of latitude any region or coaſt ſtandeth, take a compaſſe, and ſet the one foot of the ſame in the Equinoctiall line right againſt the ſaid region, and apply the other foot of the compaſſe to the ſaid region or coaſt, and then ſet the ſaid compaſſe at the end of the Card, where the degrees are diuided. And the one foot of the compaſſe ſtanding in the line Equinoctiall, the other will ſhew in the ſcale the degrees of altitude or latitude that the ſaid region is in. Alſo the longitude of the world I haue ſet out in the nether part of the Card, conteining alſo 360 degrees: which begin to be counted after Ptolome and other Coſmographers from an head land called Capo verde, which is ouer againſt a little croſſe made in the part Occidentall, where the diuiſion of the degrees beginneth, and endeth in the ſame Capo verde.

To know the longitudes.

Now to know in what longitude any land is, your Lordſhippe muſt take a ruler or a compaſſe, and ſet the one foot of the compaſſe vpon the land or coaſt whoſe longitude you would know, and extend the other foot of the compaſſe to the next part of one of the tranſuerſall lines in the Orientall or Occidentall part: which done, ſet the one foot of the compaſſe in the ſaid tranſuerſall line at the end of the nether ſcale, the ſcale of longitude, and the other foot ſheweth the degree of longitude that the region is in. And your Lordſhippe muſt vnderſtand that this Card, though little, contineth the vniuerſall whole world betwixt two Collaterall lines, the one in the Occidentall part deſcendeth perpendicular vpon the 175 degree, and the other in the Orientall on the 170 degree, whoſe diſtance meaſureth the ſcale of longitude. And that which is without the two ſaid tranſuerſall lines, is onely to ſhew how the Orientall part is ioyned with the Occident, and Occident with the Orient. For that that is ſet without the line in the Orientall part, is the ſame that is ſet within the other line in the Occidentall part: and that that is ſet without the line in the Occidentall part, is the ſame that is ſet within the line on the Orientall part, to ſhew that though this figure of the world in plaine or flatte ſeemeth to haue an end, yet one imagining that this ſaid Carde were ſet vpon a round thing, where the endes ſhoulde touche by the lines, it would plainelie appeare how the Orient part ioyneth with the Occident, as there without the lines it is deſcribed and figured.

And for more declaration of the ſaid Card, your Lordſhippe ſhall vnderſtand, that beginning on the part Occidentall within the line, the firſt land that is ſet out, is the maine land and Iſland of the Indies of the Emperour. Which maine land or coaſt goeth Northward, and finiſheth in the land that we found, which is called heere Terra de Labrador. So that it appeareth the ſaid land that we found, and the Indies to be all one maine land.

The ſaid coaſt from the ſaid Indies Southward, as by the Card your Lordſhippe may ſee, commeth to a certeine ſtraight Sea, called Eſtrecho de todos Sanctos: by which ſtraight Sea the Spanyardes goe to the Spiceries, as I ſhall declare more at large: the which ſtraight Sea is right againſt the three hundred fifteene degrees of longitude, and is of latitude or altitude from

Now called the ſtraight of Magelane.

the

the Equinoctiall three and fiftie degrees. The first land from the said beginning of the Card toward the Orient are certaine Illandes of the Canaries, and Illandes of Capo verde. But the first maine land next to the line Equinoctiall is the said Capo verde, and from thence Northward by the streight of this Sea of Italie. And so followeth Spaine, France, Flanders, Almaine, Denmarke, and Norway, which is the highest part toward the North. And ouer against Flanders are our Illands of England and Ireland. Of the landes and coastes within the streights I haue set out onely the Regions, diuiding them by lines of their limits, by which plainely I thinke your Lordship may see, in what situation euery region is, and of what highnesse, and with what regions it is ioyned. I do thinke few are left out of all Europe. In the parts of Asia and Affrica I could not so well make the said diuisions: for that they be not so well knowen, nor need not so much. This I write because in the said Card be made the said lines and strikes, that your Lordship should vnderstand wherefore they doe serue. Also returning to the foresaid Capo verde, the coast goeth Southward to a Cape called Capo de buona speransa: which is right ouer against the 60 & 65 degree of longitude. And by this Cape goe the Portingals to their Spicerie. For from this Cape toward the Orient, is the land of Calicut, as your Lordship may see in the head land ouer against the 130 degree. From the said Cape of Buona speransa the coast returneth toward the line Equinoctial, and passing forth, entreth the red sea, & returning out, entreth againe into the gulfe of Persie, & returneth toward the Equinoctiall line, till that it commeth to the head land called Calicut aforesaid, and from thence the coast making a gulfe, where is the riuer of Ganges, returneth toward the line to a head land called Malaca, where is the principall Spicerie: and from this Cape returneth and maketh a great gulfe, and after the coast goeth right toward the Orient, and ouer against this last gulfe and coast, be many Illandes, which be Illandes of the Spiceries of the Emperour. Upon which the Portingals and he be at variance.

Note. The said coast goeth toward the Orient, and endeth right against the 155 degrees, and after returneth toward the Occident Northward: which coast not yet plainely knowne, I may ioyne to the New found land found by vs, that I spake of before. So that I finish with this briefe declaration of the Card aforesaid. Well I know I should also haue declared how the coasts within the streights of the Sea of Italie runne. It is plaine that passing the streights on the North side of that Sea after the coast of Granado, and with that which pertaines to Spaine, is the coast of that which France hath in Italie. And then followeth in one piece all Italie, which land hath a arme of the Sea, with a gulfe which is called Mare Adriaticum. And in the bottome of this gulfe is the citie of Uenice. And on the other part of the said gulfe is Sclauonia, and next Grecia, then the streights of Constantinople, and then the sea called Euxinus, which is within the said streights: and comming out of the said streights, foloweth Turcia maior (though now on both sides it is called Turcia.) And so the coast runneth Southward to Syria, and ouer against the said Turcia are the Illands of Rhodes, Candie, and Cyprus. And ouer against Italie are the Illands of Sicilia and Sardinia. And ouer against Spaine is Maiorca and Minorca. In the end of the gulfe of Syria is Iudea. And from thence returneth the coast toward the Occident, till it commeth to the streights where we beganne, which all is the coast of Affrike or Barbarie. Also your Lordshippe shall vnderstand that the coastes of the Sea throughout all the world, I haue coloured with yellow, for that it may appeare that all that is within the line coloured yellow, is to be imagined to be maine land or Illand: and all without the said line so coloured to be Sea: whereby it is easie and light to know it. Albeit in this little roome any other description would rather haue made it obscure then cleere. Also the said coasts of the Sea are all set iustly after the maner and forme as they lie, as the nauigation approoueth them throughout all the Card, saue only the coasts and Illes of the Spicerie of the Emperour which is from ouer against the 160 to the 215 degree of longitude. For these coastes and situations of the Illands, euery of the Cosmographers and pilots of Portingall and Spaine do set after their purpose. The Spanyards more towards the Orient, because they should appeare to appertaine to the Emperour: and the Portingals more toward the Occident, for that they should fall within their iurisdiction. So that the pilots and nauigants thither, which in such cases should declare the truth, by their industrie do set them falsly euery one to fauor his prince. And for this cause can be no certaine situation of that coast and Illands, till this difference betwixt them be verified. Now to come to the purpose of your Lordships demand touching the difference betweene the Emperour and the king of Portingall, to vnderstand it better, I must declare the beginning of this discouerie. Though peraduenture your Lordship may say that in that I haue written ought of purpose, I fall in the prouerbe, A gemino ouo bellum: But your Lordship commanded me to be large, and I take licence to be prolixous, and shalbe peraduenture tedious, but your Lordship knoweth that Nihil ignorantia verbosius.

Doctor Leys demand.

In the yeere 1484. the king of Portingall minded to arme certaine Caruelles to discouer this Spicerie. Then forasmuch as he feared that being discouered, euery other Prince would sende and trade thither, so that the cost and perill of discouering should bee his, and the profite common: wherefore first hee gaue knowledge of this his minde to all princes Christened, saying that hee would seeke amongst the infidels newe possessions of regions, and therefore would make a certaine armie: and that if any of them would helpe in the cost of the said armie, hee should enioy his part of the profite or honour that should come of it. And as then this discouering was holden for a strange thing and vncertaine. Nowe they say, that all the Princes of Christendome answered, that they would be no part of such an armie, nor yet of the profite that might come of it. After the which he gaue knowledge to the Pope of his purpose, and of the answere of all the Princes, desiring him that seeing that none would helpe in the costes, that hee would iudge all that should bee founde and discouered to be of his iurisdiction, and commaunde that none other Princes should intermeddle therewith. The Pope said not as Christ saith, Quis me constituit iudicem inter vos? he did not refuse, but making himselfe as Lord and Iudge of all, not onely graunted that all that should be discouered from Orient to Occident, should be the kings of Portingall, but also, that vpon great censures no other Prince should discouer but hee. And if they did, all to bee the kings of Portingall. So he armed a fleete, and in the yeere 1497. were discouered the Islands of Calicut, from whence is brought all the spice he hath. The Pope reprehended.

After this in the yeere 1492. the king of Spaine willing to discouer lands toward the Occident without making any such diligence, or taking licence of the king of Portingall, armed certaine Caruels, and then discouered this India Occidentall, especially two Islandes of the saide India, that in this Carde I set forth, naming the one la Dominica, and the other Cuba, and brought certaine golde from thence. Of the which when the king of Portingal had knowledge, hee sent to the king of Spaine, requiring him to giue him the said Islands. For that by the sentence of the Pope all that should be discouered was his, and that hee should not proceede further in the discouerie without his licence. And at the same time it seemeth that out of Castill, into Portingall had gone for feare of burning infinite nomber of Iewes that were expelled out of Spaine, for that they would not turne to be Christians, and carried with them infinite nomber of golde and siluer. So that it seemeth that the king of Spaine answered, that it was reason that the king of Portingall asked, and that to be obedient to that which the Pope had decreed, hee would giue him the sayde Islands of the Indies. Nowe for as much as it was decreed betwixt the saide kings, that none should receiue the others subiects fugitiues, nor their goods, therfore the king of Portingal should pay and returne to the king of Spaine a million of golde or more, that the Iewes had caried out of Spaine to Portingal, & that in so doing he would giue these Islands, and desist from any more discouering. And not fulfilling this, hee would not onely not giue these Islands, but procure to discouer more where him thought best. It seemeth that the king of Portingal would not, or could not with his ease pay this money. And so not paying, that he could not let the king of Spaine to discouer: so that he enterprised not toward the Orient where he had begun & found the Spicerie. And consented to the king of Spaine, that touching this discouering they should deuide the worlde betweene them two. And that all that should be discouered from Cape Verde, where this Carde beginneth to be counted in the degrees of longitude to 180. of the saide scale of longitude, which is halfe the world toward the Orient, & finisheth in this Card right ouer against a litle crosse made at the said 180. degrees, to be the king of Portingals. And all the land from the said Crosse toward the Occident, vntill it ioyneth with the other Crosse in the Orient, which containeth the other hundreth and eightie degrees, that is the other halfe of the worlde, to be the king of Spaines. So that from the land ouer against the said hundreth & eightie degrees vntill it finish in the three hundred and sixtie on both the ends of the Card, is the iurisdiction of the king of Spaine. So after this maner they deuided the world betweene them.

Now for that these Islands of Spicerie fall neere the terme and limits betweene these Princes (for as by the said Card you may see they beginne from one hundred and sixtie degrees of longitude, and ende in 215.) it seemeth all that falleth from 160. to 180. degrees, should be of Portingall: and all the rest of Spaine. And for that their Cosmographers and Pilots coulde not agree in the situation of the sayde Islandes (for the Portingals set them all within their 180. degrees, and the Spaniards set them all without): and for that in measuring, all the Cosmographers of both partes, or what other that euer haue bene cannot giue certaine order to measure the longitude of the worlde, as they doe of the latitude: for that there is no starre fixed from East to West, as are the starres of the Poles from North to South, but all mooueth with the mouing diuine: no maner can bee founde howe certainely it may bee measured, but The longitudes hard to be found out.

but by coniectures, as the Nauigants haue esteemed the way they haue gone. But it is manifest that Spaine had the situation of al the lands from Cape Verde, toward ỹ Orient of the Portingals to their 180. degrees. And in all their Cardes they neuer hitherto set the saide Islands within their limitation of the saide 180. degrees, (Though they knewe very well of the Islandes,) til nowe that the Spaniards discouered them. And it is knowen that the king of Portingal had trade to these Islands afore, but would neuer suffer Portingall to goe thither from Calicut: for so much as he knewe that it fell out of his dominion: least by going thither there might come some knowledge of those other Islands of the king of Spaine, but bought the cloues of Marchants of the countrey, that brought them to Calicut, much dearer then they would haue cost, if hee had fetched them, thinking after this maner it would abide alwayes secret. And now that it is discouered he sendes and keepes the Spaniards from the trade all that he can.

Also it should seeme that when this foresaid consent of the diuision of the worlde was agreed betweene them, the king of Portingall had alreadie discouered certaine Islands that lye ouer against Cape Verde, and also certaine part of the maine lande of India toward the South, from whence hee fette Brasil, and called it the lande of Brasill. So for that all should come in his terme and limites, hee tooke three hundred and seuentie leagues beyonde Cape Verde: and after this his 180. degrees, being his part of the worlde, should begin in the Carde right ouer against the 340. degrees, where I haue made a litle compasse with a crosse, and should finish at the 160. degree, where also I haue made an other litle marke. And after this computation without any controuersie, the Ilands of the spicerie fal out of the Portingals domination. So that nowe the Spaniards say to the Portingals, that if they would beginne their 180. degrees from the saide Cape Verde, to the intent they should extende more toward the Orient, and so to touche those Islands of the Spicerie of the Emperour, which is al that is betweene the two crosses made in this Carde, that then the Islands of Cape Verde and the lande of Brasill that the Portingals nowe obtaine is out of the saide limitation, and that they are of the Emperours. Or if their 180. degrees they count from the 370. leagues beyonde the saide Cape Verde, to include in it the saide Islands and landes of Brasill, then plainely appeareth the saide 180. degrees should finish long before they come to these Ilands of the Spicerie of the Emperour. As by this Carde your Lordship may see. For their limits should begin at the 340. degrees of this Carde, and ende at 160. degrees, where I haue made two litle markes of the compasse with crosses in them.

So that plainely it should appeare by reason, that the Portingals should leaue these Ilands of Cape Verde and lande of Brasill, if they would haue part of the Spicerie of the Emperour: or els holding these, they haue no part there. To this the Portingals say, that they will beginne their 180. degrees from the selfe same Cape Verde: for that it may extende so much more toward the Orient, and touche these Islands of the Emperours: and would winne these Islands of Cape Verde and land of Brasill neuertheless, as a thing that they possessed before the consent of this limitation was made.

So none can verely tell which hath the best reason. They be not yet agreed, Quare subiudice lis est.

But without doubt (by all coniectures of reason,) the saide Islands fall all without the limitation of Portingall, and pertaine to Spaine, as it appeareth by the most part of all the Cards made by the Portingals, saue those they haue falsified of late purposely.

New found land discouered by the Englishmen.

But nowe touching that your Lordshippe wrote, whether that which we discouered touched any thing the foresaide coastes: once it appeareth plainely, that the Newe founde lande that we discouered, is all a maine lande with the Indies Occidentall, from whence the Emperour hath all the golde and pearles: and so continueth of coast more then 5000. leagues of length, as by this Carde appeareth. For from the said New landes it proceedeth toward the Occident to the Indies, and from the Indies returneth toward the Orient, and after turneth South warde vntil it come to the Straites of Todos Sanctos, which I recken to be more then 5000. leagues.

Note.

So that to the Indias it should seeme that wee haue some title, at least that for our discouering wee might trade thither as other doe. But all this is nothing neere the Spicerie.

To saile by the Pole.

Nowe then (if from the saide Newe founde landes the Sea bee nauigable) there is no doubt, but sayling Northwarde and passing the Pole descending to the Equinoctiall line, wee shall hitte these Islandes, and it should bee a much shorter way, then either the Spaniards or the Portingals haue. For wee be distant from the Pole but thirtie and nine degrees, and from the Pole to the Equinoctiall be 90. the which added together, be an hundreth twentie and nine degrees, leagues 2480. and miles 7440: Where wee should finde these Islands. And the nauigation of the Spaniards to the Spicerie is, as by this Carde you may see, from Spaine to the

Islands

Ilands of Canarie, and from these Ilands they runne ouer the line Equinoctiall Southwarde to the Cape of the maine land of the Indians, called the Cape of S. Augustine, and from this Cape Southwardes to the Straites of Todos Sanctos, in the which Nauigation to the saide Straites is 1700. or 1800. leagues: and from these Straites being past them, they returne towarde the line Equinoctiall to the Ilands of Spicrie, which are distant from the saide Straites 4200. or 4300. leagues. Of the straites of Magellan.

The Nauigation of the Portingals to the saide Ilands, is departing from Portingall Southwarde towarde the Cape Verde, and from thence to another Cape passing the line Equinoctiall called Capo de bona speransa, and from Portingall to the Cape is 1800. leagues, and from this Cape to the Ilands of Spicerie of the Emperour is 2500. leagues.

So that by this Nauigation amounteth all to 4300. leagues. So that (as afore is said,) if betweene our Newe founde landes or Norway, or Island, the seas towarde the North be Nauigable, wee should goe to these Ilandes a shorter way by more then 2000. leagues.

And though wee went not to the saide Ilandes, for that they are the Emperours or kings of Portingall, wee should by the way and comming once to the line Equinoctiall, finde landes no lesse riche of golde and Spicerie, as all other landes are vnder the saide line Equinoctiall: and also should, if we may passe vnder the North, enioy the Nauigation of all Tartarie. Which should bee no lesse profitable to our commodities of cloche, then these Spiceries to the Emperour, and king of Portingall. Note. Benefite to England.

But it is a generall opinion of all Cosmographers, that passing the seuenth clime, the sea is all Ice, and the colde so much that none can suffer it. And hitherto they had all the like opinion, that vnder the line Equinoctiall for much heate the land was vnhabitable. Obiection.

Yet since (by experience is proued) no land so much habitable nor more temperate. And to conclude, I thinke the same should bee founde vnder the North, if it were experimented. For as all iudge, Nihil fit vacuum in rerum natura: So I iudge, there is no lande vnhabitable, nor Sea innauigable. If I should write the reason that presenteth this vnto me, I should be to prolixe, and it seemeth not requisite for this present matter. God knoweth that though by it I shoulde haue no great interest, yet I haue had and still haue no litle minde of this businesse: So that if I had facultie to my will, it should be the first thing that I would vnderstande, euen to attempte, if our Seas Northwarde be Nauigable to the Pole, or no. I reason, that as some sicknesses are hereditarious, and come from the father to the sonne, so this inclination or desire of this discouerie I inherited of my father, which with another marchant of Bristowe named Hugh Eliot, were the discoueres of the Newe found landes, of the which there is no doubt, (as nowe plainely appeareth) if the mariners would then haue bene ruled, and folowed their Pilots minde, the lands of the West Indies (from whence all the golde commeth) had bene ours. For all is one coast, as by the Carde appeareth, and is afore said. Answere. A true opinion. A voyage of discouerie by the Pole. M. Thorne and M. Eliot discoueres of Newe found land. The cause why the West Indies were not ours: which also Sebastian Gabot writeth in an Epistle to Baptist Ramusius.

Also in this Carde by the coastes where you see C. your Lordship shall vnderstande it is set for Cape or head land, where I. for Iland, where P. for Port, where R. for Riuer. Also in all this little Carde I thinke nothing be erred touching the situation of the lande, saue onely in these Ilands of Spicrie: which, for that (as afore is said,) euery one setteth them after his minde, there can be no certification howe they stande. I doe not denie, that there lacke many things, that a consummate Carde should haue, or that a right good demonstration desireth. For there should be expressed all the mountaines and Riuers that are principall of name in the earth, with the names of Portes of the sea, the names of all principall cities, which all I might haue set, but not in this Carde, for the litle space would not consent.

Your Lordship may see that seeing onely the names almost of euery Region, and yet not of all, the roome is occupied. Many Ilands are also left out, for the said lacke of roome, the names almost of all Portes put to silence, with the roses of the windes or pointes of the compasse: For that this is not for Pilots to saile by, but a summarie declaration of that which your Lordship commanded. And if by this your Lordship cannot well perceiue the meaning of this Card, of the which I would not marueile, by reason of the rude composition of it, will it please your Lordship to aduise mee to make a bigger and a better Mappe, or els that I may cause one to be made. For I know my selfe in this and all other nothing perfect, but Licet semper discens, nunquam tamen ad perfectam scientiam perueniens. Also I know, to set the forme Spherical of the world in Plano after ꝑ true rule of Cosmgraphie, it would haue bene made otherwise then this is: howbeit the demonstration should not haue bene so plaine.

And also these degrees of longitude, that I set in the lower part of this card, should haue bene set along by ꝑ line Equinoctial, & so then must be imagined. For ꝑ degrees of longitude were either of the poles are nothing equall in bignesse to them in the Equinoctiall. But these are set so, for that setting them a long the Equinoctiall, it woulde haue made obscure a great part of the mappe. Many other curiosities may bee required, which for the nonce I did not set downe, as well for that the intent I had principally was to satisfie your doubt touching the spicerie, as for that I lacke leasure and time. I trust your Lordship correcting that which is erred, will accept my good will, which is to doe any thing that I may in your Lordships seruice. But from henceforth I knowe your Lordship will rather commaund me to keepe silence, then to be large, when you shall be wearied with the reading of this discourse. Jesus prosper your estate and health.

Your Lordships
Robert Thorne 1527.

ALso this Carde and that which I write touching the variance betweene the Emperour and the king of Portingall, is not to bee shewed or communicated there with any of that Court. For though there is nothing in it preiudiciall to the Emperour, yet it may bee a cause of paine to the maker: as wel for that none may make these Cardes, but certaine appointed and allowed for masters, as for that peraduenture it would not sounde well to them, that a stranger shoulde knowe or discouer their secrets: and woulde appeare worst of all, if they vnderstand that I write touching the short way to the spicerie by our Seas. Though peraduenture of troth it is not to be looked to, as a thing that by all opinions is vnpossible, and I thinke neuer will come to effect: and therefore neither here nor elsewhere is it to bee spoken of. For to mooue it amongst wise men, it should be had in derision. And therefore to none I would haue written nor spoken of such things, but to your Lordshippe, to whome boldly I commit in this all my foolish fantasie as to my selfe. But if it please God that into Englande I may come with your Lordshippe, I will shewe some coniectures of reason, though against the generall opinion of Cosmographers, by which shall appeare this that I say not to lacke some foundation. And till that time I beseeche your Lordshippe let it bee put to silence: and in the meane season I may please God to sende our two Englishmen, that are gone to the Spicerie, which may also bring more plaine declaration of that which in this case might be desired.

Also I knowe I needed not to haue beene so prolixe in the declaration of this Carde to your Lordship, if the said Carde had bene very well made after the rules of Cosmographie. For your Lordship would soone vnderstande it better then I, or any other that coulde haue made it: and so it should appeare that I shewed Delphinum natare. But for that I haue made it after my rude manner, it is necessarie that I be ꝑ verlarer or gloser of mine owne worke, or els your Lordship shuld haue had much labour to vnderstande it, which nowe with it also cannot be excused, it is so grossly done. But I knewe you looked for no curious things of mee, and therefore I trust your Lordship will accept this, and holde me for excused. In other mens letters that they write they craue pardon that at this present they write no larger: but I must finish, as I king pardon that at this present I write so largely. Jesus preserue your Lordship with augmentation of dignities.

Ordinances

Ordinances, instructions, and aduertisements of and for the direction of the intended voyage for Cathaye, compiled, made, and deliuered by the right worshipfull M. Sebastian Cabota Esquier, gouernour of the mysterie and companie of the Marchants aduenturers for the discouerie of Regions, Dominions, Islands & places vnknowen, the 9. day of May, in the yere of our Lord God 1553. and in the 7. yeere of the raigne of our most dread soueraine Lord Edward the 6. by the grace of God king of England, Fraunce and Ireland, defender of the faith, and of the Church of England and Ireland, in earth supreame head.

FIrst the Captaine general, with the pilot maior, the masters, marchants & other officers, to be so knit and accorded in vnitie, loue, conformitie, and obedience in euery degree on all sides, that no dissention, variance, or contention may rise or spring betwixt them and the mariners of this companie, to the damage or hinderance of the voyage: for that discention (by many experiences) hath ouerthrowen many notable intended and likely enterprises and exploits.

2 Item, for as much as euery person hath giuen an othe to be true, faithfull, and loyall subiects, and liege men to the kings most excellent Maiestie, his heires and successors, and for the obseruation of all lawes & statutes, made for the preseruation of his most excellent Maiestie, & his crowne Imperiall of his realmes of England and Ireland, and to serue his grace, the Realme, and this present voyage truely, and not to giue vp, intermit, or leaue off the said voyage and enterprise vntill it shall be accomplished, so farre forth as possibilitie & life of man may serue or extend: Therefore it behoueth euery person in his degree, as well for conscience, as for dueties sake, to remember his said charge, and the accomplishment thereof.

3 Item, where furthermore euery mariner or passenger in his shippe, hath giuen like othe to be obedient to the Captaine generall, and to euery Captaine and master in his ship, for the obseruation of these present orders contained in this booke, and all other which hereafter shall be made by the 12. counsailers in this present booke named, or the most part of them, for the better conduction, and preseruation of the fleete, and atchieuing of the voyage, and to be prompt, readie and obedient in all acts and feates of honestie, reason, and duetie to be ministred, shewed & executed, in aduancement and preferment of the voyage and exploit: therefore it is conuenient that this present booke shall once euery weeke (by the discretion of the Captaine) be read to the saide companie, to the intent that euery man may the better remember his othe, conscience, duetie and charge.

4 Item, euery person by vertue of his othe, to doe effectually & with good will (as farre forth as him shall complie) all, and euery such act and acts, deede and deedes, as shalbe to him or them from time to time commanded, committed and enioyned (during the voyage) by the Captaine general, with the assent of the Counsell and assistants, as well in and during the whole Nauigation and voyage, as also in discouering and landing, as cases and occasions shall require.

5 Item, all courses in Nauigation to be set and kept, by the aduice of the Captaine, Pilot maior, masters, & masters mates, with the assents of the counsailers, & the most nomber of them, and in voyces vniformely agreeing in one to preuaile, and take place, so that the Captaine generall, shall in all counsailes and assemblies haue a double voyce.

6 Item, that the fleete shall keepe together, and not separate themselues asunder, as much as by winde & weather may be done or permitted, & that the Captaines, Pilots & masters shall speedily come aboord the Admiral, when and as often as he shall seeme to haue iust cause to assemble them for counsaile or consultation to be had concerning the affaires of the fleete and voyage.

7 Item, that the marchants, and other skilful persons in writing, shal dayly write, describe, and put in memorie the Nauigation of euery day and night with the points, and obseruation of the lands, tides, elements, altitude of the sunne, course of the moone and starres, and the same so noted by the order of the Master and pilot of euery ship to be put in writing, the Captaine general assembling the Masters together once euery weeke (if winde and weather shal serue) to conferre all the obseruations, and notes of the said ships, to the intent it may appeare wherein the notes doe agree, and wherein they discent, and vpon good debatement, deliberation, and conclusion determined, to put the same into a common leger, to remaine of record for the companie: the like order to be kept in proportioning of the Cardes, Astrolabes, and other instruments prepared for the voyage, at the charge of the companie.

8 Item, that all enterprises and exploits of discouering or landing to search Iles, regions, and such like, to be searched, attempted, and enterprised by good deliberation, and common assent, determined aduisedly. And that in all enterprises, notable and assages, suites, requests, or prescrument of gifts, or presents to princes, to be done and executed by the captaine Generall in person, or by such other, as he by common assent shall appoint or assigne to doe or cause to be done in the same.

9 Item, the steward and cooke of euery ship, and their associats, to giue and render to the Captaine and other head officers of their shippe weekely (or oftener) if it shall seeme requisite, a iust & plaine and perfect accompt of expenses of the victuals, as well flesh, fish, bisket, meate or bread, as also of beere, wine, oyle, or vineger, and all other kinde of victualing vnder their charge, and they, and euery of them so to order and dispende the same, that no waste or vnprofitable excesse be made otherwise then reason and necessitie shall commaund.

10 Item, when any inferiour or meane officer of what degree or condition he shal be, shalbe tried vntrue, remisse, negligent, or vnprofitable in or about his office in the voyage, or not to vse himselfe in his charge accordingly, then euery such officer to be punished or remooued at the discretion of the Captaine and assistants, or the most part of them, and the person so remooued not to bee reputed, accepted, or taken from the time of his remooue, any more for an officer, but to remaine in such condition and place, as hee shall be assigned vnto, and none of the companie to resist such chastisement or worthie punishment, as shalbe ministred to him moderately, according to the fault or desert of his offence, after the lawes and common customes of the seas, in such cases heretofore vsed and obserued.

11 Item, if any Mariner or officer inferiour shalbe found by his labour not meete nor worthie the place that he is presently shipped for, such person may bee vnshipped and put on lande at any place within the kings Maiesties realme & dominion, and one other person more able & worthy to be put in his place, at the discretion of the Captaine and maisters, & order to be taken that the partie dismissed shalbe allowed proportionably, the value of that hee shall haue deserued to the time of his dismission or discharge, & he to giue order with sureties, pawne, or other assurance, to repay the ouerplus of that he shal haue received, which he shall not haue deserued, & such wages to be made with the partie newly placed as shalbe thought reasonable, & he to haue the furniture of all such necessaries as were prepared for the partie dismissed, according to right and conscience.

12 Item, that no blaspheming of God, or detestable swearing be vsed in any ship, nor communication of ribaldrie, filthie tales, or vngodly talke to be suffered in the company of any ship, neither dicing, carding, tabling, nor other diuelish games to be frequented, whereby ensueth not onely peuertie to the players, but also strife, variance, brauling, fighting, and oftentimes murther to the vtter destruction of the parties, and prouoking of Gods most iust wrath, and sworde of vengeance. These and all such like pestilences, and contagions of vices, and sinnes to be eschewed, and the offenders once monished, and not reforming, to be punished at the discretion of the Captaine and master, as appertaineth.

13 Item, that morning and euening prayer, with other common seruices appointed by the kings Maiestie, and lawes of this Realme to be read and saide in euery ship dayly by the minister in the Admiral, and the marchant or some other person learned in other ships, and the Bible or paraphrases, to be read deuoutly and Christianly to Gods honour, and for his grace to be obtained, and had by humble and heartie prayer of the Nauigants accordingly.

14 Item that euery officer is to be charged by inuentorie with the particulers of his charge, and to render a perfect accompt of the disfraying of the same together with modest and temperat dispending of powder, shot, and vse of al kinde of artillerie, which is not to be misused, but diligently to be preserued for the necessarie defence of the fleete and voyage, together with due keeping of all instruments of your Nauigation, and other requisites.

15 Item, no liquor to be spilt on the balast, nor filthines to be left within boord the cooke roome, and all other places to be kept cleane for the better health of the companie, the gromals & pages to be brought vp according to the laudable order and vse of the sea, as wel in learning of Nauigation, as in exercising of that which to them appertaineth.

16 Item, the liueries in apparel giuen to the mariners, be to be kept by the Marchants, and not to be worne, but by the order of the Captaine, when hee shall see cause to muster or shewe them in good aray, for the aduancement and honour of the voyage, and the liueries to be redelliuered to the keeping of the marchants, vntill it shall be thought conuenient for euery person to haue the full vse of his garment.

17 Item, when any Mariner or any other passinger shall haue neede of any necessarie furniture of apparell for his body, and conseruation of his health, the same shall bee deliuered him by the Marchant, at the assignment of the Captaine and Master of that shippe, wherein such needie personne shall bee, at such reasonable price as the same cost, without any gaine to bee craued

by

by the marchants, the value thereof to be entred by the marchant in his booke, and the same to be discounted of the parties wages, that so shall receiue, and weare the same.

18. Item the sicke, diseased, weake, and visited person within boord, to be tendred, relieued, comforted, and holpen in the time of his infirmitie, and euery manner of person, without respect, to beare anothers burden, and no man to refuse such labour as shall be put to him, for the most benefite, and publike wealth of the voyage, and enterprise, to be atchieued exactly.

19. Item if any person shall fortune to die, or miscary in the voyage, such apparell, and other goods, as he shall haue at the time of his death, is to be kept by the order of the Captaine, and Master of the shippe, and an inuentorie to be made of it, and conserued to the vse of his wife, and children, or otherwise according to his mind, and wil, and the day of his death to be entred in the Marchants and Stewards bookes: to the intent it may be knowen what wages he shall haue deserued to his death, and what shall rest due to him.

20. Item that the Marchants appointed for this present voyage, shall not make any shewe or sale of any kind of Marchandizes, or open their commodities to any forren princes, or any of their Subiects, without the consent, priuitie, or agreement of the Captaines, the cape Marchants and the assistants, or foure of them, whereof the Captaine Generall, the Pilot Maior, and cape Marchant to be three, and euery of the petie Marchants to shewe his reckoning to the Cape Marchant, when they, or any of them shall be required: and no commutation or trucke to be made by any of the petie Marchants, without the assent aboue said: and all wares, and commodities trucked, bought or giuen to the companie, by way of marchandise, trucke, or any other respect, to be booked by the Marchants, and to be well ordred, packed, and conserued in one Halle entirely, and not to be broken or altered, vntill the shippes shall returne to the right discharges, and inuentorie of all goods, wares, and marchandizes so trucked, bought, or otherwise dispended, to be presented to the Gouernour, Consuls, and Assistants in London, in good order, to the intent the Kings Maiestie may be truly answered of that which to his grace by his grant of corporation is limited, according to our most bound duties, and the whole companie also to haue that which by right vnto them appertaineth, and no embezelment shall be vsed, but the truth of the whole voyage to be opened, to the common wealth and benefite of the whole companie, and mysterie, as appertaineth, without guile, fraude, or male engine. King Edwards corporation.

21. Item no particular person, to hinder or preiudicate the common stocke of the companie, in sale or preferment of his owne proper wares, and things, and no particular emergent or purchase to be employed to any seuerall profite, vntill the common stocke of the companie shall be furnished, and no person to hinder the common benefite in such purchases or contingents, as shall fortune to any one of them, by his owne proper pollicie, industrie, or chance, nor no contention to rise in that behalfe, by any occasion of iewell, stone, pearles, pretious mettals, or other things of the region, where it shall chance the same to rise, or to be found, bought, trucked, permuted, or giuen: but euery person to be bounden in such case, and vpon such occasion, by order, and direction, as the Generall, Captaine, and the Councell shall establish and determine, to whose order and discretion the same is left: for that of things vncertaine, no certaine rules may or can be giuen.

22. Item not to disclose to any nation, the state of our religion, but to palle it ouer in silence, without any declaration of it, seeming to beare with such lawes, and rites, as the place hath, where you shall arriue.

23. Item for as much as our people, and shippes, may appeare vnto them strange and wonderous, and theirs also to ours: it is to be considered, howe they may be vsed, learning much of their natures, and dispositions, by some one such person, as you may first either allure, or take to be brought aboord your shippes, and there to learne as you may, without violence or force, and no woman to be tempted, or intreated to incontinencie, or dishonestie.

24. Item the person so taken, to be well entertained, vsed, and apparelled, to be set on land, to the intent that he or she may allure other to draw nigh to shewe the commodities: and if the person taken, may be made drunke with your beere, or wine, you shal knowe the secrets of his heart.

25. Item our people may not palle further into a land, then that they may be able to recouer their pinnelles, or ships, & not to credit the faire words of the strange people, which be many times tried subtile, and false, nor to be drawen into perill of losse, for the desire of golde, siluer, or riches, and esteeme your owne commodities aboue all other, and in countenance shewe not much to desire the forren commodities: neuerthelesse take them as for friendship, or by way of permutation.

26. Item euery nation and region is to be considered aduisedly, and not to prouoke them by any disdaine, laughing, contempt, or such like, but to vse them with prudent circumspection, with all gentlenes, and curtesie, and not to tary long in one place, vntill you shall haue attained the most worthy place ꝑ may be found,in such sort,as you may returne wᵗ victuals sufficient,prosperously.

27. Item the names of the people of euery Island, are to be taken in writing, with the commodities,and incommodities of the same,their natures, qualities, and dispositions, the site of the same,and what things they are most desirous of,and what commodities they will most willingly depart wᵗ,& what mettals they haue in hils,mountaines,streames,or riuers,in,or vnder the earth.

28. Item if people shall appeare gathering of stones,golde, mettall,or other like,on the sand, your pinnesses may draw nigh, marking what thinges they gather, vsing or playing vpon the drumme,or such other instruments as may allure them to harkening to fantasie, or desire to see, and heare your instruments,and voices,but keepe you out of danger, and shewe to them no point or signe of rigour,or hostilitie.

29. Item if you shall be inuited into any Lords or Rulers house, to dinner,or other parliance, goe in such order of strength,that you may be stronger then they, and be warie of woods, and ambushes,and that your weapons be not out of your possessions.

30. Item if you shall see them weare Lyons or Beares skinnes, hauing long bowes, and arrowes,be not afraid of that sight: for such be worne often times more to feare strangers,then for any other cause.

31. Item there are people,that can swimme in the sea,hauens,& riuers,naked,hauing bowes and shafts,coueting to draw nigh your ships,which if they shal find not well watched, or warded, they will assalt,desirous of the bodies of men,which they couet for meate: if you resist them, they driue,and so will flee,and therefore diligent watch is to be kept both day & night,in some Islands.

32. Item if occasion shal serue,that you may giue aduertisements of your proceedings in such things as may correspond to the expectation of the company, and likelihood of successe in the voyage,passing such dangers of the seas,perils of ice, intollerable colde, and other impediments, which by sundry authors & writers, haue ministred matter of suspition in some heads, that this voyage could not succeede for the extremitie of the North pole,lacke of passage,& such like,which haue caused wauering minds,and doubtful heads,not onely to withdraw themselues from the venture of this voyage,but also dissuaded others from the same, the certaintie whereof,when you shall haue tried by experience (most certaine Master of all worldly knowledge) then for declaration of the trueth,which you shall haue experted,you may by common assent of counsell, sende either by land,or otherwaies,such two or one person,to bring the same by credite,as you shal think may passe in safetie: which sending is not to be done,but vpon vrgent causes, in likely successe of the voyage,in finding of passage,in towardlines of beneficiall traffike,or such other like, whereby the companie being aduertised of your estates and proceedings,may further prouide, foreset,and determine that, which may seeme most good and beneficiall for the publike wealth of the same: either prouiding before hand such thiugs, as shall be requisite for the continuance of the voyage, or els otherwise to dispose,as occasion shall serue: in which things your wisedomes and discretions are to be vsed,and shewed,and the contents of this capitule, by you much to be pondred, so that you be not ignorant,how many persons,as wel the kings Maiestie,the Lords of his honorable Counsell,this whole companie,as also your wiues,children,kinsfolkes,allies,friends,and familiars,be replenished in their hearts with ardent desire to learne and know your estates,conditions,and welfares,and in what likelihood you be in,to obtaine this notable enterprise,which is hoped no lesse to succeede to you,then the Orient and Occident Indias haue to the high benefit of the Emperour,and kings of Portingal,whose subiects industries,and trauailes by sea,haue inriched them,by those lands and Islands,which were to all Cosmographers, and other writers both vnknowne,and also by apparances of reason voide of experience thought and reputed vnhabitable for extremities of heates,and colds,and yet in deede tried most rich,peopled,temperate,and commodious,as all Europe hath not the like.

33. Item no conspiracies,partakings,factions,false tales, vntrue reports, which be the very seedes,& fruites of contention,discord,and confusion, by euil tongues to be suffred,but the same,& all other vngodlines to be chastned charitably with brotherly loue,and alwaies obedience to be vsed,and practised by al persons in their degrees,not onely for dutie, and conscience sake towards God, vnder whose mercifull hand nauigants aboue all other creatures, naturally be most nigh, and vicine,but also for prudent and worldly pollicie,and publike weale, considering and alwaies hauing present in your mindes that you be all one most royall kings subiects,and naturals,with dailie remembrance of the great importance of the voyage, the honour, glorie, praise, and benefite that depend of, and vpon the same, toward the common wealth of this noble Realme,the aduancement of you the trauelers therein, your wiues, and children,and so to endeuour your selues as that you may satisfie the expectation of them,who at their great costes, charges, and expenses,

expenſes haue ſo furniſhed you in good ſort, and plentie of all neceſſaries, as the like was neuer in any Realme ſeene, vſed, or knowen requiſite and needefull, for ſuch an exploit, which is moſt likely to be atchieued, and brought to good effect, if euery perſon in his vocation, ſhall endeuour himſelfe according to his charge, and moſt bounden dutie: praying the liuing God, to giue you his grace, to accompliſh your charge to his glorie, whoſe merciſull hand ſhall proſper your voyage, and preſerue you from all dangers.

In witnes whereof, I Sebaſtian Cabota, Gouernour aforeſaid, to theſe preſent ordinances haue ſubſcribed my name, and put my ſeale, the day and yeare aboue written.

Exemplar Epiſtolæ ſeu literarum Miſsiuarum, quas illuſtriſsimus Princeps Eduardus, eius nominis Sextus, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Rex, miſit ad Principes Septentrionalem, ac Orientalem mundi plagam inhabitantes iuxta mare glaciale, nec non Indiam Orientalem. Anno Domini 1553. Regni ſui anno ſeptimo, & vltimo.

EDuardus ſextus, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Rex, &c. Omnibus Regibus & principibus ac dominis, & cunctis Iudicibus terræ, & Ducibus eius, quibuſcunque eſt excellens aliqua dignitas in ea, cunctis in locis quæ ſunt ſub vniuerſo cœlo: Pax, tranquillitas, & honor vobis, terris, & regionibus veſtris quæ imperio veſtro ſubiacent, cuique veſtrum quemadmodum conuenit ei. Propterea quòd indidit Deus Opt. Max. hominibus præ cunctis aliis viuentibus, cor & deſiderium tale, vt appetat quiſque cum aliis ſocietatem inire, amare, & viciſſim amari, beneficijs afficere, & mutua accipere beneficia ſtudeat, ideò cuique pro facultate ſua hoc deſiderium in omnibus quidem hominibus beneficijs fouere & conſeruare conuenit, in illis autem maximè, qui hoc deſiderio adducti, à remotis etiam regionibus ad eos veniunt. Quo enim longius iter eius rei gratia ingreſſi ſunt, eò ardentius in eis hoc deſiderium fuiſſe declararunt. Inſuper etiam ad hoc, nos patrum maiorúmque noſtrorum exempla inuitant, qui ſemper humaniſſimè ſuſceperunt & benigniſſimè tractauerunt illos, qui tum à locis propinquis, tum à remotis, eos amicè adibant, eorum ſe protectioni commendantes. Quod ſi omnibus id præſtare æquum eſt, certè mercatoribus imprimis præſtari debet, qui per vniuerſum orbem diſcurrunt, mare circumluſtrantes & aridam, vt res bonas & vtiles, quæ Dei beneficio in regione eorum inueniuntur, ad remotiſſimas regiones & regna adferant, atque inde viciſſim referant, quòd ſuæ regioni vtile ibi repererint: vt & populi ad quos eunt, non deſtituantur commodis quæ non profert illis terra eorum, & ipſi ſint participes rerum quibus illi abundant. Nam Deus cœli & terræ, humano generi maximè conſulens, noluit vt omnia in quauis regione inuenirentur, quò regio ope alterius regionis indigeret, & gens ab alia gente commodum aliquod expectaret, ac ita ſtabiliretur amicitia inter omnes, ſingulíque omnibus benefacere quærerent. Hoc itaque ineundæ ac ſtabiliendæ amicitiæ deſiderio moti viri quidam regni noſtri, iter in remotas maritimas regiones inſtituerunt, vt inter noſtros & illos populos, viam mercibus inferendis & efferendis aperirent, nóſque rogauerunt vt id illis concederemus. Qui petitioni illorum annuentes, concessimus viro honorabili & forti, Hugoni Willibeo, & aliis qui cum eo sunt setuis nostris fidis & charis, vt pro sua voluntate, in regiones eis prius incognitas eant, quæsituri ea quibus nos caremus, & adducant illis ex nostris terris, id quo illi careant. Atque ita illis & nobis commodum inde accedat, sitque amicitia perpetua, & fœdus indissolubile inter illos & nos, dum permittent illi nos accipere de rebus, quibus superabundant in regnis suis, & nos concedemus illis ex regnis nostris res, quibus destituuntur. Rogamus itaque vos Reges & Principes, & omnes quibus aliqua est potestas in terra, vt viris istis nostris, transitum permittatis per regiones vestras. Non enim tangent quicquam ex rebus vestris inuitis vobis. Cogitate quòd homines & ipsi sunt. Et si qua re caruerint, oramus pro vestra beneficentia, eam vos illis tribuatis, accipientes vicissim ab eis, quod poterunt rependere vobis. Ita vos gerite erga eos, quemadmodum cuperetis vt nos, & subditi nostri, nos gereremus erga seruos vestros, si quando transierint per regiones nostras. Atque promittimus vobis per Deum omnium qui cœlo, terra & mari continentur, pérque vitam nostram, & tranquillitatem regnorum nostrorum, nos pari benignitate seruos vestros accepturos, si ad regna nostra aliquando venerint. Atque à nobis & subditis nostris, ac si nati fuissent in regnis nostris ita benignè tractabuntur, vt rependamus vobis benignitatem, quam nostris exhibueritis. Postquam vos Reges, Principes, &c. rogauimus, vt humanitate & beneficentia omni prosequamini seruos nostros nobis charos, oramus omnipotentem Deum nostrum, vt vobis diuturnam vitam largiatur, & pacem quæ nullam habeat finem. Scriptum Londini, quæ ciuitas est primaria regni nostri. Anno 5515. à creato mundo, mense Iiar, 14. die mensis, anno septimo regni nostri.

The copie of the letters missiue, which the right noble Prince Edward the sixt, sent to the Kings, Princes, and other Potentates, inhabiting the Northeast partes of the world, toward the mightie Empire of Cathay, at such time as Sir Hugh Willoughby knight, and Richard Chancelor, with their companie, attempted their voyage thither in the yeere of Christ, 1553. and the seuenth and last yeere of his raigne.

EDward the sixt, by the grace of God, King of England, France, and Ireland, &c. To all Kings, Princes, Rulers, Iudges, and Gouernours of the earth, and all other hauing any excellent dignitie on the same, in all places vnder the vniuersall heauen: peace, tranquillitie, and honour, be vnto you, and your lands and regions, which are vnder your dominions, and to euery of you, as is conuenient.

Forasmuch as the great and Almightie God hath giuen vnto mankind, aboue all other liuing creatures, such a heart and desire, that euery man desireth to ioyne friendship with other, to loue, and be loued, also to giue and receaue mutuall benefites: it is therefore the duetie of all men, according to their power, to maintaine and increase this desire in euery man, with well deseruing to all men, and especially to shewe this good affection to such, as being moued with this desire, come vnto them from farre Countreis. For howe much the longer voyage they haue attemped for this intent, so much the more doe they thereby declare that this desire hath bene ardent in them. Furthermore also, the examples of our fathers and predecessors doe inuite vs hereunto, forasmuch as they haue euer gently and louingly intreated such as of friendly minde came to them, aswell from Countreis neere hand, as farre remote, commending themselues to their protection. And if it be right and equitie to shewe such humanitie toward all men, doubtlesse the same ought chiefly to be shewed to Marchants, who wandering about the world, search both the land and the sea, to carry such good and profitable things, as are found in their Countreis, to remote regions and kingdomes, and againe to bring from the same, such things as they finde their commodious for their owne Countreis: both aswell that the people, to whome they goe, may not be destitute of such commodities as their Countreis bring not forth to them, as that also they may be partakers of such thinges, whereof they abound. For the God of heauen and earth, greatly prouiding for mankinde, would not that all things should be founde in one region, to the ende that one should haue neede of another, that by this meanes friendshippe might be established among all men, and euery one seeke to gratifie all. For the establishing and furtherance of which vniuersall amitie, certaine men of our Realme, mooued hereunto by the same desire, haue instituted and taken vpon them a voyage by sea into farre Countreies, to the intent that betweene our people and them, a way may be opened to bring in, & carry out marchan-

zes, desiring vs to further their enterprise. Who assenting to their petition, haue licensed the right valiant and worthy sir Hugh Willoughby, knight, and other our trustie and faithfull seruants, which are with him, according to their desire, to goe to Countreies to them heretofore vnknowen, aswell to seeke such things as we lacke, as also to cary vnto them from our regions, such things as they lacke. So that hereby not only commoditie may ensue both to them and vs, but also an indissoluble and perpetuall league of friendship be established betweene vs both, while they permit vs to take of their things such whereof they haue abundance in their regions, and we againe grant them such things of ours, whereof they are destitute. We therefore desire you kings & princes, and al other, to whome there is any power on the earth, to permit vnto these our seruants, free passage by your regions and dominions: for they shall not touch any thing of yours vnwilling vnto you. Consider you that they also are men. If therefore they shall stand in neede of any thing, we desire you of all humanitie, and for the nobilitie which is in you, to aide and helpe them with such things as they lacke, receiuing againe of them such things as they shall be able to giue you in recompence. Shew your selues so towards them, as you would that we and our subiects should shew our selues towards your seruants, if at any time they shall passe by our regions.

Thus doing, we promise you by the God of all things that are contained in heauen, earth, and the sea, and by the life and tranquillitie of our kingdomes, that we will with like humanitie accept your seruants, if at any time they shall come to our kingdomes, where they shall as friendly and gently be entertained, as if they were borne in our Dominions, that we may hereby recompence the fauour and benignitie which you haue shewed to our men. Thus after we haue desired you Kings and princes, &c. With all humanity and fauour, to entertaine our welbeloued seruants, we will pray our Almightie God, to grant you long life, and peace, which neuer shall haue ende. Written in London, which is the chiefe Citie of our kingdome, in the yeere from the creation of the world, 5515. in the moneth of Iiar, the fourteenth day of the moneth, and seuenth yeere of our raigne.

The Iuramentum, or othe, ministred to the Captaine.

YOu shall sweare to be a faithfull, true, and loyall subiect in all points and duties, that to a subiect appertaineth, to our Soueraigne Lord, the Kings Maiestie, his heires, and successours: that you shall wel and truely, to the vttermost of your capacitie, wit, and knowledge, serue this present voyage, committed to your charge, and not to giue vp, nor sooner intermit the same, vntill you shall haue atchieued the same, so farre forth, as you may without danger of your life, and life of the fleete: you shall giue good, true, and faithfull counsell to the said societie, and to such as shall haue haue the charge with or vnder you, and not to disclose the secrets, or pryuities of the same to any person by any maner of meane, to the preiudice, hurt, or damage of it. You shall minister iustice to all men vnder your charge, without respect of person, or any affection, that might moone you to decline from the true ministration of iustice. And further, you shall obserue, and cause to be obserued, as much as in you lieth, all and singular such rules, articles, prouisions hitherto made, or hereafter to be made for the preseruation or safeconduct of the fleet and voyage, and benefit of the company. You shall not permit nor suffer the stocke or goods of the company to be wasted, imbezeled, or consumed, but shall conserue the same whole and entyre, without diminishment, vntill you shall haue deliuered, or cause to be deliuered the same, to the vse of the company. And finally you shall vse your selfe in all points, sorts, and conditions, as to a faithfull captaine, and brother of this company shall belong and appertaine: So helpe you God, &c.

The othe ministred to the Maister of the shippe, &c.

YOu shall sweare by the holy contents in that booke, that you according, and to the vttermost of your knowledge, and good vnderstanding in mariners science and craft, shall in your vocation doe your best to conduct the good shippe called the N. &c. whereof you now are Maister vnder God, both vnto and from the portes of your discouerie, and so vse your indeuour and faithfull diligence, in charging, discharging, lading againe, and roomaging of the same shippe, as may be most for the benefit and profit of this right worshipfull fellowshippe: and you shall not priuately bargen, buy, sell, exchange, barter, or distribute any goods, wares, merchandize, or things whatsoeuer (necessarie tackles and victualles for the shippe onely excepted) to or for your owne lucre, gaine or profit, neither to nor for the priuate lucre, gaine, or profit of any other person or persons whatsoeuer. And further, If you shall know any boatswaine, mariner, or any other person or persons whatsoeuer, to buy, sell, barter, trucke, or exchange any goods, wares, merchandizes, or thinges for priuate account, reckoning or behalfe, you shall doe your best to withstand and let the same: and if you can not commodiously so doe, that then before the discharge of such goods bought for priuat accoūt, you shall giue knowledge therof to the Cape merchant of this said fellowship for the time being. And you shall not receiue nor take, nor suffer to be receiued or taken into your said shippe during this voyage any maner person or persons whatsoeuer, going or returning, but onely those mariners which without fraud or guile shall be hyred to be of your company, and to serue in mariners craft and science onely: So helpe you God, &c.

These foresaid shippes being fully furnished with their pinnesses and boates, well appointed with all maner of artillery, and other things necessarie for their defence with all the men aforesaid, departed from Ratcliffe, and haled vnto Detforth, the 10 day of May, 1553.

The 11 day about two of the clocke, we departed from Detforth, passing by Greenewich, saluting the kings Maiestie then being there, shooting off our ordinance, & so haled vnto Blackewall, and there remained vntill the 17 day, and that day in the morning we went from Blackewall, and came to Woolwich by nine of the clocke, and there remained one tide, and so the same night vnto Heyneth. Mar.

The 18 day from Heyneth vnto Grauesend, and there remained vntill the twentith day: that day being Saturday, from Grauesend vnto Tilberie Hope, remaining there vntill the two and twentith day.

The 22 day from Tylberie Hope to Hollie hauen.

The 23 day from Hollie hauen, till we came against Lee, and there remained that night, by reason that the winde was contrary to vs.

The 24 day the winde being in the Southwest in the morning, we sailed along the coast ouer the Spits, vntill we came against S. Olyth, about sixe of the clocke at night, and there came to anker, and abode there all that night.

The 25 day about ten of the clocke, we departed from S. Olyth, and so sailed forward vnto the Nase, and there abode that night for winde and tide.

The 26 day at fiue of the clocke in the morning, we weyed our anker, and sailed ouer the Nase, the winde being at the Southwest, vntill we came to Harwell wands, and there came to an anker, and abode there vntill the 28 day.

The same day being Trinitie sunday about 7 of the clocke before noone we weyed our ankers, and sailed till we came athwart Walsurye, and there came to an anker.

The 29 day from thence to Holmehead, where we staied that day, where we consulted which way, and what courses were best to be holden for the discouerie of our voyage, and there agreed.

The 30 day of May at fiue of the clocke in the morning we set saile, and came against Yermouth about three leagues into the sea, riding there at anker all that night.

The last of May into the sea sixe leagues Northeast, and there tarried that night, where the winde blew very sore.

Iune. The first of Iune the winde being at North contrary to vs, we came backe againe to Harewell, and remained there vntill the 15 day, tarying for the winde, for all this time the winde was contrary to our purpose.

The 15 day being at Harewell in the latitude of 52 degrees, in the morning we waied our ankers, and went foorth into the wands about two miles from the towne, and lay there that night.

The 16 day at eight of the clocke we set forward, and sailed vntill we came athwart Alborough, and there staied that night.

The 17 day about fiue of the clocke before noone we went backe vnto Orfordnesse, and there remained vntill the 19 day.

The 19 day at eight of the clocke in the morning we went backe to Harewell, and abode there three dayes tarying for the winde.

The 23 day of Iune the winde being faire in the Southwest we hailed into the seas to Orfordnesse, and from thence into the seas ten leagues Northeast: then being past the sands, we changed our course sixe leagues Northnortheast: about midnight we changed our course againe, and went due North continuing in the same vnto the 27 day.

The 27 day about seuen of the clocke Northnorthwest 42 leagues, to the end to fall with Shotland: then the winde veared to the West, so that we could lie but North and by West, continuing in the same course 40 leagues, whereby we could not fetch Shotland: then we sailed North 16 leagues by estimation, after that North and by West, and Northnorthwest, then Southeast, with diuers other courses, trauersing and tracing the seas, by reason of sundrie and manifold contrary windes, vntill the 14 day of July: and then the sunne entring into Leo, we discouered land Eastward of vs, vnto the which we sailed that night as much as we might: and after we went on shore with our pinnesse, and found little houses to the number of 30, where we knew that it was inhabited, but the people were fled away, as we iudged, for feare of vs.

July.

In this land liueth Oether, as it seemeth.

The land was all full of little Islands, and that innumerable, which were called (as we learned afterwards) Aegeland and Halgeland, which lieth from Foythnesse North and by east, being in the latitude of 66 degrees. The distance betweene Orthfoythnesse and Aegeland 250 leagues. Then we sailed from thence 12 leagues Northwest, and found many other Islandes, and then came to an anker the 19 day, and manned our pinnesse, and went on shore to the Islands, and found people mowing and making of hay, which came to the shore and welcomed vs. In which place

Rost Islands. were an innumerable sort of Islands, which were called the Isles of Rost, being vnder the dominion of the king of Denmarke: which place was in latitude 66 degrees, and 30 minuts. The winde being contrary, we remained there three dayes, and there was an innumerable sort of fowles of diuers kindes, of which we tooke very many.

The 22 day the winde comming faire, we departed from Rost, sailing Northnortheast, keeping the sea vntill the 27 day, and then we drew neere vnto the land, which was still East of vs: then went foorth our pinnesse to seeke harborow, and found many good harbours, of the which we

Stanfew harbour. entred into one with our shippes, which was called Stanfew, and the land being Islandes, were called Lewfoot, or Lofoot, which were plentifully inhabited, and very gentle people, being all vnder the king of Denmarke: but we could not learne howfarre it was from the maine land: and we remained there vntill the 30 day, being in latitude 68 degrees, & from the fore said Rost about 30 leagues Northnortheast.

August. The 30 day of July about noone we weyed our ankers, and went into the Seas, and sayled long these Islandes Northnortheast, keeping the land still in sight vntill the second day of August: then haling in close aboord the land, to the intent to knowe what lande it was, there came a skiffe of the Island aboord of vs, of whom we asked many questions, who shewed vnto vs, that the Seynam. Island was called Seynam, which is the latitude of seuentie degrees, and from Stanfew three leagues, being also vnder the king of Denmarke, and that there was no merchandize there, but onely dryed fish, and traine oyle. Then we being purposed to goe vnto Finmarke, inquired of him, if we might haue a pilot to bring vs vnto Finmarke, & he said, that if we could beare in, we should haue a good harbour, and on the next day a pilot to bring vs to Finmarke, vnto the warthouse, which is the strongest holde in Finmarke, and most resorted to by report. But when we would haue entred into an harbour, the land being very high on euery side, there came such flawes of winde, and terrible whirlwindes, that we were not able to beare in, but by violence were constrained to take the sea againe, our pinnesse being vnshipt: we sailed North and by East, the winde increasing so sore that we were not able to beare any saile, but tooke them in, and lay adrift, to the end to let the storme ouer passe. And that night by violence of winde, and thickenesse of mists, we were not able to keepe together within sight, and then about midnight we lost our pinnesse, which was a discomfort vnto vs. Alsoone as it was day, and the fogge ouerpast, we looked about, and at the last we descryed one of our shippes to Leeward of vs: then we spyed an hullocke of our foresaile, and bare roome with her, which was the Confidence, but the Edward we could not see. Then the flaw something abating, we and the Confidence hoysed by our sailes the fourth day, sayling Northeast and by North, to the end to fall with the Wardhouse, as we did consult to do before, in case we should part company. Thus running Northeast and by North, and Northeast fiftie leagues, then we sounded, and had 160 fadoms, whereby we thought to be farre from land, and perceiued that the land lay not as the Globe made mention. Wherefore we changed our course the first day, and sailed Southeast and by South eight and fortie leagues, thinking thereby to finde the Wardhouse. Sir Hugh Willoughbie looseth the sight of the Edward.

The eight day much winde rising at the West Northwest, we not knowing how the coast lay, strooke our sailes, and lay adrift, where we sounded, and found 160 fadoms as afore.

The ninth day, the winde bearing to the South Southeast, we sailed Northeast 25 leagues.

The tenth day we sounded, and could get no ground, neither yet could see any land, whereat we wondered: then the winde comming at the Northeast, we ranne Southeast about 48 leagues.

The 11 day, the winde being at South, we sounded, and found 40 fadoms, and faire sand.

The 12 day, the winde being at South and by East, we lay with our saile East, and East and by North 30 leagues.

The 14 day earely in the morning, we descryed land, which land we bare with all, hoising out our boat to discouer what land it might be: but the boat could not come to land the water was so shoale, where was very much yse also, but there was no similitude of habitation, and this land lyeth from Seynam East and by North 160 leagues, being in latitude 72 degrees. Then we plyed to the Northward the 15, 16 and 17 day. Willoughbies land, in 72 degrees.

The 18 day, the winde comming at the Northeast, and the Confidence being troubled with bilge water, and stocked, we thought it good to seeke harbour for her redresse: then we bare roome the 18 day Southsoutheast, about 70 leagues.

The 21 day we sounded, and found 10 fadome, after that we sounded againe, and found but 7 fadome, so shoalder and shoalder water, and yet could see no land, where we maruelled greatly: to auoid this danger, we bare roomer into the sea all that night Northwest and by West.

The next day we sounded, and had 20 fadoms, then shaped our course, and ranne West Southwest vntill the 23 day: then we descried Lowe land, vnto which we bare as nigh as we could, and it appeared vnto vs vnhabitable. Then we plyed Westward along by that land, which lyeth West Southwest, and East Northeast, and much winde blowing at the West, we haled into the sea North and by East 30 leagues. Then the winde comming about at the Northeast, we sayled West Northwest: after that, the winde bearing to the Northwest, we lay with our sailes West southwest, about 14 leagues, and then descryed land, and bare in with it, being the 28 day, finding shoale water, and bare in till we came to 3 fadome, then perceiuing it to be shoale water, and also seeing yse sands, we haled out againe Northeast along that land vntill we came to the point thereof. That land turning to the Westward, we ranne along 16 leagues Northwest: then comming into a fayre bay, we went on land with our boat, which place was vnhabited, but yet it appeared vnto vs that the people had bene there, by crosses, and other signes: from thence we went all along the coast Westward.

The fourth day of September we lost sight of land, by reason of contrary windes, and the eight day we descried land againe. Within two dayes after we lost the sight of it: then running West and by South about 30 leagues, we gat the sight of land againe, and bare in with it vntill night: then perceiuing it to be a lee shoare, we gat vs into the sea, to the end to haue sea roome. September.

The 12 of September we haled to shoareward againe, hauing then indifferent winde and weather: then being neere vnto the shoare, and the tide almost spent, we ranne to an anker in 30 fadoms water.

The 13 day we came along the coast, which lay Northwest & by West, & Southeast & by East.

The 14 day we came to an anker within two leagues of the the shoare, hauing 60 fadoms.

There we went a shore with our boat, and found two or three good harboroughs, the land being rocky, and high, but as for people could we see none. The 15 day we ranne still along the coast vntill the 17 day: then the winde being contrary vnto vs, we thought it best to returne vnto the harboz which we had found before, and so we bare roomer with the same, howbeit we could not accomplish our desire that day. The next day being the 18 of September, we entred into the hauen, and there came to an anker at 6 fadoms. This hauen runneth into the maine, about two leagues, and is in bredth halfe a league, wherein were very may seale fishes, and other great fishes, and vpon the maine we saw beares, great deere, foxes, with diuers strange beasts, as ‖ guloines, and such other which were to vs vnknowne, and also woonderfull. Thus remaining in this hauen the space of a weeke, seeing the yeere farre spent, and also very euill wether, as frost, snow, and haile, as though it had beene the deepe of winter, we thought best to winter there. Wherefore we sent out three men Southsouthwest, to search if they could finde people, who went three dayes iourney, but could finde none: after that, we sent other three Westward foure dayes iourney, which also returned without finding any people. Then sent we three men Southeast three dayes iourney, who in like sort returned without finding of people, or any similitude of habitation.

In this hauen they died.

Here endeth Sir Hugh Willoughbie his note, which was written with his owne hand.

These two notes following, were written vpon the outside of this Pamphlet, or Booke.

1 The proceedings of Sir Hugh Willoughbie after he was separated from the Edward Bonauenture.

2 Our shippe being at an anker in the harbour called Sterfier in the Iland Lofoote.

The riuer or hauen wherein Sir Hugh Willoughbie with the companie of his two shippes perished for colde, is called Arzina in Lapland, neere vnto Kegor.

AND whereas (saith he) I haue before made mention how Moscouie was in our time discouered, by Richard Chancelor in his voyage toward Cathay, by the direction and information of M. Sebastian Cabota, who long before had this secret in his minde: I shall not need heere to describe that voyage, forasmuch as the same is largely and faithfully written in the Latine tongue, by that learned young man Clement Adams, schoolemaister of the Queenes henshmen, as he receiued it at the mouth of the said Richard Chancelor.

Authore Clemente Adamo, Anglo.

Quas ob causas suscepta sit hęc nauigatio, & quibus authoribus & de nauigatione ad Moscouitarum fines.

POstquam merces nostras apud finitimas gentes sordere negotiatores nostri animaduerterunt, quæq; auorum nostrorum memoria certatim a peregrinis mercatoribus expeterentur, imminuto iam precio, etiam exportatæ fastidiosum reperirent emptorem, exoticarum verò mercium precia in immensum extenderentur, Londinenses quidam viri graues ac reipub. suæ imprimis amantes hanc cogitationem susceperunt, quò huic malo mederentur. Nec quærentibus (vt videbatur) remedium defuit, quo tantum incommodum declinarent. Nam cum Hispanorum ac Lusitanorum opes (inuentis nuper nouis terris) magnoperè auctas viderent, eandem viam sibi insistendam rati, nouam nauigationem instituunt. Cum eodem tempore Sebastianus Cabota vir celeberrimus in vrbe moraretur, cœpêre primo cum illo agere, ac seriò consultare, ac re demum inter plures iactata, tandem conuenit tres naues expedire, quibus aquilonaris mundi tractus diligenter perlustratus, nostris etiam pateret, atq; ad ignota regna viam patefaceret. Ad hanc rem tam arduam & difficilem, cum multa forent dispicienda, primum veluti in senatum quendam viros graues, ac prudentiæ spectatæ legunt, qui collatis consilijs sententias suas exponerent, & in omnem euentum salubriter prospicerent. Lectus hic senatulus censuit in rem fore quandam pecuniæ summam publicè cogi, qua tot naues instruerentur. Et ne quisquam priuatim graui pecunia premeretur, placuit vicenas quinas libras viritim colligi: (tantum enim impendebat) qui in hoc quasi nouum collegium voluit ascisci.) tres naues mercantur, quarum maximam partem de integro ædificandam, ac reficiendam curant. Qua quidem in re, mereatorumne cura, an fabrorum diligentia, maiori me afficiat admiratione, penitus eſt incertum. Illi enim aſſamenta firmiſſima pulchreq; ſiccata ad nauium fabricam comparant: hi indefeſſo labore, ac arte ſumma, eadem inter ſe committunt, rimis ſtupa obſtructis, ac carinis picatis, vnius etiam imam partem inuento peracri, & ingenioſo muniuerunt. Acceperant enim in quibuſdam Oceani partibus teredines generari, quæ vel craſſiſſima etiamnum robora perforarent. Quo magis ab hoc periculo nauigantes forent ſecuri, partem nauis vndis depreſſam, tenuibus plumbi laminis obducunt. Poſt fabricatas naues, ac armamentis inſtructas, cepit illos non minor viatici ſollicitudo: quod pro temporis ratione, & nauigationis longinquitate fuerat proſpiciendum. Ad hæc, cum proſpicerent Orientalem orbis plagam eſſe petendam, nec illuc peruium mare, niſi Borealem mundi tractũ naucleri tenerent, vbi an pateret aditus iam tum in incerto erat: octodecim menſium commeatu naues inſtruunt, quod quidem hoc conſilio faciunt: cum noſtris per illam immenſi, & horrendi frigoris oram fuerat traijciendũ, prudenter in rem conſulentes, ſex menſium cibaria præbent, quo illuc nauigare, totidem menſium, quo ibi moram facere hiberno cœlo reditum negante: rurſum tantundem quo remeare poſſint, aſſignant. Poſt repoſitam (vt diximus) penũ, poſt arma omnis generis in naues congeſta, Duces ac quaſi anteſignani tantæ rei deerant: cui etſi multi ſeſe offerrent viri rerum ancipitum ignari, tamen Hugo Willowbeius vir imprimis ſtrenuus, ac non obſcuro loco natus, hanc curam ſibi delegari impenſius poſtulat, cuius facile præ cæteris, cum ob corporis formam (erat enim proceræ ſtaturæ) tum ob ſingularem in re bellica induſtriam a mercatorum collegio habetur ratio. Conſtituitur ergo Nauarchus, aſſignaturq; illi nauis prætoria, ſic vt in cæteras quoq; imperium haberet. Cum de reliquarum præfectis conſultaretur, ac huic muneri multi offerentur, omnium conſenſu vicit Richardus Cancelerus, vir ob multa ingenij documenta ſpectabilis, in quo vno ſumma conficiendi negotij ſpes erat. Hunc aluerat Henricus Sydneius, adoleſcens nobilis, Regiq; Edouardo apprimè charus, qui mercatorum collegium adiens, pro ſingulari ſua facundia coràm in hanc ſententiam verba fecit.

Richardus Cancelerus.

Vehementer pium inſtitutum veſtrum amplector (viri honeſtiſſimi) qui pro egregia veſtra erga patriam pietate in rem, & Anglis (vt ſpero) vtilem, ac patriæ honorificam, animo & cogitatione incumbitis. Quem quidem conatum veſtrum, nos quoq; pro viribus adiuuare paramur: nec quicquam nobis tam charum ducimus, quod non libenter huius tam laudabilis propoſiti nomine expenderimus. Imprimiſque mihi gratulor, me illud ingenium fouiſſe, quod vobis tam præclara molientibus, aliquo modo vſui eſſe poſſit. Nihilominus tamen, vos huius rei neſcios eſſe nolim: me Cancelerum eo animo a me dimittere, non quod faſtidiam, vel quod mihi grauis alumnus eſſe videatur, ſed vt promptam in adiuuando veſtro conſilio voluntatem meam pariter intelligeretis, atq; Cancelero meo commendatione mea a vobis debita tribueretur authoritas. Vos illum fama, ego illum experientia, vos verbis, ego rebus, vos ſermone & congreſſu, ego quotidiano conuictu hominis ingenium penitus habeo perſpectum, & exploratum: Nec latere vos debet, (honeſtiſſimi patres) quanta diſcrimina, & veſtro, & patriæ nomine, aditurus eſt. Cuius (ſi propicia numina proficiſcentem ſeruent) nos non immemores eſſe decebit. Nos pecuniolam fortunæ aleæ credimus, ille dulciſſimam vitam ſæuiſſimo mari, & incertis periculorum caſibus exponet. Nos cum notis, amicis, ac cognatis ſuauem, ac placidam vitam tranſigemus, ille dum ignotos, & indomitos nautas in officio continere ſtudebit, quantis laboribus frangetur? quot curis, vigiliijſq; angetur? quas moleſtias deuorare cogetur? Nos patrias ſedes tenebimus, ille extera & ignota regna petet: Ille Barbaris & feris gentibus ſalutem committet, ille etiam monſtrificis ponti belluis caput obiectabit. Quapropter pro periculorum magnitudine, pro officij ſui dignitate, veſtro fauore abeuntem proſequi, & (ſi fors ferat) vt conſpiciamus reducem, liberaliter quoq; munerari conueniet.

Oratio D. Henrici Sydneij.

Poſtquam hæc, aut non longe alia, multo diſertiſſimè egregius adoleſcens peroraſſet, alius illum contemplari, alius a proximo ſciſcitari, alius (cui nota viri virtus) tacite gaudere, ac arcanam ſpem concipere, illum olim in magnum virũ euaſurum, atq; putare inchoatas has adoleſcentis virtutes magnoperè olim patriam ornaturas. Conticeſcentibus omnibus, grauiſſimis patrum viſum eſt, de orientali orbis tractu quoad eius fieri poteſt ſciſcitari, inueſtigare, ac diligenter perquirere: accerſebantur hoc nomine Tartari duo, qui regi erant ab Equili: aderat interpres, illi per interpretem ſuper patria, ſuper gente, ſuper patrio more interrogati, nihil penitus reſponderunt. Quippe qui (vt falſè quidam palam dixit) poculis exhauriendis potius, quã populorũ moribus diſcendis magis erant aſſueti. Poſt multa vltrò citroq; iactata, tandẽ cenſent, ſoluendi tempus conſtitui, q̃ multum anni iam conſumptũ viſum eſt pleriſq;, & ſi prolixiorem moram imterponerent, fore vt glacies viam obstrueret. Placuit itaq́, omnibus, vt ad vigessimum diem Maij præfecti, nautæq́; naues conscenderent: ac ex portu Radlifensi, secundo æstu soluerent. Illi salutatis necessarijs, alius coniuge & natis, alius cognatis & affinibus, alius amico cognatis chariore, ad dictum diem adsunt: solutis iam nauibus, ac reciprocante æstu, leni cursu Grenouicum feruntur, remigibus interim grandiores naues celocibus, seu speculatorijs nauiculis remultantibus. Hi nouo vestitu coloris Veneti eleganter ornati, incumbunt remis atq́; æquora verrunt. Cùm nunc proximè Grenouicensem Regiam essent, sub aduenientium famam, effundunt sese aulici, concurrit vulgus, stabat frequens in ripa, prospectat ex fenestris Senatus Regius; alij turrium fastigia ascendunt, vibrantur bombardarum fulmina, Tartariæ voluuntur nubes, Martem sonant crepitacula, reboant summa montium iuga, reboant valles, reboant vndæ, claráque Nautarum percellit sydera clamor, stat alius in puppi, ac gestu quo potest amicis valedicit, alij in foris obambulant, hic cancellatis funibus pendet, ille antennis libratur, alius è summo malo prospectat, in summa, cuiusdam triumphalis pompæ festa facies fuit. At (heu dolor) optimus Rex Eduardus, cuius præcipuè nomine hic tantus apparatus, per valetudinem solus aberat: quorum discessum tristissima illius mors (ac nunquam siccis oculis mihi memoranda) post paucos dies subsecuta est. Volouicum tandem delati figunt naues: inde soluturi, cum aut æstus reciprocatio, aut secundior flatus ad nauigandum inuitaret: nec mora Harouicensem portum petunt, in quo non sine maximo tædio ac summo temporis detrimento diu morantur. Ad postremum tamen nacti idoneam ad nauigandum tempestatem, passis velis in altum feruntur, salutato priùs natali solo, quod an vnquam postea forent reuisuri, penitus ignorabant. Respiciunt subinde tristes, nec lachrymis temperant nonnulli, cogitantes in quàm dubios casus erant ituri, & quàm ancipitem euentum maris erant experituri: Torquebat præter cæteros Richardum Cancelerum præfectum Edouardi Boniuenturi penuriæ metus, nam & pars viatici in portu Harouicensi putrida comperta est, viniq́; cadi infirmi ac fragiles. Mouit etiam illum paternus amor: reliquit enim abiens duos filios paruulos orphanos futuros, si asperior aliquis casus ipsum sustulisset: mouit illum miserorum & infœlicium comitũ fortuna, quorum salutem cum sua coniunctam esse sciebat: dum multiplici curarum ambage Canceleri animus excruciatur, tandem post multorum dierum velificationem, tellus procul visa, ad quam Naucleri naues dirigunt: Insulam esse comperiunt Rossam: in hac consumptis aliquot diebus, vlterius nauigant septentrionem petentes, rursum aliæ apparent insulæ: nomen his Crux insularum: post has cum aliquandiu naues vna velificassent, præfectus nauium Willoubeius, vir in consilijs minimè præceps, erecto vexillo, reliquarum nauium primates euocat, vt his consiliorum adiutoribus, & solicitudinum socijs vsus, de reliqua administratione facilius statueret. Illi ex composito adsunt, ac inter cætera conuenit, si qua grauior tempestas ingrueret, ac classiculam disijceret, omnes Vardhousũ Norduuegiæ portum non incelebrem cursu peterent, quiq́; primi incolumes illuc appulissent, dum reliquę naues eò conuenirent, in anchoris expectarent. Eodem die iam in pomeridianum tempus inclinato, circiter quartam, tanta tempestas subitò coorta est, & immensi fluctus tanta vi se incitauerunt, vt naues institutum cursum tenere non possent, sed aliæ aliò, magno sui cum periculo vagè disijcerentur. Inclamat Nauarchus voce qua potest maxima Cancelerum, enixè rogat ne longiùs abscedat: at ille, nec velle, nec si maximè vellet, posse, modò ille Nauarchidis suæ cursum, erat enim velocior suo, temperaret. Verùm nescio quo casu Willobæi nauis dum plenis velis fertur, tanta vi abrepta est, vt aliquot horarum spacio è conspectu penitus euolauerit. Tertia etiam pari euentu ablata comites amisit. Prętoriæ certè celox in puppim illisa, conspicientibus ex ipsa Edouardo nautis, fluctibus est obruta. Reliqui, fati comitũ suorum, qui incolumes nuper redierunt, penitus sunt ignari. Quod si acerbior casus infœlices premit, si pelagi sæuitia innoxios absorbuit, aut si in aliena terra indigi oberrent, digni certè meliore sorte viri, quibusq́; si viuant, in patriam reditum; sin crudelior mortis fortuna insontes rapuit, mollem tumulum precemur. Richardus Cancelerus solus cum comitibus relictus, ac incerto reliquorũ casu mæstus, ad destinatum portũ contendit, sociorum aduentum (si salui essent) ibi expecturus. Hic septem dierum mora interposita, cùm se frustra expectatione torqueri videret, nauigationem subire in animo habebat. Cum itaq́; omnino certum illi esset, nauem ex portu educere, fortè cum Scotis quibusdam in congressum colloquiumq́; venit. Qui cum illius animum exploratum haberent, & eius rationibus optimè consultum cupientes, vehementer illum ab instituto consilio deterrere conantur, ac pericula in maius extollẽtes, eius constantiam labefactare nituntur. At Cancelerus mobilitate ac leuitate ingenij nihil turpius existimans, & persuasissimum habens fortem virũ maius in se dedecus admittere non posse, quàm si metu fractus & debilitatus, periculorũ casus refugeret, Scotorum oratione nihil deterritus, in proposito susceptoq́;

ceptoq; conſilio permanſit,ſtatuens aut efficere quod propoſuerat,aut certę morti occumbere. Qui in eadem naue cum Cancelero erant, etſi comitum diſceſſu quos auulſerat tempeſtatis ſæuitia plurimum angerentur,& ancipiti curſus ductu commouerentur,tanta tamen & tam ſecunda voluntate in Cancellerum reperiebantur, vt eius ductu & auſpicijs omnes caſus tentare,ac certum capitis periculum adire non reformidarent. Hoc tam conſtans ſodalium ſtudium ſollicitudinem Ducis non mediocriter auxit. Ille enim pari animo erga illos affectus,metuebat ne quo ſuo errore ſociorum ſaluti malè conſultum videri poſſit. Breuiter poſteaquam ſpem ſuam de reliquarum nauium reditu extenuari & euaneſcere vidit, rurſus fortunam maris experitur,mundiq; inane,ac naturæ damnata petit,eoúſque prouectus,dum omnis nox ablata, ſoliſque continuus fulgor vaſtum mare illuſtraret. Itaque continua luce per aliquot dies vſus, tandem Diuino numine fortunante,in ingentem quendam ſinum deueniunt, qui circiter centum millia paſſuũ latitudine collegit.In hunc penitus ingreſſi,naue ad anchoras deligata, dum circum circa proſpiciant,fortè haud procul cernunt ſchapham piſcatoriam, quam Cancelerus cum paucis ingreſſus adire voluit,ſciſcitaturus ex piſcatoribus,quæ terra,qui populus,qui mores.At illi inuſitata nauis magnitudine perculſi (neque enim tam vaſtę naues in illis regionibus viſuntur) præcipites ſeſe fugæ mandabant: Cæterum Cancelerus fugientes aſſequitur: Illi pauidi ac metu ſemianimes,ad genua ducis aduoluti pedibus oſcula offerunt. At Dux pro ſua ſingulari humanitate placidis oculis intuetur,geſtu ac nutu conſolatur,ſupplicum officia recuſat, proſtratóſq; amplexus in pedes adleuat: Mirum quantum fauoris hæc humanitas illi poſtea conciliarit. Hij enim dimiſſi rumorem diſſipant de noua gente,de humanitate ſingulari. Hæc fama vbi percrebuit,accurrere vulgus,vltrò viaticum offerre, nec commercium recuſare, niſi quod magna religione obſtringerentur, ne principe inconſulto peregrinas merces emerent. Mox docentur noſtri terram eſſe Ruſſiam,atque Moſcouiam, & in illis locis Euan Vaſiliuich (hoc enim erat principi nomen) plurimas nationes imperio ac ditione ſua regere ac gubernare.Viciſſim rogat Barbarus noſtrates, vnde genus ducunt, aut quid petunt in terra aliena. De

De Moscouia, quæ & Russia dicitur.

MOscouia quæ & Russia alba nominatur, terra est amplissima, hinc inde varijs gentibus contermina, à meridie atque Oriente Tartaris cingitur: Septentrionale latus Oceanus Scythicus ambit. Ad Occidentem tenent Lapones, gens syluestris, nec vlli populo commercio linguæ nota: post hos Austrum versus incolunt Sueci, dein Finlandia, ab hac Liuonij, iuxta hos Lituani. Pluribus ac maximis fluminibus irrigua est, multisque locis palustris. Nobilissima fluminum Rha, quod illi materna idiomate Volgam, Tanais quem Don, Boristhenes quem hodie Neper nominant: horum Rha, atque Boristhenes, eodem lacu orti, immensa terræ spacia peragrant. Rha amœnos amnes in se recipiens, ac ex ipso statim fonte Orientem petens, post varios flexus ac cursus ambages aduenas aquas, suásq; in Caspiũ mare pluribus ostijs exonerat.

Tanais fonte haud spectabili ab ipsa scatebra grandescens, tandẽ in amplum lacũ se diffundit: post euagantes aquas in arctum cogens angustus labitur, ac post aliquot passuum millia, iterum in lacum diffusus (quem Iuan appellant) flexuoso meatu vadit, donec in vicina Volgæ peruenit. Deinde quasi comitem auersatus, transuerso cursu flectens in meridiem contendit, ac Mæoticam paludem petit.

Boristhenes quem ex eodem fonte cum Rha ortum diximus, cognatas aquas in austrum defert, subinde auxiliares amnes recipiens: hic maximas gentes præterluens, tandem in pontum Euxinum sese condit.

Habet & Moscouia lacus, & stagna: lacus etiam deciduo syderum semine, pisces generant: Inter hos principatum tenet Bellij ozera, vel ob hoc præcipuè memorabilis, quod arx munitissima in eo sit extructa, quo Moscouitarum princeps gazam suam confert, si quando bellorum terror premit.

Quod ad Ryphæa iuga spectat perpetuis niuibus candẽtia, vnde veteres Tanaim ortum habere somniarunt, reliquáq; naturæ portenta, quæ Græcia olim finxit, nec nostri qui nuper redierunt, videre, nec Trimestri spatio illic versati, ac Moscouitarũ alloquio vtcunq; imbuti, audiru cognouerunt. Terram esse planam, ac campestrem illi, ac raro in montes assurgere: & qua vergit in Septentrionem latissimos saltus habere. Plurima ibi abies, vnde ad struendas ædes materia. Hi saltus feras alunt, vros, vrsos, lupos nigros, aliámq; feram nostro orbi non visam, quam illi Rossomakkam nominant: rarum feræ ingenium, & spectabile: satura enim & distenta, duorum stipitum angustias quærit, per quas se transmittens, ventris onus (quod alias non egerit) excolat: vros equites vt plurimum venantur, vrsos pedites lignijs furcis. Septentrionalis tractus tam horrendi frigoris esse dicitur, vt ex humidis lignis in foco structis distillans liquor in stiriam concrescat: tanta diuersitas tantillo spacio, vt hinc prunam, illinc glaciem in eadem face cernas. Postquam hyemare apud illos incipit, assidua gelu incrementa capit, nec se prius remittit, quàm solis radij nostrum orbem reuisentes canescentem terram fulgore exhilarat, tristéq; gelu tepore soluit. Nautæ certè nostri, qui in naue remanserant ex inferiori stego in foros scandentes, tam subita Lipothymia nõnunquam sunt correpti, vt intermortui subinde ruerent: tanta erat illic rigentis cœli inclementia: Australiora illius aliquantò mitiora sunt.

Frigoris asperitas.

De Moscua Regia vrbe, & de Moscouitarum Rege.

RElíquum est vt promissa opusculi pars à nobis dicatur, déq; Moscua regia vrbe, & de Moscouitarum principe latiùs paulò disseramus, cuius imperium amplissimum est, opésq; hoc tempore insignes: Et quoniã ipsa vrbs facilè inter cæteras principatum tenet, meritò sibi primum locum vendicet. Vrbis amplitudo, vt nostri affirmant, Londinum cum suburbio magnitudine æquat. Aedificia habet multa, sed cultu nequaquam nostris conferẽda. Vici plures sunt, sed incomposíti, viæ lapide non sternuntur vt nostræ: ædium parietes lignij sunt, tecta scandulis vt plurimum muniuntur: iũcta oppido arx est & elegans, & munita. Huic à Septentrione annectitur vrbs lateritio muro. Ipsius etiam arcis mœnia, lateribus struuntur, quorum crassities pedes octodecim colligit: ab altera parte ficca fossa munitur castellum, ab altera flumine Vologda alluitur, quod in Orientem tendens sociales aquas Occæ adiungit. Sunt in castro nouæ ædes sacræ non inuenustæ quas tenent cœnobitæ: habent etiam papam suum, ac quosdam alios præsules, qui omnes vt plurimum in arce degunt: Ipsius certè Principis Regia minus culta, quadratæ formæ, & structuræ humilis, nostrorum palatiorum nitore longè superatur: fenestrarum angustię nunc vitrijs nunc specularibus lumen admittũt. Attalica magnifica nostratũ principum aulis ornamenta, illis deerant. Vndiq; parietibus adhęrent scamna, neq; id solum in Imperatoris Regia, verum etiã vbíq; in priuatorum ędibus. Exactis iam duodecim ab ingressu in vrbem diebus, adest nuntius ad Regias ædes nostros inuitans. Angli moram pertæsi cupidè paruêre. Itaque in aulam ingressi, honorandum centum Aulicorum cœtũ aureo cultu ad talos vsque vſque demiſſo ornatum, conſidere conſpiciunt: Exinde in ſalutatorium admiſſi, mirum quantum fulgor Imperatorius noſtrorum oculos perſtrinxerit. Ruſſorum enim Imperator Regali in ſolio ſublimis, ac aureo diademate inſigniter conſpicuus, regioq; paludamento aurificũ opere ſpectabili ornatus ſedit: aureum bacillum gemmis diſtinctum dextra tenet, ac præter cætera Regalis opulentiæ decora, inerat etiam in vultu maieſtas tanto faſtigio digna: ſtant iuxta hinc & hinc Archigrammateus ac ſilentiarius, & ipſi Regali auro veſtiti. Deinde centum quinquaginta patrum conceſſus, aureo veſtitu magnificus cubiculi ſubſellia vndiq; prætexuit. Poterat tantæ maieſtatis fulgor, poterat tam auguſtus venerãdorum patrum conſpectus inſueto mentem excutere: At Cancelerus conſtanti vultu, Regia maieſtate more ſalutata, Regis Edouardi literas tradit: lectis literis pauca de Regis noſtri incolumitate interrogat: quibus Angli paucis reſpondent: mox à noſtris per Archigrammatea dono Imperatori oblato (quod ipſe nudato capite obtulit, nam antea erat opertus) Moſcouitarum Princeps Anglos in prandij tempus, ad quod ipſos inuitauit, dimittit: poſtquam horas duas in illius cubiculo qui principi eſt à ſupplicibus morati ſunt, accerſit nũtius ad epulas: in aureum palatiũ (vt ipſi nominabant, licet parum excultum) introducti Ruſſorum Cæſarem alto toro aſſidentem argenteo amictu decoratũ, atque altero iam diademate inſignitum offendunt. Noſtri ex aduerſo collocati menſæ accumbunt, ſtat ingens medio in palatio abacus, ab imo quadratus paulum aſſurgit. Huic orbis incũbit, vnde in metam faſtigiatur, latiori ſemper orbe contractiorem ſuſtinente: hunc gaza Regia adornabat, tanta copia vt pondere etiam grauaret. Melior certè pars vaſorum, ac potoriorum omnium ex auro lectiſſimo fabricata. Quatuor ollæ magnitudine conſpicuæ, reliquam aureorum vaſculorum magnificentiam præcipuè illuſtrarunt. Tantæ enim proceritatis extiterunt, vt quinos propè pedes altitudine colligerent: fuerunt etiam argentea quædam Dolia, à noſtris minoribus capacitate non longè differentia, quibus principis potum priuatim ſeruant. Quatuor menſæ ad ſingula Triclinij latera ſingulæ diſpoſitæ ac mundiſſimis mappis ſtratæ, quibus ab humiliori ſolo ternis gradibus erat aſcenſus, celeberrimo conuiuarum cætu inſtruuntur. Hij foris linteati, intúſq; precioſiſſimis pellibus veſtiti, regalem cœnam ornarunt. Cum princeps cultrum vel panem attrectat ſigno crucis frontem prius munit. Qui in amicitia principis palmam tenent, cõſiliorúmq; participes fiunt, eidẽ thoro adhibiti, remotiore loco ab ipſo ſedent. Porrò hic dum expectantur epulæ, veteri ac quaſi auito Moſcouitarum principum more, ipſe Imperator ſingulos conuiuas pane primum donat, cum donorum ſuorum titulo, ac elata voce in hũc modum. Magnus Moſcouitarum Dux, ac ſummus Ruſſiæ Imperator Ioannes Vaſiliuich (deinde qui perfert accipientẽ nominat) te pane donat. Sub hoc aſſurgunt conuiuæ vniuerſi, ac mox reſidunt. Peracto principis munere, celebri dapiferorum pompa incedit Atrienſis, ac ſalutato principe Cygnellum aurea in lance menſæ admouet: mox tollit, ac ſtructori, cum ſeptem comitibus in fruſta diſcerpendũ tradit. Hęc in menſam paulò poſt illata, pari ceremoniæ celebritate conuiuis diſtribuuntur. Dum hæc aguntur & ipſe Atrienſis pane donatus delibat, ac honorata principis celſitudine mox recedit. De reliquorũ ordine miſſuum, cum omninò incompoſitè ſunt illati, nihil certi referre poſſunt noſtri. Illud certè conſtat, vniuerſum eſculentorum, ac potoriorum omnium apparatum, quibus centum conuiuis miniſtratum eſt, lectiſſimi auri fuiſſe, menſaſq; ipſas vaſis adeò fuiſſe onuſtas, vt nonnullis etiam in menſa deeſſet locus: Neq; verò ſilentio inuoluendum eſt miniſtros centum quadraginta, aurea veſte ornatos ter ipſo conuiuij tempore cultum mutauiſſe: Miniſtri quoq; panc ac potu donantur ſimili (quo reliqui) modo. Ad poſtremum finito prandio, ac illatis lucernis (erat enim iam mox) conuiuas ac familiares omnes nomine appellat, vt non immeritò mirum videatur tot ac tam varia cognomina principi alioqui occupatiſſimo, memoria non excidere: Donatiui, ac citandorum nominum ratio eſt, vt Moſcouitæ referunt, tum vt familiam probè noſcat, tum vt qui principis amicitia exciderunt hoc modo notentur. Nota.

De re Militari Moſcouitarum.

QVoties finitimorum iniurię principem in bellũ euocant, haud vnquam infra trecenta virorum millia in hoſtem armat. Ex quorum numero, centum circiter millia in aciem ſecũ educens, reliqua in tutelam Imperij in præſidijs aptis in locis diſponit. Colonum nullũ, nullum Mercatorem in militiam legit, tanta enim eſt populi multitudo, vt his domi relictis, iuuentus bellis gerendis abundè ſuppeditetur. Quoſcunq; in expeditionem ducit, proprio ſumptu ſeipſos alunt: pedeſtrem pugnam non nouerunt, equites in aciem procedũt. Arma ſunt his lorica, & galea, lorica foris auro tegitur, vel holoſerico etiam gregario militi. Impenſè iuuat opulentiam oſtentare. Arcu ac ſagittis vtuntur more Turcarum. Lanceas etiam in aciem gerunt: ſtapeda adductiore equitant, idq; vt Turcæ: Genus eſt hominũ, algoris vltra omnem fidem patiens, ac

ac victus parcissimum. Nam cum tellus alta niue candet, cum terra horrēdo gelu astricta riget, tamen hic Sarmata, sago stipitibus, vndè ventus ac niues sæuiunt, expasso, exiguum ignem sibi struit, atq; auersus à vento iacet: sagum illi pro tecto est: sagum pro muro: in summa sagi instar omnium est. Hic incola niuium aqua, è gelido amne petita, ac similagine auenæ admixta, conuiuium suum instruit: ac his dapibus satus, ac lautè pastus, ad ignem decumbit, lateráque huiusmodi lautitiarum crapula defessa, rigenti solo perurit. Huic rigens solum pro pluma, tricus seu cilex pro ceruicali. Equus etiam non lautiori pabulo nutritus quàm herus, hero est contubernalis. Quàm merito hic ignobilis & obscurus Sarmata, effeminatā ducibus nostris molliciem exprobret, qui cœlo longè clementiore, pellitis ocreis renonibúsq; vtuntur. Hic est gregariorum militum apparatus. At qui illustriori dignitatis sunt loco, instructiores paulò in militiam proficiscuntur. Ipsius quidem Imperatoris apparatus vel tum maximè est insignis: Tentorij enim vela, vt plurimum aurea sunt, spectabili etiannum plumariorum opere margaritisq; ornata. Quoties cum hoste conserendum est, incomposiți in hostile agmen procurrunt: neque aciem dirigunt (vt mos est nostris) sed in insidijs collocati aduersarios adoriuntur. Ipsoru equi bidui inediam facilè ferunt. In bello vt plurimum arborum cortices, ac virgultorum mollia his sunt pro pabulo: bimestri spatio hanc tantam penuriam, etiam vegeti, ac fortes & equus & eques non rarò perferūt. Si cuius opera in bello strenua princeps vsus est, hūc prædio aut fundo aliquo donat, in alimentum sui suorúmq;, qui tamē ad ipsum Imperatorē post eius mortem redit, si nulla proles virilis sexus ipsi contingat: nam si numerosam etiam fœminarum sobolem genuerit, tamen hunc hereditariū agrum vendicat princeps, nisi quod exiguam fortè partem ad dotandas puellas princeps concedat. Porrò qui Imperatoris munificentia illo modo muneratur, graui pecunia astringūtur tot milites in bello alere, cum necessitas postulat, quot illius fundi reditus Imperatoris censura abundè nutrire possit. Haud meliori sunt sorte, quibus hæreditario iure agri contingunt. Nam si moriuntur, nec sobolem masculam reliquerint, decedētis prædia fisco Imperatorio statim cedunt. Super hęc, si opimus aliquis, bello inutilis ab Aulicis principi deferatur, quod rei militari in idoneus amplas facultates habeat, quibus multi clari sanguinis viri bello apti nutriantur, mox arcessitur infœlix, opibúsq; quas tantis cum sudoribus, quas tot laboribus per omnem vitam comparauit, tantillo temporis momento exuitur, nisi quod particulam aliquam à principe recipit, ad se, cōiugem, liberos, ac domesticos alendos. Hęc autem à populo Imperatori suo tam alacriter fiunt, vt credas illos aliena restituisse, non sua alieno dedisse. His bonis pro meritis singulorum aulicos suos donat princeps. In Bellis etiam, quo quis sæpius in expeditionē mittitur, eo propensiorē in se principis fauorem auguratur, etiā cum suis impensis seipsum alat: sicuti antea à nobis dictū est: tantum est apud omnes ducis sui obsequii.

Ingens Regum obseruantia.

De Legatis Ducis Moscouitarum.

NOn minori magnificentia quàm qua diximus, Legatos suos in obeundis negotijs ad exteros reges mittit Moscouita: nam nostris Moscuę agentibus, legatos duos ad Polonæ Regem iter suscipientes vel ingressos, quingenti Equites ornatissimi comitabantur, quorum melior pars veste aurea, ac serico induebatur, & qui incultissimè cymatili, vt interim equorum strata, auro argentóq; inducta, & spectabili Phrygionum opere ornata silentio transeam: habebant insuper centum sonipedes albos pulcherrimósq;, in quos (si alicuius tædiū ipsos in itinere cepisset) cum vellent transcenderent. Sed nunc tempus exigit vt ad quasdam alias Moscouitarum vrbes orationem conuertamus, & merces quibus abundant breuiter perstringamus.

Nouogardia.

SEquitur Moscuam celeberrima vrbium Nouogardia, quæ vt illi dignitate est inferior, in magnitudine non parum superat. Emporium est totius Imperij longè nobilissimum: & licet regiam sedem sibi princeps Moscuæ constituit, fluminis tamen opportunus interlapsus, ac post in mare Sarmaticum exoneratus, facit Mercatorum conuentu, ipsa Regia vrbe celebratiorem. Huic vrbi ob summam optimi lini ac canabis abundantiā, inter reliquas regni vrbes facilè datur palma: vendit etiam coria, mel, & ceram. Instituerunt ibi Collegium mercatorum Flandri, qui pari perfidia vsi apud illos, qua nuper apud nos, priuilegia amiserant, quæ sibi restitui, nostris ibi morantibus enixè à duce postularunt. Hi, audito nostrorum accessu, literas expediūt ad principem, nostros falsis criminibus onerant, & in suspicionem piraticæ vocant, itaq; hortantur vt detineat, ac in vincula conijciat: Hæc cum nostris nuntiata sunt, in summam desperationem adducuntur domum reditionis: Princeps tamen multò illustrissimus, regijs scriptis confirmatus, fidem nequaquam mendacibus literis adhibuit.

Flandrorum Mercatorum mendaces literę ad Regem aduersus nostros.

Yeraslaui,

Yeraſlauia.

CElebratur quoque Yeraſlauia propter coria, ſeuum ac fruges quibus plurimum abundat. Cerarum etiam orbes ibi ſunt venales, licet alijs in locis maior ſit copia: ſita hæc eſt ab vrbe Regia ad lapidem ducentiſſimum: totum interuallum plurimos habet vicos populoſiſſimos: abundant agri frugibus, quas Moſcuam tanta copia conuehunt, vt aliquando antemeridiano videas ſeptingentenas vel octingentenas trahas vltrò citróq; commeantes, fruges, vel ſalſamenta vehentes. Veniunt à milleſimo lapide Moſcuam, mercatum fruges, trahíſque vehunt. Hij ſunt Aquilonis incolæ, nam tanta eſt ibi frigoris immanitas, vt ſegetes non creſcant, aut ſi creſcunt non matureſcunt. Hij ſalſamenta, pelles, & coria, merces afferunt.

Vologda.

VOlogda quingentis quinquaginta millibus paſſuũ interiectis, ab vrbe Metropolitana diſtans, mercimonia habet, ſeuum ac linum, tametſi lini maior vis Nouogardiæ væneat.

Pleſcouia.

PRopter Mellis ceræq; præcipuam vim à mercatoribus frequentatur Pleſcouia.

Colmogora.

MIttit Aquilonaris Ruſſiæ tractus raras ac precioſas pelles: in his ſunt vel præcipui Zabellinæ, Dominarum noſtrarũ ceruicibus imprimis expetitæ: habent etiam pelles martias, vulpinas, candidas, nigras, & rufas, leporinas, & armelinas, aliáſq; Barbaris nominibus dictas, beueres, mingas, miniueras: gignit vicinum mare belluam à Barbaris Mors nominatam: hęc dentium adminiculo rupes ſcandens pabulum petit. Hanc cupiunt Ruſſi ob dentium inſignem vſum, qui non minor his eſt, quam elephantorum noſtratibus. Hæc mercimonia ceruorum dorſis ad oppidum Lampas feruntur. Deinceps mercatores vrbem Colmogoram petunt, atq; ibi Hyberno tempore, celeberrimæ ſunt illarum mercium nundinæ: ſuppeditat hæc vrbs vndiquáque vicinæ regioni affatim ſalem ac ſalſamenta: mittunt & Aquilonares Ruſſi oleum à Barbaris, Trein nominatum, quod in quodam flumine Vna dicto faciunt, licet non ſolum ibi habeatur: coquunt etiam marinam aquam vnde ipſis conſtat vis magna ſalis.

Vna flumen, vel Dwina.

De diſſidentium lite, & quibus arbitris finiantur certamina.

NVnc quoniam de inſignioribus vrbibus ea diximus, quæ locus poſtulauit, ſupereſt vt de iuris forma qua vtuntur Moſcouitæ, quatenus ad notitiam noſtram peruenit, perſcribamus. Si qua lis apud eos oritur, fundorum Dominos, iudices primum conſtituunt: hij ſi componere litem non poſſunt, ſuperiori magiſtratui certamen deferunt. Accuſator à magiſtratu petit, vt liceat ſibi aduerſarium in ius vocare. Mox facta poteſtate ſatellitem vocat ac reum ſiſtit, ac in ius rapit: huius tibias flagris cædit Lictor, donec proferat, qui legi ſatiſdet: at reus ſi eius fidei non ſit, vt vadem inueniat, manibus collo conſtrictis à lictore trahitur, verberibúſq; coúſque afficitur, donec ad dicendam cauſam coram Iudice ſiſtatur. Reus itaque à magiſtratu interrogatus (verbi gratia in quæſtione alieni æris) an in illius ære alieno ſit à quo accuſatur, ille it inficias: Ad hæc Iudex, quí potes inficiari? tum reus, iureiurando. Mox à magiſtratu prohibetur lictor ampliùs verberare, donec certiori fide de lite conſtet: leguleios non alunt: Quiſq; ſibi Aduocatus eſt, atq; accuſantis querela, reíq; defenſio ſupplicum literarum forma principi tradũtur, iuſtã principis ſententiã petentiũ. Ipſe Imperator omnẽ litem maiorum præſertim controuerſiarũ cognoſcit, ac cognita lite ſententiam fert. Ille ſumma æquitate certamina dirimit, quod in ſummæ maieſtatis principe præcipua laude dignũ reor. Id licet ſancto animi propoſito faciat, mirè tamen mali magiſtratus idem peruertunt, quos quidẽ in crimine deprehenſos, ſæueriſſimè princeps vindicat. Ad poſtremum cum vtráq; pars, quibus potuit argumentis, cauſam ſuam confirmauit, rogat Iudex accuſatorem, an vlla cauſæ ſuæ argumenta adhuc ſuperſint? reſpondet ſe vel pugilem ſuum manu ſtrenua etiam in hoſte comprobaturum, ac poſtulat vt ſingulari certamine congredi liceat, copiáque certandi vtríque facta, ambo in mono-

monomachiam ruunt: aut si alteruter vel vterque parum strenuus, aut pugnæ minus habilis sit, pugiles publicos substituunt: habent enim pugiles, quibus solo hoc quæstu victus constat. Hij armati in arenam descendunt: tela sunt vt plurimum claua bellica, & venabulum: fit pugna pedestris. Cuius igitur pugil in certamine superatur, is absque mora in vincula conijcitur, vbi miseris modis tractatur, donec cum aduersario certamen finiat. Præter hæc, si vterq; ortus sit claris parentibus, atque alter alterum priuatum hostem deposcit, annuit Iudex, nec tum vicarijs pugilibus fas est vti. Porro qui splendidiori loco natus est, hostem obscuriori ortum familia, in certamine respuit. Si quis pauper ære alieno astrictus, creditori soluendo non sit, abducit illum creditor, atque eousq; opere faciundo exercet, vel alteri operam obærati elocat, donec operando debitum persoluit: sunt qui sponte, se, coniugem, ac liberos opulentioribus per omnem vitam emancipabunt, vt in initio exiguam pecuniolæ summam accipiant, ac post pro reliqua vita alimenta capiant: adeo illis vilescit libertas.

Pugiles Mercenarij.

De furum supplicijs.

SI quis furto deprehensus sit, in carcerem conijciunt, ac flagris subinde cædunt, neque ob primam noxam suspendunt, vt nos, atque hanc, legem misericordiæ appellant: qui secundò delinquit, illi nasum præcidunt, ac stigmatis frontem signant: Tertia noxa crucem meretur. Multi, & insignes sunt crumenisecæ: quod si principis seueritas ipsos non tolleret, non esset resistere illorum prouentui.

De Religione.

GRęcæ Ecclesiæ dogma amplectuntur: simulachra Diuorum in templis non admittunt: tabulas tamen diuorum, imaginibus pictas in sacris ædibus frequentes habent: has adorant, his dona offerunt, his cereos accendunt, has etiam sacro fonte aspergunt, alioqui illis nullus est honos. Simulachra nostra nullam diuinitatis vim habere asserunt, quòd in templis dicantur perinde vt à statuarijs emuntur. Priuatis in ædibus statuas instar penatium colunt. Hæ in obscurissima parte domus vt plurimum statuũtur. Si quis domum vicini intrat, primùm omnium penates salutat, etiam cùm non videat: si scamnum aut sella stet in proximo, subinde frontem illidens in sellam, ac crebro capite & corpore nutans larem adorat. Sacrorum ac prophanorum virorum in vestitu nulla diuersitas. Nulli nec sacro nec prophano interdicitur matrimonium. Cæterùm si Ecclesiastici vxor è vita decedat, secundas nuptias repetere non licet. Quocirca ex sacerdotibus (vt vocant) secularibus fiunt plerúmque Monachi, quibus perpetua imperatur castitas. Sacra officia in templis materno idiomate fiunt. Ex pane fermentato Eucharistiam consecrant, ac post consecrationem, lance in capite per templum circumferunt nec participare volentem prohibent. Nouum ac vetus testamentum in templis legunt lingua vernacula tam offensate, vt nec ipse qui legit intelligat. Dum illa leguntur, garrire, confabulari, ac obstrepere licet, in reliquo officio, summam modestiam ac sanctimoniam præ se ferunt. Orationem dominicam decimus quisque haud nouit. The newe Nauigation and discouerie of the kingdome of Moscouia, by the Northeast, in the yeere 1553 : Enterprised by Sir Hugh Willoughbie knight, and perfourmed by Richard Chanceler, Pilot maior of the voyage. Translated out of the former Latine into English.

Vpon what occasions, and by whom this voyage was set out, and of the discouerie of Moscouie by the North.

AT what time our Marchants perceiued the commodities and wares of England to be in small request with the Countreis and people about vs, and neere vnto vs, and that those Marchandizes which strangers in the time and memorie of our auncestors did earnestly seeke and desire, were now neglected, and the price thereof abated, although by vs caried to their owne portes, and all forreine marchandises in great accompt, and their prises wonderfully raised: certaine graue citizens of London, and men of great wisedome, and carefull of the good of their Country, beganne to thinke with themselues, howe this mischiefe might bee remedied: neither was a remedie (as it then appeared) wanting to their desires, for the auoyding of so great an inconuenience: for seeing that the wealth of the Spaniards and Portingals, by the discouerie and search of newe trades and Countreis was marueilously increased, supposing the same to bee a course and meane for them also to obteine the like, they thereupon resolued vpon a newe and straunge nauigation. And whereas at the same time one Sebastian Cabota, a man in those dayes very renowmed, happened to be in London, they beganne first of all to deale and consult diligently with him, and after much speache and conference together, it was at last concluded that three shippes should be prepared and furnished out, for the search and discouerie of the Northerne part of the worlde, to open a way and passage to our men for trauaile to newe and vnknowen kingdomes.

Ships furnished for the discouerie.

And whereas many things seemed necessarie to bee regarded in this so harde and difficult matter, they first make choyce of certaine graue and wise persons in maner of a Senate or companie, which shoulde laye their heads together, and giue their iudgements, and prounde things requisite and profitable for all occasions: by this companie it was thought expedient, that a certaine summe of money shoulde publiquely bee collected to serue for the furnishing of so many shippes. And least any priuate man shoulde bee too much oppressed and charged, a course was taken, that euery man willing to be of the societie, should disburse the portion of twentie and fiue pounds a piece: so that in short time by this meanes the summe of fiue thousande pounds being gathered, the three shippes were bought, the most part whereof they prouided to bee newly built and trimmed. But in this action, I wotte not whether I may more admire the care of the Marchants, or the diligence of the Shippewrights: for the Marchants, they gette very strong and well seasoned plankes for the building, the Shippewrights, they with daylie trauaile, and their greatest skill, doe fitte them for the dispatche of the shippes: they calke them, pitche them, and among the rest, they make one most stanche and firme, by an excellent and ingenious inuention. For they had heard that in certaine partes of the Ocean, a kinde of worme is breede, which many times pearceth and eateth through the strongest oake that is: and therefore that the Mariners, and the rest to be employed in this voyage might bee free and safe from this danger, they couer a piece of the keele of the shippe with thinne sheetes of leade: and hauing thus built the shippes, and furnished them with armour and artillerie, then followed a second care no lesse troublesome and necessarie then the former, namely, the prouision of victuals, which was to be made according to the time and length of the voyage. And whereas they afore determined to haue the East part of the worlde sayled vnto, and yet that the sea towards the same was not open, except they kept the Northerne tract, where as yet it was doubtfull whether there were any passage yea or no, they resolued to victuall the shippes for eighteene moneths, which they did for this reason. For our men being to passe that huge and colde part of the worlde, they wisely foreseeing it, allowe them fiue moneths victuall to saile to the place, so much more to remaine there if the extremitie of the winter hindered their returne, and so much more also for the time of their comming home.

Prouision of victuals for 18. moneths.

Choise of captaines and Pilots.

Sir Hugh Willoughbie.

Nowe this prouision being made and caried aboorde, with armour and munition of all sorts, sufficient Captaines and gouernours of so great an enterprise were as yet wanting: to which office and place, although many men, (and some voyde of experience) offered themselues, yet one Sir Hugh Willoughbie a most valiant Gentleman, and well borne, very earnestly requested to haue that care and charge committed vnto him: of whome before all others, both by reason of

of his goodly perſonage (for hee was of a tall ſtature) as alſo for his ſingular ſkill in the ſeruices of warre, the companie of the Marchants made greateſt accompt: ſo that at the laſt they concluded and made choyce of him for the Generall of this voyage, and appointed to him the Admirall, with authoritie and commaunde ouer all the reſt. And for the gouernement of the other ſhips although diuers men ſeemed willing, and made offers of themſelues thereunto, yet by a common conſent one Richard Chanceler, a man of great eſtimation for many good partes of witte in him, was elected, in whome alone great hope for the performance of this buſineſſe reſted. This man was brought vp by one maiſter Henrie Sidney, a noble young Gentleman and very much beloued of king Edwarde, who at this time comming to the place where the Marchants were gathered together, beganne a very eloquent ſpeache or Oration, and ſpake to them after this maner following.

Richard Chanceler Grand Pilot beyne in Aprſlow.

M. Henry Sidney his Oration.

My very worſhipfull friendes, I cannot but greatly commende your preſent godly and vertuous intention, in the ſerious enterpriſing (for the ſinguler loue you beare to your Countrey,) a matter, which (I hope) will prooue profitable for this nation, and honourable to this our land. Which intention of yours (wee alſo of the Nobilitie) are readie to our power to helpe and further: neither doe wee holde any thing ſo deare and precious vnto vs, which wee will not willingly forgoe, and lay out in ſo commendable a cauſe. But principally I reioyce in my ſelfe, that I haue nouriſhed and maintained that witte, which is like by ſome meanes and in ſome meaſure, to profite and ſteede you in this worthy action. But yet I would not haue you ignorant of this one thing, that I doe nowe part with Chanceler, not becauſe I make litle reckoning of the man, or that his maintenance is burdenous and chargeable vnto mee, but that you might conceiue and vnderſtande, my good will and promptitude for the furtherance of this buſineſſe, and that the authoritie and eſtimation which hee deſerueth may be giuen him. You know the man by report, I by experience, you by wordes, I by deedes, you by ſpeache and companie, but I by the daily triall of his life, haue a full and perfect knowledge of him. And you are alſo to remember, into howe many perils for your ſakes, and his Countreys loue, hee is nowe to runne: whereof it is requiſite that wee bee not vnmindefull, if it pleaſe God to ſende him good ſucceſſe. Wee commit a little money to the chaunce and hazard of Fortune: Hee committs his life, (a thing to a man of all things moſt deare) to the raging Sea, and the vncertainties of many dangers. We ſhall here liue and reſt at home quietly with our friendes, and acquaintance: but hee in the meane time labouring to keepe the ignorant and vnruly Marriners in good order and obedience, with howe many cares ſhall hee trouble and vexe himſelfe, with howe many troubles ſhall hee breake himſelfe, and howe many diſquietings ſhall hee bee forced to ſuſtaine? Wee ſhall keepe our owne coaſtes and Countrey, Hee ſhall ſeeke ſtrange and vnknowen kingdomes. Hee ſhall commit his ſafetie to barbarous and cruell people, and ſhall hazarde his life amongſt the monſtrous and terrible beaſtes of the Sea. Wherefore in reſpect of the greatneſſe of the dangers, and the excellencie of his charge, you are to fauour and loue the man thus departing from vs, and if it fall ſo happily out that hee returne againe, it is your part and duetie alſo, liberally to rewarde him.

After that this noble yong Gentleman had deliuered this or ſome ſuch like ſpeache, much more eloquently then I can poſſiblie report it, the companie then preſent beganne one to looke vpon another, one to queſtion and conferre with another: and ſome (to whome the vertue and ſufficiencie of the man was knowen) began ſecretly to reioyce with themſelues, and to conceiue a ſpeciall hope, that the man would prooue in time very rare and excellent, and that his vertues alreadie appearing and ſhining to the worlde, would growe to the great honour and aduancement of this kingdome.

After all this, the companie growing to ſome ſilence, it ſeemed good to them that were of greateſt grauitie amongſt them, to inquire, ſearche and ſeeke what might be learned and knowen, concerning the Eaſterly part or tract of the world. For which cauſe 2. Tartarians, which were then of the Kings Stable, were ſent for, & an interpreter was gotten to be preſent, by whom they were demaunded touching their Countrey and the maners of their nation. But they were able to anſwere nothing to the purpoſe: being in deede more acquainted (as one there merily and openly ſaide) to toſſe pottes, then to learne the ſtates and diſpoſitions of people. But after much adoe and many things paſſed about this matter, they grewe at laſt to this iſſue, to ſet downe and appoint a time for the departure of the ſhippes: becauſe diuers were of opinion, that a great part of the beſt time of the yeere was alreadie ſpent, and if the delaye grewe longer, the way would bee ſtopt and barde by the force of the Ice, and the colde climate: and therefore it was thought beſt by the opinion of them all, that by the twentieth day of May, the Captaines and Marriners shoulde take shipping, and depart from Ratliffe vpon the ebbe, if it so pleased God. They having saluted their acquaintance, one his wife, another his children, another his kinsefolkes, and another his friendes deerer then his kinsefolkes, were present and readie at the day appointed, and hauing waied ancre, they departed with the turning of the water, and sayling easily came first to Greenewich. The greater shippes were towed downe with boates, and oares, and the mariners being all apparelled in Watchet or skie coloured clothe, rowed a maine, and made way with diligence. And being come neere to Greenewich (where the Court then laye) presently vpon the newes thereof the Courtiers came running out, and the common people flocked together, standing very thicke vpon the shoare: the priuie Counsell, they lookt out at the windowes of the Court, and the rest ranne vp to the toppes of the towers: the shippes hereupon discharge their Ordinance, and shoote off their pieces after the maner of warre, and of the sea, insomuch that the tops of the hilles sounded therewith, the valleys, and the waters gaue an Eccho, and the mariners they shouted in such sort, that the skie rang againe with the noyse thereof. One stoode in the poope of the shippe, and by his gesture biddes fare well to his friendes in the best maner he coulde. Another walkes vpon the hatches, another climbes the shrowes, another standes vpon the maine yarde, and another in the toppe of the shippe. To bee short, it was a very triumphe (better a sort) in all respects to the beholders. But (alas) the good King Edwarde (in respect of whome principally all this was prepared,) hee onely by reason of his sickenesse was absent from this shewe, and not long after the departure of these ships, the lamentable and most sorowfull accident of his death followed.

They departed from Ratcliffe the 20. of May 1553.

But to proceede in the matter.

The shippes going downe with the tyde, came at last to Woolwiche, where they stayed and cast ancre, with purpose to depart thereheuce againe, as soone as the turning of the water, and better winde shoulde drawe them to set saile. After this they departed and came to Harwiche, in which porte they stayed long, not without great losse and consuming of time: yet at the last with a good winde they hoysed vp saile, and committed themselues to the sea, giuing their last adieu to their natiue Countrey, which they knewe not whether they shoulde euer returne vnto againe or not. Many of them looked oftentimes backe, and could not refraine from teares, considering into what hazards they were to fall, and what vncertainties of the sea they were to make triall of.

Amongst the rest Richard Chanceler, the Captaine of the Edwarde Bonauenture, was not a litle grieued with the feare of wanting victuals, part whereof was founde to bee corrupt, and putrified at Harwiche, and the hoggesheads of wine also leaked, and were not stanch: his naturall and fatherly affection also somewhat troubled him, for hee left behinde him his two little sonnes, which were in the case of Orphanes if hee spedde not well: the estate also of his companie moued him to care, being in the former respects after a sort vnhappie, and were to abide with himselfe euery good or badde accident: but in the meane time while his minde was thus tormented with the multiplicitie of sorowes and cares, after many dayes sayling, they kenned lande afarre off, whereunto the Pilots directed the shippes: and being come to it they landed, and finde it to be Rose Illande, where they stayed certaine dayes, and afterwards set saile againe, and proceeding towardes the North, they espied certaine other Illands, which were called the Crosse of Illands. From which places when they were a litle departed, master Willoughbie the Generall, a man of good foresight and prouidence in all his actions, erected and set out his flagge, by which he called together the chiefest men of the other shippes, that by the helpe and assistance of their counsels, the order of the gouernement, and conduction of the shippes in the whole voyage, might be the better: who being come together accordingly, they conclude and agree, that if any great tempest should arise at any time, and happen to disperse and scatter them, euery shippe shoulde endeuour his best to goe to Wardhouse, a hauen or castell of some name in the kingdome of Norway, and that they that arriued there first in safetie, shoulde staye and expect the comming of the rest.

The very same day in the afternoone, about foure of the clocke, so great a tempest suddenly rose, and the Seas were so outragious, that the shippes coulde not keepe their intended course, but some were perforce driuen one way, and some another way, to their great perill and hazarde. The generall with his lowdest voyce, cried out to Richard Chanceler, and earnestly required him not to goe farre from him: but hee neither would nor coulde keepe companie with him, if he sailed still so fast: for the Admirall was of better saile then his shippe. But the saide Admirall (I knowe not by what meanes) bearing all his sailes, was carried away with so great force and swiftnesse, that not long after hee was quite out of sight, and the thirde shippe also with his sonne ſame ſtorme and like rage, was diſperſed and loſt vs.

The ſhippe boate of the Admirall (ſtriking againſt the ſhippe,) was ouerwhelmed in the ſight and viewe of the Marriners of the Bonauenture: and as for them that are alreadie returned and arriued, they knowe nothing of the reſt of the ſhippes what was become of them. They returne the next peere not knowing what was become of the other 2. ſhips.

But if it be ſo, that any miſerable miſhappe haue ouertaken them, If the rage and furie of the Sea haue deuoured thoſe good men, or if as yet they liue, and wander vp and downe in ſtrange Countreis, I muſt needes ſay they were men worthy of better fortune, and if they be liuing, let vs wiſh them ſafetie and a good returne, but if the crueltie of death hath taken holde of them, God ſende them a Chriſtian graue and Sepulchre.

Nowe Richard Chanceler with his ſhippe and companie being thus left alone, and become very penſiue, heauie, and ſorrowfull, by this diſperſion of the Fleete, hee (according to the order before taken,) ſhapeth his courſe for Wardhouſe in Norway, there to expect and abide the arriuall of the reſt of the ſhippes. And being come thither, and hauing ſtaied there the ſpace of 7. dayes, and looked in vaine for their comming, he determined at length to proceede alone in the purpoſed voyage. And as hee was preparing himſelfe to depart, it happened that hee fell in companie and ſpeache with certaine Scottiſhmen: who hauing vnderſtanding of his intention, and wiſhing well to his actions, beganne earneſtly to diſſwade him from the further proſecution of the diſcouerie, by amplifying the dangers which hee was to fall into, and omitted no reaſon that might ſerue to that purpoſe. But hee holding nothing ſo ignominious and reprochfull, as inconſtancie and leuitie of minde, and perſwading himſelfe that a man of valure couide not commit a more diſhonourable part then for feare of danger to auoyde and ſhunne great attempts, was nothing at all chaunged or diſcouraged with the ſpeaches and wordes of the Scots, remayning ſtedfaſt and immutable in his firſt reſolution: determining either to bring that to paſſe which was intended, or els to die the death.

And as for them which were with maſter Chanceler in his ſhippe, although they had great cauſe of diſcomfort by the loſſe of their companie (whome the foreſaide tempeſt had ſeparated from them,) and were not a little troubled with cogitations and perturbations of minde, in reſpect of their doubtfull courſe: yet notwithſtanding, they were of ſuch conſent and agreement of minde with maſter Chanceler, that they were reſolute, and prepared vnder his direction and gouernment, to make proofe and triall of all aduentures, without all feare or miſtruſt of future dangers. Which conſtancie of minde in all the companie did exceedingly increaſe their Captaines carefulneſſe: for hee being ſwallowed vp with like good will and loue towardes them, feared leaſt through any errour of his, the ſafetie of the companie ſhoulde bee indangered. To conclude, when they ſawe their deſire and hope of the arriuall of the reſt of the ſhippes to bee euery day more and more fruſtrated, they prouided to ſea againe, and maſter Chanceler helde on his courſe towardes that vnknowen part of the world, and ſailed ſo farre, that hee came at laſt to the place where hee founde no night at all, but a continuall light and brightneſſe of the Sunne ſhining clearely vpon the huge and mightie Sea. And hauing the benefite of this perpetuall light for certaine dayes, at the length it pleaſed God to bring them into a certaine great Bay, which was of one hundreth miles or thereabout ouer. Whereinto they entred, and ſomewhat farre within it caſt ancre, and looking euery way about them, it happened that they eſpied afarre off a certaine fiſher boate, which maſter Chanceler, accompanied with a fewe of his men, went towardes to common with the fiſhermen that were in it, and to knowe of them what Countrey it was, and what people, and of what maner of liuing they were: but they being amazed with the ſtrange greatneſſe of his ſhippe, (for in thoſe partes before that time they had neuer ſeene the like) beganne preſently to auoyde and to flee: but hee ſtill following them, at laſt ouertooke them, and being come to them, they (being in great feare, as men halfe dead) proſtrated themſelues before him, offering to kiſſe his feete: but hee (according to his great and ſinguler courteſie,) looked pleaſantly vpon them, comforting them by ſignes and geſtures, refuſing thoſe duties and reuerences of theirs, and taking them vp in all louing ſort from the ground. And it is ſtrange to conſider howe much fauour afterwardes in that place, this humanitie of his did purchaſe to himſelfe. For they being diſmiſſed, ſpread by and by a report abroade of the arriuall of a ſtrange nation, of a ſinguler gentleneſſe and courteſie: whereupon the common people came together offering to theſe newe come gueſts victuals freely, and not refuſing to traffique with them, except they had bene bound by a certaine religious vſe and cuſtome, not to buy any forraine commodities, without the knowledge and conſent of the king.

By this time our men had learned that this Countrey was called Ruſſia, or Moſcouie, and that Euan Vaſiliuich (which was at that time their Kings name) ruled and gouerned The diſcourſe of Ruſſia.

farre and wide in those places. And the barbarous Russes asked likewise of our men whence they were, and what they came for: whereunto answere was made, that they were Englishmen sent into those coastes, from the most excellent King Edwarde the first, hauing from him in commaundement certaine things to deliuer to their King, and seeking nothing els, but his amitie and friendship, and traffique with his people, whereby they doubted not, but that great commoditie and profite would growe to the subiects of both kingdomes.

The barbarians heard these thinges very gladly, and promised their ayde and furtherance to acquaint their king out of hande with so honest and reasonable a request.

In the meane time master Chancelour intreated victuals for his money of the gouernour of that place, who together with others came aboorde him, and required hostages of them likewise for the more assurance of safetie to himselfe, and his companie. To whome the Gouernours answered, that they knew not in that case the will of their king, but yet were willing in such things as they might lawfully doe, to pleasure him: which was as then to afoorde him the benefite of victuals.

Nowe whiles these thinges were a doing, they secretly sent a messenger vnto the Emperour, to certifie him of the arriuall of a strange nation, and withall to knowe his pleasure concerning them. Which message was very welcome vnto him, insomuch that voluntarily hee inuited them to come to his Court. But if by reason of the tediousnesse of so long a iourney, they thought it not best so to doe, then hee graunted libertie to his subiects to bargaine, and to traffique with them: and further promised, (that if it woulde please them to come to him,) hee himselfe woulde beare the whole charges of poste horses. In the meane time the gouernours of the place differred the matter from day to day, pretending diuers excuses, and saying one while that the consent of all the gouernours, and another while, that the great and waighty affaires of the kingdome compelled them to differre their answere: and this they did of purpose, so long to procrastinate the time, vntill the messenger (sent before to the king) did returne with relation of his will and pleasure.

But Master Chauncelour, (seeing himselfe holde in this suspence with long and vaine expectation, and thinking that of intention to delude him, they posted the matter off so often,) was very instant with them to performe their promise: Which if they woulde not doe, hee tolde them that hee woulde depart, and proceede in his voyage. So that the Moscouites (although as yet they knewe not the minde of their king) yet fearing the departure in deede of our men, who had such wares and commodities as they greatly desired, they at last resolued to furnish our people with all thinges necessarie, and to conduct them by lande to the presence of their king. And Master Chauncelour beganne his iourney, which was very long and most troublesome, wherein hee had the vse of certaine sledds, which in that Countrey are very common, for they are carried themselues vpon sledds, and all their carriages are in the same sort, the people almost not knowing any other maner of carriage, the cause whereof is the exceeding hardnes of the ground, congealed in the winter time by the force of the colde, which in those places is very extreme and horrible, whereof hereafter we will say something.

But nowe they hauing passed the greater part of their iourney, mette at last with the Sledman (of whome I spake before) sent to the king secretly from the Iustices or gouernours, who by some ill happe had lost his way, and had gone to the Sea side, which is neere to the Country of the Tartars, thinking there to haue founde our shippe. But hauing long erred and wandered out of his way, at the last in his direct returne, hee mette (as hee was comming) our Captaine in the way. To whome hee by and by deliuered the Emperours letters, which were written to him with all courtesie, and in the most louing maner that could bee: wherein expresse commaundement was giuen, that poste horses shoulde bee gotten for him and the rest of his companie without any money. Which thing was of all the Russes in the rest of their iourney so willingly done, that they beganne to quarrell, yea, and to fight also, in striuing and contending which of them shoulde put their poste horses to the sledde: so that after much adoe, and great paines taken in this long and wearie iourney, (for they had trauailed very neere fifteene hundred miles) master Chancelour came at last to Mosco, the chiefe citie of the kingdome, and the seate of the king: of which citie, and of the Emperour himselfe, and of the principall cities of Moscouie, wee will speake immediately more at large in this discourse.

The Emperours courteous letters to M. Chancelour.

Of Mos-

Of Moſcouie, which is alſo called Ruſsia.

MOſcouie, which hath the name alſo of Ruſſia the white, is a very large, and ſpatious Countrey, euery way bounded with diuers nations. Towards the South and the Eaſt, it is compaſſed with Tartaria: the Northern ſide of it ſtretcheth to the Scythian Ocean: vpon the Weſt part, boyder the Lappians, a rude, and ſauage nation, liuing in woods, whoſe language is not knowen to any other people: next vnto theſe, more towards the South, is Swecia, then Finlandia, then Liuonia, and laſt of all Lituania. This Countrey of Moſcouie, hath alſo very many, and great riuers in it, and is marish ground in many places: and as for the riuers, the greateſt, and moſt famous amongſt all the reſt, is that, which the Ruſſes in their owne tongue call Volga, but others know it by the name of Rha. Next vnto it in fame, is Tanais, which they call Don, and the third Boriſthenes, which at this day they call Neper. Two of theſe, to wit, Rha, and Boriſthenes, yſſuing both out of one fountaine, runne very farre through the land: Rha receyuing many other pleaſant riuers into it, and running from the very head or ſpring of it towards the Eaſt, after many crooked turnings and windings, diſchargeth it ſelfe, and all the other waters, and riuers, that fals into it, by diuers paſſages into the Caſpian Sea. Tanais, ſpringing from a fountaine of great name in thoſe partes, and growing great neere to his head, ſpreds it ſelfe at length very largely, and makes a great lake: and then growing narrow againe, doth ſo runne for certaine miles, vntill it fall into another lake, which they call Iuan: and there hence, fetching a very crooked courſe, comes very neere to the riuer Volga: but diſdaining as it were, the companie of any other riuer, doth there turne it ſelfe againe from Volga, and runnes toward the South, and fals at laſt into the Lake of Mœotis. Boriſthenes, which comes from the ſame head that Rha doth, (as wee ſaide before) carieth both it ſelfe, and other waters that are neere vnto it, towards the South, not refuſing the mixture of other ſmall riuers: and running by many great and large Countreis, fals at laſt into Pontus Euxinus. Beſides theſe riuers, are alſo in Moſcouie certaine lakes, and pooles, the lakes breede fiſhe by the celeſtiall influence: and amongſt them all, the chiefeſt and moſt principall, is called Bellij Ieſera, which is very famous by reaſon of a very ſtrong Towre built in it, wherein the Kings of Moſcouie reſerue and repoſe their treaſure, in all time of warre, and danger.

The mightie lake of Bellij Ieſera.

Touching the Riphean mountaines, whereupon the ſnow lieth continually, and where hence in times paſt it was thought that Tanais the riuer did ſpring, and that the reſt of the wonders of nature, which the Grecians fained and inuented of olde were there to be ſeene, our men which lately came from thence, neither ſawe them, nor yet haue brought home any perfect relation of them, although they remained there for the ſpace of three moneths, and had gotten in that time ſome intelligence of the language of Moſcouie. The whole Countrey is plaine, and champion, and few hils in it: and towards the North it hath very large and ſpacious woods, wherin is great ſtore of Firre trees, a wood very neceſſarie, and fit for the building of houſes: there are alſo wilde beaſtes bred in thoſe woods, as Buffes, Beares, and blacke Wolues, and another kind of beaſt vnknowen to vs, but called by them Roſſomakka: and the nature of the ſame is very rare, and wonderfull: for when it is great with young, and ready to bring forth, it ſeeketh out ſome narrow place betweene two ſtakes, and ſo going through them, preſſeth it ſelfe, and by that meanes is eaſed of her burden, which otherwiſe could not be done. They hunt their buffes for the moſt part a horſebacke, but their Beares afoote, with woodden forkes. The north parts of the Countrey, are reported to be ſo colde, that the very ice or water, which diſtilleth out of the moiſt wood, which they lay vpon the fire, is preſently congealed and frozen: the diuerſitie growing ſuddenly to be ſo great, that in one and the ſelfe ſame firebrand, a man ſhall ſee both fire and ice. When the winter doth once beginne there, it doth ſtill more and more increaſe, by a perpetuitie of cold: neither doth that colde ſlake, vntill the force of the Sunne beames doth diſſolue the colde, and make glad the earth, returning to it againe. Our marriners which we left in the ſhip in the meane time to keepe it, in their going vp onely from their cabbins to the hatches, had their breath oftentimes ſo ſuddenly taken away, that they eſtſoones fell downe, as men very neere dead, ſo great is the ſharpenes of that cold climate: but as for the South partes of the Countrey, they are ſomewhat more temperate.

The ſharpnes of the winter in Moſcouie.

Of Moſco, the chiefe Citie of the kingdome, and of the Emperour thereof.

IT remaineth, that a larger diſcourſe be made of Moſco, the principall Citie of that Countrey, and of the Prince alſo, as before we haue promiſed. The Empire and gouernment of the King is

is very large, and his wealth at this time exceeding great. And because the citie of Mosco is the chiefest of all the rest, it seemeth of it selfe to challenge the first place in this discourse. Our men say, that in bignes it is as great as the Citie of London, with the Suburbes thereof. There are many and great buildings in it, but for beautie and fairenes, nothing comparable to ours. There are many Townes, and Villages also, but built out of order, and with no handsomnes: their streetes and waies are not paued with stone, as ours are: the walles of their houses are of wood: the rookes for the most part, are couered with shingle boordes. There is hard by the Citie a very faire Castle, strong, and furnished with artillerie, whereunto the Citie is ioyned directly towardes the North, with a bricke wall: the wals also of the Castle are built with bricke, and are in bredth or thickenes eightene foote. This Castle hath on the one side a dry ditch, on the other side, the riuer Volga, whereby it is made almost inexpugnable. The same Volga trending towardes the East doth admit into it the companie of the riuer Occa.

Their manner of building.

In the Castle aforesayde, there are in number nine Churches, or Chappels, not altogether vnhandsome, which are vsed and kept by certaine religious men, ouer whome, there is after a sort a Patriarke, or Gouernour, and with him other reuerent Fathers, all which for the greater part, dwell within the Castle. As for the Kings Court and Pallace, it is not of the neatest, onely in forme it is foure square, and of lowe building, much surpassed and excelled by the beautie and elegancie of the houses of the Kings of England. The windowes are very narrowly built, and some of them by glasse, some other by lettilles admitte the light: and whereas the Pallaces of our Princes are decked, and adorned with hangings of clothe of golde, there is none such there: they build and ioyne to all their wals, benches, and that not onely in the Court of the Emperour, but in all priuate mens houses.

Nowe after that they had remained about twelue daies in the Citie, there was then a Messenger sent vnto them, to bring them to the Kings house: and they being after a sort wearied with their long stay, were very ready, and willing so to doe: and being entred within the gates of the Court, there sate a very honorable companie of Courtiers, to the number of one hundred, all apparelled in cloth of golde, downe to their ankles: and there hence being conducted into the chamber of presence, our men beganne to wonder at the Maiestie of the Emperour: his seate was aloft, in a very royall throne, hauing on his head a Diademe, or Crowne of golde, apparelled with a robe all of Goldsmithes worke, and in his hande he helde a Scepter garnished, and dect with pretious stones: and besides all other notes and apparances of honour, there was a Port in his countenance, proportionable with the excellencie of his estate: on the one side of him stood his chiefe Secretarie, on the other side, the great Commander of silence, both of them arayed also in cloth of golde: and then there sate the Counsel of one hundred, and fiftie in number, al in like sort arrayed, and of great state. This so honorable an assemblie, so great a Maiestie of the Emperour, and of the place, might very wel haue amazed our men, and haue dasht them out of countenance: but notwithstanding, Master Chanceler being there withall nothing dismaied, saluted, and did his dutie to the Emperour, after the manner of England, and withall, deliuered vnto him the letters of their king, Edward the sixt. The Emperour hauing taken, & read the letters, began a litle to question with them, and to aske them of the welfare of our king: whereunto our men answered him directly, & in fewe words: hereupon our men presented some thing to the Emperour, by the chiefe Secretarie, which at the deliuerie of it, put off his hat, being before all the time couered: and so the Emperour hauing inuited them to dinner, dismissed them from his presence: and going into the chamber of him that was Master of the Requests to the Emperour, & hauing staied there the space of two howres, at the last, the Messenger commeth, and calleth them to dinner: they goe, and being conducted into the golden Court, (for so they call it, although not very fairly) they find the Emperour sitting vpon a high and stately seate, apparelled with a robe of siluer, and with an other Diademe on his heade: our men being placed ouer against him, sitte downe in the middes of the roome, stoode a mightie Cupboorde vpon a square foote, whereupon stoode also a rounde boorde, in manner of a Diamond, broade beneath, and towardes the toppe narrowe, and euery steppe rose vppe more narrowe then another. Vppon this Cupboorde was placed the Emperours plate, which was so much, that the very Cupboord it selfe was scarce able to sustayne the waight of it: the better part of all the vessels, and goblets, was made of very fine golde: and amongest the rest, there were foure pots of very large bignes, which did adorne the rest of the plate, in great measure: for they were so highe, that they thought them at the least. fiue foote long. There were also vpon this Cupboorde, certaine siluer caskes, not much differing from the quantitie of our Fykins, wherein was reserued the Emperours drinke: on eache side of the Hall, stoode foure Tables, eache of them laide, and couered with

K. Edwards letters deliuered.

very

very cleane table clothes, whereunto the companie ascended by three steps or degrees: all which were filled with the assemblie present: the ghestes were all apparelled with linnen without, and with riche skinnes within, and so did notably set out this royall feast. The Emperour, when he takes any bread or knife into his hand, doth first of all crosse himselfe vpon his forehead: they that are in speciall fauour with the Emperour, sitte vpon the same bench with him, but somewhat farre from him: and before the comming in of the meate, the Emperour himselfe, according to an ancient custome of the kings of Moscouy, doth first bestow a peece of bread vpon euery one of his ghests, with a loud pronunciation of his title, and honour, in this manner: The great Duke of Moscouie, and chiefe Emperour of Russia, Iohn Basiliwich, (& then the officer nameth the ghest) doth giue thee bread. Wherupon all the ghests rise vp, and by and by sit downe again. This done, the Gentleman Vsher of the Hall comes in, with a notable companie of seruants, carying the dishes, and hauing done his reuerence to the Emperour, puts a young Swanne in a golden platter vpon the table, and immediatly takes it thence againe, deliuering it to the Caruer, and seuen other of his fellowes to be cut vp: which being performed, the meate is then distributed to the ghests, with the like pompe, and ceremonies. In the meane time, the Gentleman Vsher receiues his bread, and tasteth to the Emperour, and afterward, hauing done his reuerence, he departeth. Touching the rest of the dishes, because they were brought in out of order, our men can report no certaintie: but this is true, that all the furniture of dishes, and drinking vessels, which were then for the vse of a hundred ghests, was all of pure gold, and the tables were so laden with vessels of gold, that there was no roome for some to stand vpon them.

We may not forget, that there were 140. seruitors araied in cloth of golde, that in the dinner time, changed thrise their habit and apparell, which seruitors are in like sort serued with bread from the Emperour, as the rest of the ghests. Last of all, dinner being ended, and candles brought in, (for by this time night was come) the Emperour calleth all his ghests and Noble men by their names, in such sorte, that it seemes miraculous, that a Prince, otherwise occupied in great matters of estate, should so wel remember so many and sundry particular names. The Russes told our men, that the reason thereof, as also of the bestowing of bread in that manner, was to the ende that the Emperour might keepe the knowledge of his owne houshold: and withall, that such as are vnder his displeasure, might by this meanes be knowen.

Of the discipline of warre amongst the Russes.

WHensoeuer the iniuries of their neighbours doe call the King foorth to battell, he neuer armeth a lesse number against the enemie, then 300. thousand souldiers, 100. thousand whereof he carieth out into the field with him, and leaueth the rest in garrison in some fit places, for the better safetie of his Empire. He presseth no husbandmen, nor Marchant: for the Countrey is so populous, that these being left at home, the youth of the Realme is sufficient for all his wars. As many as goe out to warfare, doe prouide all things of their owne cost: they fight not on foote, but altogether on horsebacke: their armour is a coate of maile, & a helmet: the coate of maile about is gilded, or els adorned with silke, although it pertaine to a common souldier: they haue a great pride in shewing their wealth: they vse bowes, and arrowes, as the Turks do: they carry lances also into the field. They ride with a short stirrop, after the manner of the Turkes: they are a kinde of people most sparing in diet, and most patient in extremitie of colde, aboue all others. For when the ground is couered with snowe, and is growen terrible and hard with the frost, this Russe hanges vp his mantle, or souldiers coate, against that part from whence the winde and Snowe driues, and so making a little fire, lieth downe with his backe towards the weather: this mantle of his serues him for his bed, wall, house and all: his drinke is the cold water of the riuer, mingled with oatemeale, and this is all his good cheere, and he thinketh himselfe well, and daintily fedde therewith, and so sitteth downe by his fire, and vpon the harde grounde, rosteth as it were his weary sides thus daintily stuffed: the hard ground is his feather bed, and some blocke or stone his pillow: and as for his horse, he is as it were a chamberfellow with his Master, faring both alike: how iustly may this barbarous, and rude Russe, condemne the daintines and niceues of our Captaines, who liuing in a soile and aire much more temperate, yet commonly vse furred boots, and clokes? But thus much of the furniture of their common souldiers. But those that are of higher degrees, come into the fielde, a little better prouided. As for the furniture of the Emperour himselfe, it is then aboue all other times, most notable. The couerings of his tente for the most part, are all of gold, adorned with stones of great price, and with the curious workemanship of plumasiers: as often as they are to skirmish with the enemie, they goe foorth without any order at all:

all: they make no wings, nor militarie diuisions of their men, as we doe, but lying for the most part, in ambush, doe suddenly set vpon the enemie. Their horses can well abstaine two whole daies from any meate. They feede vpon the barkes of trees, and the most tender branches, in all the time of warre. And this scant and miserable manner of liuing, both the horse and his Master can well endure, sometimes for the space of two moneths, lustie, and in good state of body. If any man behaue himselfe valiantly in the fielde, to the contentation of the Emperour, he bestoweth vpon him in recompense of his seruice, some farme, or so much ground as he and his may liue vpon, which notwithstanding after his death, returneth againe to the Emperour, if he die without a male issue. For although his daughters be neuer so many, yet no part of that inheritance comes to them, except peraduenture the Emperour of his goodnes, giue some portion of the land amongest them, to bestowe them withall. As for the man, whosoeuer he be, that is in this sorte rewarded by the Emperours liberalitie, he is bound in a great summe, to maintaine so many souldiers in the warre, when neede shall require, as that land, in the opinion of the Emperour, is able to maintaine. And all those, to whome any land fals by inheritance, are in no better condition: for if they die without any male issue, all their lands fals into the hands of the Emperour: and moreour, if there be any riche man amongst them, who in his owne person is vnfit for the warres, and yet hath such wealth, that thereby many Noble men and warriors might be maintained, if any of the Courtiers present his name to the Emperour, the vnhappy man is by and by sent for, and in that instant, depriued of all his riches, which with great paines, and trauel all his life time, he had gotten together: except perhaps some small portion thereof be left him, to maintaine his wife, children, and familie. But all this is done of all the people so willingly at the Emperours commandement, that a man would thinke, they rather make restitution of other mens goods, then giue that which is their owne to other men. Nowe the Emperour hauing taken these goods into his hands, bestoweth them among his Courtiers, according to their deserts: & the oftener that a man is sent to the warres, the more fauour he thinketh is borne to him by the Emperour, although he goe vpon his owne charge, as I said before. So great is the obedience of all men generally to their Prince.

Of the Ambassadors of the Emperour of Moscouie.

The Moscouite, with no lesse pompe, and magnificence, then that which we haue spoken of, sends his Ambassadors to forren Princes, in the affaires of estate. For while our men were abiding in the Citie of Mosco, there were two Ambassadors sent to the King of Poland, accompanied with 500. notable horse, and the greater part of the men were arraied in cloth of golde, and of silke, and the worst apparell was of garments of a blewe colour, to speake nothing of the trappings of the horses, which were adorned with gold and siluer, and very curiously embroidered: they had also with them one hundred white and faire spare horses, to vse them at such times, as any wearines came vpon them. But nowe the time requireth me to speake briefly of other Cities of the Moscouites, and of the wares and commodities that the Countrey yeeldeth.

Nouogorode.

Next vnto Mosco, the Citie of Nouogorode is reputed the chiefest of Russia: for although it be in Maiestie inferior to it, yet in greatnes it goeth beyond it. It is the chiefest and greatest Marte Towne of all Moscouie: and albeit the Emperours seate is not there, but at Mosco, yet the commodiousnes of the riuer, falling into that gulfe, which is called Sinus Finnicus, whereby it is well frequented by Marchants, makes it more famous, then Mosco it selfe. This towne excels all the rest in the commodities of flaxe, and hempe: it yeeldes also hides, honie, and wax. The Flemmings there, sometimes had a house of marchandize, but by reason that they vsed the like ill dealing there, which they did with vs, they lost their priuiledges, a restitution whereof they earnestly sued for, at the time that our men were there. But those Flemmings hearing of the arriuall of our men in those partes, wrote their letters to the Emperour against them, accusing them for pirats and rouers, wishing him to detaine, and imprison them. Which things when they were knowen of our men, they conceaued feare, that they should neuer haue returned home. But the Emperour beleeuing rather the Kings letters, which our men brought, then the lying and false suggestions of the Flemmings, vsed no ill intreatie towards them.

The iniurie of the Flemmings against our men.

Yeraslaue.

Yeraſlaue.

YEraſlaue alſo is a Towne of ſome good fame, for the commodities of hides, tallow, and corne, which it yeelds in great abundance. Cakes of waxe are there alſo to be ſolde, although other places haue greater ſtore: this Yeraſlaue is diſtant from Moſco, about two hundred miles: and betwixt them are many populous villages. Their fields yeelde ſuch ſtore of corne, that in conueying it towardes Moſco, ſometimes in a forenoone, a man ſhall ſee ſeuen hundred or eight hundred ſleds, going and comming, laden with corne and ſalt fiſhe: the people come a thouſand miles to Moſco, to buy that corne, and then carry it away vpon ſleds: and theſe are thoſe people that dwell in the North parts, where the cold is ſo terrible, that no corne doth grow there, or if it ſpring vp, it neuer comes to ripenes. The commodities that they bring with them, are ſalt fiſhe, ſkinnes, and hydes.

Vologda.

VOlogda being from Moſco, 550. miles, yeeldes the commodities of hempe, and flaxe alſo: although the greateſt ſtore of flaxe is ſolde at Nouogrode.

Pleſco.

THe Towne of Pleſco, is frequented of Marchants for the good ſtore of honie, and waxe, that it yeeldeth.

Colmagro.

THe North parts of Ruſſia yeelde very rare and precious ſkinnes: and amongeſt the reſt, thoſe principally, which we call Sables, worne about the neckes of our Noble women, and Ladies: it hath alſo Martyns ſkinnes, white, blacke, and red Fore ſkinnes, ſkinnes of Harts, and Ermyns, and others, which they call and terme barbarouſly, as Beuers, Mizres, and Minuers. The ſea adioyning, breedes a certaine beaſt, which they call the Mors, which ſeeketh his foode vpon the rockes, climing vp with the helpe of his teeth. The Ruſſes vſe to take them, for the great vertue that is in their teeth, whereof they make as great accompt, as we doe of the Elephants tooth. Theſe commodities they carry vpon Deeres backes to the towne of Lampas: and from thence to Colmagro, and there in the winter time, are kept great Faires for the ſale of them. This Citie of Colmagro, ſerues all the Countrey about it with ſalt, and ſalt fiſhe. The Ruſſes alſo of the North parts, ſend thither oile, which they call traine, which they make in a riuer called "Vna, although it be alſo made elſe where: and here they vſe to boile the water of the ſea, whereof they make very great ſtore of ſalt.

" or Dwina.

Of controuerſies in Lawe, and how they are ended.

HAuing hitherto ſpoken ſo much of the chiefeſt Cities of Ruſſia, as the matter required: it remaineth that wee ſpeake ſomewhat of the lawes, that the Moſcouits doe vſe, as farre forth as the ſame are come to our knowledge. If any controuerſie ariſe among them, they firſt make their Landlords Iudges in the matter, and if they can not ende it, then they preferre it to the Magiſtrate. The plaintife craueth of the ſaid Magiſtrate, that he may haue leaue to enter lawe againſt his aduerſarie: and hauing obtained it, the officer fetcheth the defendant, and beateth him on the legges, till he bring forth a ſuretie for him: but if he be not of ſuch credite, as to procure a ſuretie, then are his hands by an officer tied to his necke, and he is beaten all the way, till he come before the Iudge. The Iudge then aſketh him (as for example in the matter of debt) whether he oweth any thing to the plaintife. If he denies it, then ſaith the Iudge, how canſt thou deny it? the defendant anſwereth, by an othe: thereuppon the officer is commaunded to ceaſe from beating of him, vntill the matter be further tried. They haue no Lawyers, but euery man is his owne Aduocate, and both the complaint of the accuſer, and the anſwer of the defendant, are in manner of petition deliuered to the Emperour, intreating iuſtice at his hands. The Emperour himſelfe heareth euery great controuerſie, and vpon the hearing of it, giueth iudgement, and that with great equitie, which I take to be a thing worthie of ſpeciall commendation, in the Maieſtie of a Prince. But although he do this with a good purpoſe of mind, yet the corrupt Magiſtrates doe wonderfully peruert uert the same: but if the Emperour take them in any fault, he doth punish them most seuerely. Now at the last, when eche partie hath defended his cause with his best reasons, the Iudge demandeth of the accuser, whether he hath any more to say for himselfe: he answereth, that he will trie the matter in fight by his Champion, or else intreateth that in fight betwixt themselues, the matter may be ended: which being granted, they both fight it out: or if both of them, or either of them, seeme vnfit for that kind of triall, then they haue publike Champions to be hired, which liue by ending of quarrels. These Champions are armed with yron ares, and speares, and fight on foot, and he whose Champion is ouercome, is by and by taken, and imprisoned, and terribly handled, vntill he agree with his aduersarie. But if either of them be of any good calling, and degree, and doe challenge one another to fight, the Iudge graunteth it: in which case they may not vse publike Champions. And he that is of any good birth, doth contemne the other, if he be basely borne, and will not fight with him. If a poore man happen to growe in debt, his Creditor takes him, and maketh him pay the debt, in working either to himselfe, or to some other man, whose wages he taketh vp. And there are some among them, that vse willingly to make themselues, their wiues, and children, bondslaues vnto rich men, to haue a little money at the first into their handes, and so for euer after contents themselues with meate and drinke: so litle accompt doe they make of libertie.

Of punishments vpon theeues.

IF any man be taken vpon committing of theft, he is imprisoned, and often beaten, but not hanged for the first offence, as the manner is with vs: and this they call the lawe of mercie. He that offendeth the second time, hath his nose cut off, and is burnt in the forehead with a hot yron. The third time, he is hanged. There are many cutpurses among them, and if the rigour of the Prince did not cut them off, they could not be auoided.

Of their religion.

THey maintaine the opinions of the Greeke Church: they suffer no grauen images of saints in their Churches, but their pictures painted in tables they haue in great abundance, which they do adore, and offer vnto, and burne ware candles before them, and cast holy water vpon them, without other honour. They say that our images, which are set vp in Churches, and carued, haue no diuinitie in them. In their priuate houses, they haue images for their houshold saints, and in the most part, they are put in the darkest place of the house: he that comes into his neighbours house, doth first salute his saints, although he see them not. If any foorme or stoole stand in his way, he oftentimes beateth his browe vpon the same, and often ducking downe with his head, and bowing, worshippeth the chiefe Image. The habite, and attire of the Priestes, and of the Laymen, doth nothing at all differ: as for marriage, it is forbidden to no man: onely this is receiued, and holde amongst them for a rule, and custome, that if a Priests wife doe die, he may not marry againe, nor take a second wife: and therefore they of secular Priestes, as they call them, are made Monkes, to whome then chastitie for euer is commanded. Their diuine seruice is all done, and said in their owne language, that euery man may vnderstand it: they receaue the Lordes Supper with leauened bread, and after the consecration, they carry it about the Church in a sawcer, and prohibite no man from receauing and taking of it, that is willing so to doe. They vse both the Olde, and the Newe Testament, and read both in their owne language, but so confusedly, that they themselues that doe read, vnderstand not what themselues doe say: and while any part of either Testament is read, there is libertie giuen by custome to prattle, talke, and make a noise: but in the time of the rest of the seruice, they vse very great silence, and reuerence, and behaue themselues very modestly, and in good sort. As touching the Lordes prayer, the tenth man amongest them knowes it not: and for the articles of our faith, and the ten commandements, no man, or at the least, very fewe of them doe either know them, or can say them: their opinion is, that such secrete and holy things as they are, should not rashly and imprudently be communicated with the common people. They holde for a Maxime amongst them, that the olde Lawe, and the commandements also are all abolished by the death and blood of Christ: all studies and letters of humanitie, they vtterly refuse: concerning the Latine, Greeke, and Hebrue tongues, they are altogether ignorant in them.

Euery yeere they celebrate foure seuerall fastes, which they cal according to the names of the Saincts: the first beginnes with them, at the time that our Lent beginnes. The second is called amongst them, the fast of S. Peter. The third is taken from the day of the Virgin Marie. And the fourth fourth, and laſt, beginnes vpon S. Philips day. But as we begin our Lent vpon Wenſday, ſo they begin theirs vpon the Sunday. Vpon the Satturday they eate fleſh: whenſoeuer any of thoſe faſting feaſtes doe drawe neere, looke what worke doth immediatly goe before them, the ſame worke they liue altogether vpon white meates, and in their common language, they call thoſe workes, the faſt of butter.

In the time of their faſtes, the neighbours euery where goe from one to another, and viſite one another, and kiſſe one another with kiſſes of peace, in token of their mutuall loue, and Chriſtian concord: and then alſo, they doe more often then at any other time, goe to the holie Communion. When ſeuen daies are paſt, from the beginning of the faſt, then they often doe either goe to their Churches, or keepe themſelues at home, and vſe often prayer: and for that ſeuennights, they eate nothing but hearbes: but after that ſeuennight faſt is once paſt, then they returne to their old intemperancie of drinking, for they are notable toſpots. As for the keeping of their faſting daies, they doe it very ſtreightly, neither doe they eate any thing beſides hearbes, and ſalt fiſhe, as long as thoſe faſting daies do endure: but vpon euery Wenſday and Friday, in euery weeke throughout the yeere, they faſt.

There are very many Monaſteries, of the order of S. Benedict, amongſt them, to which many great liuings, for their maintenance doe belong: for the Friers and the Monkes, doe at the leaſt poſſeſſe the third part of the liuings, throughout the whole Moſcouite Empire: to thoſe Monkes that are of this order, there is amongeſt them a perpetuall prohibition, that they may eate no fleſh: and therefore their meate is onely ſalt fiſhe, milke, and butter: neither is it permitted them by the lawes, and cuſtomes of their religion, to eate any freſh fiſh at all: and at thoſe foure faſting times, whereof we ſpake before, they eate no fiſhe at all: onely they liue with hearbes, and cucumbers, which they doe continually for that purpoſe cauſe, and take order to grow and ſpring, for their vſe and diet.

As for their drinke, it is very weake, and ſmall: for the diſcharge of their office, they doe euery day ſay ſeruice, and that earely in the mornings before day: and they doe in ſuch ſort, and with ſuch obſeruation begin their ſeruice, that they will be ſure to make an ende of it, before day: and about nine of the clocke in the morning, they celebrate the Communion. When they haue ſo done, they goe to dinner, and after dinner, they go againe to ſeruice, and the like alſo after ſupper: and in the meane time, while they are at dinner, there is ſome expoſition, or interpretation of the Goſpel vſed. Note.

Whenſoeuer any Abbot of any monaſterie dieth, the Emperour taketh all his houſholde ſtuffe, beaſtes, flockes of ſheepe, golde, ſiluer, and all that he hath: or els hee that is to ſucceed him in his place and dignitie, doth redeeme all thoſe things, and buieth them of the Emperour for money.

Their churches are built of timber, and the towers of their churches for the moſt part are couered with ſhingle boordes. At the doores of their churches, they vſually build ſome entrance or porch as we doe, and in their churchyardes they erect a certaine houſe of wood, wherein they ſet vp their bels, wherein ſometimes they haue but one, in ſome two, and in ſome alſo three.

There is one vſe and cuſtome amongſt them, which is ſtrange and rare, but yet it is very ridiculous, and that is this: when any man dieth amongſt them, they take the dead body and put it in a coffine or cheſt, and in the hand of the corps they put a little ſcrole, and in the ſame there are theſe wordes written, that the ſame man died a Ruſſe of Ruſſes, hauing receiued the faith, and died in the ſame. This writing or letter they ſay they ſend to S. Peter, who reciuing it (as they affirme) reades it, and by and by admits him into heauen, and that his glory and place is higher and greater then the glory of the Chriſtians of the Latin church, reputing themſelues to bee followers of a more ſincere faith and religion then they: they hold opinion that wee are but halfe chriſtians, and themſelues onely to bee the true and perfect church: theſe are the fooliſh and childiſh dotages of ſuch ignorant Barbarians.

Of the Moſcouites that are Idolaters, dwelling neere to Tartaria.

There is a certaine part of Moſcouie, bordering vpon the countries of the Tartars, wherein thoſe Moſcouits ꝑ dwel, are very great idolaters: they haue one famous idol amongſt them, which they call the Golden old wife, and they haue a cuſtome that whenſoeuer any plague or any calamitie doeth afflict the countrey, as hunger, warre, or ſuch like, then they goe by and by to conſult with their idoll, which they doe after this manner: they fall downe proſtrate before the idoll, and praye vnto it, and put in the preſence of the ſame, Aures vetula, aut Zelotibaba.

a cymball, and about the same certaine persons stand, which are chosen amongst them by lot: vpon their cymball they place a siluer tode, and sound the cymball, and to whomsoeuer of those women persons that tode goeth, he is taken, and by and by slaine: and immediately, I know not by what illusions of the deuill, or idoll, he is againe restored to life, and then doth reueale and deliuer the causes of the present calamitie. And by this meanes knowing how to pacifie the idoll, they are deliuered from the imminent danger.

Of the forme of their priuate houses, and of the apparell of the people.

THe common houses of the countrey are euery where built of beames of firre tree: the lower beames do so receiue the round holownesse of the vppermost, that by the meanes of the building thereupon, they resist, and expell all windes that blowe, and where the timber is ioined together, there they stop the chinkes with mosse. The forme and fashion of their houses in all places is foure square, with straight and narow windowes, whereby with a transparent casement made or couered with skinne like to parchment, they receiue the light. The roofes of their houses are made of boordes couered without with the barke of trees: within their houses they haue benches or griezes hard by their wals, which commonly they sleepe vpon, for the common people know not the vse of beds: they haue floores wherein in the morning they make a fire, and the same fire warmeth either moderately warme, or make very hote the whole house.

The apparell of the people for the most part is made of wooll, their caps are picked like vnto rike or diamond, broad beneath, and sharpe vpward. In the maner of making whereof, there is a signe and representation of nobilitie: for the loftier or higher their caps are, the greater is their birth supposed to be, and the greater reuerence is giuen them by the common people.

The Conclusion to Queene Mary.

THese are the things most excellent Queene, which your Subiects newly returned from Russia haue brought home concerning the state of that countrey: wherefore if your maiestie shall be fauourable, and graunt a continuance of the trauell, there is no doubt but that the honour and renowme of your name will be spred amongst those nations, whereunto three onely noble personages from the very creation haue had accesse, to whom no man hath bene comparable.

The copie of the Duke of Moscouie and Emperour of Russia his letters, sent to King Edward the sixt, by the hands of Richard Chanceler.

THe Almightie power of God, and the incomprehensible holie Trinitie, right full Christian beliefe, &c. We great Duke Iuan Vasileuich, by the grace of God Emperour of all Russia, and great Duke of Vlademerskij, Moskouskij, Nouogrodskij, Cazanskii, Pskanskii, Smolenskii, Tuerskij, Hugorskij, Permskii, Veatskii, Bolgarskii, with diuers other lands, Emperour also and great Duke of Nouogoroda, and in the lowe Countries of Chernigouskij, Rezanskii, Volotskii, Refskii, Belskii, Rostouskii, Yaroslauskii, Belocherskii, Oodorskii, Obdorskii, Condinskii, and many other Countreis, Lord ouer all the North coast, greeting.

Iuan Vasileuich, that is to say, Iohn the sonne of Basilius.

Before all right great and worthy of honour, Edward King of England, &c. according to our most hartie and good zeale, with good intent and friendly desire, and according to our holy Christian faith, and great gouernance, and being in the light of great vnderstanding, our answere by this our honourable writing vnto your kingly gouernance, at the request of your faithfull seruant Richard Chanceler, with his companie, as they shall let you wisely know, is thus. In the strength of the twentieth yeere of our gouernance, be it knowen, that at our sea coastes, arriued a ship, with one Richard, and his companie, and said, that he was desirous to come into our Dominions, and according to his request hath seene our Maiestie, and our eies: and hath declared vnto your Maiesties desire, as that we should grant vnto your subiects, to goe and come, and in our dominions, and among our subiects, to frequent free Marts, with all sortes of marchandizes, and vpon the same to haue wares for their returne. And they haue also deliuered vs your letters, which declare the same request. And hereupon we haue giuen order, that whersoeuer your faithfull seruant Hugh Willoughbie land or touch in our dominions, to be well entertained, who as yet is not arriued, as your seruant Richard can declare.

That is, come into our presence.

And we with christian beliefe and faithfulnesse, and according to your honourable request, and my honourable commaundement will not leaue it vndone, and are furthermore willing that you send vnto vs your ships and vessels, when and as often as they may haue passage, with good assurance on our part to see them harmelesse. And if you send one of your maiesties counsell to treate with vs whereby your countrey merchaunts may with all kindes of wares, and where they will make their market in our dominions, they shall haue their free Marte with all free liberties through my whole dominions with all kindes of wares, to come and goe at their pleasure, without any let, damage, or impediment, according to this our letter, our word and our seale which we haue commaunded to be vnder sealed. Written in our dominion, in our towne and our palace in the castle of Mosco, in the yeere seuen thousand and sixtie, the second moneth of Februarie.

This letter was written in the Moscouian tongue, in letters much like to the Greeke letters, very faire written in paper, with a broad seale hanging at the same, sealed in paper vpon waxe. This seale was much like the broad seale of England, hauing on the one side the image of a mã an horseback in complete harnesse fighting with a dragon. Vnder this letter was another paper written in the Dutch tongue, which was the interpretation of the other written in the Moscouian letters. These letters were sent the next yeere after the date of king Edwards letters, 1554.

The coines, waights and measures vsed in Russia, written by Iohn Hasse, in the yeere, 1554.

Forasmuch as it is most necessary for all merchants which seeke to haue traffique in any strange regions, first to acquaint themselues with the coines of those landes with which they doe intend to ioine in traffique, and how they are called from the valuation of the highest piece to the lowest, and in what sort they make their paiments, as also what their common waights and measures be, For these causes I haue thought good to write some thing thereof according to mine owne knowledge and experience, to the end that the merchants of that new Aduenture, may the better vnderstand how the wealth of that new frequented trade will arise.

First, it is to be noted that the Emperour of Russia hath no other coines then siluer in all his land, which goeth for paiment amongst merchants, yet notwithstanding there is a coine of copper, which serueth for the reliefe of the poore in Mosco, and no where els, and that is but onely for quas, water and fruite, as nuts, apples, and such other like. The name of which money is called Pole or Poles, of which Poles there goe to the least of the siluer coines, 18. But I will not stand vpon this, because it is no current money among merchants. No coines of gold in Russia, but all of siluer.

Of siluer coines there be these sortes of pieces: the least is a Poledenga, the second a Denga, the third, Nowgrote, which is as much to say in English as halfepenie, penie, and two pence, and for other valued money then this, there is none: there are oftentimes there coines of gold, but they come out of foren countries, whereof there is no ordinarie valuation, but they passe according to the agreement of merchants.

Their order in summing of money is this: as we say in England, halfepenie, penie, shilling and pound, so say they, Poledenga, Denga, Altine and Rubble: There goeth two Poledengas to a Denga, six Dengaes to an Altine, and 23. Altines, and two Dengaes to a Rubble.

Concerning the waights of Russia they are these. There are two sortes of pounds in vse amongst them, the one great, the other small: the great pound is iust two small pounds: they call the great waight by the name of Beasemar, and the small they call the Skallawaight: with this small waight they weigh their siluer coines, of the which the Emperour hath commaunded to put to euery small pound three Rubbles of siluer, and with the same waight they weigh all Grocerie wares, and almost all other wares which come into the land, except those which they waigh by the Pode, as hops sale, iron, lead, tinne and batrie with diuers others: notwithstanding they vse to weigh batrie more often by the small waight then by the great. The waights in Russia.

Whensoeuer you find the prices of your wares rated by the Pode, consider that to be the great waight, and the pound to be the small. Also they deuide the small pound into 48. parts, and they call the eight and fortieth part a Slotnike, by the which Slotnike the retailers sell their wares out of their shoppes, as Goldsmiths, Grocers, Silkesellers and such other like as we doe vse to retaile by the ounce: and as for their great waight which they call the Beasemar, they sell by pode, or shippond. The pode doth containe of the great waight, 40. pounds, and of the small 80. there goe 10. podes to a shippond.

Yet you must consider that their great waight is not full with ours: for I take not their great pound to be full 13. ounces, but aboue 12. I thinke it be. But for your iust proofe, waigh 6. rubbles of Russia money with our pound waight, and then shall you see what it lacketh: for 6. rubbles of Russia is by the Emperours standerd, the great pound: so that I thinke it the next way to know the iust waight, as well of the great pound as of the small.

The waight of Wardhouse.

There is another waight nee defull to be knowen, which is the waight of Wardhouse, for so much as they weigh all their dry fishe by waight, which waight is the Basemare, as they of Russia doe vse, notwithstanding there is another sort in it: the names of those waighes are these: the marke pound, the great pound, the weie, and the shippond. The marke pound is to be vnderstood as our pound, and their great pound is 24. of their marke pound: the weie is 3. great pound, and 8. weie is a shippond.

The Russia measures.

Nowe concerning their measures. As they haue two sortes of waighes, so they haue also two sortes of measures: wherewith they measure cloth both linnen and woollen: they call the one an Areshine, and the other a Locut: the Areshine I take to bee as much as the Flaunders ell, and their Locut halfe an English yard: with their Areshine they may mete all such sortes of clothes as commeth into the land, and with the Locut all such cloth both linnen and woollen, as they make themselues. And whereas wee vse to giue yard and inch, or yard and handfull, they doe giue nothing but bare measure.

They haue also a measure wherewith they doe mete their corne, which they call a Setfooth, and the halfe of that an Osmine: this Setfooth I take to be three bushels of London measure. And as for their drinke measure, they call it a Spanne, which is much like a bucket, and of that I neuer sawe any true rate, but that some was greater then other some. And as for the measures of Wardhouse wherewith they mete their cloth, there is no difference between that & the measure of Danske, which is halfe an English ell.

The measure of Wardhouse in cloth, is the measure of Danske.

Concerning the tolles and customes of Russia, it was reported to mee in Moscouia, that the Turkes and Armenians pay the tenth penie custome of all the Wares they bring into the Emperours land, and aboue that they pay for all such goods as they waigh at the Emperours beame, two pence of the Rubble, which the buyer or seller must make report of to the Master of the beame: they also pay a certayne Horse toll, which is in diuers places of his Realme fourr pence a horse.

The Turkes and Armenians pay custome.

The Emperors beame.

The Dutch nation are free of this: notwithstanding for certaine offences, they had lost their priuiledges which they haue recouered this Sommer to their great charge. It was reported mee by a Justice of that countrey, that they paied for it thirtie thousand Rubbles, and also the Rye, Dorpte and Reuell haue yeelded themselues vnder the gouernement of the Emperour of Russia: whether this was a bragge of the Russes or not, I know not, but thus he sayd, and in deed whiles wee were there, there came a great Ambassadour out of Liffeland, for the assurance of their priuiledges.

The Dutch nation lost their priuiledges, and renewed them with a great summe.

To speake somewhat of the commodities of this countrey, it is to bee vnderstood, that there is a certaine place foure score miles from the Sea called Colmogro: to which place there resort all the sortes of Wares that are in the North partes, as Oiles, Salt, Stockfishe, Salmon, Fethers and Furres: their Salt they make of salt water by the Sea side: their Oiles they make of Seales, where of they haue great store which is brought out of the Bay where our shippes came in: they make it in the Spring of the yeere, and bring it to Colmogro to sell, and the merchants there carie it to Nouogrode, and so sell it to the Dutch nation. Their Stockfish and Salmon commeth from a place called Mallums, not farre from Wardhouse: their Salmon and their Salt they carrie to Mosco, and their dry fishe they carry to Nouogrode, and sell it there to the Leeflanders.

The commodities of Russia.

The Furres and Fethers which come to Colmogro, as Sables, Beauers, Minkes, Armis, Lettis, Graies, Woolouerings, and white Foxes, with Deere skinnes, they are brought thither, by the men of Penninge, Lampne, and Powstezer, which fetch them from the Samoydes that are counted sauage people: and the merchaunts that bring these Furres, doe vse to trucke with the merchants of Colmogro for Cloth, Tinne, Batrie, and such other like, and the merchants of Colmogro carrie them to Nouogrode, Vologda, or Mosco, and sell them there. The Fethers which come from Penning they doe little esteeme.

If our merchants doe desire to know the meetest place of Russia for their standing house, in mine

opinion I take it to bee Vologda, which is a great towne standing in the heart of Russia, with many great and good townes about it. There is great plentie of corne, victuals, and of all such wares as are raised in Russland, but specially, flaxe, hempe, tallow and bacon: there is also great store of waxe, but it commeth from the Mosko. Vologda and the state thereof.

The towne of Vologda is meetest for our merchaunts, because it lieth amongst all the best townes of Russia, and there is no town in Russia but trades with it: also the water is a great commoditie to it. If they plant themselues in Mosco or Nouogrode, their charge will bee great and wonderfull, but not so in Vologda: for all things will there bee had better cheape by the one halfe. And for their vent, I know no place so meete: it is likely that some will thinke the Mosko to be the meetest by the reason of the court, but by that reason I take it to be worse: for the charge there would be so great by crauers and expences, that the moitie of the profite would bee wholy consumed, which in the other place will bee saued. And yet notwithstanding our merchaunts may bee there in the Winter to serue the Emperour and his coure. The Emperour is a great merchaunt himselfe of waxe and sables, which with good foresight may bee procured to their hands: as for other commodities there are little or none in Moscouia, besides those aboue rehearsed: if there bee other, it is brought thither by the Turkes, who will be daintie to buy our clothes considering the charges of cariage ouer land. The emperor of Moscouie is a merchaunt himselfe.

Our merchaunts may doe well to prouide for the Russes such wares as the Dutch nation doeth serue them of, as Flanders and Holland clothes, which I beleeue, they shall serue better and with lesse charge then they of Rye or Dorpt, or Reuel: for it is no small aduenture to bring their clothes out of Flanders to either of these places, and their charge not little to carry them ouer land to Nouogrode, which is from Rye nine hundred Russia miles.

This Nouogrode is a place well furnished with Flaxe, Waxe, Hides, tallow and many other things: the best flaxe in Russia is brought thither and there sold by the hundred bundels, which is done also at Vologda, and they that bring the flaxe to Nouogrode, dwell as neere Vologda, as Nouogrode, and when they heare of the vtterance which they may haue with our nation, they will as willingly come to them as goe to the other.

They haue in Russia two sortes of flaxe, the one is called great flaxe, and the other small: that which they call great flaxe is better by foure rubbles in 100. bundles then the small: It is much longer then the other, and cleaner without wood: and whereas of the small flaxe there goe 27. or 28. bundles to a shippond, there goeth not of the greater sort aboue 22. or 24. at the most. There are many other trifles in Russia, as sope, mats, &c. but I thinke there will be no great account made of them. Two sortes of flaxe.

Articles conceiued and determined for the Commission of the Merchants of this company resiant in Russia, and at the VVardhouse, for the second voiage, 1555. the first of May, as followeth.

FIrst, the Gouernour, Consuls, Assistants and whole company assembled this day in open court, committeth and authorizeth Richard Gray and George Killingworth, iointly and seuerally to be Agents, Factors, and Attornies generall and speciall, for the whole bodie of this companie, to buy, sell, trucke, change and permute all, and euery kind and kindes of wares, merchandizes and goods to the said company appertaining, now laden and shipped in the good ship called ꝑ Edward Bonauenture, appointed for Russia, the same to vtter and sell to the most commoditie, profite and aduantage of the said corporation, be it for ready money, wares & merchandizes, or trucke, presently or for time, as occasion and benefit of the company shal require: and all such wares as they or either of them shall buy, trucke or prouide, or cause to be bought for the company to lade them homeward in good order and condition as by prudent course of merchandizes, shall, and ought to appertaine, which article extendeth also to Iohn Brooke for the Wardhouse, as in the 17. & 18. articles of this commission appeareth.

2 Item, it is also committed, as about to the said Agents, to binde and charge the said company by debt for wares vpon credite, as good opportunitie and occasion shall serue, with power to charge and bind the said company, and their successors for the paiments of such things as shall be taken vp for credite, and the said Agents to be relieued, ab opere satis dandi.

3 Item, full authoritie and power is committed to the sayd first named factors, together with Richard Chancelor graund Pilot of this fleete, to repaire to the Emperors court, there to present the king and Queenes maiesties letters, written in Greeke, Polish, and Italian, and to giue and exhibite the merchaunts presents at such time and place as shall bee thought most expedient, they, or one of them to demaund, and humbly desire of the Emperour such further graunts and priuiledges to bee made to this company, as may bee beneficiall for the same, to continue in traffique with his subiects, according to such instructions as be in this behalfe deuised and deliuered to the Agents, whereunto relation is to be had, and some one of these persons to attend vpō the court for the obtaining of the same, as to their discretions shall be thought good.

4 Item, that all the sayd Agents doe well consider, ponder and weigh such articles as bee deliuered to them to know the natures, dispositions, lawes, customes, maners and behauiours of the people of the countreys where they shall traffique, as well of the Nobilitie as of the Lawyers, Merchants, Mariners and common people, and to note diligently the subtilties of their bargayning, buying and selling, making as few debtes as possiblie may be, and to be circumspect, that no lawe neither of religion nor politique be broken or transgressed by them or any minister vnder them, ne yet by any mariner or other person of our nation, and to foresee that all toles, customes, and such other rites be so duely paid, that no forfeiture or confiscation may ensue to our goods either outward or inward, and that all things passe with quiet, without breach of the publique peace or common tranquillitie of any of the places where they shall arriue or traffique.

5 Item, that prouision bee made in Mosco or elsewhere, in one or moe good townes, where good trade shall bee found for a house or houses for the Agents, and companie to inhabite and dwell at your accustomed diets, with warehouses, sellers, and other houses of offices requisite, and that none of the inferiour ministers of what place or vocation so euer he bee, doe lie out of the house of the Agents without licence to bee giuen, and that euery inferiour officer shall be obedient to the orders, rules and gouernments of the sayd Agents, and in case any disobedient person shall bee found among any of them, then such person to be punished for his misbehauiour, at the discretion of the sayd Agents, or of one of them in the absence of the other.

6 Item, if any person of the sayde ministers shall bee of such pride or obstinacie, that after one or two honest admonitions, hee will not bee reformed nor reconciled from his faultes, then the sayde Agents to displace euery such person from the place or roume to him here committed, and some other discreete person to occupie the same, as to the sayde Agents by their discretions shall seeme meete.

7 Item, if any person shall bee found so arrogant, that he will not be ordered nor reformed by the sayd Agents or by one of them in the absence of the other, then the sayde person to bee deliuered to the Iustice of the countrey, to receiue such punishment, as the lawes of the countrey do require.

8 Item, that the sayde Agents and factours shall daily one houer in the morning conferre and consult together what shall bee most conuenient and beneficiall for the companie, and such orders as they shall determine, to bee written by the Secretarie of the companie in a booke to bee prouided for that purpose, and no inferiour person to infringe or breake any such order or deuise, but to obserue the same exactly, vpon such reasonable payne as the Agents shall put him to by discretion.

9 Item, that the sayd Agents shall in the ende of euery weeke, or oftener as occasion shall require, peruse, see and trie, not onely the Cashers bookes, reckonings and accounts, firming the same with their handes, but also shall receiue and take weekely the account of euery other officer, as well of the Vendes, as of the emptions, and also of the state of the houshold expenses, making thereof a perfect declaration as shall appertaine, the same accounts also to be firmed by the sayd Agents hands.

10 Item, that no inferiour minister shall take vpon him to make any bargaine or sale of any wares, merchaundizes or goods, but by the Commission and Warrantise of the sayde Agents vnder their handes, and bee not to transgresse his Commission by any way, pretence or colour.

11 Item, that euery inferiour minister, that is to vnderstand, all Clearkes and yong merchants beyng at the order of the sayde Agents, shall ride, goe, saile and trauaile to all such place, and places, as they or he shall be appointed vnto by the sayd Agents, and effectually to follow and doe all that which to him or them shall be committed, well and truly to the most benefit of the company, according to the charge to him or them committed, euen as by their othes, ducties and bonds of their masters they be bounden and charged to doe.

12 Item, that at euery moneths ende, all accountes and reckonings shall bee brought in to perfect order, into the Ledger or memoriall, and the decrees, orders, and rules of the Agents

Agents together with the priuileges, and coppies of letters, may & ſhall be well and truly written by the ſecretarie, in ſuch forme as ſhalbe appointed for it, and that copies of all their doings, may be ſent home with the ſaid ſhippe at her returne.

13 Item, that all the Agents do diligently learne and obſerue all kinde of wares, as well naturals as forren, that be beneficiall for this Realme, to be ſolde for the benefit of the company, and what kinde of our commodities and other thinges of theſe Weſt partes, be moſt vendible in thoſe Realmes with profit, giuing a perfect aduiſe of all ſuch things requiſite.

14 Item, if the Emperour will enter into bargen with you for the whole maſſe of your ſtocke, and will haue the trade of it to vtter to his owne ſubiectes, then debating the matter prudently among your ſelues, ſet ſuch high prices of your commodities, as you may aſſure your ſelues to be gainers in your owne wares, and yet to buy theirs at ſuch baſe prices, as you may heere alſo make a commoditie and gaine at home, hauing in your mindes the notable charges that the companie haue diſtrayed in aduancing this voyage: and the great charges that they ſuſtaine daily in wages, victualles and other things: all which muſt be requited by the wiſe handling of this voyage, which being the firſt preſident ſhalbe a perpetuall preſident for euer: and therefore all circumſpection is to be vſed, and foreſeene in this firſt enterprize, which God bleſſe and proſper vnder you, to his glorie, and the publike wealth of this Realme, whereof the Queenes Maieſtie, and the Lords of the councell haue conceiued great hope, whoſe expectations are not to be fruſtrated. Note.

15 Item, it is to be had in minde, that you vſe all wayes and meanes poſſible to learne how men may paſſe from Ruſſia, either by land or by ſea to Cathaia, and what may be heard of our other ſhippes, and to what knowledge you may come, by conferring with the learned or well trauelled perſons, either naturall or forren, ſuch as haue trauelled from the North to the South.

16 Item, it is committed to the ſaid Agents, that if they ſhall be certified credibly, that any of our ſaid firſt ſhippes be arriued in any place whereunto paſſage is to be had by water or by land, that then certeine of the company, at the diſcretion of the Agents ſhall be appointed to be ſent to them, to learne their eſtate and condition, to viſit, refreſh, relieue, and furniſh them with all neceſſaries and requiſites, at the common charges of the company, and to imbrace, accept, and intreat them as our deare and welbeloued brethren of this our ſocietie, to their reioycing and comfort, aduertiſing Sir Hugh Willoughbie and others of our carefulneſſe of them and their long abſence, with our deſire to heare of them, with all other things done in their abſence for their commodity, no leſſe then if they had beene preſent.

17 Item, it is decreed, that when the ſhippes ſhall arriue at this going forth at the Wardhouſe, that their Agents, with Maiſter Chanceler grand pilot, John Brooke merchant, deputed for the Wardhouſe, with John Buckland maiſter of the Edward, John Howlet maiſter, and John Robbins pilot of the Philip and Mary, ſhall conferre and conſult together, what is moſt profitable to be done therefore for the benefit of the company, and to conſider whether they may bargen with the captaine of the caſtle, and the inhabitants in that place, or alongſt the coaſt for a large quantitie of fiſh, drie or wet, killed by the naturals, or to be taken by our men at a price reaſonable for trucke of cloth, meale, ſalt or beere, and what traincople, or other commoditie is to be had there at this time, or any other ſeaſon of the yeere, and whether there will be had or found ſufficient lading for both the ſaid ſhippes, to be bought there, and how they may conferre with the naturals for a continuance in haunting the place, if profit will ſo ariſe to the company, and to conſider whether the Edward in her returne may receiue at the Wardhouſe any kinde of lading homeward, and what it may amount vnto, and whether it ſhall be expedient for the Philip to abide at Wardhouſe the returne of the Edward out of Ruſſia, or getting that ſhe may, returne with the firſt good winde to England, without abiding for the Edward, and ſo to conclude and accord certainlie among themſelues vpon their arriuall, that the certainty may (vpon good deliberation) be ſo ordered and determined betweene both ſhippes, that the one may be aſſured of the other, and their determinations to be put in writing duplicate to remaine with each ſhip, according to ſuch order as ſhall be taken betweene them. The Philip and Mary.

18 Item, that John Brooke our merchant for the Wardhouſe take good aduiſe of the reſt of our Agents, how to vſe himſelfe in all affaires, while the ſhippe ſhall be at the Wardhouſe, he to ſee good order to be kept, make bargens aduiſedly, not crediting the people vntill their natures, diſpoſitions and fidelities ſhall be well tried, make no debts, but to take ware for ware in hand, and rather be truſted then to truſt. Note diligentlie what be the beſt wares for thoſe parts, and how the fiſh falleth on the coaſt, and by what meane it is to be bought at the moſt aduantage, what kindes and diuerſities of ſorts in fiſhes be, and whether it will keepe better in bulke piled, or in caſke. Note. Note.

19 Item, he to haue a diligent eye and circumſpection to the beere, ſalt, and other liquid wares,

and

and not to suffer any waste to be made by the company, and he in all contracts to require aduise, counsell, and consent of the maister and pilot, the merchant to be our housewife, as our speciall trust is in him, he to tender that no lawes nor customes of the country be broken by any of the company, and to render to the prince, and other officers, all that which to them doth appertaine, the companie to be quiet, voyd of all quarrelling, fighting, or veration, absteine from all excesse of drinking, as much as may be, and in all to vse and behaue themselues as to quiet merchants doth, and ought to appertaine.

20 Item, it is decreed by the companie, that the Edward shall returne home this yeere with as much wares as may be conueniently, and profitably prouided, bought, and laden in Russia, and the rest to be taken in at the Wardhouse, as by the Agentes shall be aduyded. But by all meanes it is to be foreseene and noted, that the Edward returne home, and not to winter in any foreen place, but to come home, and bring with her all the whole aduertisementes of the merchantes, with such further aduise for the next yeeres prouision, as they shall giue.

21 Item, it is further decreed and ordeined, inuiolable to be obserued, that when the good shippes, or either of them (by Gods grace) shall returne home to the coastes of England, that neither of them shall staye or touche in any Hauen or Porte of England, otherwise then winde and weather shall serue, but shall directly saple and come to the Porte of the citie of London, the place of their right discharge, and that no bulke be broken, hatches opened, chest, fardell, trusse, barrell, fatte, or whatsoeuer thing it shall be, be brought out of the shippe, vntil the companie shall giue order for the same, and appoint such persons of the company as shall be thought meete for that purpose, to take view, and consider the shippe and her lading, and shall giue order for the breaking vp of the said bulke, or giue licence by discretion, for thinges to be brought to land. And that euery officer shall shewe the enuoyle of his charge to him first committed, and to examine the wastes and losses, and to deliuer the remainder to the vse and benefite of the company, according to such order as shall be appointed in that behalfe.

22 Item, the company exhorteth, willeth, and requireth, not onely all the said Agents, pilots, maisters, merchantes, clerkes, boatswaines, stewardes, shafemaisters, and all other officers and ministers of this present voyage, being put in charge and trust dayly to peruse, reade, and study such instructions as be made, giuen, and deliuered to them for perfect knowledge of the people of Russia, Moscouia, Wardhouse, and other places, their dispositions, lawes, maners, customes, vses, tolles, cariages, coines, weights, numbers, measures, wares, merchandizes, commodities, and incommodities, the one to be accepted and embraced, the other to be reiected and vtterly abandoned, to the intent that euery man taking charge, may be so well taught, perfited, and readily instructed in all the premises, that, by ignorance, no losse or preiudice may growe or chance to the companie, assuring themselues, that forasmuch as the company hath trauelled and laboured so in their their instructions to them giuen, that euery man may be perfect, and fully learned to eschew all losses, hurts and damages that may insue by pretense or colour of none knowledge, the company entendeth not to allowe, or accept ignorance for any lawfull or iust cause of excuse, in that which shall be misordered by negligence, the burden whereof shall light vpon the negligent offending person, especially vpon such as of their owne heades, or temeritie, will take vpon him or them to do or to attempt any thing, whereby preiudice may arise, without the commission of the Agents aboue is mentioned, whereunto relation be had. Note.

23 Forasmuch as it is not possible to write and indite such prescribed orders, rules and commissions to you the Agents and factours, but that occasion, time and place, and the pleasures of the princes, together with the operation or successe of fortune shall change or shift the same, although not in the whole, yet in part, therefore the said company doe commit to you their deare and intyre beloued Agentes and factours, to doe in this behalfe for the commoditie and wealth of this company, as by your discretions, vpon good aduised deliberations shall be thought good and beneficiall. Prouided alwayes, that the honour, good name, fame, credit, and estimation of the same company be conserued and preserued: which to confirme we beseech the liuing Lord to his glory, the publike benefit of this realme, our common profit, and your praises.

Finallie for the seruice, and due accomplishment of all the premises, euery Agent and minister of and for this voyage, hath not onely giuen a corporall othe vpon the Euangelistes to obserue, and cause to be obserued, this commission, and euery part, clause and sentence of the same, as muche as in him lyeth, as well for his owne parte as for any other person, but also haue bounde themselues and their friendes to the company in seuerall summes of money, expressed in the Actes, and Recordes of this societie, for the trueth and fidelities of them for the here-

an

and also manifester testification of the truth, and of their othes, promises, and bands afore said, they haue to this commission subscribed particularly their seuerall handes, and the companie also in confirmation of the same, haue set their seale. Yeuen the day, moneth, and yeeres first aboue mentioned.

The othe ministred to the seruants of the fellowshippe.

YE sweare by the holy contents of that booke, that ye shall well, faithfully & truely, and vprightly, and with all your indeuour, serue this right worshipfull company in that order, which by this fellowshippes Agent or Agents in the dominions of the Emperour of Russia &c, shall be vnto you committed, by commission, commandement, or other his direction. And that you shall be obedient and faithfull to the same our Agent or Agents, and that well, and truely and vprightlie, according to the commission, charge, commandement, or other direction of the said Agent or Agents to you from time to time giuen and to be giuen, you shall prosecute and doe all that which in you lieth, for the good renowme, commoditie, benefit and profit of the said fellowshippe: and you shall not directly or indirectly, openly or couertly doe, exercise or vse any trade or feat of merchandize for your owne priuate account, commodity, gaine or profit, or for the account of or for any other person or persons, without consent or licence of this said fellowshippe, first obteined in writing. And if you shall know or vnderstand any other person or persons to vse, exercise or doe any trade, traffike or feat of merchandize, to or for his or their owne account or accounts, at any time or times hereafter, that then ye shall truely and plainely disclose, open, vtter and reueale, and shew the same vnto this said fellowshippe, without fraud, colour, couin or delay: So helpe you God, &c.

The letter of M. George Killingworth, the companies first Agent in Moscouie, touching their interteinement in their second voyage. Anno 1555 the 27 of Nouember in Mosco.

RIght worshipfull, my duetie considered, &c. It may please your worship to vnderstand, that at the making hereof we all be in good health, thanks be to God, saue onely William our cooke as we came from Colmogro fell into the riuer out of the boat, and was drowned: and the 11 day of September we came to Vologda, and there we laied all our wares vp, and solde very little: but one merchant would haue giuen vs 12 robles for a broad cloth, and he said he would haue had them all, and 4 altines for a pound of sugar, but we did refuse it because he was the first, and the merchants were not come thither, nor would not come before winter, trusting to haue more: but I feare it will not be much better. Yet notwithstanding we did for the best. And the house that our wares lie in, cost from that day vntill Easter ten robles. And the 28 day of September we did determine with our selues that it was good for M. Gray, Arthur Edwards, Thomas Hatton, Christopher Hudson, John Segewicke, Richard Johnson, and Richard Goodale to tarie at Vologda, and M. Chanceler, Henry Lane, Edward Wise, Robert Best and I should go to Mosco. And we did lade the Emperours suger, with part of all sortes of wares to haue had to the Mosco with vs, and the way was so deepe, that we were faine to turne backe, and leaue it still at Vologda till the frost. And we went forth with post horse, & the charge of euery horse being still ten in number comes to 10 s. 7 d. halfe penie, besides the guides, and we came to the Mosco the fourth day of October, and were lodged that night in a simple house: but the next day we were sent for to the Emperour his secretarie, and he bad vs welcome with a cheerefull countenance and cheerefull words, and we shewed him that we had a letter from our Queenes grace to the Emperour his grace, and then he desired to see them all, and that they might remaine with him, to haue them perfect, that the true meaning might be declared to the Emperour, and so we did: and then we were appointed to a better house: and the seuenth day the secretarie sent for vs againe, and then he shewed vs that we should haue a better house, for it was the Emperour his will, that we should haue all things that we did lacke, and did send vs meade of two sorts, and two hens, our house free, and euery two dayes to receiue eight hens, seuen altines, and two pense in money, and me dow a certaine, and a poore fellow to make cleane our house, and to do that whereunto we would set him: and he had giuen many rewards before, which you shall perceiue by other, and so we gaue the messengers

gers a reward with thankes: and the ninth day we were sent to make vs ready to speake with the Emperour on the morrow. And the letters were sent vs, that we might deliuer them our selues, and we came before him the tenth day: and before we came to his presence we went thorow a great chamber, where stood many small tunnes, pailes, bowles and pots of siluer, I meane, like washing bowles, all parsell gilt: and within that another chamber, wherein sate (I thinke) neere a hundred in cloth of golde, and then into the chamber where his grace sat, and there I thinke were more then in the other chamber also in cloth of golde, and we did our duety, and shewed his grace our queenes graces letters, with a note of your present which was left in Vologda: and then his grace did aske how our Queenes grace did, calling her cousin, saying that he was glad that we were come in health into his Realme, and we went one by one vnto him, and tooke him by the hand, and then his grace did bid vs go in health, and come to dinner againe, and we dined in his presence, and were set with our faces towardes his grace, and none in the chamber sate with their backes towards him, being, I thinke, neere a hundred at dinner then, and all serued with golde, as platters, chargers, pottes, cuppes, and all not slender, but very massy, and yet a great number of platters of golde, standing still on the cupboord, not mooued: and diuers times in the dinner time his grace sent vs meat and drinke from his owne table, and when we had dined we went vp to his grace, and receiued a cuppe with drinke at his owne hand, and the same night his grace sent certaine gentlemen to vs with diuers sortes of wine and medo, to whome we gaue a reward. And afterward we were by diuers Italians counselled to take heed whom we did trust to make the copie of the priuileges that we would desire to haue, for feare it should not be written in the Russe tongue, as we did meane. So first a Russian did write for vs a breuiate to the Emperor, the tenour wherof was, that we did desire a stronger priuilege: & when the Secretary saw it, he did deliuer it to his grace, and when we came againe, his grace willed vs to write our mindes, and he would see it, and so we did. And his grace is so troubled with preparations to warres, that as yet we haue no answere: but we haue bene required of his Secretary, and of the vnder Chancelour, to know what wares we had brought into the Realme, and what wares we doe intend to haue, that are, or may be had in this Realme: and we shewed them, and they shewed the Emperour therof. And then they said his graces pleasure was, that his best merchants of the Mosco should be spoken to, to meet and talke with vs. And so a day was appointed, and we mette in the Secretary his office, and there was the vnder Chancelour, who was not past two yeeres since the Emperours merchant, and not his Chancelour: and then the conclusion of our talke was, that the Chancelour willed vs to bethinke vs, where we would desire to haue a house or houses, that we might come to them as to our owne house, and for merchandize to be made preparation for vs, and they would know our prises of our wares and frise: and we answered, that for our prices they must see the wares before we could make any price thereof, for the like in goodnesse had not beene brought into the Realme, and we did looke for an example of all sortes of our wares to come from Vologda, with the first fleetway, and then they should see them, and then we would shew them the prices of them: and like wise we could not tell them what we would giue them iustly, till we did know as well their iust weight as their measures (for in all places where we did come, all weighes and measures did vary:) then the Secretary (who had made promise vnto vs before) said, that we should haue all the iust measures vnder seale, & he that was found faulty in the contrary, to buy or sell with any other measure then that, the law was, that he should be punished: he said moreouer, that if it so happen that any of our merchants do promise by couenant at any time to deliuer you any certaine sum of wares in such a place, and of such like goodnesse, at such a day, for such a certaine price, that then because of variance, we should cause it to be written, according as the bargen is, before a iustice or the next ruler in the place: if he did not keepe couenant and promise in all points, according to his couenant, that then looke what losse or hinderance we could iustly proue that we haue there by, he should make it good, if he be worth so much: and in like case we must doe to them, and to that we did agree, saue only if it were to come ouer the sea, then if any such fortune should be (as God forbid) that the shippe should mischance or be robbed, & the proofe to be made that such kinde of wares were laden, the English merchants to beare no losse to the other merchant. Then the Chancelor said, me thinks you shall do best to haue your house at Colmogro, which is but 100 miles from the right discarge of the ships, and yet I trust the ships shall come neerer hereafter, because the ships may not tary long for their lading, which is 1000 miles from Vologda by water, and all our merchants shall bring all our merchandize to Colmogro to you, and so shall our merchants, neither go empty nor come empty: for if that they lacke lading homward, there is salt, which is good ware here, that they may come laden againe: so we were very glad to heare that, and did agree to his saying: for we shall neuertheless, if we list, haue a house at Vologda, & at the Mosco, yea, & at Nouogrode, or where we will in Russia:

The Italians counsell to our people.

The diuersitie of weights & measures in Russia.

Colmogro.

Rusland. But the three and twentith of this present we were with the secretary, and then among other talke, we mooued, that if we should tary at Colmogro with our wares, and should not come to Vologda, or further to seeke our market, but tary still at Colmogro, and then the merchants of the Polco and others should not come and bring their wares, and so the shippes should come, and not haue their lading ready, that then it were a great losse and hinderance for vs: then sayd he againe to vs, that the merchants had beene againe together with him, and had put the like doubt, that if they should come and bring their wares to Colmogro, and that they should not finde wares there sufficient to serue them, that then they should be at great losse and hinderance, they leauing their other trades to fall to that: and to that we did answere, that after the time that we doe appoint with them to bring their wares to Colmogro, God willing, they should neuer come thither, but at the beguming of the peere, they should finde that our merchants would haue at the least for a thousand robles, although the shippes were not come: so that he sayd, that then we must talke further with the merchants: so that as yet I know not, but that we shall haue need of one house at Colmogro, and another at Vologda, and if that they bring not their wares to Colmogro, then we shall be sure to buy some at Vologda, and to be out of bondage. Vologda.

And thus may we continue three or foure peeres, and in this space we shall know the countrey and the merchants, and which way to saue our selues best, and where to plant our houses, and where to seeke for wares: for the Polco is not best for any kinde of wares for vs to buy, saue onely waxe, which we can not haue vnder seuen pence the Russe pound, and it lackes two ounces of our pound, neither will it be much better cheape, for I haue bidden sixe pence for a pound. And I haue bought more, fiue hundred weight of yarne, which standes me in eight pence farthing the Russe pound one with another. And if we had receiued any store of money, and were dispatched heere of that we tary for, as I doubt not but we shall be shortly (you know what I meane) then as soone as we haue made sale, I do intend to goe to Nouogrode, and to Pletsco, whence all the great number of the best tow flaxe commeth, and such wares as are there I trust to buy part. And feare you not, we will do that may be done, if God send vs health, desiring you to prepare fully for one shippe to be readie in the beginning of Aprill to depart off the coast of England. Nouogrode.

Concerning all those thinges which we haue done in the wares, you shall receiue a perfect note by the next bearer (God willing) for he that carieth these from vs is a merchant of Turwell, and he was caused to cary these by the commandement of the Emperour his secretarie, whose name is Euan Mecallawiche weskawate, whom we take to be our very friend. And if it please you to send any letters to Dantiske, to Robert Elson, or to William Watsons seruant Dunstan Walton to be conueyed to vs, it may please you to inclose ours in a letter sent from you to him, written in Pollish, Dutch, Latine, or Italian: so inclosed, comming to the Polco to his handes, he will conuey our letters to vs wheresoeuer we be. And I haue written to Dantiske already to them for the conueyance of letters from thence. The Russian secretary his name.

And to certifie you of the weather here, men say, that these hundred peeres was neuer so warme weather in this countrey at this time of the peere. But as yesternight we receiued a letter from Christopher Hudson from a citie called Yeresslaue, who is comming hither with certaine of our wares, but the winter did deceiue him, so that he was faine to tary by the way: and he wrote that the Emperours present was deliuered to a gentleman at Vologda, and the sledde did ouerthrow, and the butte of Hollocke was lost, which made vs all very sory.

I pray you be not offended with these my rude letters, for lacke of time: but as soone as sales be made; I will finde the meanes to conuey you a letter with speed: for the way is made so doubtfull, that the right messenger is so much in doubt, that he would not haue any letters of any effect sent by any man, if he might, for he knowes not of these: and to say the trueth, the way is not for him to trauell in. But I will make another shift beside, which I trust shall serue the turne till he come, if sales be made before he be ready, which is and shall be as pleaseth God: who euer preserue your worship, and send vs good sales. Written in haste.

By yours to command

GEORGE KILLINGWORTH

Draper.

A copie of the first Priuileges granted by the Emperour of Russia to the English Merchantes, in the yeere 1555.

IOhn Vasiliwich, by the grace of God, Emperour of Russia, great Duke of Nuogrode, Moscouia, &c. To all people that shall see, reade, heare, or vnderstand these presents greeting. Forasmuch as God hath planted all Realmes and Dominions in the whole world with sundry commodities, so as the one hath need of the amity and commodities of the other, and by meanes thereof, traffike vsed from one to another, and amity thereby increased, and for that as among st men nothing is more to be desired then amity, without the which no creature being of a naturall good disposition can liue in quietnesse, so that it is as troublesome to be vtterly wanting, as it is perceiued to be grieuous to the body to lacke ayre, fire, or any other necessaries most requisite for the conseruation and maintenance thereof in health, considering also how needfull merchandize is, which furnisheth men of all that which is conuenient for their liuing, and nouriture, for their clothing, trimming, the satisfying of their delights, and all other thinges conuenient and profitable for them, and that merchandize bringeth the same commodities from diuers quarters, in so great abundance, as by meanes thereof nothing is lacking in any part, and that all things be in euery place (where entercourse of merchandizes is receiued and embraced) generally in such sort, as amity thereby is entred into, and planted to continue, and the inioyers thereof be as men liuing in a golden world: Upon these respects, and other weighty and good considerations, vs hereunto mouing, and chiefly vpon the contemplation of the gracious letters, directed from the right high, right excellent, and right mighty Queene Mary, by the grace of God, Queene of England, France, &c. in the fauor of her subiects, merchants, the gouernor, consuls, assistants, and communalty of merchants aduenturers, for discouery of lands, &c.

Know ye therefore, that we of our grace especiall, meere motion, and certaine knowledge, haue giuen and granted, and by these presents, for vs, our heyres and successors, doe giue and grant, as much as in vs is and lyeth, vnto Sebastian Cabota Gouernour, Sir George Barnes knight, &c. Consuls: Sir Iohn Gresham, &c. Assistants, and to the communalty of the aforenamed fellowshippe, and to their successours for euer, and to the successours of euery of them, these articles, grants, immunities, franchises, liberties and priuileges, and euery of them hereafter following, expressed and declared, videlicet:

1 First, we for vs, our heyres and successours, do by these presents giue and grant free licence, faculty, authority and power vnto the said Gouernour, Consuls, Assistants, and communalty of the said fellowshippe, and to their successours for euer, that all and singular the merchants of the same company, their Agents, factours, doers of their businesse, attorneys, seruants, and ministers, and euery of them may at all times hereafter for euer more surely, freely, and safely with their shippes, merchandizes, goods, and things whatsoeuer, saile, come, and enter into all and singular our lands, countryes, dominions, cities, townes, villages, castles, ports, iurisdictions and destraits by sea, land, or fresh waters, and there tary, abide, and soiourne, and buy, sell, barter and change all kinde of merchandizes with all maner of merchants and people, of whatsoeuer nation, right condition, state or degrees they bee, and with the same or other shippes, wares, merchandizes, goods, and things, whatsoeuer they be, vnto other Empyres, Kingdomes, Dukedomes, parts, and to any other place or places at their pleasure and liberty, by sea, land or freshwaters may in part, and exercise all kinde of merchandizes in our Empyre and dominions, and euery part thereof, freely and quietly, without any restraint, impeachment, price, exaction, pyll, straight custome, toll, imposition, or subsidie to be demanded, taxed, or payed, or at any time hereafter to be demanded, taxed, set, leuied, or inferred vpon them or any of them, or vpon their goods, shippes, wares, merchandizes and thinges, of, for, or vpon any part or parcell thereof, or vpon the goods, shippes, wares, merchandizes, and thinges of any of them, so that they shall not need any other safe conduct or licence generall, ne special, of vs, our heyres or successours, neither shall be bound to aske any safe conduct or licence in any of the aforesaid places subiect vnto vs.

2 Item, we giue and grant to the sayd merchantes, this power and libertie, that they, ne any of them, ne their goods, wares, merchandizes or things, ne any part thereof, shall be by any meanes, within our dominions, landes, countryes, castles, townes, villages, or other place or places of our iurisdiction, at any time hereafter attached, stayed, arrested, ne disturbed for any debt, ne tie, or other thing, for the which they be not principall debters or ſureties, ne alſo for any offence or treſpaſſe committed, or that ſhall be committed, but onely for ſuch as they, or any of them ſhall actually commit, and the ſame offences (if any ſuch happen,) ſhalbe by vs onely heard, and determined.

3 Item, we giue and graunt, that the ſaide Marchants ſhall and may haue free libertie, power, and authoritie, to name, chooſe, and aſſigne brokers, ſhippers, packers, wayers, meaſurers, wagoners, and all other meete and neceſſarie labourers, for to ſerue them in their feate of Marchandiſes, and miniſter, and giue vnto them and euery of them a corporall othe, to ſerue them well and truely in their offices, and finding them or any of them doing contrary to his or their othe, may puniſh and diſmiſſe them, and from time to time chooſe, ſweare, and admit other in their place, or places, without contradiction, let, vexation, or diſturbance, either of vs, our heires or ſucceſſours, or of any other our Juſtices, officers, miniſters, or ſubiects whatſoeuer.

4 Item, wee giue and graunt vnto the ſaide Marchants and their ſucceſſours, that ſuch perſon as is, or ſhall bee commended vnto vs, our heires or ſucceſſours, by the Gouernour, Conſuls, and aſſiſtants of the ſaide fellowſhip, reſiant within the Citie of London within the Realme of Englande, to bee their chiefe Factor within this our Empire and Dominions, may, and ſhall haue full power and authoritie to gouerne and rule all Engliſhmen, that haue had, or ſhall haue acceſſe, or repaire in or to this ſaide Empire and iuriſdictions, or any part thereof, and ſhall and may miniſter vnto them, and euery of them good iuſtice, in all their cauſes, plaints, quarrels, and diſorders betweene them mooued, and to bee mooued, and aſſemble, deliberate, conſult, conclude, define, determine, and make ſuch Actes, and ordinances, as hee ſo commended with his Aſſiſtants ſhall thinke good and meete, for the good order, gouernement and rule of the ſaide Marchants, and all other Engliſhmen repairing to this our ſaide Empire and Dominions, or any part thereof, and to ſet and leuie vpon all, and euery Engliſhmen, offender or offenders, of ſuch their Actes and ordinances made, and to bee made, penalties, and mulcts by fine or impriſonment.

5 Item, if it happen, that any of the ſaide Marchants, or other Engliſhman, as one or more doe rebell againſt ſuch chiefe Factor or Factors, or his or their deputies, and will not diſpoſe him, or themſelues to obey them, and euery of them, as ſhall appertaine, if the ſaide Rebels or diſobedients doe come, and bee founde in our ſaide Empire and iuriſdictions, or any part and place thereof, then wee promiſe and graunt, that all and euery our officers, miniſters, and ſubiects, ſhall effectually ayde and aſſiſt the ſaide chiefe Factor, or Factors, and their deputies, and for their power ſhall really worke, to bring ſuch rebell or diſobedient Rebels, or diſobedients to due obedience: And to that intent ſhall lende vnto the ſame Factor or Factors, and their deputies vpon requeſt therefore to be made, priſons, and inſtruments for puniſhments from time to time.

6 Item, wee promiſe vnto the ſaide Marchants, and their ſucceſſours vpon their requeſt, to exhibite, and doe vnto them good, exact, and fauourable iuſtice, with expedition in all their cauſes, and that when they or any of them, ſhall haue acceſſe, or come to, or before any of our Juſtices, for any their plaints mooued, and to bee mooued betweene any our Subiects or other ſtranger, and them, or any of them, that them they ſhall bee firſt, and furthwith heard, as ſoone as the partie which they ſhall finde before our Juſtices ſhall bee depeached, which partie being heard furthwith, and alldone as may bee, the ſaide Engliſh Marchants ſhall bee ridde, and diſpatched: And if any action ſhall bee mooued by or againſt any of the ſaide Marchants, being abſent out of our ſaide Empire and Dominions, then ſuch Marchants may ſubſtitute an Attorney in all and ſinguler his cauſes to bee followed as neede ſhall require, and as ſhall ſeeme to him expedient.

7 Item, wee graunt, and promiſe to the ſaide Marchants, and to their ſucceſſours, that if the ſame Marchants or any of them ſhall bee wounded, or (which God forbidde) ſlaine in any part, or place of our Empire, or Dominions, then good information thereof giuen, Wee and our Juſtices, and other officers, ſhall execute due correction and puniſhment without delaye, according to the exigence of the caſe: So that it ſhall bee an example to all other, not to commit the like. And if it ſhall chaunce the Factors, ſeruants, or Miniſters of the ſayde Marchants or any of them, to treſpaſſe or offende, whereby they or any of them ſhall incurre the danger of death or puniſhment, the goods, wares, marchandiſes, and thinges of their Maſters, ſhall not therefore be forfaited, confiſcated, ſpoyled, ne ſeiſed by any means, by vs, our heires, or ſucceſſours, or by any our officers, miniſters or ſubiects, but ſhall remaine to their vſe, franke, free, and diſcharged from all puniſhment and loſſe.

8 Item, wee graunt that if any of the English nation be arrested for any debt, hee shall not be layed in prison, so farre, as he can put in sufficient suretie or paune: Neither shall any Sergeant, or officer leade them, or any of them to prison, before he shall haue knowen whether the chiefe Factor or factors, or their deputies, shal be sureties, or bring in paune for such arrested: then the officers shall release the partie, and shall set him or them at libertie.

9 Moreouer, wee giue, graunt, and promise to the saide Marchants, that if any of their shippes or other vessels, shall bee spoyled, robbed, or damnified, in sayling, anckoring or returning to or from our sayde Empires, and Dominions, or any part thereof, by any Pirats, Marchants or other person, whatsoeuer hee or they bee, that then and in such case, wee will doe all that vs is, to cause restitution, reparation, and satisfaction to bee duely made to the saide English Marchants by our letters and otherwise, as shall stande with our honour, and bee consonant to equitie and iustice.

8 Item, for vs, our heires and successours, wee doe promise and graunt, to perfourme, maintaine, corroborate, autenticate, and obserue all and singular the aforesaide liberties, franchises and priuiledges, like as presently wee firmely doe intende, and will corroborate, autentike, and perfourme the same by all meane and way that wee can, as much as may bee to the commodite and profite of the saide English Marchants, and their successours for euer.

And to the intent that all and singuler the saide giftes, graunts and promises, may be inuiolably obserued and perfourmed, wee the saide Iohn Vasiliuich by the grace of God Emperour of Russia, great duke of Nouogrode, Mosco, &c. for vs, our heires and successours, by our Imperiall and Loyally worde in steade of an othe, haue and doe promise by these presents, inuiolably to maintaine and obserue, and cause to bee inuiolably obserued and maintained, all and singuler the aforesaide giftes, graunts, and promises from time to time, and at all and euery time and times hereafter. And for the more corroboration hereof haue caused our Signet hereunto to be put. Dated in our Castel of Mosco, the 20. day of in the yeere.

The Charter of the Marchants of Russia, graunted vpon the discouerie of the saide Countrey, by King Philip and Queene Mary.

PHilip and Mary, by the grace of God, King and Queene, &c. To all maner of officers, true Iurie men, ministers and Subiects, and to all other people as well within this our Realme or els where vnder our obeysance, iurisdiction and rule, or otherwise vnto whome these our letters shall bee shewed, seene, or read, greeting.

Whereas wee be credibly informed, that our right trustie, right faithfull, and welbeloued Counsailers, William Marques of Winchester, Loyde high Treasurer of this our Realme of England, Henry Earle of Arundel, Loyd Steward of our housholde, Iohn Earle of Bedford, Loyde keeper of our priuie Seale, William Earle of Pembroke, William Lord Haward of Effingham, Loyde high Admirall of our saide Realme of England, &c. Haue at their owne aduenture, coastes and charges, prouided, rigged, and tackled certaine shippes, pinesses and other meete vessels, and the same furnished with all thinges necessarie, haue aduaunced and set forwarde, for to discouer, descrie, and finde Iles, landes, territories, Dominions, and Seignories vnknowen, and by our subiects before this not commonly by Sea frequented, which by the sufferance and grace of Almightie God, it shall chaunce them sayling Northwardes, Northeastwards, and Northwestwardes, or any parts thereof, in that race or course which other Christian Monarches, (being with vs in league and amitie) haue not heretofore by Seas traficqued, haunted, or frequented, to finde and attaine by their saide aduenture, as well for the ‖ glorie of God, as for the illustrating of our honour, and dignitie royall, in the increase of the reuenues of our Crowne, and generall wealth of this and other our Realmes and Dominions, and of our subiects of the same: And to this intent our subiects aboue specified and named, haue most humbly beseeched vs, that our abundant grace, fauour and clemencie, may be graciously extended vnto them in this behalfe: Whereupon we inclined to the petition of the foresaid our Counsailers, subiects and Marchants, and willing to animate, aduance, further and nourish them in their said godly, honest, and good purpose, and, as we hope, profitable aduenture, & that they may the more willingly, and readily atchieue the same, Of our especiall grace, certaine knowledge and meere motion, haue graunted, and by these presents doe graunt, for vs, our heires and successours, vnto our saide right trustie, truſtie and right faithfull, and right welbeloued Counſailers, and the other before named perſons, that they by the name of Marchants aduenturers of England, for the diſcouerie of lands, territories, Iles, Dominions, and Seignories vnknowen, and not before that late aduenture or enterpriſe by ſea or Nauigation, commonly frequented as aforeſaid, ſhalbe from henceforth one bodie and perpetuall fellowſhip and communaltie of themſelues, both in deede and in name, and them, by the names of Marchants aduenturers for the diſcouerie of landes, territories, Iles and Seignories vnknowen, and not by the Seas, and Nauigations, before their ſaide late aduenture or enterpriſe by ſea or Nauigation commonly frequented, We doe incorporate, name, and declare by theſe preſents, and that the ſame fellowſhip or communaltie from henceforth ſhall be, and may haue one Gouernour of the ſaid fellowſhip, and communaltie of Marchants aduenturers.

The discouerie principally intended for Gods glorie.

And in conſideration that one Sebaſtian Cabota, hath bene the chiefeſt ſetter forth of this iourney or voyage, therefore we make, ordeine, and conſtitute him the ſaid Sebaſtian to be the firſt and preſent gouernour of the ſame fellowſhip and communaltie, by theſe preſents. To haue and enioy the ſaid office of Gouernour, to him the ſaid Sebaſtian Cabota during his natural life, without anoying or diuiſſing from the ſame roome. Sebaſtian Cabota firſt Gouernour of the Moſcouie companie.

And furthermore, we graunt vnto the ſame fellowſhip and communaltie and their ſucceſſours, that they the ſaide fellowſhip and communaltie, and their ſucceſſors after the deceaſe of the ſaide Sebaſtian Cabota, ſhall, and may freely and lawfully in places conuenient, and honeſt, aſſemble themſelues together, or ſo many of them as will, or can aſſemble together, as well within our Citie of London, or elſewhere, as it ſhall pleaſe them in ſuch ſort and maner, as other worſhipfull corporations of our ſaide Citie haue vſed to aſſemble, and there yeerely name, elect and chooſe one Gouernour or two, of themſelues, and their liberties, and alſo as well yeerely during the naturall life of the ſaid Sebaſtian Cabota nowe Gouernour, as alſo at the election of ſuch ſaid Gouernour or gouernours before his decreaſe, to chooſe, name and appoint eight and twentie of the moſt ſad, diſcreete, and honeſt perſons of the ſaide fellowſhip, and communaltie of Marchant aduenturers, as is aboue ſpecified, and 4. of the moſt expert and ſkilfull perſons of the ſame 28. to be named and called Conſuls, and 24. of the reſidue, to be named and called Aſſiſtants to the ſaide Gouernour or gouernours, and Conſuls for the time being, which ſhal remaine and ſtand in their authorities for one whole yeere then next following. And if it ſhall fortune the ſaide Gouernour, Conſuls, and aſſiſtants, or any of them ſo to be elected, and choſen as is aforeſaide, to die within the yeere after his or their election, that then and ſo often, it ſhall and may be lawfull to and for the ſaide fellowſhip, and communaltie, to elect and chuſe of themſelues other Gouernour or gouernours, Conſuls and aſſiſtants, in the place and ſteade of ſuch as ſo ſhall happen to die, to ſerue out the ſame yeere.

And further we doe make, ordeine, and conſtitute, George Barnes knight and Alderman of our Citie of London, William Garret, Alderman of our ſaide Citie, Anthonie Huſie, and Iohn Suthcot, to be the firſt and preſent 4. Conſuls of the ſaid fellowſhip and communaltie by theſe preſents, to haue & enioy the ſaid offices of Conſuls to them the ſaid George Barnes, William Garret, Anthonie Huſie, & Iohn Suthcot, for terme of one whole yeere next after the date of theſe our letters patents: And wee doe likewiſe, make, ordeine and conſtitute Sir Iohn Greſham knight, Sir Andrew Iudde, knight, Sir Thomas White knight, Sir, John Yorke knight, Thomas Offley the elder, Thomas Lodge, Henry Herdſon, Iohn Hopkins, William Watſon, Willia Clifton, Richard Pointer, Richard Chamberlaine, William Mallorie, Thomas Pallie the elder, William Allen, Henry Becher, Ieffrey Walkenden, Richard Fowles, Rowland Heyward, George Eaton, Iohn Elliot, Iohn Sparke, Blaſe Sanders, and Miles Mording, to be the firſt and preſent 24. Aſſiſtants to the ſaide Gouernour or gouernours, and Conſuls, and to the ſaide fellowſhip and communaltie by theſe preſents, to haue and enioy the ſaid offices of aſſiſtants to them for terme of one whole yeere, next after the date of theſe our letters patents. And further, we for vs, our heires & ſucceſſours, as much as in vs is, will & graunt by theſe preſents vnto the ſaid Gouernour, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip & company of Marchants aduenturers aforeſaid, & to their ſucceſſours, that the ſaid Gouernour or gouernours, 4. Conſuls, & 24. aſſiſtants, that now by theſe patents are nominated and appointed, or that hereafter by the ſaid fellowſhip, & communaltie of marchants aduenturers, or the more part of them, which ſhalbe then preſent, ſo from time to time to be choſen, ſo that there be 15. at the leaſt, wholy agreed therof, the ſaid Gouernour or gouerners, or one of them, & 2. of the ſaid Cōſuls ſhalbe there, & 12. of the reſidue of the ſaid nomber of 15. ſhalbe of the ſaid aſſiſtants, and in the abſence of ſuch Gouernour, that then 3. of the ſaide Conſuls, and 12. of the ſaide aſſiſtants at the leaſt for the time being, ſhal & may haue, vſe, and exercise ful power & authoritie, to rule & gouerne all and ſinguler the Marchants of the ſaid fellowſhip and communaltie, & to execute, & do full and Sir George Barnes, William Garret, Anthome Huſſie, Iohn Suthcot, the firſt 4. Conſuls.

speedie iustice to them, and euery of them, in all their causes, differences, variances, controuerſies quarrels, and complaints, within any our Realmes, dominions and iuriſdictions onely moued, and to be mooued touching their Marchandiſe, traſiques, and occupiers aforeſaide, or the gouernor or rule of them or any of them.

Alſo wee for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, ſo much as in vs is, doe likewiſe by theſe preſents graunt, that the ſaid Gouernour, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip and communaltie, and their ſucceſſours, ſhall and may haue perpetuall ſucceſſion, and a common Seale which ſhall perpetually ſerue for the affaires and buſineſſe of the ſaide fellowſhip and communaltie. And that they and their ſucceſſours, ſhall and may be for euer able perſons, and capar in the lawe, for to purchaſe and poſſeſſe in fee and perpetuitie, and for terme of life, or liues, or for terme of yeere or otherwiſe, landes, tenements, rentes, reuerſions, and other poſſeſſions, and hereditaments, whatſoeuer they bee, by the name of the Gouernour, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip and communaltie of the Marchants aduenturers by Seas and Nauigations, for the diſcouerie of landes, territories, Iles, Dominions, and Seigniories vnknowen, and before the ſaide laſt aduenture or enterpriſe by Seas not frequented, as before is ſpecified, and by the ſame names, ſhal and may lawfully alien, graunt, lett and ſett the ſame, or any part thereof to any perſon or perſons, able in the lawe to take and receiue the ſame. So that they doe not graunt nor alien the ſame, or any part thereof into mortmaine, without ſpeciall licence of vs, our heires or ſucceſſours, firſt had and obtained.

Alſo, wee for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours haue graunted, and by theſe preſents doe graunt vnto the ſaide Gouernours, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip, and communaltie of the ſaide Marchants and to their ſucceſſours, that they and their ſucceſſours, ſhall, and may lawfully purchaſe vnto them and their ſucceſſors for euer, landes, tenements and hereditaments whatſoeuer, of the cleare yeerely value of 3. ſcore 6. pounds, thirteene ſhillings and foure pence of lawfull money of Englande and not aboue, as well of ſuch landes, tenements, and hereditaments, as bee holden or ſhall bee holden of vs, our heires or ſucceſſours, as of any other perſon or perſons, the ſtatutes prouided againſt alienations into mortmaine, or any of them, or any article or clauſe in them or any of them contained, or any other lawe, cuſtome, ſtatute, or prouiſion to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding. And that they by the name of the Gouernour, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip and communaltie of Marchants aduenturers, for the diſcouerie of landes, territories, Iles, dominions, and Seigniories vnknowen by the Seas and Nauigations, and not before the ſaide late aduenture or enterpriſe by Seas frequented as aforeſaide, ſhall and may bee able in the lawe, to impleade, and be impleaded, to anſwere, and to be anſwered, to defende, and to bee defended before whatſoeuer Iudge or Iuſtice, temporall or ſpirituall, or other perſons whatſoeuer, in whatſoeuer court, or courtes, and in all actions perſonall, reall, and mixt, and in euery of them, and in all plaintes of nouel diſſeiſon, and alſo in all plaintes, ſuites, quarrels, affaires, buſineſſes and demaundes whatſoeuer they bee, touching and concerning the ſaide fellowſhippe and communaltie, and the affaires and buſineſſe of the ſame onely, in as ample maner and forme, as any other corporation of this our Realme may doe.

Moreouer, wee for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, haue giuen and graunted, and by theſe preſents doe giue and graunt vnto the ſaide Gouernour Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhippe, and communaltie of Marchants aduenturers aforeſaide, and to their ſucceſſours, that the ſaide Gouernour, or Gouernours, Conſuls and aſſiſtants, and their ſucceſſours, in maner, forme, and number afore rehearſed, ſhall haue full power and authoritie from time to time hereafter, to make, ordaine, eſtabliſh and erect all ſuch ſtatutes, actes and ordinances, for the gouernement, good conditions, and lawdable rule of the ſaid fellowſhippe and communaltie of Marchants aduenturers afore ſaide, as to them ſhalbe thought good, meete, conuenient and neceſſarie, and alſo to admitte into the ſaide Corporation and fellowſhippe to be free of the ſame, ſuch and as many perſons, as to them ſhall bee thought good, meete, conuenient, and neceſſarie. And that euery ſuch perſon or perſons, as ſhall fortune hereafter to bee admitted into the ſaide fellowſhippe, communaltie and corporation, ſhall from the time of his or their admittance, bee free of the ſame: And alſo wee will, and by theſe preſents graunt for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, vnto the ſaide Gouernours, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip, communaltie, of Marchant aduenturers aforeſaide, and to their ſucceſſours, that the Gouernour, or gouernours, Conſuls and aſſiſtants of the ſame, in maner, forme, and number afore rehearſed, and their ſucceſſours, for the time being, ſhall, and may haue full power and authoritie by theſe preſents from time to time, as to them ſhall ſeeme good, to limit, ſett, ordeine and make, mulcts, and penalties by fines, forfeitures, & impriſonments, or any of them vpon any offender of the ſaide fellowſhippe and communaltie, for any offence touching the ſame fellow-

ſhip and communaltie, and alſo that all acts and ordinances by them or their ſucceſſours to bee made, which time ſhall thinke not neceſſarie or preiudiciall to the ſaid fellowſhip or communaltie, at all times to reuoke, breake, fruſtrate, anihilate, repeale and diſſolue at their pleaſure and liberty. And further, wee will that if any of the ſaide fellowſhip and communaltie ſhalbe founde contrarious, rebellious, or diſobedient to the ſaide Gouernour or gouernours, Conſuls, and the ſaide aſſiſtants for the time being, or to any ſtatutes, acts or ordinances, by them made or to bee made, that then the ſaide Gouernour or gouernours, Conſuls, and the ſaide aſſiſtants, in maner, forme, and nomber aboue ſpecified, for the time being, ſhall and may by vertue of theſe preſents, mulct, and puniſh euery ſuch offender or offenders, as the qualitie of the offence requireth, according to their good diſcretions.

And further, we will that none of the ſaide offender or offenders, ſhall decline from the power of the ſaide Gouernour, or gouernours, Conſuls and aſſiſtants, in maner, forme, and nomber aboueſaide for the time being: ſo alwayes, that the ſaide acts, ſtatutes and ordinances, doe onely touche and concerne the ſaide Gouernour or gouernours, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, and the ſaide fellowſhippe and communaltie of our before named Marchants aduenturers, or the men of the ſame fellowſhip and communaltie, and none other; And ſo alwayes, that ſuch their acts, ſtatutes and ordinances, bee not againſt our prerogatiue, lawes, ſtatutes, and cuſtomes of our Realmes and Dominions, nor contrary to the ſeuerall duetie of any our ſubiects, towardes vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, nor contrary to any compacts, treaties or leagues, by vs or any our progenitours, heretofore had or made, or hereafter by vs, our heires and ſucceſſours to bee made, to or with any forreine Prince or potentate, nor alſo to the preiudice of the corporation of the Maior, communalties and Citizens of our citie of London, nor to the preiudice of any perſon or perſons, bodie politique, or corporate, or incorporate, iuſtly pretending, clayming, or hauing any liberties, franchiſes, priuiledges, rightes or preheminences, by vertue or pretext of any graunt, gift, or letters patents, by vs, or any our progenitours, heretofore giuen, graunted, or made.

Moreouer, we for vs, our heires, and ſucceſſours, will, and by theſe preſents, doe graunt vnto the ſaid Gouernours, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip and communaltie of our Marchants aforeſaid, that their ſaid Gouernour or gouernours, Conſuls and aſſiſtants, and their ſucceſſours for the time being, in maner, forme and nomber aboue rehearſed, ſhall haue full power and authoritie to aſſigne, conſtitute and ordaine one officer, or diuers officers as well within our aforeſaide Citie of London, as alſo in any other place or places of this our Realme of England, or elſwhere within our dominions, which officer or officers, wee will to be named and called by the name of Seriant or Seriants to the fellowſhip or communaltie of the ſaid Marchants, and that the ſame Seriant or Seriants, ſhall and may haue full power and authoritie by theſe preſents, to take, leuie and gather all maner fines, forfeitures, penalties and mulcts of euery perſon and perſons, of the ſaide fellowſhippe and communaltie conuict, and that ſhalbe conuicted, vpon or for breaking of any ſtatutes, acts, ordinances, to be made by the ſaide Gouernour or gouernours, Conſuls and aſſiſtants for the time being.

And further, wee will and alſo graunt for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, that the ſaide officer or officers, ſhall haue further power and authoritie for the default of payment, or for diſobedience in this behalfe (if neede bee) to ſet handes, and arreſt, as well the body and bodies, as the goods and chattels of ſuch offender, and offenders, and tranſgreſſers, in euery place and places not franchiſed: and if it ſhall fortune any ſuch offender or offenders, their goods and chattels or any part thereof, to bee in any Citie, borowe, towne incorporate, or other place franchiſed or priuiledged, where the ſaide officer or officers, may not lawfully intromit or intermeddle, that then the Maior, ſhiriffes, bayliffes, and other head officers, or miniſters, within euery ſuch Citie, borowe, towne incorporate, or place or places franchiſed, vpon a precept to them, or any of them, to be directed from the Gouernour or gouernours, Conſuls and aſſiſtants of the ſaid fellowſhip, in nomber and forme aforeſaid, vnder the common ſeale of the ſaid fellowſhip & communaltie for the time being, ſhall, & may attach and arreſt the body or bodies of ſuch offender or offenders, as alſo take, and ſeiſe the goods and chattels of all and euery ſuch offender or offenders, being within any ſuch place or places franchiſed, and the ſame bodie and bodies, goods and chattels of all and euery ſuch offender and offenders, being within any ſuch place or places franchiſed, and euery part thereof ſo attached and ſeazed, ſhall according to the tenor and purport of the ſaid precept, returne, and deliuer vnto the ſaide officer, or officers of the aforeſaide fellowſhippe, and communaltie.

And further, we will & graunt for vs, our heires & ſucceſſours by theſe preſents, that al, & euery ſuch

Maior, shirrife, bayliffe, or other head officers or ministers, of any citie, borowe, towne incorporat, or other places franchised, shall not bee impeached, molested, vexed or sued in any our courte courtes, for executing or putting in execution of any of the said precept or precepts.

And furthermore, wee of our ample and abundant grace, meere motion, and certaine knowledge, for vs, our heires, and successours, as much as in vs is, haue giuen and graunted, and by these presents doe giue and graunt, vnto the saide Gouernour, Consuls, assistants, fellowshippe, and comminaltie of Marchants aduenturers, and to their successours, and to the Factors, and Factors, assigne and assignes of euery of them, full and free authoritie, libertie, faculties and licence, and power to saile to all portes, regions, dominions, territories, landes, Iles, Islands, and coastes of the sea, whersoeuer before their late aduenture or enterprise vnknowen, or by our Marchants and subiects by the seas not heretofore commonly frequented, vnder our banner, standerd, flags, and Ensignes, with their shippe, shippes, barkes, pinnesses, and all other vessels of whatsoeuer portage, bulke, quantitie or qualitie they may be, and with any Marriners, and men as they will leade with them in such shippe or shippes, or other vessels at their owne and proper costes and expences, for to trafique, descrie, discouer and finde, whatsoeuer Ile, Islands, countries, regions, prouinces, creekes, armes of the sea, riuers & streames, as wel of Gentile, as of any other Emperour, king, prince, gouernour or Lord whatsoeuer he or they shalbe, and in whatsoeuer part of the world they be situated, being before the saide late aduenture or enterprise vnknowen, and by our Marchants and subiects not commonly frequented: and to enter and land in the same, without any maner of denying, paine, penaltie or forfeiture to bee had or taken by any our lawes, statutes or statutes to our vse, or to the vse of our heires or successors for the same.

K. Philip and Queene Mary hereby doe disanul Pope Alexanders diuision.

And we haue also graunted, and by these presents, for vs, our heires and successors, doe graunt vnto the said Gouernours, Consuls, assistants, fellowshippe and comminaltie, and to their successours, and to their Factors and assignes, and to euery of them, licence for to reare, plant, erect, and fasten our banners standerds, flags, and Ensignes, in whatsoeuer citie, towne, village, castle, Ile, or maine lande, which shalbe by them newly found, without any the penalties, forfeitures, or dangers aforesaide, and that the said fellowship and comminaltie, and their successors, Factors and assignes and euery of them, shall and may subdue, possesse and occupie, all maner cities, townes, Iles, and maine landes of infidelitie, which is or shall bee by them, or any of them newly founde or descried, as our vassals and subiects, and for to acquire and get the Dominion, title, and iurisdiction of the same Cities, Townes, Castles, villages, Iles, and maine landes, which shall bee by them, or any of them newly discouered or founde vnto vs, our heires and successours for euer.

Anno 1554.

And furthermore, whereas by the voyage of our Subiects in this last | yeere attempted by Nauigation, towardes the discouerie and disclosure of vnknowen places, Realmes, Islandes, and Dominions by the seas not frequented, it hath pleased Almighty God to cause one of the three shippes by them first set foorth for the voyage, and purpose aboue mentioned, named the Edward Bonauenture, to arriue, abide, and winter within the Empire and dominions of the high and mightie Prince our cousin and brother, Lorde Iohn Basiliuich Emperour of all Russia, Volodomerskie, great duke of Moscouie, &c. Who, of his clemencie, for our loue and zeale, did not onely admitte the Captaine, and Marchants our subiects into his protection, and Princely presence, but also receiued and intertained them very gratiously, and honourably, graunting vnto them by his letters addressed vnto vs, franke accesse into all his Seignories and Dominions, with licence freely to trafique in and out with all his Subiects in all kinde of Marchandise, with diuers other gratious priuiledges, liberties and immunities specified in his saide letters vnder his Signet: Knowe yee therefore that wee of our further royall fauour and munificence, of our meere motion, certaine knowledge, and speciall grace, for vs our heires, and successours, haue giuen and graunted, and by these Presents doe giue and graunt vnto the same Gouernour, Consuls, assistants, fellowshippe, and comminaltie aboue named, and to their successours, as much as in vs is, that all the maine landes, Iles, portes, hauens, creekes, and Riuers of the said mightie Emperour of all Russia, and great duke of Mosco, &c. And all, and singuler other landes, Dominions, territories, Iles, Portes, hauens, creekes, riuers, armes of the Sea of all and other Emperour, king, prince, rulers and gouerners, whatsoeuer he or they before the said late aduenture or enterprise not known, or by our foresaide Marchants and subiects by the seas, not cõmonly frequented, nor by any part nor parcel thereof lying Eastwards, Northeastwards, or Northwestwards, as is aforesaid, by sea shal not be visited, frequented nor haunted by any our subiects, other then of ꝑ said company & felowship, & their successors without expresse licence, agreement, and consent of the Gouernour, Consuls, and Assistants of the said fellowly

lowſhip, and Communaltie aboue named, or the more part of them, in manner and number aforeſaid, for the time being, vpon paine of forfeiture, and loſſe, as well of the ſhippe, and ſhippes, with the appertenances, as alſo of all the goods, marchandize, and things whatſoeuer they be, of thoſe our Subiects, not being of the ſaid fellowſhippe, and Communaltie, which ſhall attempt or preſume to ſaile to any of thoſe places, which be, or hereafter ſhall happen to be founde, and trafficked vnto, the one halfe of the ſame forfeiture to be to the vſe of vs, our heires, and ſucceſſors, and the other halfe to be to the vſe of the ſaide fellowſhippe, and Communaltie. And if it ſhall fortune, any ſtranger, or ſtrangers, for to attempt to hurt, hinder, or endamage the ſame Marchants, their factors, Deputies, or Aſſignes, or any of them, in ſailing, going, or returning at any time in the ſaide aduenture, or for to ſaile or trade to or from any thoſe places, lands, or coaſtes, which by the ſaide Marchants, their Factors, Deputies, and Aſſignes haue bene, or ſhall be deſcried, diſcouered, and found, or frequented, as well within the coaſtes and limits of gentilitie, as within the dominions and Seigniories of the ſaid mightie Emperour and Duke, and of all, and euery other Emperour, King, Prince, Ruler, and Gouernour whatſoeuer, he, or they be, before the ſaide late aduenture or enterpriſe not knowen by any our ſaid Marchants, and ſubiects, by the ſeas not commonly frequented, and lying Northwards, Northweſtwards, or Northeaſtwards as aforeſaid, then we will, and grant, and by theſe preſents doe licence, and authorize for vs, our heires, and ſucceſſors, the ſaid Marchants their Factors, Deputies, and Aſſignes, and euery of them, to doe their beſt in their defenſe, to reſiſt the ſame their enterpriſe, and attempts. Willing therefore, and ſtraightly commanding, and charging, all and ſingular our Officers, Maiors, Sherifes, Eſcheators, Conſtables, Bailifs, and all, and ſingular other our Miniſters, and Liege men, and Subiects whatſoeuer, to be aiding, fauouring, helping, and aſſiſting vnto the ſaid Gouernour, or Gouernours, Conſuls, Aſſiſtants, fellowſhip, and Communaltie, and to their Succeſſors, and Deputies, Factors, Seruants, and Aſſignes, and to the Deputies, Factors, and Aſſignes of euery of them, in executing and enioying the premiſſes, as wel on land, as in the ſea, from time to time, and at all times, when you, or any of you, ſhall be thereunto required. In witnes whereof, &c. Anno 1555.

Apud Weſtmonaſterium, 6. die Feb. Annis regnorum noſtrorum, primo & ſecundo.

Certaine inſtructions deliuered in the third voyage, Anno 1556. for Ruſſia, to euery Purſer, and the reſt of the ſeruants, taken for the voyage, which may ſerue, as good and neceſſary directions, to all other like aduenturers.

1 FIrſt you ſhall before the ſhippe doth begin to lade, goe aboord, and ſhal there take, and write one inuentorie, by the aduiſe of the Maſter, or of ſome other principall officer there aboord, of all the tackle, apparel, cables, ankers, ordinance, chambers, ſhot, powder, artillerie, and of all other neceſſaries whatſoeuer doth belong to the ſaid ſhip: and the ſame iuſtly taken, you ſhall write in a booke, making the ſaid Maſter, or ſuch officer priuie of that which you haue ſo written, ſo that the ſame may not be denied, when they ſhall call accompt thereof: that done, you ſhall write a copie of the ſame, with your owne hand, which you ſhall deliuer before the ſhippe ſhall depart, for the voyage to the companies booke keeper here to be kept to their behalfe, to the ende that they may be iuſtly anſwered the ſame, when time ſhall require: and this order to be ſeene and kept euery voyage orderly, by the purſers of the companies owne ſhippe, in any wiſe.

2. Alſo when the ſhippe beginneth to lade, you ſhall be ready aboord with your booke, to enter ſuch goods as ſhall be brought aboord, to be laden for the companie, packed, or vnpacked, taking the markes and numbers of euery packe, fardell, truſſe, or packet, conoupa, cheſt, fatte, butt, pipe, puncheon, whole barrell, halfe barrell, fyrkin, or other caſke, maunde, or baſket, or any other thing, which may, or ſhall be packed by any other manner of waies, or deuiſe. And firſt, all ſuch packes, or truſſes, &c. as ſhal be brought aboord to be laden, not marked by the companies marke, you ſhall doe the beſt to let that the ſame be not laden, and to inquire diligently to knowe the owners thereof, if you can, and what commoditie the ſame is, that is ſo brought aboord to be laden: if you can not know the owners of ſuch goods, learne what you can thereof, as well making a note in your booke, as alſo to ſend or bring worde thereof to the Agent, and to ſome one of the foure Marchants with him adioyned, ſo ſpeedily as you can, if it be here laden, or to be laden in this riuer, being not marked with the companies marke, as is aforeſaid: and when the ſaid ſhippe hath receaued ceiued in all that the companies Agent will haue laden, you shal make a iust copie of that which is laden, reciting the parcels, the markes and numbers of euery thing plainly, which you shal likewise deliuer to the sayd booke keeper to the vse aforesaid.

3 Also when the ship is readie to depart, you shall come for your cockets and letters to the Agent, and shall shew him all such letters as you haue receiued of any person or persons priuately or openly, to be deliuered to any person or persons in Russia or elsewhere, and also to declare if you know any other that shall passe in the ship either master or mariner that hath receiued any letters to be priuily deliuered to any there, directed from any person or persons, other then from the Agent here to the Agent there: which letters so by you receiued, you shall not carry with you, without you be licenced so to doe by the Agent here, and some of the foure merchants, as is aforesayd: and such others as doe passe, hauing receiued any priuie letters to be deliuered, you shall all that in you lieth, let the deliuerie of them at your arriuing in Russia: and also if you haue or doe receiue, or shal know any other that doth or hath receiued any goods or readie money to bee imploied in Russia, or to be deliuered there to any person or persons from any person or persons, other then such as be the companies goods, and that vnder their marke, you shall before the shippe doeth depart, declare the same truely to the said Agent, and to some of the other merchants to him adioyned, as it is before declared.

4 Also when the ship is ready to depart, and hath the master and the whole company aboord, you shall diligently foresee and take heede, that there passe not any priuie person or persons, other then such as be authorized to passe in the said ship, without the licence & warrant of one of ỹ Gouernours and of the assistants, for the same his passage, to be first shewed. And if there bee any such person or persons that is to passe and will passe without shewing the same warrant, you shall let the passage of any such to the vttermost of your power: And for that there may no such priuy person passe vnder the cloke and colour of some mariner, you shall vpon the waying of your ships anker, call the master and the mariners within boord by their names and that by your bookes, to the ende that you may see that you haue neither more nor lesse, but iust the number for the voyage.

5 Also you must haue in remembraunce, that if it shall chaunce the ship to bee put into any harbour in this coast by contrary windes or otherwise in making the voyage, to send word thereof from time to time as the case shall require, by your letters in this maner. To master I. B. Agent for the company of the New trades in S. in London: If you doe hier any to bring your letters, write that which he must haue for the portage. And for your better knowledge and learning, you shall do very well to keepe a daily note of the voiage both outwards and homewards.

6 And principally see that you forget not daily in all the voiage both morning and euening, to call the company within boord to prayer, in which doing you shall please God, and the voiage shall haue the better successe thereby, and the company prosper the better.

7 Also in calme weather and at other times when you shall fortune to come to anker in the seas during the voiage, you shall for the companies profit, and for good husbanding of the victuals aboord, call vpon the Boateswaine and other of the company to vse such hookes and other engines as they haue aboord to take fish with, that such fish so taken may bee eaten for the cause aforesayd: and if there bee no such engines aboord, then to prouide some before you goe from hence.

8 And when God shall send you in safetie into the Baie of S. Nicholas at an anker, you shall goe a shore with the first boate that shall depart from the ship, taking with you such letters as you haue to deliuer to the Agent there: and if he bee not there at your comming a land, then send the companies letters to Colmogro to him by some sure mariner or otherwise, as the master and you shall thinke best: but goe not your selfe at any hand, nor yet from aboord the ship, vnlesse it bee a shore to treate with the Agent for the lading of the ship that you be appointed in, which you shall applie diligently to haue done so speedily as may bee. And for the discharging of the goods therein in the Baie, to bee caried from thence, see that you doe looke well to the vnlading thereof, that there bee none other goods sent a shore then the companies, and according to the notes entered in your booke as aforesayd: if there bee, enquire diligently for whom they bee, and what goods they be, noting who is the receiuer of the sayd goods, in such sort that the company may haue the true knowledge thereof at your comming home.

9 All

9. Alſo there a ſhoare, and likewiſe aboord, you ſhall ſpie, and ſearch as ſecretly as you may, to learne and knowe what bargaining, buying, and ſelling there is, with the Maſter, and the mariners of the ſhippe, and the Ruſſes, or with the companies ſeruants there: and that which you ſhall perceaue and learne, you ſhall keepe a note thereof in your booke, ſecretly to your ſelfe, which you ſhall open, and diſcloſe at your comming home, to the Gouernours, and the Aſſiſtants, in ſuch ſorte, as the truth of their ſecret trades, and occuppyings may be reueiled, and knowen. You ſhall need alwaies to haue Argos eies, to ſpie their ſecret packing and conueyance, as well on land, as aboord the ſhippe, of and for ſuch furres, and other commodities, as priuely they doe vſe to buy, packe, and conuey hither. If you will be vigilant, and ſecrete in this article, you can not muſſe to ſpie their priuie packing one with another, either on ſhoare, or aboord the ſhippe: worke herein wiſely, and you ſhall deſerue great thanks of the whole companie.

10. Alſo at the lading againe of the ſhippe, you ſhall continue and abide aboord, to the ende that you may note and write in your booke, all ſuch goods and marchandize, as ſhall be brought and laden, which you ſhall orderly note in all ſortes as heretofore, as in the ſecond article partly it is touched: and in any wiſe, put the Maſter and the companie in remembrance, to looke and foreſee ſubſtantially, to the roomaging of the ſhippe, by faire meanes or threats, as you ſhall ſee and thinke will ſerue for the beſt.

11. Thus when the ſhippe is fully laden againe, and all things aboord in good order, and that you doe fortune to goe a ſhoare to the Agent for your letters, and diſpatch away: you ſhal demand whether all the goods be laden that were brought thither, and to know the truth thereof, you ſhall repaire to the companies ſtorehouſe there, at S. Nicholas, to ſee if there be any goods left, in the ſaid ſtorehouſe: if there be, you ſhall demand why they be not laden, and to note what kind of goods they be, that be ſo left: and ſeeing any of the ſhippes there, not fully laden, you ſhall put the Agent in remembrance to lade thoſe goods ſo left, if any ſuch be to be laden, as is aforeſaide. And thus God ſending you a faire wind, to make ſpeede and away.

12. Finally, when God ſhall ſende you to arriue againe vpon this coaſt in ſafetie, either at Harewhich, or els where, goe not you a land, if you may poſſible, to the ende, that when you be gone a ſhoare, there may no goods be ſent priuily ſhoare to be ſolde, or els to be ſolde aboord the ſhippe, in your abſence, but keepe you ſtill aboord, if you can by any meanes, for the cauſes aforeſaid, and write the companie a letter from the ſhippe of your good arriuall, which you may conuey to them by land, by ſome boy or marriner of the ſhippe, or otherwiſe as you ſhall thinke beſt: and likewiſe when God ſhall ſend you and the ſhippe, into the riuer here, doe not in any wiſe depart out of the ſhippe that you be in, vntill the companie doe ſend ſome other aboord the ſhippe, in your ſteede and place, to keepe the ſaid ſhippe in your abſence.

The Nauigation and diſcouerie toward the Riuer of Ob, made by Maſter Stephen Burrowe, Maſter of the Pinneſſe called the Serchethrift, with diuers things worth the noting, paſſed in the yeere, 1556.

WE departed from Ratliffe to Blackewall, the 23. of Aprill, Saturday being S. Markes day, we departed from Blackewall to Grays. Aprill 25.

The 27. being Munday, the right Worſhipfull Sebaſtian Cabota, came aboord our Pinneſſe at Grauеſende, accompanied with diuers Gentlemen, and Gentlewomen, who after that they had viewed our Pinneſſe, and taſted of ſuch cheere as we could make them aboord, they went on ſhoare, giuing to our Mariners right liberall rewardes: and the good olde Gentleman, Maſter Cabota, gaue to the poore moſt liberall almes, wiſhing them to pray for the good fortune, and proſperous ſucceſſe of the Serchethirſte, our Pinneſſe. And then at the ſigne of the Chriſtopher, he and his friends banketted, and made me, and them that were in my companie, great cheere: and for very ioy that he had to ſee the towardnes of our intended diſcouerie, he entred into the dance himſelfe, amongſt the reſt of the young and luſtie companie: which being ended, he, and his friends departed moſt gently, commending vs to the gouernance of Almightie God. 27

Tueſday we rode ſtill at Grauеſende, making proviſion for ſuch things as we wanted. 28

Wenſday in the morning, we departed from Grauеſende, the wind being at South weſt, and that night we came to an anker thwart of our Lavie of Hollands. 29

Thurſday at three of the clocke in the morning, we waied, and by eight of the clocke, we were at an anker in Orwell wannes, and then incontinent I went aboord the Edward Bonauenture, 30

where

where the Worshipfull companie of Marchants appointed me to be, vntill the said good shippe Note. arriued at Wardhouse. Then I returned againe into the pinnesse.

Maye.

1 Friday being the first day of May, at 4. of the clocke in the morning, the wind being at South east, and by East, we waied, and went into Orwell hauen.

2 Saturday at fiue of the clocke in the morning, the winde being at South, and by West, we went into the Wands, but at two of the clocke at afternoone, the wind shifted, and came vp at East and by North, and began to blow a good gale: and at foure of the clocke, we waied, and went againe into Harewich.

4 Munday at three a clocke in the morning, we came againe out of Harewich, the wind being at West Northwest, and by eight of the clocke, we were thwart of Orfordnesse, and then the winde shifted, and came at South southeast: and at two of the clocke, we were thwart of Sowlde, and there we tooke in our sailes, and staied for the pinnesse vntil foure of the clocke, which pinnesse we sent thither the third day, to fetch certaine men, and necessaries for the Philip and Marie, and then we set off Northeast, vntil fiue of the clocke: at the same time Yarmouth steeple was off vs West Northwest, eight leagues, and then we set our course North.

5 From that vntil Tuesday fiue a clocke in the morning, North 18. leagues. From that vntill a South sunne North, and by West the latitude being 54. degrees and a halfe, the wind being at this present at South[illegible] and by West.

6 From that vntil Wednesday fiue of the clocke in the morning, North, and by West: and at this present fiue a clocke the wind shifted, and came at West northwest: we had the latitude this day, in
The variation of the compas. 55. degrees, 14. minuts: the variation of the compasse, from North to East almost 13. degrees.

7 From that vnto a west sunne, fiue leagues northeast: and at this present the wind shifted to the northeast.

From that vntill Thursday fiue a clocke in the morning, 5. leagues northwest, and by north.

From that vntill a south sunne, three leagues northwest: we sounded at this present, and had 45. fadome, and small mingled white and blacke sand, and some mathes like Hering bones. We had the latitude this day at noone, in 55. degrees, 23. minuts.

From that vntill a west sunne, north, fiue leagues.

8 From that vntill Friday, a southest sunne, East ten leagues, the wind at north a stiffe gale.

9 From that vntill Saturday, a northeast sunne, fiue leagues southwest, and then we cast about to the Northward, the wind being at West, and by north.

From that vntill a southwest sunne, northeast, and by north, eight leagues, and then the winde shifted to the northwards.

From that vntill a west sunne, two leagues East, and by north.

10 From that vntill Sunday three of the clocke in the morning, fiue leagues East, and by north, the wind at northwest.

11 From that vntill Munday, an East sunne, southeast, and by South, 13. leagues and a halfe.

From that vnto a south southwest sunne, three leagues south southwest, and then the winde shifted, and came at west, and by north.

From that vntill a west sunne, north northwest.

12 From that vntill Tuesday in the morning, three of the clocke, north northwest, 25. leagues, and then north and by west.

From that vnto a south sunne north, and by west, 14. leagues, and then it waxed thicke, and the wind came at the northwest, and by west.

From that vntill a northwest sunne, East northeast, and halfe a point to the Northwards, fiue leagues scant.

13 From that vntill Wensday, a south sunne northeast, and by East, and then we were in 57. degrees, 57. minuts.

From that vnto a Northwest sunne, East northeast, foure leagues.

14 From that vntill the 14. day, a south sunne, three leagues and a halfe, East northeast, and then we cast about, the wind being at northeast,

15 This Friday we were within 7. leagues of the shoare, on the coast of Norway: the latitude a south sunne, 58. degrees and a halfe, where we saw three sailes, beside our owne companie: and thus we followed the shoare of land, which lieth north northwest, north, and by west, and northwest and by north, as it doth appeare by the plat.

Sette

Saturday at an Eaſt ſunne, we came to S. Dunſtans Iſland, which Iſland I ſo named. It was of vs Eaſt, two leagues and a halfe, the wind being at Southeaſt: the latitude this day at a ſouth ſunne, 59. degrees, 42. minutes. Alſo the high round mountaine bare Eaſt of vs, at a South ſunne: and when this hill is Eaſt of you, and being bound to the Northward, the land lieth North, and halfe a point Weſterly, from this ſaide South ſunne, vnto a North ſunne twentie leagues Northnorthweſt alongſt the ſhoare. S. Dunſtans Iſland. 16

Upon Sunday at ſixe of the clocke in the morning, the fartheſt land that we could ſee that lay Northnorthweſt, was Eaſt of vs three leagues, and then it trended to the Northwards, and to the Eaſtwards of the North, which head land I iudge to be Scowtſneſſe. At ſeuen of the clocke, we changed our courſe, and went North, the winde being at Southſoutheaſt, and it waxed very thicke and miſtie, and when it cleered, we went Northnortheaſt. At a South ſunne we loſt ſight of the Serchethrift, becauſe of the miſte, making our way North. And when we loſt ſight of the ſhoare, and pinneſſe, we were within two leagues and a halfe of the ſhoare: the laſt land that we ſawe, when this miſte came vpon vs, which is to the Northwards of Scowtſneſſe, lay Northnortheaſt, and Southſouthweſt, and we made our way North, vntill a Weſt ſunne fiue leagues. 17

From that vntil Munday three a clocke in the morning, ten leagues Northnortheaſt: and then we went North, and by Eaſt, becauſe the winde came at the Weſt Southweſt with thicke myſte: the latitude this day at a South ſunne ſixtie three degrees and a halfe truely taken: at this ſeaſon we had ſight of our Pinneſſe againe. 18

From that vntill Tewsday a South ſunne North northeaſt, fourtie foure leagues, and then Northeaſt. From a South ſunne vntill eight of the clocke, fifteene leagues Northeaſt. 19

From that vntill Wednesday, a South ſunne North northeaſt, except the firſt watch Northeaſt: then had we the latitude in ſixtie ſeuen degrees, thirtie nine minutes. Frō that vnto a Northweſt ſunne, eighteene leagues Northeaſt, and then we were within two leagues of the ſhore, and ſaw the high land to the Southwardes of Lowfoote breake out through the miſte, and then wee went North and by Eaſt. 20

From the ſayd Northweſt ſunne vntill foure of the clocke in the morning North, and by Eaſt, ten leagues and a halfe: and then Northnortheaſt vntill a South ſunne, the Latitude being ſixtie nine degrees, and a halfe. From that vntill halfe an houre paſt ſeuen of the clocke, Northnortheaſt, eleuen leagues and a halfe, and then wee went Northeaſt, ten leagues. From that, three leagues and a halfe, Eaſt Northeaſt, and then wee ſawe the lande through the cloudes and haze thwarte on the broade ſide of vs, the winde being then at the South ſouthweſt. 21 22

From that vntill Saturday, at eight of the clocke in the morning, Eaſt Northeaſt, and to the Northwardes fourtie eight leagues, and then the winde came vp at North, we being aboorde the ſhore, and thwart of the Chappel, which I ſuppoſe is called Kedilwike: then we caſt the ſhippes head to the Seawardes, becauſe the winde was very ſcant: and then I cauſed the Pinneſſe to beare in with the ſhore, to ſee whether ſhe might finde an harborough for the ſhips or not, and that ſhe found and ſawe two roaders ride in the ſounde: and alſo they ſawe houſes. But notwithſtanding, God be praiſed, the winde enlarged vpon vs, that we had not occaſion to goe into the harborough: and then the Pinneſſe bare her Myſſen maſt ouer boorde with flagge and all, and loſt the flagge: with the maſt there fell two men ouer boorde, but God be praiſed, they were ſaued: the flagge was a token, whereby wee might vnderſtand whether there were a good harbour there or not. 23 Kedelwike Chappell.

At a North ſunne the North cape (which I ſo named the firſt voyage) was thwart of vs, which is nine leagues to the Eaſtwards of the foreſayd Chappell from the Eaſtermoſt poynt of it. The North cape ſo named by Steuen Borough.

Iune.

The ſunday we weyed in Corpus Chriſti Bay, at a Northeaſt and by Eaſt ſunne: the Bay is almoſt halfe a league deepe: the head lande which is Corpus Chriſti poynt, lyeth Southeaſt, and by Eaſt, one league from the head of the Baye, where we had a great tyde, like a race ouer the flood: the Bay is at the leaſt two leagues ouer: ſo doe I imagine from the faire foreſande to Corpus Chriſti point tenne leagues Southeaſt, and by Eaſt: It floweth in this Baye, at a South and by Weſt moone full ſea. From that we weyed vntill ſeuen a clocke at afternoone twentie leagues Southeaſt, and by South: and then we tooke in all our ſayles, becauſe it was then verie myſtie, and alſo we met with much yce, that ranne out of the Baye, and then we went South Southeaſt with our foreſayle: at eight of the clocke, we heard a piece of ordinance, which was out of the Edward, which bade vs farewell, and then we ſhot off another piece, and bade her farewell. The ſeuenth.

fare well: we could not one see the other, because of the thicke mist: at a Northwest sunne, it began somewhat to cleere, and then we sawe a head land, and the shoare trended to the Southest ward, which I iudged to be about Crosse Island: it was of vs at a noyth northwest sunne, but southwest.

8 From this noyth northwest sunne, vntill Sunday, we went Southeast, and this morning we came at anker among the shoales that lie off, of point Looke out, E northeast, and by East sunne, the wind being at East southeast. At this point Looke out, a south Moone maketh a full sea. Cape good fortune lieth from the Isle of Crosses southeast, and betweene them is tenne leagues: point Looke out, lieth from Cape Good fortune, East southeast, and betweene them are six leagues. S. Edmonds point lieth from point Lookeout East southeast, and halfe a point to the southwards, and betweene them are sixe leagues. There is betweene these two points, a Bay that is halfe a league deepe, and is full of shoales, and dangers. At a southeast sunne we waied, and turned to the windwards, the winde being at East southeast: and at a southeast sunne, we came to an anker, being then a full sea, in fiue fadoms and a halfe water. It lieth at this place where we roade, and also at point Lookeout, foure fadome water. At a West noyth west sunne

9 we waied, and driued to the windewards, vntill Tuesday, a noyth noytheast sunne, and then being a high water, we came to an anker open of the riuer Colaye, in eight fadome water. Cape S. Bernarde lieth from S. Edmonds point, southeast, and by south, and betwixt them are six leagues, and also betwixt them is the Riuer Colaye, into which Riuer wee went this morning.

10 Wensday we roade still in the said Riuer, the winde being at noyth: we sent our skiffe a lande to be dressed: the latitude of the mouth of the Riuer Cola, is sixtie fiue degrees, foytie and eight minuts.

The latitude of Colaye.

11 Thursday at 6 of the clocke in the morning, there came aboord of vs one of the Russe Lodias, rowing with twentie oares, and there were foure and twentie men in her. The Master of the boate presented me with a great loafe of bread, and sixe ringes of bread, which they call Colaches, and foure dried pikes, and a pecke of fine oatemeale, and I gaue vnto the Master of the boate, a combe, and a small glasse: and he declared vnto me, that he was bound to Pechora, and after that, I made them to drinke, the tide being somewhat broken, they gently departed. The Masters name was Pheother.

A Russe Lodia.

Whereas the tenth day, I sent our pinnesse on shoare to be mended, because she was leake, and weake, with the Carpenter, and three men more to helpe him, the weather chanced so, that it was Sunday, before they could get aboord our shippe. All that time they were without prouision of victuals, but onely a litle bread, which they spent by Thursday at night, thinking to haue come aboord when they had listed, but wind and weather denied them: insomuch that they were faine to eate gralle, and such weedes, as they could finde then aboue grounde, but fresh water they had plentie, but the meate with some of them could scant frame by reason of their queasie stomackes.

14 From Thursday at afternoone, vntill Sunday in the morning, our barke did ride such a roade sted, that it was to be maruelled, without the helpe of God, howe she was able to abide it.

In the bight of the southeast shoare of the riuer Cola, there is a good roade in fiue fadome, & foure fadome and a halfe, at a lowe water: but you shall haue no lande noyth Noytheast of you then. I prooued with our pinnesse, that the depth goeth on the southeast shoare.

18 Thursday we waied our ankers in the Riuer Cola, and went into the Sea seuen or eight leagues, where we mette with the winde farre noytherly, that of force it constrained vs to goe againe backe into the saide Riuer, where came aboord of vs sundry of their boates, which declared vnto me that they were also bound to the noythwards, a fishing for Noyse, and Salmon, and gaue me liberally of their white and wheaten bread.

Lodias hauing 24. men a peece.

As we roade in this riuer, we sawe daily comming downe the riuer many of their Lodias, and they that had least, had foure and twentie men in them, and at the last they grewe to three saile of them: and amongst the rest, there was one of them whose name was Gabriel, who shewed me very much friendshippe, and he declared vnto me, that all they were bound to Pechora, a fishing for Salmons, and Noyses: insomuch that hee shewed mee by demonstrations, that with a faire winde wee had seuen or eight daies sailing to the Riuer Pechora, so that I was glad of their companye. This Gabriel promised to giue mee warning of shoales, as hee did in deede.

From Colaye to Pechora is but 7. or 8. daies sailing.

21 Sunday being the one and twentieth day, Gabriel gaue me a barrell of meede, and one of his speciall speciall friends gaue me a barrell of beere, which was carryed vpon mens backs, at least two miles.

Sunday we departed from the riuer Cola, with all the rest of the said Lodias, but sailing before the winde, they were all too good for vs: but according to promise, this Gabriel and his friend did often strike their sailes, and tarryed for vs forsaking their owne company. 22 The curtesie of one Gabriel.

Tuesday at an Eastnortheast sunne we were thwart of Cape S. John. It is to be vnderstood, that from the Cape S. John vnto the riuer or bay that goeth to Pezen, it is all sunke land, and full of shoales and dangers, you shall haue scant two fathom water, and see no land. And this present day we came to an anker thwart off a creeke, which is 4 or 5 leagues to the Northwards of the said Cape, into which creeke Gabriel and his fellow rowed, but we could not get in: and before night there were aboue 20 saile that went into the said creeke, the winde being at the Northeast. We had indifferent good landfang. 23 A good & necessary note.

This afternoone Gabriel came aboord with his skiffe, and then I rewarded him for the good company that he kept with vs ouer the shoales with two small yuory combes, and a steele glasse, with two or three trifles more, for which he was not vngratefull. But notwithstanding, his first company had gotten further to the Northwards.

Wednesday being Midsummer day, we sent our skiffe a land to sound the creeke, where they found it almost drie at a low water. And all the Lodias within were on ground. 24

Although the harborough were euill, yet the stormy similitude of Northerly windes tempted vs to set our sailes, and we let slip a cable and an anker, and bare with the harborough, for it was then neere a high water: and as alwayes in such iournyes varieties do chance, when we came vpon the barre in the entrance of the creeke, the winde did shrinke so suddenly vpon vs, that we were not able to lead it in, and before we could haue flatted the shippe before the winde, we should haue beene on ground on the lee shore, so that we were constrained to let fall an anker vnder our sailes, and rode in a very breach, thinking to haue warpt in. Gabriel came out with his skiffe, and so did sundry others also, shewing their good will to helpe vs, but all to no purpose, for they were likely to haue beene drowned for their labor, in so much that I desired Gabriel to lend me his anker, because our owne ankers were too bigge for our skiffe to lay out, who sent me his owne, and borrowed another also and sent it vs. Then we layd out one of those ankers, with a hawser which he had of 140 fathom long, thinking to haue warpt in, but it would not be: for as we shoted vpon the said warpe the anker came home, so that we were faine to beare the end of the warpe, that we rushed in vpon the other small anker that Gabriel sent aboord, and layd that anker to seawards: and then betweene these two ankers we trauersed the shippes head to seawards, and set our foresaile and maine saile, and when the barke had way, we cut the hawser, and so gat the sea to our friend, and tryed out all that day with our maine coyle.

The Thursday we went roome with Cape S. John, where we found indifferent good rode for a Northnortheast wind, and for a need, for a North and by West winde. 25

Friday at afternoone we weyed, and departed from thence, the wether being meetly faire, & the winde at Eastsoutheast, and plyed for the place where we left our cable and anker, and our hawser: & as soone as we were at an anker, the foresaid Gabriel came aboord of vs, with three or foure more of their small boats, and brought with them of their Aquauitæ and meade, professing vnto me very much friendship, and reioyced to see vs againe, declaring that they earnestly thought that we had beene lost. This Gabriel declared vnto me, that they had saued both the ankers and our hawser, and after we had thus communed, I caused 4 or 5 of them to goe into my cabbin, where I gaue them figs, and made them such cheere as I could. While I was thus banketing of them, there came another of their skiffes aboord, with one who was a Kerill, whose name afterwards I learned, & that he dwelt in Colmogro, and Gabriel dwelled in the towne of Colay, which is not far from the riuers mouth. This foresaid Kerill said vnto me that one of the ankers which I borowed was his, I gaue him thanks for the lone of it, thinking it had beene sufficient. And as I continued in one accustomed maner, that if the present which they brought were worth interteinment, they had it accordingly, he brought nothing with him, & therfore I regarded him but little. And thus we ended, and they tooke their leaue and went a shore. At their comming a shore, Gabriel and Kerill were at vnconuenient words, and by the eares, as I vnderstand: the cause was because the one had better interteinment then the other: but you shall vnderstand that Gabriel was not able to make his party good, because there were 17 lodias of Kerils company who tooke his part, and but 2 of Gabriels company. 26

The next high water Gabriel and his company departed from thence, and rowed to their former company and neighbors, which were in number 28 of them at the least, and all of them belonging to the riuer Colay. Twentie eight lodias belonging to Cola.

And as I vnderstood, Kerill made reckoning that ỳ hawser which was fast in his anker should 27 haue haue beene his owne, and at first would not deliuer it to our boat, insomuch that I sent him word that I would complaine vpon him, wherupon he deliuered the hawser to my company.

The next day being Saturday, I sent our boat on shore to fetch fresh water and wood, and at their comming on shore this Kerill welcomed our men most gently, and also banketed them: and in the meane time caused some of his men to fill our baricoes with water, and to helpe our men to beare wood into their boat: and then he put on his best silke coate, and his coller of pearles, and came aboord againe, and brought his present with him: and thus hauing more respect vnto his present then to his person, because I perceiued him to be vaineglorious, I badde him welcome, and gaue him a dish of figges: and then he declared vnto me that his father was a gentleman, and that he was able to shew me pleasure, and not Gabriel, who was but a priests sonne.

28 After their departure from vs, we weyed, and plyed all the ebbe to the winde wards, the winde being Northerly, & towards night it waxed very stormy, so that of force we were constrayned to go roome with Cape S. John againe, in which storme we lost our skiffe at our sterne, that we bought at Wardhouse, and there we rode vntill the fourth of July. The latitude of Cape S. John is 66 degrees 50 minuts. And it is to be noted, that the land of Cape S. John is of height from the full sea marke, as I iudge 10 fathoms, being cleane without any trees growing, & also without stones or rocks, and consists onely of blacke earth, which is so rotten, that if any of it fall into the sea, it will swimme as though it were a piece of wood. In which place, about three leagues from the shore you shall not haue aboue 9 fadom water, and clay ground.

The latitude of Cape S. John 66 degrees 50 minuts.

Earth swimming aboue water like wood.

Iulie.

4 Saturday at a Northnorthwest sunne, the winde came at Eastnortheast, & then we weyed, and plyed to the Northwards, and as we were two leagues shot past the Cape, we saw a house standing in a valley, which is dainty to be seene in those parts, and by and by I saw three men on the top of the hill. Then I iudged them, as it afterwards prooued, that they were men which came from some other place to set traps to take vermin for their furres, which trappes we did perceiue very thicke longst the shore as we went.

5 Sunday at an East sunne we were thwart off the creeke where the Russes lay, and there came to an anker, and perceiuing the most part of the Lodias to be gone, we thought it not good to ly any longer there, but weyed, and spent all the ebbe, plying to the windewards.

6 Munday at a South sunne it was high water. All alongst the coast it floweth little, onely a South moone makes a full sea: annd as we were a weying we espied the Russe Lodias, which we first lost. They came out of a creeke amongst the sandy hilles, which hilles beginne 15 leagues Noorthnortheast from Cape S. John.

7 Plying this ebbe to an end, we came to an anker 6 leagues Northnortheast from the place where we saw the Russes come out: and there the Russes harboured themselues within a sounke banke, but there was not water enough for vs.

At a North sunne we weyed, and plyed to the Northwards, the land lying Northnortheast, and Southsouthwest, vntill a South sunne, and then we were in the latitude of 68 degrees & a halfe: and in this latitude ende those sandy hilles, and the land beginneth to lie North and by West, South and by East, and Northnorthwest, and to the Westwards, and there the water beginneth to ware deepe.

The latitude 68 degrees and a halfe.

At a Northwest sunne, we came to an anker within halfe a league of the shore, where we had good plenty of fish, both haddocks and cods, riding in 10 fathom water.

8 Wednesday we weyed, and plyed neerer the head land, which is called Caninoz, the winde being at East and by North.

9 Thursday the winde being skant we turned to windewards the ebbe, to get about Caninoz: the latitude this day at noone was 68 degrees 40 minuts.

10 Friday we turned to the windeward of the ebbe, but to no purpose: and as we rode at an anker, we saw the similitude of a storme rising at Northnorthwest, and could not tell where to get rode nor succor for that winde, and harborough we knew none: and that land which we rode vnder with the winde was a lee shore. And as I was musing what was best to be done, I saw a saile come out of a creeke vnder the the foresaid Caninoz, which was my friend Gabriel, who forsooke his harborough and company, and came as neere vs as he might, and pointed vs to the Eastwards, and then we weyed, and followed him, and went East and by South, the winde being at Westnorthwest, and very misty.

11 Saturday we went East southeast & followed Gabriel, and he brought vs into an harborough called called Wolgiouets, which is 30 leagues from Cammoz, and we had vpon the barre going in two fa- Wolgiouets an harboz.

dome and a fourth part: and after we were past in ouer the barre, it waxed deeper, for we had 5 fathoms, 4 and a halfe, and 3 fathom, &c. our barke being moued, I sent some of our men to shoare to prouide wood, where they had plenty of dryft wood, but none growing: and in this place we Dryft wood.
found plenty of yoong fowle, as gulles, seapies, and others, whereof the Rusles would eat none, whereof we were nothing sorry, for there came the more to our part.

Sunday our men cut wood on shoare, and brought it aboord, and we balasted our shippe with 12 stones.

This morning Gabriel saw a smoke on the way who rowed vnto it with his skiffe, which smoke was two leagues from the place where we road: and at a Northwest sunne he came aboord againe, and brought with him a Samoyd, which was but a yong man: his apparell was then strange vn- A Samoyd.
to vs, and he presented me with three yoong wilde geese, and one yoong barnacle.

Munday I sent a man to the maine in Gabriels boat, and he brought vs a boord eight barricoes 13 of fresh water: the latitude of the said Wolgiouets is sixtie eight degrees and a tierse. It floweth there at a Southsouthwest moone full sea, and hyeth two fadome and a halfe water.

At a Westnorthwest sunne we departed from this place, and went East 25 leagues, and then 14 saw an Iland North and by West of vs eight leagues, which Iland is called Dolgoiene: and Dolgoiens an long. This sand seemeth to be it whereupon Charles Jackman perished.

Wednesday at a North and by East sunne, Swetinoze was South of vs 5 leagues.

This day at afternoone we went in ouer the dangerous barre of Pechora, and had vpon the Pechora.
barre but one fathom water. 15

Thursday we road still. 16

Friday I went on shoare, and obserued the variation of the compasse, which was three de- 17 minuts.

From two or three leagues to the Eastward of Swetinos, vntil the entring of the riuer Pechora, it is all sandy hilles, and towards Pechora the sandy hilles are very low.

It highweth on the barre of Pechora foure foot water, and it floweth there at a Southwest moone a full sea.

Munday at a North and by East sunne, we weyed, and came out ouer the sayd dangerous 20 barre, where we had but fiue foot water, insomuch that we found a foot lesse water comming out then we did going in. I thinke the reason was, because when we went in, the winde was off the sea, which caused the sandes to breake on either side of vs, and we kept in the smoothest betweene the breaches, which we durst not haue done, except we had seene the Rusles to haue gone in before vs: and at our comming out the winde was off the shoare, and fayre wether, and then the sands did not appeare with breaches as at our going in: we thanke God, that our shippe did draw so little water.

When we were a seaboord the barre, the winde scanted vpon vs, and was at Eastsoutheast, in- 21
somuch that we stopped the ebbes, and plyed all the flouds to the windewards, and made our way Eastnortheast.

Tuesday at a Northwest sunne we thought that we had seene land at East, or East & by North of vs: which afterwards prooued to be a monstrous heape of yce.

Within a little more then halfe an houre after we first saw this yce, we were inclosed within Yce.
it before we were aware of it, which was a fearefull sight to see: for, for the space of fiue houres, it was as much as we could do to keepe our shippe aloofe from one heape of yce, and beare roomer from another, with as much winde as we might beare a coarse. And when we had past from the danger of this yce, we lay to the Eastwards close by the winde.

The next day we were againe troubled with the yce. 22

Thursday being calme, we plyed to the windwards, the winde being Northerly. We had the 23 latitude this day at noone in 70 degrees 11 minuts. The latitude 70 degrees. 11 minuts.

We had not runne past two houres Northwest, the winde being at Northnortheast and Northeast and by North a good gale, but we met againe with another heape of yce: we wethered the head of it, and lay a time to the seawards, and made way West 6 leagues.

Friday at a Southeast sunne, we cast about to the Eastwards, the winde being at Northnorth- 24 east: the latitude this day at noone was 70 degrees 15 minuts.

On S. Iames his day bolting to the windewards, we had the latitude at noone in seuentie de- 25 grees twentie minuts. The same day at a Southwest sunne, there was a monstrous Whale aboord of vs, so neere to our side that we might haue thrust a sword or any other weapon in him, which we durst not doe for feare he should haue ouerthrowen our shippe: and then I called my company together, and all of vs shouted, and with the cry that we made he departed from vs: there was as much aboue water of his backe as the breedth of our pinnesse, and at his falling downe, he made such a terrible noyse in the water, that a man would greatly haue marueiled, except he had knowne the cause of it: but, God be thanked, we were quietly deliuered of him. And a little after we spyed certaine Ilands, with which we bare, and found good harbor in 15 or 18 fathom, and blacke oze: we came to an anker at a Northeast sunne, & named the Iland S. James his Iland, where we found fresh water.

S. James Iland.

26 Sunday, much winde blowing, we rode still.

27 Munday I went on shoare, and tooke the latitude, which was 70 degrees 42 minuts: the variation of the compasse was 7 degrees and a halfe from the North to the West.

The variation of the compas 7 degrees and a halfe.

Tuesday we plyed to the Westwards alongst the shoare, the winde being at Northwest, and as I was about to come to anker, we saw a saile comming about the point, whereunder we thought to haue ankered. Then I sent a skiffe aboord of him, and at their comming aboord, they made acquaintance of them, and the chiefe man said he had beene in our company in the riuer Colay, and also declared vnto them, that we were past the way which should bring vs to the Ob. This land, said he, is called Noua Zembla, that is to say, the New land: and then he came aboord himselfe with his skiffe, and at his comming aboord he tolde me the like, and said further, that in this Noua Zembla is the highest mountaine in the world, as he thought, and that Camen Bolshay, which is on the maine of Pechora, is not to be compared to this mountaine, but I saw it not: he made me also certaine demonstrations of the way to the Ob, and seemed to make haste on his owne way, being very lothe to tary, because the yeere was farre past, and his neighbour had set Pechora, and not he: so I gaue him a steele glasse, two pewter spoones, and a paire of veluet shorted knives: and then he seemed somewhat the more willing to tary, and shewed me as much as he knew in our purpose: he also gaue me 17 wilde geese, and shewed me that foure of their lodias were driuen perforce from Cannoze to this Noua Zembla. This mans name was Loshake.

The relation of Loshake. The way to the riuer of Obbe. A mightie hill in Noua Zembla. Loshake.

29 Wednesday, as we plyed to the Eastwards, wee espyed another saile, which was one of this Loshaks company, and we bare roome, and spake with him, who in like sort tolde vs of the Ob, as the other had done.

30 Thursday, we plyed to the Eastwards, the winde being at Eastnortheast.

31 Friday, the gale of winde began to increase, and came Westerly withall, so that by a South west sunne we were at an anker among the Ilands of Vaigats, where we saw two small lodias, the one of them came aboord of vs, and presented me with a great loafe of bread: and they tolde me that they were all of Colmogro, except one man that dwelt at Pechora, who seemed to be the chiefest among them in killing of the morse.

The Ilands of Vaigats.

There were some of their company on shore, which did chase a white beare ouer the high cliffe into the water, which beare, the lodia that was aboord of vs, killed in our sight.

This day there was a great gale of winde at North, and we saw so much yce driuing a seaboord, that it was then no going to sea.

August.

1 Saturday I went a shore, and there I saw three morses, that they had killed: they held one teeth of a morse, which was not great, at a roble, and one white beare skinne at three robles and two roubles: they further tolde me, that there were people called Samoyds on the great Iland, and that they would not abide them nor vs, who haue no houses, but only couerings made of deere skinnes, set ouer them with stakes: they are men expert in shooting, and haue great plenty of deere.

Samoyds.

This night there fell a cruell storme, the winde being at West.

2 Sunday we had very much winde, with plenty of snow, and we rode with two ankers a head.

3 Munday we weyed and went roome with another Iland, which was fiue leagues Eastnorth east from vs: and there I met againe with Loshake, and went on shore with him, and he brought me to a heape of the Samoyds idols, which were in number about 300, the worst, and the most artificiall worke that euer I saw: the eyes and mouthes of sundry of them were bloudy, they had the shape of men, women, and children, very grossly wrought, & that which they had made for other parts, was also sprinkled with bloud. Some of their idols were an olde sticke with two or three notches, made with a knife, in it. I saw much of the footing of the said Samoyds, and of the sleds that they ride in. There was one of their sleds broken, and lay by the heape of idols, and there I saw a deere skinne which the fowles had spoyled: and before certaine of their idols blocks were made as

as high as their mouthes, being all bloudy, I thought that to be the table whereon they offered their sacrifice: I saw also the instruments, whereupon they had roasted flesh, and as farre as I could perceiue, they make their fire directly vnder the spit.

Lohake being there present, tolde me that these Samoyds were not so hurtfull as they of Ob are, and that they haue no houses, as in deed I saw none, but onely tents made of deere skinnes, which they vnderproppe with stakes and poles: theyr boats are made of deere skinnes, and when they come on shoare they cary theyr boates with them vpon their backes: for theyr carriages they haue no other beastes to serue them, but deere onely. As for bread and corne they haue none, except the Rusles bring it to them: their knowledge is very base, for they know no letter. The Samoids of the Ob, very hurtfull and shrewd people.

Tuesday we turned for the harborough where Lohaks barke lay, whereas before we road vnder an Iland. And there he came aboord of vs, and said vnto me: if God send winde and weather to serue, I will goe to the Ob with you, because the moyses were skant at these Ilandes of Vaigats: but if he could not get to the riuer of Ob, then he said he would goe to the riuer of Narmezay, where the people were not altogether so sauage as the Samoyds of the Ob are: he shewed me that they will shoote at all men to the vttermost of their power, that can not speake theyr speech. 4

Wednesday we saw a terrible heape of yce approch neere vnto vs, and therefore we thought good with all speed possible to depart from thence, and so I returned to the Westwards againe, to the Iland where we were the 31 of July. 5

Thursday I went a shoare, and tooke the latitude, which was 70 degrees 25 minuts: and the variation of the compasse was 8 degrees from the North to the West. 6 The latitude. The variation of the compas.

Lohake and the two small Lodias of Pechora departed from this Iland, while I was on shoare taking the latitude, and went to the Southwards: I maruelled why he departed so suddenly, and went ouer the shoales amongst the Ilands where it was impossible for vs to follow them. But after I perceiued them to be wearher wise.

Friday we road still, the winde being at Northnortheast, with a cruell storme. The yce came in so abundantly about vs at both ends of the Iland that we road vnder, that it was a fearefull sight to behold: the storme continued with snow, raine, and haile plenty. 7

Saturday we road still also, the storme being somewhat abated, but it was altogether misty, that we were not able to see a cables length about vs, the winde being at Northeast and by East. 8

Sunday at foure of the clocke in the morning we departed from this Iland, the winde being at Southeast and as we were cleere a sea boord the small Ilandes and shoales, it came so thicke with mistes, that we could not see a base shotte from vs. Then we tooke in all our sailes to make little way. 9

At a Southeast sunne it wared cleere, and then we set our sayles, and lay close by the winde to the Southwards alongst the Ilands of Vaigats. At a West sunne we tooke in our sayle againe because of the great mist and raine. We sounded at this place, and had fiue and twenty fathoms water, and soft blacke oze, being three leagues from the shoare, the winde being at South and by East, but still misty.

Munday at an East sunne we sounded, and had 40 fathoms, and oze, still misty: at noone we sounded againe, and had 36 fathom, still misty. 10

Tuesday at an Eastnortheast sunne, we let fall our anker, in three and twenty fadome, the mist still continuing. 11

Wednesday at three of the clocke in the morning the mist brake vp, the winde being at Northeast & by East, and then we saw part of the Ilands of Vaigats, which we bare withall, and went Eastsoutheast close by the winde: at a West sunne we were at an anker vnder the Southwest part of the said Vaigats, and then I sent our skiffe to shoare with three men in her, to see if they might speake with any of the Samoyds, but could not: all that day was rainie, but not windie. 12

Thursday the winde came Westerly, so that we were faine to seeke vs another place to ride in, because the winde came a seaboord land, and although it were misty, yet we followed the shoare by our lead: and as we brought land in the winde of vs, we let fall our anker. At a West sunne the mist brake vp, so that we might see about vs, and then we might perceiue that we were entred into a sound. 13

This afternoone we tooke in two or three skiffes lading of stones to balast our shippe withall. It hath heere foure foot water, and floweth by fits, vncertaine to be iudged.

Friday we road still in the sound, the winde at Southwest, with very much raine, and at the end of the raine it wared againe misty. 14 The vncertaintie of ebbing & flowing.

15 Saturday there was much winde at West, and much raine, and then againe mistie.

16 Sunday was very misty, and much winde.

17 Munday very misty, the winde at Westnorthwest.

18 Tuesday was also misty, except at noone: then the sunne brake out through the mist, so that we had the latitude in 70 degrees 10 minuts: the afternoone was misty againe, the winde being at Westnorthwest.

19 Wednesday at three of the clocke afternoone the mist brake vp, and the winde came at Eastnorth east, and then we weyed, and went South & by East, vntill seuen of the clocke, eight leagues, thinking to haue had sight of the sandy hilles that are to the Eastwards of the riuer Pechora. At a North west sonne we tooke in our maine saile, because the winde increased, and went with fore saile West-northwest, the winde being at Eastnortheast: at night there grew so terrible a stourme, that we saw not the like, although we had indured many stormes since we came out of England. It was woonderfull that our barke was able to brooke such monstrous and terrible seas, without the great helpe of God, who neuer faileth them at need, that put their sure trust in him.

20 Thursday at a Southsouthwest sunne, thanks be to God, the storme was at the highest, & then the winde began to slake, and came Northerly withall, and then I reckoned the Westermost point of the riuer Pechora to be South of vs 15 leagues. At a Westsouthwest sunne we set our maine saile, and lay close by the winde, the winde being at Northwest and by North, making but little way, because the billow went so high: at midnight we cast about, and the shippe caped North northeast, making little way.

They were within 15 leagues of Pechora.

21 Friday at noone we had the latitude in 70 degrees 8 minuts, and we sounded, and had 29 fathoms sand, and in maner stremp ground. At a West sunne we cast about to the Westwards, and a little after the winde came vp at West.

23 Saturday was calme: the latitude this day at noone was 70 degrees and a tierce, we sounded heere, and had nine and fortie fathoms and oze, which oze signified that we drew towards Noua Zembla.

They returne the 22 of August.

And thus we being out of all hope to discouer any more to the Easterward this yere, we thought it best to returne, and that for three causes.

The first, the continuall Northeast and Northerly windes, which haue more power after a man is past to the Eastwardes of Caninoz, then in any place that I doe know in these Northerly regions.

Second, because of the great & terrible abundance of yce, which we saw with our eyes, and no doubt greater store abideth in those parts: I aduentured already somewhat too farre in it, but I thanke God for my safe deliuerance from it.

Third, because the nights waxed darke, and the winter began to draw on with his stormes: and therefore I resolued to take the first best winde that God should send, & plie towards the bay of S. Nicholas, and to see if we might do any good there, if God would permit it.

This present Saturday we saw very much yce, and were within two or three leagues of it: it shewed vnto vs as though it had beene a firme land as farre as we might see from Northwest of vs to the Eastwards: and this afternoone the Lord sent vs a little gale of winde at South, so that we bare cleere off the Westermost part of it, thanks be to God. And then against night it waxed calme againe, and the winde was at Southwest: we made our way vntill Sunday noone North west and by West, and then we had the latitude in 70 degrees and a halfe, the winde at South west: there was a billow, so that we could not discerne to take the latitude exactly, but by a reasonable gesse.

25 Munday there was a very gale of winde at South, so that we went West and by South, the latitude this day at noone was 70 degrees 10 minuts: we had little winde all day: at a Westnorthwest sunne we sounded, and had 29 fathoms, blacke sandy oze, & then we were North east 5 leagues from the Northeast part of the Island Colgoiue.

26 Tuesday, the winde all Westerly, we plied to the winde wards.

27 Wednesday, the winde was also Westerly, and calme: we had the latitude this day in 70 degrees 10 minuts, we being within 3 leagues of the North part of the Island Colgoiue.

28 Thursday, we went roome about the Westermost part of the Island, seeking where we might finde a place to ride in for a Northwest winde, but could finde none, and then we cast about againe the seawards, and the winde came at Westsouthwest, and this morning we had plenty of snow.

29 Friday, the winde being at Southwest and by West, we plyed to the windeward.

Saturday, the winde being at South, we plyed to the Westwards, and at afternoone the mist brake vp, and then we might see the land seuen or eight leagues to the Eastwards of Caninoz

it

we ſounded a little before and had 35. fadomes and oze. And a while after we ſounded againe, and had 19. fadome and ſand: then wee were within 3. leagues and a halfe of the ſhore, and towards night there came downe ſo much wind, that we were faine to lying our ſhip a trie, and laid her head to the Weſtwards.

Sunday, the winde became more calme, and then it waxed very miſtie: At noone wee caſt about to the Eaſtwards, the wind being at South, and ranne eight howers on that boord, and then we caſt about and caped Weſt ſouthweſt: we ſounded and had 32. fathomes, and tough oaze like clay. 30

Munday we doubled about Cannoze, and came at an anker there, to the intent that wee might kill ſome fiſh if God would permit it, and there we gate a great Nuſe, which Nuſes were there ſo plentie, that they would ſcarcely ſuffer any other fiſh to come neere the hookes: the ſaid Nuſes caried away ſundry of our hookes and leads. 31

A little after at a Weſt Sunne, the winde began to blow ſtormie at Weſt ſouthweſt, ſo that we were faine to weie and forſake our fiſhing ground, and went cloſe by the wind Southweſt and Southweſt and by Weſt, making our way South ſouthweſt.

September.

Tewsday at a Weſt Sunne, we ſounded and had 20. fathoms, and broken Wilkefels: I reckoned Cannoze to be 24. leagues Northnortheaſt from vs. 1

The eleuenth day we arriued at Colmogro, and there wee Wintered, expecting the approch of the next Sommer to proceed farther in our intended Diſcouerie for the Ob: which (by reaſon of our imploiments to Wardhouſe the next Spring for the ſearch of ſome Engliſh ſhips) was not accordingly performed. 11

A diſcourſe of the honourable receiuing into England of the firſt Ambaſſador from the Emperor of Ruſſia, in the yeere of Chriſt, 1556. and in the third yeere of the raigne of Queene Mary, ſeruing for the third voiage to Moſcouie. Regiſtred by M. Iohn Incent Protonotarie.

HEre is here recorded by writing and autenticall teſtimonie, partly for memorie of things done, and partly for the veritie to be known to poſteritie in time to come, that whereas the moſt high and mightie Euan Vaſiliuich Emperor of all Ruſſia, great duke of Volidemer, Moſcouia, and Nouogrode, Emperor of Caſſan, and of Aſtrachan, lord of Piskie, and great duke of Smolenskie, Tuerskie, Yowgoriskie, Permiskie, Viatskie, Boligarskie, and Sibieriskie, Emperor and great duke of many others, as Nouogrode in the nether countries, Charnogoskie, Rizanskie, Volodſkie, Rezewskie, Bielskie, Roſtoskie, Yeraſlaueskie, Bialazarskie, Woodarskie, Opdorskie, Condinskie, and many other countries, and lord ouer all thoſe partes, in the yeere of our Lord God, enſuing the account of the Latin church, 1556. ſent by the ſea from the port of S. Nicholas in Ruſſia, his right honorable ambaſſador ſirnamed Oſep Napea, his high officer in the towne and countrey of Vologda, to the moſt famous and excellent princes, Philip and Mary by the grace of God, king and Queene of England, Spaine, France and Ireland, defenders of the faith, Archdukes of Auſtria, dukes of Burgundie, Millaine & Brabant, counties of Haſpurge, Flanders and Tyroll, his ambaſſador and Orator with certaine letters trulerly conceiued, together with certain preſents and gifts mentioned in the foote of this memorial, as a manifeſt argument and token of a mutual amitie and friendſhip to be made and continued betweene their maieſties and ſubiects reſpectiuely, for the commoditie and benefit of both the realmes and people: which Orator was the 20. day of July, imbarked and ſhipped, in, and vpon a good Engliſh ſhip named the Edward Bonauenture, belõging to the Gouernour, Conſuls and company of Engliſh merchants, Richard Chanceler being grand Pilot, and Iohn Buckland maſter of the ſaid ſhip. In which was laden at the aduenture of the foreſaid Ambaſſador, and merchants at ſeuerall accounts, goods and merchandizes, viz. in ware, trane oile, tallow, furres, felts, yarne and ſuch like, to the ſumme of 20000. li. ſterling, together with 16. Ruſſies attendant vpon the perſon of the ſaid Ambaſſador. Ouer and aboue ten other Ruſſies ſhipped within the ſaid Baie of S. Nicholas, in one other good ſhip to the ſaid company alſo belonging called the Bona Speranza, with goods of the ſaid Orators and merchants to the value of 6000. li. ſterling, as by the inuiſes and letters of lading of the ſaid ſeueral ſhips (whereunto relation is to be had) particularly appeareth. Which good ſhips comming in good order into the ſeas, & trauerſing Foure ſhips.

the same in their iourney towards the coast of England, were by contrary windes and extreme tempests of weather seuered the one from the other, that is to say, the said Bona Speranza with two other English ships also appertaining to the said company, the one surnamed the Philip and Mary, the other the Confidentia, were driuen on the coast of Norway into Drenton water, where the sayd Confidentia was seene to perish on a Rocke, and the other, videlicet, the Bona Speranza, with her whole company, being to the number of foure and twentie persons setting to Winter there, whereof no certaintie at this present day is knowen. The third, videlicet, the Philip and Mary, arriued in the Thames nigh London the eighteene day of Aprill, in the yeere of our Lord, one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and seuen. The Edward Bonauenture trauersing the Seas foure moneths, finally the tenth day of Nouember of the aforesayd yeere of our Lorde, one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and sixe, arriued within the Scottish coast in a Baie named Pettislego, where by outragious tempests and extreme stormes, the sayd ship being beaten from her ground tackles, was driuen vpon the Rockes on shore, where she brake and split in peeces, in such sorte, as the grand Pilot vsing all carefulnesse for the safetie of the bodie of the sayde Ambassadour and his traine, taking the boate of the sayd ship, trusting to attaine the shore, and so to saue and preserue the body, and seuen of the companie or attendaunts of the sayde Ambassadour, the same boate by rigorous waues of the Seas, was by darke night ouerwhelmed and drowned, wherein perished not onely the bodie of the said grand Pilot, with seuen Russies, but also diuers of the Mariners of the sayd ship: the noble personage of the sayde Ambassadour with a few others (by Gods preseruation and speciall fauour) onely with much difficultie saued. In which Shipwracke not onely the sayde ship was broken, but also the whole masse and bodie of the goods laden in her, was by the rude and rauenous people of the countrey thereunto adioyning, rifled, spoyled, and caried away, to the manifest losse and vtter destruction of all the lading of the sayd ship, and together with the ship, apparell, ordinaunce and furniture belonging to the company, in value of one thousand pounds, of all which was not restored towards the costes and charges to the summe of 500. li. sterling.

The Edward Bonauenture arriued in Scotland, in the Baie of Pettislego, Nouember 7. 1556.

Rich. Chancelor drowned.

As soone as by letters addressed to the sayd companie, and in London deliuered the first of December last past, it was to them certainely knowen of the losse of their Pilote, men, goods and ship, the same merchaunts with all celeritie and expedition, obteined not onely the Queenes maiesties most gracious and fauourable letters to the Ladie Dowager, and lordes of the counsell of Scotland for the gentle comfortment and entertainment of the sayde Ambassadour, his traine and companie, with preseruation and restitution of his goods, as in such miserable cases, to Christian pitie, princely honour and meere Iustice appertaineth, but also addressed two Gentlemen of good learning, grauitie, and estimation, videlicet, Master Lawrence Hussie doctor of the Ciuile lawe, and George Gilpin with mony, and other requisites into the Realme of Scotland, to comforte, ayde, assist, and relieue him and his there, and also to conduct the Ambassadour into England, sending with them by poste a Talmach or Speachman for the better furniture of the seruice of the sayde Ambassadour, trusting thereby to haue the more ample and speedie redresse of restitution: which personages vsing diligence, arriued at Edenborough (where the Queenes court was) the three and twentieth day of the sayde moneth of December, who first visiting the sayd Ambassadour, declaring the causes of their comming and Commission, shewing the letters addressed in his fauour, the order giuen them for his solace and furniture of all such things as hee would haue, together with their daily and readie seruice to attend vpon his person and affaires, repaired consequently vnto the Dowager Queene, deliuering the letters.

Whereupon, they receiued gentle answeres, with hope and comfort of speedie restitution of the goods, apparell, iewels and letters: for the more apparance whereof, the Queene sent first certaine Commissioners with an Harold of Armes to Pettislego, the place of the Shipwracke, commaunding by Proclamation and other Edictes, all such persons (no degree excepted) as had any part of such goods as were spoyled and taken out or from the Ship, to bring them in, and to restore the same with such further order as her grace by aduise of her counsell thought expedient: by reason whereof, not without great labours, paynes and charges (after long time) diuers small parcels of Ware, and other small trifling things of no value, were by the poore sort of the Scottes brought to the Commissioners, but the Iewels, rich apparell, presents, gold, siluer, costly furres, and such like, were conueied away, concealed and vtterly embezelled. Whereupon, the Queene at the request of the sayd Ambassadour, caused diuers persons to the number of 180. or moe, to be called personally before her princely presence, to answer to the said spoile, & really to exhibite and bring in all such things as were spoiled and violently taken, & caried out of the same, whereof not onely good testimonie by writing was shewed, but also the things themselues found in the hands of the Scottish subiects, who by subtile and craftie dealings, by conniuence of the commissioners, so vsed (or rather abused) themselues towards the same Ambassador and his attendants, that no effectuall restitution was made: but he fatigated with daily attendaunce and charges, the 14. day of February next ensuing, distrusting any reall and effectuall rendring of the sayd goods and merchandizes and other the premisses, vpon leaue obtained of the sayd Queene, departed towards England, hauing attending vpon him the said two English gentlemen and others (leauing neuertheless in Scotland three Englishmen to pursue the deliuerie of such things as were collected to haue bene sent by ship to him into England: which being in Aprill next, and not before imbarked for London, was not at this present day here arriued) came the 18. day of February to Barwike, within the dominion and Realme of England, where he was by the Queenes maiesties letters and commaundement, honourably receiued, vsed and intertained by the right honourable lord Wharton, lord Warden of the East marches, with goodly conducting from place to place, as the daily iourneis done ordinarily did lie, in such order, maner and forme, as to a personage of such estate appertaineth: he prosecuting his voiage vntill the 27. of February, approched the citie of London within twelue English miles, where hee was receiued with foure score merchants with chaines of gold and goodly apparell, as well in order of men seruants in one vniforme liuerie, as also in, and vpon good horses and geldings, who conducting him to a merchaunts house foure miles from London, receiued there a quantitie of golde, veluet and silke, with all furniture thereunto requisite, wherewith he made him a riding garment, reposing himselfe that night. The next day being Saturday and the last day of February, he was by the merchants aduenturing for Russia, to the number of one hundred and foxtie persons, and so many or more seruaunts in one liuerie as aboue said, conducted towards the Citie of London, where by the way hee had not onely the hunting of the Fox and such like sport shewed him, but also by the Queenes maiesties commaundement was receiued and embraced by the right honourable Viscount Montague, sent by her grace for his intertainment: hee being accompanied with diuers lustie knights, esquiers, gentlemen and yeomen to the number of three hundred horses, led him to the North partes of the Citie of London, where by foure notable merchaunts rich apparelled, was presented to him a right faire and large gelding richly trapped, together with a footecloth of Orient crimosin veluet, enriched with gold laces, all furnished in most glorious fashion, of the present, and gift of the sayde merchaunts: whereupon, the Ambassadour at instant desire, mounted, riding on the way towardes Smithfield barres, the first limites of the liberties of the Citie of London. The lord Maior accompanied with all the Aldermen in their skarlet did receiue him, and so riding through the Citie of London in the middle betweene the sayd lord Maior and Viscount Montague, a great number of merchants and notable personages riding before, and a large troupe of seruaunts and apprentises following, was conducted through the Citie of London (with great admiration and plausibilitie of the people running plentifully on all sides, and replenishing all streetes in such sort as no man without difficultie might passe) into his lodging situate in Fant church streete, where were prouided for him two chambers richly hanged and decked, ouer and aboue the gallant furniture of the whole house, together with an ample and rich cupboord of plate of all sortes, to furnish and serue him at all meales, and other seruices during his abode in London, which was, as is vnderwritten, vntill the third day of May: during which time, daily, diuers Aldermen and the graue personages of the sayd companie, did visite him, prouiding all kind of victuals for his table and his seruants, with all sortes of Officers to attend vpon him in good sort and condicion, as to such an Ambassadour of honour doth, and ought to appertaine.

His departure from Scotland towards England.

1557. Feb. 27.

His honourable receiuing into the Citie of London.

It is also to be remembred that at his first entrance into his chamber, there was presented vnto him on the Queenes maiesties behalfe, for a gift and present, and his better furniture in apparell, one rich piece of cloth of tissue, a piece of cloth of golde, another piece of cloth of gold raised with crimosin veluet, a piece of crimosin veluet in graine, a piece of purple veluet, a piece of Damaske purpled, a piece of crimosin damaske, which he most thankfully accepted. In this beautifull lodging refreshing and preparing himselfe and his traine with things requisite, hee abode expecting the kings maiesties repaire out of Flaunders into England, whose highnesse arriuing the one and twentie of March, the same Ambassadour the fiue and twentieth of March, being the Annunciation of our Ladie (the day twelue moneth hee tooke his leaue from the Emperour his master) was most honourably brought to the King and Queenes maiesties court at Westminster, where accompanied first with the sayd Viscount and other notable personages, and the merchants, hee arriuing at Westminster bridge, was there receiued with fiue lordes, conducted into a statly chamber, where by the lords, Chancellor, Treasurer, Priuie seale, Admirall, bishop of Elie and other coun-

counsellers, hee was visited and saluted: and consequently was brought vnto the Kings and Queenes maiesties presence, sitting vnder a stately cloth of honour, the chamber most richly decked and furnished, and most honourably presenced. Where, after that hee had deliuered his letters, made his Oration, giuen two timber of Sables, and the report of the same made both in English and Spanish, in most louing maner embraced, was with much honour and high entertainment, in sight of a great confluence of people, lordes and ladies eftsoones remitted by water to his former lodging, to the which, within two dayes after by assignement of the Kings and Queenes maiesties, repaired, and conferred with him secretely two graue counsellers, that is, the lord bishop of Elie, and Sir William Peter Knight, chiefe Secretarie to their highnesse, who after diuers secret talkes and conference, reported to their highnesse their proceedings, the grauitie, wisedome, and stately behauiour of the sayd Ambassadour, in such sort as was much to their maiesties contentations.

A league and articles of amitie concluded and confirmed vnder the great seale of England.

Finally, concluding vpon such treaties and articles of amitie, as the letters of the Kings and Queenes maiesties most graciously vnder the great seale of England, to him by the said counsellers deliuered, doth appeare.

The foure and twentieth of Aprill, being the feast of S. George, wherein was celebrated the solemnitie of the Noble order of the Garter at Westminster, the same lord Ambassadour was eftsoones required to haue audience: and therefore conducted from the sayd lodging to the court by the right noble the lordes Talbot and Lumley to their maiesties presence (where after his Oration made, and thankes both giuen and receiued) hee most honourably tooke his leaue with commendations to the Emperour. Which being done, hee was with speciall honour ledde into the Chappell, where before the Kings and Queenes maiesties, in sight of the whole Order of the Garter, was prepared for him a stately seate, wherein, hee accompanied with the Duke of Suffolke, the lordes last aboue mentioned, and many other honourable personages, was present at the whole seruice, in ceremonies which were to him most acceptable: the diuine seruice ended, he eftsoones was remitted and reduced to his barge, and so reparred to his lodging, in like order and gratulation of the people vniuersally, as before.

Foure goodly ships of the merchants prouided for Russia, 1557.

The time of the yeere hasting the profection and departure of the Ambassadour, the merchants hauing prepared foure goodly and well trimmed shippes laden with all kindes of merchandizes apte for Russia, the same Ambassadour making prouision for such things as him pleased, the same shippes in good order valed downe the Riuer of Thames, from London to Grauesend, where the same Ambassadour with his trayne and furniture, was imbarked towards his voyage homeward, which God prosper in all felicitie.

It is also to bee remembred, that during the whole abode of the sayde Ambassadour in England, the Agentes of the sayde merchaunts did not onely prosecute and pursue the matter of restitution in Scotland, and caused such things to bee laden in an English shippe hired purposely to conuey the Ambassadours goods to London, there to bee deliuered to him, but also during his abode in London, did both inuite him to the Maior, and diuers worshipfull mens houses, feasting and banketting him right friendly, shewing vnto him the most notable and commendable sightes of London, as the kings palace and house, the Churches of Westminster and Powles, the Tower and Guild hall of London, and such like memorable spectacles. And also the said nine and twentie day of Aprill, the sayd merchaunts assembling themselues together in the house of the Drapers hall of London, exhibited, and gaue vnto the sayde Ambassadour, a notable supper garnished with Musike, Enterludes and bankets: in the which a cup of Wine being drunke to him in the name and liew of the whole companie, it was signified to him that the whole companie with most liberall and friendly hearts, did frankelie giue to him and his, all maner of costes and charges in victuals riding from Scotland to London, during his abode there, and untill setting of saile aboord the ship, requesting him to accept the same in good part, as a testimonie and witnesse of their good hearts, zeale and tenderneste towards him and his countrey.

It is to be considered that of the Bona Speranza, no worde nor knowledge was had at this present day, nor yet of the arriuall of the ships or goods from Scotland.

The third of May the Ambassadour departed from London to Grauesend, accompanied with diuers Aldermen and merchaunts, who in good gard set him aboord the noble ship, the Primrose Admirall to the Fleete, where leaue was taken on both sides and partes after many embracements and diuers farewels not without expressing of teares.

Memorandum, that the first day of May the counsellers, videlicet, the bishop of Elie, and Sir William Peter on the behalfe of the Kings and Queenes maiesties repayring to the lord

ambaſſadour did not onely deliuer vnto him their highneſſe letters of recommendations vnder the great ſeale of England to the Emperour, very tenderly and friendly written, but alſo on their maieſties behalfe, gaue, and deliuered certaine notable preſents to the Emperours perſon, and alſo giftes for the lord Ambaſſadours proper vſe and behoofe, as by the particulars vnder written appeareth, with ſuch further good wordes and commendations, as the more friendly haue not bene heard: whereby it appeareth howe well affected their honours bee to haue and continue amitie and traffique betweene their honours and their ſubiects: which thing as the kings and Queenes maieſties haue ſhewed of their princely munificences and liberalities, ſo haue likewiſe the merchaunts and felowſhip of the Aduenturers, for and to Ruſſia, manifeſted to the world their good wils, mindes and zeales borne to this new commenſed voyage, as by the diſcourſe aboue mentioned, and other the notable actes ouer long to bee recited in this preſent memoriall, doth and may moſt clearely appeare, the like whereof is not in any preſident or hiſtory to be ſhewed.

Forasmuch as it may bee doubted how the Ship named the Edward Bonauenture, receiued ſhipwracke, what became of the goods, how much they were ſpoiled and deteined, how little reſtored, what charges and expenſes enſued, what perſonages were drowned, how the reſt of the Ships either arriued or periſhed, or how the diſpoſition of almightie God hath wrought his pleaſure in them, how the ſame ambaſſadour hath bene after the miſerable caſe of ſhipwracke in Scotland vnreuerently abuſed, and conſequently into England receiued and conducted, there intertained, vſed, honoured, and finally in good ſafetie towards his returne and repaire furniſhed, and with much liberalitie and franke handling friendly diſmiſſed, to the intent that the trueth of the premiſſes may bee to the moſt mightie Emperour of Ruſſia, ſincerely ſignified in eſchewment of all euents and miſfortunes that may chance in this voyage (which God defend) to the Ambaſſadours perſon, traine and goods, this preſent memoriall is written and autentikely made, and by the ſayde Ambaſſadour his ſeruaunts, whoſe names bee vnderwritten, and traine in preſence of the Notarie, and witneſſes vndernamed, recognized, and acknowledged. Giuen the day, moneth, and peere vnderwritten, of which inſtrument into euery of the ſayde Ships, one teſtimoniall is deliuered, and the firſt remayneth with the ſayd compame in London.

The voiage of the foresaid M. Stephen Burrough, An. 1557. from Colmogro to Wardhouse, which was sent to seeke the Bona Esperanza, the Bona Confidentia, & the Philip & Mary, which were not heard of the yeere before.

May.

23 Vpon Sunday the 23. of May, I departed with the Searchshipt from Colmogro, the latitude whereof is 64. degrees, 25. minutes, and the variation of the compasse, 5. degrees, 10. minutes from the North to the East.

26 Wednesday we came to the Island called Pozanka, which Island is within foure leagues of the barre Berozoua, that lieth hert at an East and by South Moone full sea.

29 Saturday in the morning wee departed from Pozanka, and plied to the barre of Berozoua Gooba, whereupon wee came to an anker at a low water, and sounded the sayd Barre with our two Skiffes, and founde in the best vpon the shoaldest of the barre, 13. foote water by the rule. It higheth vpon this barre, in spring streames 3. foote water: and an East moone maketh a full sea vpon this barre.

Sunday in the morning wee departed from the barre of Berozoua, and plied along by the shoalds in fiue fadome, vntill I had sight of S. Nicholas roade, and then wee cast about to the Northwards, and went with a hommocke, which is halfe a mile to the Eastwards of Coya Reca, which hommocke and S. Nicholas abbey lye Southsouthwest, and Northnortheast, and betweene them are 11. leagues. Coia Reca is halfe a mile to the Eastwards of Coscaynos. Coscaynos and the middes of the Island called Mondeustoua ostroue, which is thwart of the barre of Berozoua lieth South, and by East, North and by West, and betweene them are 4. leagues, or as you may say from the Seabooord part of the barre to Coscaynos, are 3. leagues and a halfe. 30. Coia Reca. Coscanos.

Sunday at a Northeast and by East sunne, we were thwart of Coscaynos.

Dogs nose lieth from Coscaynos Northnorthwest, and betweene them are 8. leagues: and Dogs nose sheweth like a Gurnerds head, if you be inwardly on both sides of it: on the low point of Dogs nose there standeth a crosse alone. 31. Dogs nose.

Iune.

From Dogs nose to fore nose, are 3. leagues, North and by West. 1.

The 2. day of June I went on shoare 2. miles to the Northwards of Dogs nose, and had the latitude of that place in 65. degrees, 47. minutes. It floweth a shoare at this place, at an East Moone full sea, and the shippe lay thwart to weyde a flood, in the off at a Southsoutheast moone. So that it is to be vnderstoode, that when it is a full sea on the shoare, it is two points to ebbe, before it be a lowe water in the off. The variation of the Compasse at this place is 4. degrees from the North to the East. 2. The variation of the Compasse 4. degrees.

This day the Northnorthwest winde put vs backe againe with Dogs nose, where a ship may ride thwart of a Salt house, in 4. fadome, or 4. fadome and a halfe of water, and haue Landfange for a North and by West winde: which Salt house is halfe a mile to the Southwardes of Dogs nose. 3.

Friday at a Southsouthwest Sunne, wee departed from this Salt house. It is to bee noted that foure miles to the Northwardes of Dogs nose, there growe no trees on the banke by the water side: and the bankes consist of fullers earth. Ouer the cliffes there growe some trees: so that Dogs nose is the better to be knowen because it is fullers earth, and the like I haue not seene in all that Countrey. 4.

A head of Fore nose a league from the shoare, there are 15. fadome: betwixt Fore nose and Zolatitsa, there are 6. leagues, I meane the Southerly part of Fore nose. Fore nose.

Sunday I sounded the barre of Zolatitsa, which the Russes tolde me was a good harborow, but in the best of it I found but 4. foote water. 6.

Sunday, I had the latitude in 66. degrees, and then was point Pentecost sixe leagues South of vs. 7. Point Pentecost.

Wednesday I went on lande at Crosse Island, and tooke the latitude, which was 66. degrees 24. minutes. 9. Crosse Island.

We being one league Northeast of Crosse Island, I sawe the lande on the Eastside, which I iudged to be Cape good fortune, and it was then East Southeast of vs 9. leagues. Cape good fortune.

Cape grace is 7. leagues and a halfe Northeast from Crosse Island.

There are 2. Islands 5. leagues Northnortheast from Cape grace, the Southermost of them is a litle long Island almost a mile long, and the Northermost a little round Islande, and they are both hard abooord the shoare. Cape grace.

Cape Race is from the Southermost Island North and by West, and betweene them are two leagues, and from that a halfe a league Northnorthwest, there is another point. Betweene which point and Cape Race, the Russes haue a Stanauish or harborow for their Lodias: and to the Westwards of the said point, there is a shoale bay. Cape Race.

Three leagues and a halfe to Northwards of Cape Race, wee had the latitude on the 10. day of this moneth in 67. degrees 10. minutes. Riding within halfe a league of the shoare in this latitude I found it to be a full sea at a North and by East moone. I had where we roade, two and twentie fadome, and the tallow which is taken vp is ful of great broken shels, and some stones withal like vnto small sand coniealed together. 10.

From a South sunne that wee weyed, the winde being at North and by East, wee driued to the windwards halfe the ebbe, with the shippes head to the Eastwards. And then when we cast her head to the Westwards, we sounded, and had 22. fadome broken shels, and gray sand; this present day was very misty, with frost on the shrowds as the miste fell.

Frost in June.

11. Friday in the morning at an East sunne, the miste brake vp a litle, the winde being at North and by West a stiffe gale, our shrowdes and roapes ouer head being couered with frost, and likely to be a storme: I thought it good to seeke an harborow, and so plied roome with the Islands which are two leagues to the Southwards of Cape Race, and within these Islandes (thankes be to God) we found harborow for vs. It higheth at these Islands two fadome water: it floweth in the harborow at this place at a Southsoutheast moone ful sea: and a sea boord it floweth at a South southwest moone a full sea. The Russes call this Island, Tri Ostroue.

Tri Ostroue.

You may come in betweene the little Island and the great Island, and keepe you in the midst of the Sounde, and if you borrowe on any side, let it bee on the greatest Islande, and you shall haue at a lowe water, foure fadome, and three fadome and a halfe, and three fadome, until that you be shot so farre in as the narrowest, which is betweene the Northermost point of the greatest Island, and the Southerne point of the maine which is right against it, and then hale to the Northwards with the crosse which standeth in the maine, and you shall haue at a lowe water 10. fadome water, and faire sande. And if you be disposed to goe through the Sounde to the Southwards, keepe the Northwest shoare aboorde, for on the Island side after you be shotte so farre in as the crosse, it is a shoale of rockes halfe the sound ouer: which rockes doe lasst vnto the Southerly part of the great Island, and rather to the Southwards. And if you be constrained to seeke a harborow for Northerly windes, when you come out of the sea hale in with the Southerly part of the great Island, giuing the Island a faire birth, and as you shoote towardes the maine, you shall finde rode for all Northerly windes, in foure fadome, fiue, sixe and seuen fadome, at a lowe water.

Also within this great Island, (if neede bee) you may haue a good place to ground a shippe in: the great Island is almost a mile long and a quarter of a mile ouer.

16. This storme of Northerly winde lasted vntill the 16. of this moneth, and then the winde came Southerly, but we could not get out for Ice. I went on shoare at the crosse, and tooke the latitude, which is 66. degrees, 58. minutes, 30. seconds: the variation of the Compasse 3. degrees and a halfe from the North to the East.

Ice.

The variation.

17. Thursday being faire weather, and the winde at North, wee plied to the winde-wards with sailes and oares: wee stopped the flood this day three leagues to the Northwards of Cape Race, two miles from the shoare, and had twentie fadome water, faire gray and blacke sande, and broken shels. And when the slake came wee wayed and made aboorde to the shoare-wards, and past within two cables length of the shoare, eighteene fadomes faire gray and blacke sande: a man may finde roade there for a Northwinde, and so to the Westwards.

18. Two leagues to the Southwarde of Corpus Christi point, you may haue Land range into North and by Eastwinde, and from that to the Westwardes in 23. fadome almost a mile from shoare, and faire sande, and amongst the sande little yong small limpets, or such like as growe vpon muscles: and within two cables length and lesse of the shoare, are eighteene fadomes, and the sounding aforesaid, but the yong limpets more plentifull. It was a full sea where we rode, almost a mile from shoare, at a South and by West moone: two leagues to the Southwardes of Corpus Christi point is the vttermost lande, which lande and Cape Race lyeth South and halfe a point to the Westwards, and North and halfe a point to the Eastwards, and betweene them are sixe leagues. Riding this day sixe leagues to the Northwards of Cape Race, the winde at North northwest, with miste and frost, at noone the sunne appeared through the miste, so that I had the latitude in 67. degrees, 29. minutes.

21. Sunday we were thwart of Corpus Christi point, two leagues and a halfe from shoare, another more, where we sounded, and had 36. fadoms, and broken cockle shels, with brannie sande, but the broken shels very thicke.

Corpus Christi point.

22. Tuesday in the morning wee were shotte a head of Cape gallant, which the Russes call Soonoze. And as we were shotte almost halfe a league betwixt it, and Cape comfort, the winde came vp at the Northwest, and after to the Northwardes, so that wee were faine to beare roome to seeke a harbour, where we founde good harbour for all windes, and the least 7. fadome water betweene S. Iohns Islands, and the maine.

Cape Gallant.

After that we came to an ancre, wee tooke the latitude, which was 68. degrees 1. minute, after noone, the winde at North with plentie of snowe.

At a West sunne there came aboorde vs certaine Lappians in a boate, to the number of fourteene persons, and amongst them there were two wenches, and some of the men could speake the

Russe

Ruſſe tongue: I aſked them where their abiding was, and they tolde mee that there was a companie or heard of them, to the nomber of 100. men, beſides women and children, but a litle from vs in the riuer Iekonga.

They tolde me that they had bene to ſeeke meate among the rockes, ſaying, If wee gette no meate, wee eate none. I ſawe them eate rocke weedes as hungerly, as a cowe doeth graſſe when ſhe is hungrie. I ſawe them alſo eate foules egges rawe, and the yong birdes alſo that were in the egges.

25 Friday in the morning we departed from S. Iohns Iland: to the Westwards therof, a mile from the shoare, we sounded, and had 36. fadoms, and oazie sand.

Iuana Creos. Iuana Creos, is from Cape gallant Westnorthwest, and halfe a point to the Northwards, and betweene them is 7. leagues. The point of the Iland, which is Cape comfort, lyeth from Iuana Creos, Northwest and by North, and almost the 3. part of a point to the Westwards, and betweene them are 3. leagues.

S. Georges Iland. The Eastermost of S. Georges Ilands, or 7. Ilands, lyeth from Iuana Creos Northwest, and halfe a point to the Northwards, and betweene them are 14. leagues and a halfe. The easte-

Cape Comfort most of the 7. Ilands, or Cape cõfort lyeth Northwest, and by North, Southeast, and by South.

Under the Southermost Iland you shall finde good roade for all Northerly windes from the Northwest to the Northeast. From the Southeast part of the 7. Ilands, vnto the Northwest part of them, are 3. leagues and a halfe.

S. Peters Ilands. From the Northwest part of the Ilands aforesaide, vnto S. Peters Ilands, are 11. leagues Northwest.

26 S. Peters Ilands rise an indifferent low point, not seeming to be an Iland, and as if it had a castle vpon it.

S. Pauls Iland. S. Pauls Ilands lye from S. Peters Ilands Northwest, and to the Westwardes, and betweene them are 6. leagues. Within these Ilands there is a faire sandie bay, and there may be founde good roade for Northerly windes.

Cape Sower beere. Cape Sower beere lyeth from S. Pauls Ilands Northwest, and by West, and betweene them are 5. leagues.

Kildina. Cape comfort, which is the Iland of Kildina, lyeth from Cape Sower beere, 6. leagues West Northwest, and it is altogether a bay betwene them seeming many Ilands in it.

Cape Bonauenture. From Cape Bonauenture, to Chebe Nauoloche are 10. leagues Northwest, and a litle to the Westwards. Chebe Nauologe is a faire point, whereon standeth a certaine blacke, like an empty butt standing a head.

Kegor. From Chebe Naualoch to Kegor, is 9. leagues and a halfe Northwest, and halfe a point to the Westwards. Kegor riseth as you come from the Eastwards like 2. round homets standing together, and a faire saddle betweene them.

27 It floweth where we road this Sunday to the Eastwards of Kegor, at a Southeast and by East moone, a full sea: we roade in 15. fadome water within halfe a mile of the shoare: at a Northwest Sunne the misle came downe so thicke, that we were faine to come to an ancre within lesse then a mile of the point that turneth to Doms haff, where wee had 33. fadome, and the sounding like to the skurfe of a skalde head.

Domshaff.

Wardhouse. 28 Munday at afternoone, we came into ỹ Sound of Wardhouse, although it were very misle. Then I sent a man a shoare to know some newes, and to see whether they coulde heare any thing of our ‖ shippes.

‖ Which were the Bona Esperanza, the Bona confidentia and the Philip and Marie. Whereof the two first were lost.

29 Tuesday I went on shoare, and dined with the Captaines deputie, who made me great cheere: the Captaine himselfe was not as yet come frõ Bergen: they looked for him euery houre, and they said that he would bring newes with him.

At a Northwest, and by North sunne, we departed from Wardhouse, toward Colmogro.

30 Wednesday we came to Kegor, where we met with the wind at East Southeast, so that we were faine to goe in to a bay to the Westwards of the point Kegor, where a man may moare 20. 3. small ships, that shall not drawe past 11. or 12. foote water, for all windes, an East Southeast winde is the worst. It is a ledge of rocks, that defendeth the Northerly winds frõ the place where they moare. When we came into the bay we saw there a barke which was of ‖ Dronton, and three or foure Norway peaghes, belonging to Northbarne: so when I came a shoare, I met first with the Dutchmen, amongst whome was the Borrow-masters sonne of Dronton, who tolde me that the Philip and Mary wintered at Dronton, and departed from thence for England in March: and withall he shewed me that the Confidence was lost, and that hee had bought her sailes for his shippe. Then the Dutch-men caried mee to their Boothe, and made mee good cheere, where I sawe the Lappians cheapen of the saide Dutchmen, both siluer platters and dishes, spoones, gilt rings, ornament for girdles of siluer and gilt, and certaine things made to hange about the necke, with siluer chaines belonging to them.

The Dutchmen bring hither mightie strong beere, I am certaine that our English double beere would not be liked of the Kerils and Lappians, as long as that would last.

Here I saw the Dutchmen also haue course cloth, both blewe, greene and redde, and sad horse-flesh colour. And hither they bring also Otars cases and fore cases, both blacke and redde: our English fore cases are but counterfaits vnto them.

They would not let me vnderstand any of their prises, but as I otherwise vnderstood, they barred 2. load of siluer for 100. of stockfish, and 2. loade is a doller. And the Dutch men told me, that they had made a notable good yeere this present yeere 1557. They tolde mee that they should be faine to goe to Wardhouse with one lading, and lay it on land there, and so come againe and fetch another. The Borrowmasters sonne told me, that he would go to Amsterdam with his lading of stockfish, who gaue me a barrel of strong beere, and brought in aboorde our shippe himselfe.

After this I went among the Russes and Kerils, who offred me fish to sel, and likewise the Lappians desired me to looke vpon their fish. I made them answere, that I had now no wares nor money to barter with them, and said that I came only to see if I might meete with our English ships. Then they desired me that I would come thither the next yeere: I said vnto them, if I should come the next yeere, I thinke here would not be fish ynough to serue the Dutchmen and vs also. They answered me, that if more ships did resort thither, there would more people labour to kil and make fish: and further they said, that some of them came thither a fishing 8. weekes iourney with Deere, which Deere will trauaile more speedily then horses will.

As I was thus in talke with the Kerils & Lappians, the Emperour of Russia his deputie (who was there together the tribute of the Lappians) sent for me to come to his tent, who after familiar salutations made me good cheere. He demaunded of me, why none of our shippes came thither. I answered him, because we knew not the place before now, neither yet heard of any faire that was kept there. Then said he, if you wil come hither, here would more people resort to kill fish. I thinke it good (said he) that you make a beginning. I tolde him, that by the grace of God the next yeere, one English shippe should come thither.

Because I saw the seruants of the king of Denmarke there also gathering the tribute, I asked Vasille pheothrouiche the Russe deputie, whether the Denmarks would not be a let to vs, if we should come to this Kegor. And he saide, no, they should not: for this lande is my kings, and therefore be bolde to come hither.

The Kerils and the Lappians solde no fish, vntil the said deputie had looked vpon it, and had giuen them leaue to sell. I asked him what wares were best for vs to bring thither, and he saide, siluer, pearles, cloth, blewe, red and greene. Meale, strong beere, wine, pewter, fore cases, and golde.

The Lappians pay tribute to the Emperour of Russia, to the king of Denmarke, and to the king of Sweden. He tolde me that the Riuer Cola is litle more then 20. leagues to the Southwards of Kegor, where we should haue great plentie of salmon, if coyne were any thing cheape in Russia: for then poore men would resort thither to kill salmon.

The Dutchmen tolde me that they had made a good yeere of this, but the Kerils complained of it, because they could not sell all their fish, and that they solde, was as pleased the Dutchmen, and at their owne price. I asked the Kerils at what price they sold their fish to the Russes, and they said good cheape: we sell 24. fishes for 4. altines, I thinke they solde litle aboue 20. pence, the 25. fishes this yeere.

The Dutchmen tolde me that the best stockefish is made at Kegor. I sawe at Vasillees tent 7. or 8. launces, and halfe a dozen of bowes bent, with their budgets of arrowes, and likewise swords with other weapons: Otherwise I sawe no weapons there.

I was also conueyed to their lodgings, which gathered tribute for the king of Denmarke, where I sawe a paire of bilbowes: and I asked whether they were for the Lappians (if neede were,) and they said no, but onely for their owne companie if they should chaunce to be vnruly.

The Kerils and the Lappians are not to be trusted, for they will steale as well as the Russes, if they may conueniently come by any thing.

Concerning my voyage, because the winde was scant to goe backe againe to Colmogro, I tarried to the Eastwards of the point Kegor, and sent to land, and baked two batches of bread, in the ouens that the Kerils haue for their owne prouision.

Instructions giuen to the Masters and Mariners to be obserued in and about this Fleete, passing this yeere 1557. toward the Bay of S. Nicolas in Russia, for this present Raze to be made and returne of the same by Gods grace to the port of London, the place of their right discharge, as in the Articles ensuing is deduced.

FIrst, it is accorded and agreed betweene the seuerall proprietaries and owners, masters and companies of the foure ships, surnamed the Primrose, the Iohn Euangelist, the Anne and the Trinitie, and the Lieutenant, Consuls, assistants and companie of the Marchants aduenturers, that the aboue named foure shippes, shall in good order and conduct, saile, passe, and trauaile together in one fleet, ginge, and conserue of societie, to be kept and indissolubly to be seuered, but vnited within continuall sight, so farrefoorth as (by winde and weather) by possibilitie shall or may be without any separation or departure of one from the other.

2 Item, it is agreed that the good ship named the Primerost, shalbe Admirall of this fleet, and that Anthonie Ienkinson Gentleman, shalbe captaine thereof: and that all other the 3. ships shall ensue and folow her in all courses, and that no course nor waying (in harborough especially) shall be made without the aduice, consent and agreement of the saide Captaine, the Master, his mate, and two other officers of the said shippe, or of three of them at the least.

3 Item, that the said Anthonie is and shalbe reputed & taken for Captaine generall of the said flote together with all such orders, preeminences, priuiledges and preferments as by the order of seas is due and accustomed to a Captaine during his aboade and exercise of the same.

4 It is also ordeined, that if any one or moe of the said 3. shippes shalbe out of sight, either before or behinde the Admirall, that then the rest of the shippes shall tacke or take of their sailes in such sort as they may meete and come together, in as good order as may be, to the intent to keepe the consortment exactly in all points.

5 It is also constituted, that if the ships shalbe seuered by mist or darke weather, in such sort as the one cannot haue sight of the other, then and in such case the Admiral shal make sound and noise by drumme, trumpet, horne, gunne or otherwise or meanes, that the ships may come as nigh together, as by saferie and good order they may.

6 It is also to be obserued, that euery day once the other three shippes shall sende and come aboord the Admirall, and there consult and determine of such matter and things as shall be for the assurance of their Nauigation, and most expedition of the same.

7 Item, that notes & entries be dayly made of their Nauigations put in writing & memorie, and that the yong Mariners and apprentices may be taught & caused to learne and obserue the same.

8 It is accorded that the said Captaine shall haue the principal rule and gouernement of the apprentices: And that not onely they, but also all other the sailers, shalbe attendant and obedient to him, as of duetie and reason appertaineth.

9 Also that no beere nor broth, or other liquor be spilt vpon the balast, or other place of the shippe, whereby any anoyance, stinke, or other vnsauorines shall grow in the shippe to the infection or hurt of the persons in the same.

10 Item, that the Captaine by discretion shall from time to time displace any artificer or English seruingman or apprentice out of the Primerose into any of the other three shippes, and in lieu of him or them, take any such apprentice as he shall thinke conuenient, and most meete to serue the benefite of the companie.

11 Item, that great respect be had to the gunners and cookes roomes, that all danger and perill of powder and fire may be eschewed and auoyded.

12 Item, that singuler care & respect be had to the ports of the ship, as well in Nauigation as in harborow, & especially in lading and vnlading of the ships, that nothing be lacking or surcharged: and that the bookes may oftentimes be conferred & made to agree in eschuement of such falts, as may ensue.

13 Special foresight is to be had, that at the Wardhouse no treacherie, inuasion, or other peril of molestation be done or procured to be attempted to our ships by any kings, princes or companies that do mislike this newe found trade by seas to Russia, or would let and hinder the same, wherein no small boast hath bene made: which giueth occasion of more circumspection and diligence.

14 If the winde & weather wil serue, it is thought good rather to go by the Wardhouse, then to come come in and ancre there, leſt any male engine, or danger may be the rather attempted againſt vs, our goods and ſhippes as aboue.

15. It is thought good that Richard Iohnſon, late ſeruant to M. Chanceler, ſhal be ſent home in this next returne, to inſtruct the companie of the ſtate of the Countrey, and of ſuch queſtions as may be demanded of him, for our better aduertiſements and reſolutions, in ſuch doubts as ſhall ariſe here: and that he ſhall haue the roome of the Captaine in ſuch ſort, as Maſter Ienkinſon is in this preſent cocket aſſigned vnto. And if Iohnſon can not, may not, nor will not returne and occupie the ſaid place, then any other perſon to be preferred thereunto, as by the diſcretion of our ſaid Captaine, with conſent of our Agents, ſhall be thought meete and apt to ſupply the ſame.

16. Prouided alway, that the ſhippes returning, be not diſfurniſhed of one ſuch able man, as ſhall occupie the Captaineſhip in like order, as is, and hath bene in ſuch caſe appointed, as reaſon and good order requireth.

17. Item that all other former orders, rules, and deuiſes, made and prouided for the good order of our ſhippes, wares, and goods, being not repugnant, contrarie or diuerſe, to theſe articles, and the contents of the ſame, ſhall be, and ſtand in ful force and effect, to be in all reſpects obſerued and kept of all and euery perſon, and perſons, whome the ſame doth or ſhall touch or concerne.

In witneſſe of the premiſſes faithfully to be obſerued, and kept, the owners and Maſters of the ſaid foure ſhippes, together with the ſaid Captaine, to theſe ſeuenteene articles, contained in two ſheetes of paper, haue ſubſcribed their hands. The firſt voyage made by Maſter Anthony Ienkinſon, from the Citie of London, toward the land of Ruſſia, begonne the twelfth day of Maye, in the yeere, 1557.

FIrſt by the grace of God, the day and yeere aboue mentioned, I departed from the ſaid Citie, and the ſame day at Grauеſend embarked my ſelfe in a good ſhippe, named the Primeroſe, being appointed, although vnworthy, chiefe captaine of the ſame, and alſo of the other three good ſhippes, to ſay, the Iohn Euangeliſt, the Anne, and the Trinitie, hauing alſo the conduct of the Emperour of Ruſſia, his ambaſſadour, named Oſep Nepea Gregorewich, who paſſed with his companie in the ſaid Primeroſe. And thus our foure tall ſhippes being well appointed, aſwell for men and victuals, as other neceſſarie furniture, the ſaide twelfth day of the moneth of Maye, we weyed our ankers, and departed from the ſaide Grauеſende, in the after noone, and plying downe the Thames, the wind being Eaſterly, and faire weather, the 13. day we came a ground with the Primeroſe, vpon a ſand called the Blacke taile, where we ſate faſt vntill the 14. day in the morning, and then God be praiſed, ſhe came off: and that day we plied downe as farre as our Ladie Holland, and there came to an anker, the wind being Eaſterly, and there remained vntill the 20. day: then we weyed and went out at Goldmore gate, and from thence in at Balſey ſlade, and ſo into Orwel wands, where we came to an anker: but as we came out at the ſaide Goldmore gate, the Trinitie came on ground on certaine rockes, that lye to the Northward of the ſaide gate, and was like to be bilged and loſt. But by the aide of God, at the laſt ſhe came off againe, being very leake: and the 21. day the Primeroſe remaining at an anker in the wands, the other three ſhippes bare into Orwel hauen, where I cauſed the ſaide Trinitie to be grounded, ſearched, and repaired. So we remained in the ſaid hauen, vntill the 28. day: and then the winde being weſterly, the three ſhippes that were in the hauen, weied and came foorth, and in comming foorth, the Iohn Euangelist came on ground vpon a sand, called the Andros, where she remained one tide, and the next full sea she came off againe, without any great hurt, God be praised.

The 29. day in the morning, all foure ships weied in the Wands, and that tide went as farre as Orfordnesse, where we came to an anker, because the wind was northerly: And about six of the clocke at night, the wind vered to the Southwest, and we weyed anker, and bare cleare of the nesse, and then set our course north east, and by north, vntill midnight, being then cleare of Yarmouth sands. Then we winded North and by West, and North northwest, vntill the first of June at noone, then it waxed calme, and continued so, vntill the second day at noone: then the winde came at Northwest, with a tempest, and much raine, and we lay close by, and caped North Northeast, and Northeast, and by North, as the winde shifted, and so continued vntill the third day at noone: then the winde vered Westerly againe, and we went North our right course, and so continued our way vntill the fourth day, at three of the clocke in the afternoone, at which time the winde vered to the Northwest againe, and ble we a fresh gale, and so continued vntill the seuenth day in the morning, we lying with all our shippes close by, and caping to the Northwards: and then the winde vering more Northerly, we were forced to put roomer with the coast of England againe, and fell cuerthwart Newe castel, but went not into the hauen, & so plied vpon the coast the eight day & the ninth.

June.

The tenth day, the winde came to the North Northwest, and we forced to beare roomer with Flamborow head, where we came to an anker, and there remained vntill the seuenteenth day. Then the winde came faire, and we weyed, and set our course North and by East, and so continued the same with a meary winde, vntill the 21. at noone, at which time we tooke the Sunne, and had the latitude in 60. degrees. Then we shifted our course, and went North Northeast, and North east, and by north, vntil the 25. day. Then we discouered certaine Islands, called Heilick Islands, lying from vs northeast, being in the latitude of 66. degrees, 40. minuts. Then we went north and by West, because we would not come too nigh the land, and running that course 4. houres, we discouered, and had sight of Rost Islands, ioyning to the maine land of Finmarke. Here the Sunne continueth in sight aboue the horizon, almost 2. moneths together, day and night. Thus continuing our course along the coast of Norway, and Finland, the 27. day we tooke the Sunne, being as farre shot as Lofoote, and had the latitude in 69. degrees. And the same day in the afternoone, appeared ouer our heads a raine bowe, like a semicircle, with both ends vpward. Note that there is betwen the said Rost Islands, and Lofoote, a whirle poole, called Malestrand, which from halfe ebbe, vntil halfe flood, maketh such a terrible noise, that it shaketh the rings in the doores of the inhabitants houses of the said Islands, ten miles of. Also if there commeth any Whale within the current of the same, they make a pitiful cry. Moreouer, if great trees be caried into it by force of streames, & after with the ebbe be cast out againe, the ends & boughes of them haue bene so beaten, that they are like the stalkes of hempe that is bruised. Note, that all the coast of Finmarke is high mountaines, and hils, being couered all the yeere with snowe. And hard aboord the shoare of this coast, there is 100. or 150. fadoms of water in depth. Thus proceeding and sayling forward, we fell with an Island, called Zenam, being in ỳ latitude of 70. degrees. About this Island, we saw many Whales, very monstrous, about our ships, some by estimation of 60. foote long: and being the ingendring time, they roared and cried terribly. From thence we fel with an Island, called Kettelwicke. This coast from Rost vnto Lofoote, lieth north & south, and from Lofoote to Zenam, northeast & southwest, and from Zenam to Kettelwike, east northeast, & west southwest. From the said Kettelwike we sailed east & by north 10. leagues, & fell with a land, called Inger sound, where we fished, being becalmed, & tooke great plenty of Cods. Thus plying along the coast, we fel with a Cape, called the North Cape, which is the northermost land that we passe in our voyage to S. Nicholas, and is in the latitude of 71. degrees, & 10. minuts, and is from Ingersound East, and to the northwards 15. leagues. And being at this North Cape the 2. day of July, we had the sunne at north 4. degrees aboue the Horizon. The 3. day we came to Wardhouse, hauing such mists that we could not see the land. This Wardhouse is a Castle standing in an Island 2. miles from the maine of Finland, subiect to the king of Denmarke, & the Easternmost land that he hath. There are 2. other Islands neere adioyning vnto that, whereon the Castle of Wardhouse standeth. The inhabitants of those 3. Islands, liue onely by fishing, & make much stockefish, which they dry with frost: their most feeding is fish: bread and drinke they haue none, but such as is brought them from other places. They haue small store of cattell, which are also fed with fishe. From Wardhouse we sailed south southeast ten leagues, & fell with a Cape of land called Kegor, ỳ northermost part of the land of Lappia. And between Wardhouse, & the said Cape, is a great Bay, called Dommes haff, in the south part whereof is a Monasterie of Monkes, of the Russes religion, called Pechinchow. Thus proceeding forwarde, and sailing along the coast of the saide lande of Lappia, winding Southeast, the fourth day,though great miſts and darkenes,we loſt the companie of the other three ſhips, and met not with them againe, vntill the 7. day, when we fell with a Cape or headland, called Suetinoſe, which is the entring into the Bay of S. Nicholas. At this Cape lieth a great ſtone,to the which the barkes that paſſed thereby,were wont to make offrings of butter,meale, and other victuals,thinking that vnleſſe they did ſo,their barkes or veſſels ſhoulde there periſh, as it hath beene oftentimes ſeene: and there it is very darke & miſtie. Note,that the 6.day we paſſed by the place where Sir Hugh Willoughbie,with all his companie periſhed, which is called Arzina reca,that is to ſay,the riuer Arzina. The land of Lappia is an high land,hauing ſnow lying on it commonly all the yeere. The people of the Countrey are halfe Gentiles: they liue in the ſummer time neere the ſea ſide,and vſe to take fiſhe,of the which they make bread, and in the winter they remoue vp into the Countrey into the woods,where they vſe hunting, and kill Deere, Beares, Woolues, Foxes,and other beaſtes,with whoſe fleſh they be nouriſhed,and with their ſkinnes apparelled in ſuch ſtrange faſhion,that there is nothing ſeene of them bare,but their eies. They haue none other habitation,but onely in tents,remouing from place to place, according to the ſeaſon of the yeere. They know no arte nor facultie,but onely ſhooting, which they exerciſe daily, as well men,as women,and kill ſuch beaſts as ſerue them for their foode. Thus proceeding along the coaſt from Suetinoze aforeſaid,the 9. day of July, we came to Cape Grace, being in the latitude of 66. degrees,and 45. minuts,and is at the entring in of the Bay of S. Nicholas. Aboord this land,there is 20. or 30. fadoms water,and ſundry grounds good to anker in. The current at this Cape runneth Southweſt,and Northeaſt. From this Cape we proceeded along, vntill we came to Croſſe Iſland,which is ſeuen leagues from the ſaid Cape Southweſt: and from this Iſland, we ſet ouer to the other ſide of the Baye, and went ſouth ſouthweſt, and fell with an headland,called Forenoſe,which is from the ſaid Iſland 25. leagues. The entring of this Baye from Croſſe Iſland to the neereſt land on the other ſide is ſeuen leagues ouer. From Forenoſe proceeding forward the twelfth day of the ſaid moneth of Julie, all our foure ſhips arriued in ſafetie at the roade of Saint Nicholas, in the land of Ruſſia, where we anchored, and had ſayled from London vnto the ſayde roade ſeuen hundred and fiftie leagues. The Ruſſian Ambaſſadour and his companie with great ioy gotte to ſhore, and our ſhippes here forthwith diſcharged themſelues: and being laden againe,and hauing a faire winde,departed towarde England the firſt of Auguſt. The third of the ſayde moneth I with other of my companie came vnto the citie of Colmogro, being an hundred verſtes from the Bay of Saint Nicholas, and in the latitude of 64. degrees, 25. minutes. I tarried at the ſayd Colmogro vntill the fifteenth day: and then I departed in a little boate vp the great riuer of Dwina, which runneth very ſwiftly, and the ſelfe ſame day paſſed by the mouth of a riuer called Pinego, leauing it on our left hand fifteene verſtes from Colmogro. On both ſides of the mouth of this riuer Pinego is high land,great rockes of Alabaſtre,great woods,and Pyne-apletrees lying along within the ground, which by report haue lyen there ſince Noes flood. And thus proceeding forward the nineteenth day in the morning, I came into a towne called Yemps, an hundred verſtes from Colmogro. All this way along they make much tarre, pitch and aſhes of Aſpen trees. From thence I came to a place called Vſtiug, an ancient citie the laſt day of Auguſt. At this citie meete two riuers: the one called Iug, and the other Sucana, both which fall into the aforeſaid riuer of Dwina. The riuer of Iug hath his ſpring in the land of the Tartars called Cheremizzi,ioyning to the countrey of Permia: and Succana hath his head from a lake not farre from the citie of Vologhda. Thus departing from Vſtiug, & paſſing vp the riuer Succana, we came to a towne called Totma. About this place the water is very ſhallow, and ſtonie, & troubleſome for Barkes and boates of that countrey,which they cal Naſſades,and Doſneckes,to paſſe that way: wherein marchandiſe are tranſported from the aforeſayd Colmogro to the citie of Vologhda. Theſe veſſels called Naſſades,are very long builded,broade made,and cloſe aboue,flatte bottomed,and draw not aboue foure foote water, and will carrie two hundred tunnes: they haue none vpon appertaining to them but all of timber, and when the winde ſerueth,they are made to ſayle. Otherwiſe they haue many men, ſome to hale and draw by the neckes with long ſmall ropes made faſt to the ſaide boates,and ſome set with long poles. There are many of theſe Barks vpon the riuer of Dwina: And the moſt part of them belongeth vnto the citie of Vologhda: for there dwell many marchants, and they occupie the ſayde boates with carrying of ſalt from the ſea ſide vnto the ſayde Vologhda. The twentieth of September I came vnto Vologhda, which is a great citie,and the riuer paſſeth through the middeſt of the ſame. The houſes are builded with wood of Firre trees,ioyned one within another, and round without: the houſes are foure ſquare without any vpon or ſtone worke, couered with birch Barkes, and wood ouer the ſame: Their Churches are all of wood, two for euery pariſh, one to be heated for Winter, and the other for Sommer,

The Lappians couered all ſauing their eyes.

Summer.

On the toppes of their houses they laye much earth, for feare of burning: for they are ofte plagued with fire. This Vologhda is in 59. degrees, 11. minuts, and is from Colmogro, 1000. verstes.

All the way I neuer came in house, but lodged in the wildernesse, by the riuers side, and carried prouision for the way. And he that will trauell those waies, must carry with him an hochet, a tinder boxe, and a kettle, to make fire and seethe meate, when he hath it: for there is small succour in those parts, vnlesse it be in townes.

Good counsel for trauellers.

The first day of December, I departed from Vologhda, in poste in a sled, as the manner is in Winter. And the way to Moscua is as followeth. From Vologhda to Commelski, 27. verstes, so to Olmor 25. verstes, so to Teloytske, 20. verstes, so to Vre 30. verstes, so to Voshansko, 30. verstes, then to Yeraslaue, 30. verstes, which standeth vpon the great riuer Volga, so to Rostow, 50. verstes, then to Rogarin, 30. verstes, so to Peraslaue, 10. verstes, which is a great towne, standing hard by a faire lake. From thence to Dowbnaye, 30. vestes, so to Godoroke, 30. verstes, so to Owchay, 30. verstes, and last to the Musko, 25. verstes, where I arriued the first day of December.

December.

There are 14. posts, called Yannes, betweene Vologhda, and Musko, which are accompted 500. verstes asunder.

The 10. day of December, I was sent for to the Emperours Castle, by the saide Emperour, and deliuered my letters vnto the Secretarie, who talked with me of diuers matters, by the commandement of the Emperour. And after that my letters were translated, I was answered that I was welcome, and that the Emperour would giue me that I desired.

The 25. day, being the day of the natiuitie, I came into the Emperours presence, and kissed his hande, who sate aloft in a goodly chaire of estate, hauing on his heade a crowne most richly deked, and a staffe of golde in his hande, all apparelled with golde, and garnished with pretious stones.

There sate distant from him about two yardes his brother, and next vnto him a boye of twelue yeeres of age, who was inheritor to ỳ Emperour of Casan, conquered by this Emperour 8. yeeres past. Then sate his nobilitie round about him, richly apparelled with golde, and stone. And after I had done obeisance to the Emperour, he with his owne mouth calling me by my name, bade me to dinner, and so I departed to my lodging, till dinner time, which was at sixe of the clocke, by candle light.

The Emperour dined in a faire great Hall, in the middest whereof was a pillar foure square, very artificially made, about which were diuers tables set, and at the vppermost part of the hall, sate the Emperour himselfe, & at his table sate his brother, his Uncles sonne, the Metropolitane, the young Emperour of Casan, and diuers of his noble men, all of one side. There were diuers Ambassadors, & other strangers, as wel Christians, as Heathens, diuersly apparelled, to the number of 600. men, which dined in the said hal, besides 2000. Tartars, men of war, which were newly come to render themselues to the Emperour, and were appointed to serue him in his warres, against the Lyfflanders, but they dined in other hals. I was set at a little table, hauing no stranger with me, directly before the Emperours face. Being thus set, and placed, the Emperour sent me diuers boles of wine, and meade, & many dishes of meat from his owne hand, which were brought me by a Duke, and my table serued all in golde, and siluer, and so likewise on other tables, there were set boles of golde, set with stone, worth by estimation 400. pounds sterling one cup, besides the plate which serued the tables.

There was also a Cupboord of plate, most sumptuous, and rich, which was not vsed: among the which, was a peece of golde, of two yardes long, wrought in the toppe with Towers, and Dragons heades, also diuers barrels of golde, and siluer, with Castles on the bungs, richly, and artificially made. The Emperour, and all the Hall throughout, was serued with Dukes: and when dinner was ended, the Emperour called mee by name, and gaue mee drinke with his owne hande, and so I departed to my lodging.

Note, that when the Emperour drinketh, all the companie stande vp, and at euery time, he drinketh or taketh of a dishe of meate, he blesseth himselfe. Many other things I saw that day, not here noted.

The 4. of Januarie, which was Twelfetide with them, the Emperour, with his brother, and all his Nobles, all most richly apparelled with gold, pearles, pretious stones, & costly furres, with a crowne vpon his head, of the Tartarian fashion, went to the Church in procession, with the Metropolitan, and diuers bishops, and priests. That day I was before the Emperour again, in Russe apparel, and the Emperour asked if that were not I, and his Chancelor answered yea. Then he bad me to dinner: then came he out of the Church, and went with the procession vpon the riuer, being all frozen, and there standing bare headed, with all his Nobles, there was a hole made in the ice, and the Metropolitan hallowed the water with great solemnitie, and seruice, and did cast of the said water vpon the Emperours sonne, and the Nobilitie. That done, the people with great thronging filled pots of the said water, to carry home to their houses, and diuers children were thrown in, and sicke people, and plucked out quickly againe, and diuers Tartars christened: all which the Emperour beheld. Also there were brought the Emperours best horses, to drinke at the said hallowed water. All this being ended, he returned to his pallace againe, and went to dinner by candle light, and sate in a woodden house, very fairely gilt. There dined in the place, aboue 300. strangers, and I sate alone as I did before, directly before the Emperour, and had my meat, bread, and drinke sent me from the Emperour.

The citie of Musko is great, the houses for the most part of wood, and some of stone, with windowes of yron, which serue for summer time. There are many faire Churches of stone, but more of wood, which are made hot in the winter time. The Emperours lodging is in a faire, and large castle, walled foure square of bricke, high, and thicke, situated vpon a hil, two miles about, and the riuer on the Southwest side of it, and it hath 16. gates in the wals, and as many bulwarks. His pallace is separated from the rest of the Castle, by a long wall going north and south, to the riuer side. In his pallace are Churches, some of stone, and some of wood, with round towers, fairely gilded. In the Church doores, and within the Churches, are images of golde: the chiefe markets for all things, are within the saide Castle, and for sundry thinges, sundry markets, and euery science by it selfe. Also in the winter there is a great market without the Castle, vpon the riuer being frozen, and there is sold corne, earthen pots, tubs, sleds, &c. The Castle is in circuite 2900. pases.

The cuntrie is full of marish ground, and plaine, in woods and riuers abundant, but it bringeth forth good plentie of corne. This Emperour is of great power: for he hath conquered much, as well of the Lyfflanders, Poles, Lettos, and Swethens, as also of the Tartars, and Gentiles, called Samoydes, hauing thereby much inlarged his dominions. He keepeth his people in great subiection: all matters passe his iudgement, be they neuer so small. The lawe is sharpe for all offenders.

The Metropolitan dealeth in matters of religion, as himselfe listeth, whome the Emperour greatly honoreth. They vse the ceremonies, and orders of the Greeke Church. They worship many images, painted on tables, and specially the image of S. Nicholas. Their Priests be married, but their wiues being dead, they may not marrie the second time, and so become Monkes, whereof there are a great number in the land.

They haue foure Lents in the yeere, and the weeke before Shrouetide, they call the Butter weeke, &c.

They haue many sortes of meates and drinkes, when they banket, and delight in eating of grosse meates, and stinking fishe. Before they drinke, they vse to blowe in the cup: their greatest friendship is in drinking: they are great talkers, & liers, without any faith or trust in their words, flatterers, and dissemblers. The women be there very obedient to their husbands, and are kept straightly from going abroad, but at some seasons.

At my being there, I heard of men, and women, that drunke away their children, and all their goods, at the Emperours tauerne, and not being able to pay, hauing impawned himselfe, the Tauerner bringeth him out to the high way, and beates him vpon the legges: then they that passe by, knowing the cause, and hauing peraduenture compassion vpon him, giueth the monie, and so he is ransomed.

In euery good towne, there is a drunken Tauerne, called a Cursemay, which the Emperour sometime letteth out to farme, & sometimes bestoweth for a yeere or two on some Duke or Gentleman, in recompence of his seruice: and for that time he is Lord of all the Towne, robbing and spoiling, and doing what pleaseth him: and then he being growen riche, is taken by the Emperour, and sent to the warres againe, where he shall spend all that which he hath gotten by ill meanes: so that the Emperour in his warres is little charged, but all the burden lieth vpon the poore people.

They vse sadles made of wood and sinewes, with the tree gilded & damaske work, and the seate couered with cloth, sometimes of golde, and the rest Saphian leather, well stitched. They vse little stirrops at their sadle bowes, by the sound whereof, their horses vse to runne more swiftly.

The Russe is apparelled in this manner: his vpper garment is of cloth of golde, silke, or cloth, long, downe to the foote, and buttened with great buttons of siluer, or els laces of silke, set on with broches, brooches, the sleeues thereof very long, which he weareth on his arme, ruffed vp. Vnder that he hath another long garment, buttoned with silke buttons, with a high coller standing vp of some colour, and that garment is made straight. Then his shirt is very fine, and wrought with red silke, or some gold, with a coller of pearle. Vnder his shirt he hath linnen breeches, vpon his legges, a paire of hose without feete, & his bootes of red or yellow leather. On his head he weareth a white Colepecke, with buttons of siluer, gold, pearle, or stone, and vnder it a blacke Fore cap, turned vp very broad.

When he rideth on horse backe to the warres, or any iourney, he hath a sword of the Turkish fashion, and his bowe and arrowes of the same manner. In the towne he weareth no weapon, but onely two or three paire of knues, hauing the hafts of the tooth of a fishe, called the Morse.

In the Winter time, the people trauell with sleds, in Towne and Countrey, the way being hard, and smooth with snow: the waters and riuers are all frozen, and one horse with a sled, will draw a man vpon it 400. miles, in three daies: but in the Summer time, the way is deepe with mire, and trauelling is very ill.

The Russe, if he be a man of any abilitie, neuer goeth out of his house in the Winter, but vpon his sled, and in Summer vpon his horse: and in his sled he sits vpon a carpet, or a white Beares skinne: the sled is drawen with a horse well decked, with many Foxes and Woolues tailes at his backe, & is conducted by a litle boy vpon his backe: his seruants stand vpon the taile of the sled, &c.

The voyage, wherein Osepp Napea the Moscouite Ambassadour, returned home into his Countrey with his entertainment at his arriuall, at Colmogro: and a large description of the manners of the Countrey.

The twelfth of Maye, in the yeere of our Lorde, 1567. there departed from Graueseude, foure good shippes well appointed for Marchants, which were presently bound into the Baye of S. Nicholas in Russia, with which shippes was transported, or caried home, one Osepp Gregoriwiche Napea, who was sent Messenger from the Emperour, and Great Duke of Moscouia. The foure shippes were these, whose names followe, viz.

The Primerose Admirall.
The Iohn Euangelist Viceadmirall.
The Anne, and the Trinitie Attendants.

The 13. of July, the foresaide foure shippes came to an anker in the Baye of S. Nicholas, before an Abbey, called the Abbey of S. Nicholas, whereas the saide Messenger, Osepp Gregoriwich Napea, went a shoare, and as many English men as came to serue the Emperour, remained with him at the Abbey, for the space of sixe daies, vntill he had gotten all his things a shore, and laden the same in Barkes, to goe vp the riuer Dwina, vnto Vologhda, which is by water 1000. verstes, and euery verste is about three quarters of an English mile.

The 20. of July, we departed from S. Nicholas, and the 24. of the same, we came to Colmogro, where we remained eight daies: and the saide Messenger was there of all his acquaintance welcommed home, and had presents innumerable sent vnto him, but it was nothing but meate and drinke. Some sent white bread, some rie bread, and some buttered bread and pancakes, beefe, mutton, bacon, egges, butter, fishes, swannes, geese, duckes, hennes, and all manner of victuals, both fishe, and flesh, in the best manner, that the rude people could deuise: for among them, such presents are highly esteemed.

Presents vsed in Russia, are all for the most part of victuals.

The 29. of July, we departed from Colmogro, and the 14. of August we came to Vstioug, where we remained one day, and changed our barkes, or boates.

The 27. of August, wee came to Vologhda, where we remained foure daies, vnlading the barkes, and lading our chestes and things in small waggons, with one horse in a peere, which in their tongue are called Telegos, and with these Telegoes, they caried our stuffe from Vologhda vnto the Musko, which is 500. verstes: and we were vpon the same way 14. daies: for we went no faster then the Teligoes.

There are three great townes betweene the Musko, and Vologhda, that is to say, Yereslaue, Rostaue, & Pereslaua. Vpon one side of Yereslaua, runneth a famous riuer, which is called Volga. It runneth into the Caspian sea, and it deuideth it selfe, before it come into the Mare Caspium, in 50. parts, or more, and neere vnto the same sea, there stands a great Citie, called Boghare, the inhabitants of the which, are called by the same name.

The citie of Boghare.

The people of the saide Citie, doe traffike into the Citie of Musko: their commodities are spices, spices, muske, ambergreese, rubarbe with other drugs. They bring also many furres which they buy in Siberia comming towards the Mosko, the said people are of the sect of Mahomet.

They arriued at Mosco.

The 12. of September we came vnto the citie of Mosko, where we were brought by Napea, and two of the Emperours gentlemen vnto a large house, where euery one of vs had his chamber appointed.

The 14. of September we were commanded to come vnto the Emperour, and immediately after our comming wee were brought into his presence, vnto whom each of vs did his dutie accordingly, and kissed his right hand, his maiestie sitting in his chaire of estate, with his crowne on his head, and a staffe of goldsmiths worke in his left hand well garnished with rich and costly stones, and when we had all kissed his hand and done our duties, his maiestie did declare by his interpreter that we were all welcome vnto him, and into his countrey, and thereupon willed vs to dine with him: that day we gaue thanks vnto his maiestie, and so departed vntill the dinner was ready.

When dinner time approched, we were brought againe into the Emperours dining chamber, where we were set on one side of a table that stood ouer against the Emperours table, to the ende that he might well behold vs all: and when we came into the foresaid chamber, we found there readie set these tables following.

First at the vpper end of one table were set the Emperour his maiestie, his brother, and the Emperour of Cassan, which is prisoner. About two pardes lower sate the Emperour of Cassan his sonne, being a child of fiue yeeres of age, and beneath him sate the most part of the Emperours noble men.

And at another table neere vnto the Emperours table, there was set a monke all alone, which was in all points as well serued as the Emperour. At another table sate another kind of people called Chirkasses, which the Emperor entertaineth for men of warre to serue against his enemies. Of which people and of their countrey, I will hereafter make mention.

All the tables aforesayd were couered onely with salt and bread, and after that we had sitten a while, the Emperour sent vnto euery one of vs a piece of bread, which were giuen, and deliuered vnto euery man seuerally by these words: The Emperour and great Duke giueth thee bread this day, and in like maner three or foure times before dinner was ended, hee sent vnto euery man drinke, which was giuen by these words, The Emperour and great Duke giueth thee to drinke. All the tables aforesaid were serued in vessels of pure and fine golde, as well basons and ewers, platters, dishes and sawcers, as also of great pots, with an innumerable sort of small drinking potes of diuers fashions, whereof a great number were set with stone. As for costly meates I haue many times seene better: but for change of wines, and diuers sortes of meads, it was wonderfull: for there was not left at any time so much voyd roume on the table, that one cuppe more might haue bene set, and as farre as I could perceiue, all the rest were in the like maner serued.

In the dinner time there came in fiue singers which stood in the midst of the chamber, and their faces towards the Emperour, who sang there before dinner was ended three seuerall times, whose songs or voices delighted our eares little or nothing.

The Emperour neuer putteth morsell of meate in his mouth, but he first blesseth it himselfe, and in like maner as often as he drinketh, for after his maner he is very religious, and he esteemeth his religious persons aboue his noble men.

This dinner continued about the space of fiue howers, which being ended, and the tables taken vp, we came into the midst of the chamber, where we did reuerence vnto the Emperours maiestie, and then he deliuered vnto euery one of vs with his owne handes a cup of mead, which when euery man had receiued and drunke a quantitie thereof, we were licenced to depart, and so ended that dinner. And because the Emperour would haue vs to be merry, hee sent to our lodging the same Euening 3. barrels of mead of sundry sortes, of the quantitie in all of one hogshead.

The 16. day of September the Emperour sent home vnto our lodging for euery of vs a Tartarie horse to ride from place to place as we had occasion, for that the streetes of Mosko are very fowle and mirie in the Summer.

M. Standish doctor of Physike.

The 18. of September there were giuen vnto master Standish doctor in Physicke, and the rest of our men of our occupations, certaine furred gownes of branched veluet and golde, and some of red Damaske, of which master Doctors gowne was furred with Sables, and the rest were furred some with white Ermine, and some with gray squirrell, and all faced and edged round about with blacke beauer.

The 1. of October in the morning we were commanded to come vnto ỹ Emperors court, & whē we came thether, we were brought vnto ỹ Emperor vnto whō we did our duties accordingly, whereupon he willed vs to dine with him that day, & so with thanks vnto his maiestie, we departed vntil dinner time, at which time we came and found the tables couered with bread and salt as at the first: and after that we were all set vpon one side of the table, the Emperours maiestie according to his accustomed maner sent vnto euery man of vs a piece of bread by some of the Dukes which attended on his highnesse.

And whereas the 14. of September we were serued in vessels of gold, we were now serued in vessels of siluer, and yet not so abundantly as was the first of gold: they brought drinke vnto the table in siluer boles which contained at the least fiue gallons a piece, and euery man had a small siluer cuppe to drinke in, and another to dip or to take his drinke out of the great boll withall: the dinner being ended, the Emperour gaue vnto euery one of vs a cup with mead, which when we had receiued, we gaue thanks and departed.

Moreouer, whensoeuer the Emperours pleasure is that any stranger shall dine with him, he doth send for them in the morning, and when they come before him, hee with his owne mouth bideth them to dinner, and this order he alwayes obserueth.

The 10. of October the Emperour gaue vnto M. Standish 70. rubbles in money, and to the rest of our men of occupations, 30. rubbles a piece.

The 3. of Nouember we dined againe with the Emperour, where we were serued as before.

The 6. of December being S. Nicholas day, we dined againe at the Emperours, for that is one of the principall feasts which the Moscouites hold: we were serued in siluer vessels, and order in all points as before, and it was past 7. of the clocke at night before dinner was ended.

Long dinners.

The Emperours maiestie visiteth euery peere in the moneth of December, to haue all his ordinance that is in the citie of Mosko caried into the fields which is without the Suburbes of the citie, and there to haue it planted and bent vpon two houses of Wood filled within with earth: against which two houses, there were two faire white markes set vp, at which markes they discharge all their ordinaunce, to the ende the Emperour may see what his Gunners can doe. They haue faire ordinance of brasse of all sortes, bases, faulcons, minions, sakers, culuerings, cannons double and roy all, basiliskes long and large, they haue fiue great pieces whose shot is a yard of height, which shot a man may easily discerne as they flee: they haue also a great many of mortar pieces or potguns, out of which pieces they shoote wild fire.

Ordinance in Russia.

The 12. of December the Emperours maiestie and all his nobilitie came into the field on horsebacke, in most goodly order, hauing very fine Jennets & Turkie horses garnished with gold & siluer abundantly. The Emperours maiestie hauing on him a gowne of rich tissue, & a cap of skarlet on his head, set not only with pearles, but also with a great number of rich and costly stones, his noble men were all in gownes of cloth of gold, which did ride before him in good order by 3. & 3. and before them there went 5000. harquebuzzers, which went by 5. and 5. in a ranke in very goodly order, euery of them carying his gunne vpon his left shoulder, and his match in his right hand, and in this order they marched into the field where as the foresaid ordinance was planted.

A preetie triumph.

And before the Emperours maiestie came into the field, there was a certaine stage made of small poles which was a quarter of a mile long, and about three score yardes off from the stage of poles were certaine pieces of ice of two foote thicke, and fiue foote high set vp, which ranke of ice was as long as the stage of poles, and as soone as the Emperours maiestie came into the field, the harquebuzzers went vpon the stage of poles where they setled themselues in order. And when the Emperours maiestie was setled where he would be, and where he might see all the ordinance discharged and shot of, the harquebuzzers began to shoot of at the banke of ice, as though it had been in any skirmish or battel, who ceased not shooting, vntil they had beaten all the ice flat on the ground.

After the handguns, they shot of their wild fire vp into the aire, which was a goodly sight to behold. And after this, they began to discharge the small pieces of brasse, beginning with the smallest and so orderly bigger and bigger, vntil the last and biggest. When they had shot them all of, they began to charge them againe, and so shot them all of 3. times after the first order, beginning with the smallest and ending with the greatest. And note that before they had ended their shooting the houses that they shot vnto, were beaten in pieces, and yet they were very strongly made of Wood and filled with earth, being at the least 30. foote thicke. This triumph being ended, the Emperour departed and rode home in the same order that he came forth into the field. The ordinance is discharged euery peere in the moneth of December, according to the order before mentioned.

On Christmas day we were all willed to dine with the Emperours maiestie, where for breakfast meat and drinke, we were serued as at other times before: but for goodly and rich plate, we neuer saw the like or so much before. There dined that day in the Emperours presence about 500. strangers, and two hundred Russes, and all they were serued in vessels of gold, and that as much as could stand one by another vpō the tables. Besides this there were foure cupboords garnished with goodly goodly plate both of gold and siluer. Among the which there were 12. barrels of siluer, conteining about 12. gallons a piece, and at each end of euery barrell were 6. hoopes of fine gold: this dinner continued about 6. howers.

Euery yeere vpon the twelfe day they vse to bleſſe or ſanctifie the riuer Moska, which runneth though the citie of Moskouia, after this maner. The hallowing of the riuer of Moſco.

Firſt, they make a ſquare hole in the ice about 3. fadoms large euery way, which is trimmed about the ſides and edges with white boords. Then about 9. of the clocke they come out of the church with proceſſion towards the riuer in this wiſe.

Firſt and formoſt there goe certaine yong men with Waxe tapers burning, and one carying a great lanterne: then follow certaine banners, then the croſſe, then the images of our Ladie, of S. Nicholas, and of other Saints, which images men carrie vpon their ſhoulders: after the images follow certaine prieſts to the number of 100. or more: after them the Metropolitan who is led betweene two prieſts, and after the Metropolitan came the Emperour with his crowne vpon his head, and after his maieſtie all his noble men orderly. Thus they followed the proceſſion vnto the water, & when they came vnto the hole that was made, the prieſts ſet themſelues in order round about it. And at one ſide of the ſame poole there was a ſcaffold of boords made, vpon which ſtood a faire chaire in which the Metropolitan was ſet, but the Emperours maieſtie ſtood vpon the ice.

After this the prieſts began to ſing, to bleſſe and to ſenſe, and did their ſeruice, and ſo by that time that they had done, the water was holy, which being ſanctified, the Metropolitane tooke a litle thereof in his handes, and caſt it on the Emperour, likewiſe vpon certaine of the Dukes, and then they returned againe to the church with the prieſts that ſate about the water: but the preaſſe that there was about the water when the Emperor was gone, was wonderful to behold, for there came about 5000. pots to be filled of that water: for that Puſcouite which hath no part of that water, thinks himſelfe vnhappy.

And very many went naked into the water, both men and women and children: after the preaſe was a litle gone, the Emperours Jennets and horſes were brought to drinke of the ſame water, and likewiſe many other men brought their horſes thither to drinke, and by that means they make their horſes as holy as themſelues.

All theſe ceremonies being ended, we went to the Emperour to dinner, where we were ſerued in veſſels of ſiluer, and in all other points as we had bene before time.

The Ruſſes begin their Lent alwayes 8. weekes before Eaſter: the firſt weeke they eate egges, milke, cheeſe & butter, and make great cheare with pancakes and ſuch other things, one friend viſiting another, & from the ſame Sunday vntil our Shroſſunday, there are but few Ruſſes ſober, but they are drunke day by day, and it is accounted for no reproch or ſhame among them. The Ruſſes Lent.

The next weeke being our firſt weeke of Lent, or our cleanſing weeke, beginning our Shroſſunday, they make and keepe a great faſt. It is reported, and the people doe verily beleeue, that the Metropolitan neither eateth nor drinketh any maner of thing for the ſpace of ſeuen dayes, and they ſay that there are many religious men which do the like.

The Emperours maieſtie eateth but one morſell of bread, and drinketh but one draught of drinke once in the day during that weeke, and all men that are of any reputation come not out of their houſes during that time, ſo that the ſtreetes are almoſt void of company, ſauing a few poore ſoules which wander to and fro. The other ſixe weekes they keepe as we do ours, but not one of them will eate either butter, cheeſe, egges or milke.

On Palme ſunday they haue a very ſolemne proceſſion in this maner following.

Firſt, they haue a tree of a good bigneſſe which is made faſt vpon two ſleds, as though it were growing there, and it is hanged with apples, raiſins, figs and dates, and with many other fruits abundantly. In the midſt of the ſame tree ſtand 5. boyes in white veſtures, which ſing in the tree before the proceſſion: after this there followed certaine yong men with waxe tapers in their hands burning, and a great lanterne that all the light ſhould not goe out: after them followed two with long banners, and 6. with round plates ſet vpon long ſtaues: the plates were of copper very full of holes and thinne: then followed 6. carying painted images vpon their ſhoulders, after the images follow certaine prieſts to the number of 100. or more, with goodly veſtures, whereof 10. or 12. are of white damaſke, ſet and imbroidered round about with faire and orient pearles, as great as peaſe, and among them certaine Saphires and other ſtones. After them followed the one halfe of the Emperours noble men: then commeth the Emperours maieſtie and the Metropolitane, after this maner.

Firſt there is a horſe couered with white linnen cloth downe to the ground, his eares being made long with the ſame cloth like to an aſſes eares. Vpon this horſe the Metropolitane ſitteth ſidelong like a woman: in his lappe lieth a faire booke, with a crucifix of Goldſmiths worke vpon the couer, which he holdeth fast with his left hand, and in his right hand he hath a crosse of gold, with which crosse he ceaseth not to blesse the people as he rideth.

There are to the number of 30. men which spread abroad their garments before the horse, and as soone as the horse is past ouer any of them, they take them vp againe and run before, and spred them againe, so that the horse doth alway go on some of them. They which spred the garments are all priests sonnes, and for their labours, the Emperour giueth vnto them new garments.

The Emperor leadeth the Metropolitans horse in procession.

One of the Emperours noble men leadeth the horse by the head, but the Emperour himselfe going on foote, leadeth the horse by the ende of the reine of his bridle with one of his hands, and in the other of his handes he had a braunch of a Palme tree: after this followed the rest of the Emperours Noble men and Gentlemen, with a great number of other people. In this order they went from one church to another within the castle, about the distaunce of two flights shot: and so returned agayne to the Emperours Church, where they made an end of their seruice. Which being done, the Emperours maiestie and certaine of his noble men, went to the Metropolitans his house to dinner, where of delicate fishes and good drinks there was no lacke.

The rest of this weeke vntill Easter day they keepe very solemnely, continuing in their houses for the most part, and vpon Sunday or Thursday the Emperour doth alwayes vse to receiue the Sacrament, and so doth most part of his nobles.

Upon good Friday they continue all the day in contemplation and prayers, and they vse euery yeere on good Friday to let loose a prisoner in the stead of Barrabas. The night following they go to the church where they sleepe vntil the next morning, & at Easter they haue the resurrection, and after euery of the Lents they eate flesh, the next weeke following Friday, Saturday and all.

They haue an order at Easter which they alwaies obserue, and that is this: euery yeere against Easter to die or colour red with Brazzell a great number of egges, of which euery man and woman giueth one vnto the priest of their Parish vpon Easter day in the morning. And moreouer the common people vse to carrie in their hands one of these red egges, not onely vpon Easter day, but also three or foure dayes after, and Gentlemen and Gentlewomen haue egges gilded which they carrie in like maner. They vse it as they say for a great loue, and in token of the resurrection, whereof they reioyce. For when two friends meete during the Easter holydayes, they come and take one another by the hand: the one of them saieth, the Lord, or Christ is risen, the other answereth, it is so of a trueth, and then they kisse and exchange their egges both men and women, continuing in kissing 4. dayes together.

Kissing vsed in the Greeke church.

The 12. of Aprill being Tewesday in the Easter weeke, master Jenkinson and master Gray, and certaine other of vs Englishmen dined with the Emperour, where we were serued as we haue bene before time. And after dinner the Emperours maiestie gaue vnto master Jenkinson and vnto M. Gray, and so orderly vnto euery one of vs a cuppe of mead, according to his accustomed manner, which when euery man had receiued and giuen thanks, M. Jenkinson stepped into the midst of the chamber before the Emperors maiestie, and gaue thanks to his highnes for his goodnesse vnto him extended, desiring his grace to licence him for to depart, and in like maner did M. Gray. His maiestie did not onely licence them to depart, but also graunted vnto M. Jenkinson his letters vnder his great seale, vnto all princes through whose dominions M. Jenkinson should haue occasion to passe, that he might the sooner & quietlier passe by meanes thereof. Which being graunted, M. Jenkinson and Gray lowly submitted themselues, thanking his maiestie. So the Emperour gaue vnto either of them a cup of mead to drinke, and willed them to depart at their pleasure in Gods peace.

With these letters M. Jenkinson tooke his voiage the same Aprill to Boghar.

The 14. of Aprill in the morning when M. Gray and I were redie to depart towards England, the Chancellours sent vnto vs, and willed vs to come to their office in the Chancerie, where at our comming they shewed vs a great number of the Emperours iewels, and rich robes, willing vs to marke and behold them well, to the ende that at our arriuall into England, we might make report what we had seene there.

The Emperors wardrobe.

The chiefest was his maiesties crowne, being close vnder the top very faire wrought: in mine opinion, the workemanship of so much gold few men can amend. It was adorned and decked with rich and precious stones aboundantly, among the which one was a rubie, which stood a handfull higher then the top of the crowne vpon a small wier, it was as big as a good beane: the same crowne was lined with a faire blacke Sable, worth by report 40. rubbles.

We saw all his maiesties robes which were very richly set with stones, they shewed vs many other great stones of diuers kinds, but the most part of the were sneuen, in maner as they came out of the worke, for they do more esteeme the greatnes of stones, then they do the proportion of them.

We sawe two goodly gownes which were as beauie as a man could easily carrie, all set with perles ouer & ouer: the gards or borders round about them were garnished with saphires and other gues good stones abundantly. One of the same gownes was very rich, for the pearles were very large, round, and orient: as for the rest of his gownes and garments, they were of rich tissue and cloth of gold and all furred with very blacke Sables.

When we had sufficiently perused all these thinges, they willed master Gray at his arriuall in England to prouide if he could, such iewels and rich clothes as he had seene there, and better if hee could, declaring that the Emperour would gladly bestow his money vpon such things.

So we tooke our leaue the same time, and departed towards Vologda immediately.

The maners, vsages, and ceremonies of the Russes.

Of the Emperour.

THe Emperours name in their tongue is Euan Vasiliuich, that is as much to say, as Iohn the sonne of Vasilie, and by his princely state he is called Otesara, as his predecessors haue bene before, which to interprete, is a king, that giueth not tribute to any man. And this word Otesara his maiesties interpreters, haue of late dayes interpreted to be an Emperour, so that now he is called Emperour & great Duke of all Russia, &c. Before his father they were neither called Emperours nor kings but onely Ruese Velike, that is to say, great Duke. And as this Emperour which now is Euan Vasiliuich, doeth exceed his predecessours in name, that is, from a Duke to an Emperour, euen so much by report he doth exceed them in stoutnes of courage and valiantnesse, and a great deale more: for he is no more afraid of his enemies which are not few, then the Hobbie of the larkes. Or, Basilius.

His enemies with whom he hath warres for the most part are these: Litto, Poland, Sweden, Denmarke, Lifland, the Crimmes, Nagaians, and the whole nation of the Tartarians, which are a stoute and a hardie people as any vnder the Sunne.

This Emperour vseth great familiaritie, as well vnto all his nobles and Subiects, as also vnto strangers which serue him either in his warres, or in occupations: for his pleasure is that they shall dine oftentimes in the peere in his presence, and besides that he is oftentimes abroad, either at one church or another, and walking with his noble men abroad. And by this meanes he is not onely beloued of his nobles and commons, but also had in great dread and feare through all his dominions, so that I thinke no prince in Christendome is more feared of his owne then he is, nor yet better beloued. For if he bid any of his Dukes goe, they will runne, if he giue any euill or angrie worde to any of them, the partie will not come into his maiesties presence againe of a long time if he be not sent for, but will faine him to be very sicke, and will let the haire of his head grow very long, without either cutting or shauing, which is an euident token that hee is in the Emperours displeasure: for when they be in their prosperitie, they account it a shame to weare long haire, in consideration whereof, they vse to haue their heads shauen.

His maiestie heareth all complaints himselfe, and with his owne mouth giueth sentence and iudgement of all matters, and that with expedition: but religious matters he medleth not withall, but referreth them wholy vnto the Metropolitane. Note.

His maiestie retaineth and well rewardeth all straungers that come to serue him, and especially men of warre.

Hee delighteth not greatly in hawking, hunting, or any other pastime, nor in hearing instruments or musike, but setteth all his whole delight vpon two things. First, to serue God, as vndoubtedly he is very deuout in his religion, and the second, how to subdue and conquere his enemies.

He hath abundance of gold and siluer in his owne handes or treasurie: but the most part of his people not a crowne from a counter, nor gold from copper, they are so much combred therewithall, and he that is worth 2. 3. or 4. grotes, is a rich man.

Of their Religious men.

THe Metropolitane is next vnto God, our Ladie and S. Nicholas, accepted: for the Emperours maiestie iudgeth and affirmeth him to bee of higher dignitie then himselfe: for that saith he, he is Gods spirituall officer, and I the Emperour am his temporall officer, and therefore his maiestie submitteth himselfe vnto him in many things concerning religious matters, as in leading the Metropolitans horse vpon Palme sunday, and giuing him leaue to sit on a chaire vpon the 12. day, when the riuer Mosko was in blessing, and his maiestie standing on the ice.

All matters of religion are reformed by the Metropolitan, he heareth the causes and giueth sentence as himselfe listeth, and is authorized so to doe, whether it be to whip, hang, or burne, his will must needs be fulfilled.

They haue both monkes, friers and nunnes, with a great number of great and rich monasteries, they keepe great hospitalitie, and doe relieue much poore people day by day. I haue been in one of the monasteries called Troietes, which is walled about with bricke very strongly like a castle, and much ordinaunce of brasse vpon the wals of the same. They told me themselues that there are seuen hundred brethren of them which belong vnto that house. The most part of the lands, townes, and villages which are within fortie miles of it, belong vnto the same. They shewed me the church, wherein were as many images as could hang about, or vpon the wals of the church round about, & euen the roofe of the church was painted full of images. The chiefe image was of our Lady, which was garnished with gold, rubies, saphires and other rich stones abundantly. In the midst of the church stood 12. waxe tapers of two yards long, and a fathome about in bignesse, there stands a kettle ful of waxe with about 100. waight, wherein there is alwaies the wicke of a candle burning, as it were a lampe which goeth not out day nor night.

They shewed mee a coffin couered with cloth of gold which stoode vpon one side within their church, in which they told me lay a holy man, who neuer eate nor dranke, and yet that he liueth. And they told me (supposing that I had beleeued them) that hee healeth many diseases, and giueth the blind their sight, with many other miracles, but I was hard of beliefe because I saw him worke no miracle whilest I was there.

After this they brought me into their sellers, and made me taste of diuers kinds of drinkes, both wine and beere, mead and quassie, of sundry colours and kinds, such aboundance of drinke as they haue in their sellers, I doe suppose few princes haue more, or so much at once.

Their barrels or vessels are of an vnmeasurable bignes and sise: some of them are 3. yards long and more, and 2. yards & more broad in their heads: they contein 6. or 7. tunnes a piece: they haue none in their sellers of their owne making that are lesse then a tunne. They haue 9. or 10. great vautes which are full of those barrels which are seldome remooued: for they haue trunkes which come downe through the roofe of the vautes in sundry places, through which they powre the drinke downe, hauing the caske right vnder it to receiue the same, for it should be a great trouble to bring it all downe the staires.

The hospitalitie of their monasteries.

They giue bread, meat and drinke vnto all men that come to them, not onely while they are at their abbey, but also when they depart, to serue them by the way.

There are a great number of such monasteries in the realme, and the Emperours maiestie rideth oftentimes from one to another of them, and lieth at them 3. or 4. dayes together.

The same monkes are as great merchants as any in the land of Russia, and doe occupy buying and selling as much as any other men, and haue boates which passe too and fro in the riuers with merchandize from place to place where any other of their country doe traffique.

They eate no flesh during their liues as it is reported, but vpon Sunday, Munday, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, it is lawfull for them to eate egges, butter, cheese and milke, and at all times to eate fish, and after this sort they lead their liues.

They weare all blacke garments, and so doe none other in all the land, but at that abbey only.

Want of preachers cause of great ignorance and idolatrie.

They haue no preachers no not one in all the land to instruct the people, so that there are many & the most part of the poore in the country, who if one aske them how many gods there be, they will say a great many, meaning that euery image which they haue is a god: for all the country and the Emperours maiestie himselfe, will bleese and bowe, and knocke their heads before their images: in so much that they will trie earnestlie vnto their images to helpe them to the things which they need. All men are bound by their law to haue those images in their houses, and ouer euery gate in all their townes and cities are images set vp, vnto which the people bowe and bend, and knocke their heads against the ground before them: as often as they come by any church or crosse they do in like maner. And when they come to any house, they bleese themselues 3. or 4. times before they will salute any man in the house.

They reckon and hold it for great sinne to touch or handle any of their images within the circle of the boord where the painting is, but they keepe them very daintely, & rich men decke their ouer and about, with gold, siluer and stones, and hang them ouer and about with cloth of gold.

The priests are married as other men are, and weare all their garments as other men doe, except their nightcappes, which is cloth of some sadde colour, beyng rounde, and reacheth vnto the the eares: their crownes are shaven, but the rest of their hayre they let grow, as long as nature will permit, so that it hangeth beneath their eares vpon their shoulders: their beards they neuer shaue: if his wife happen to die, it is not lawfull for him to mary againe during his life.

They minister the Communion with bread and wine, after our order but he breaketh the bread, and putteth it into the cuppe vnto the wine, and commonly some are partakers with them: & they take the bread out againe with a spoone together with part of the wine, and so take it themselues, and giue it to others that receiue with them after the same maner.

Their ceremonies are all as they say, according to the Greeke church vsed at this present day, and they allow no other religion but the Greeks, and their owne: and will not permit any nation but the Greeks to be buried in their sacred burials, or churchyards.

All their churches are full of images, vnto the which the people when they assemble, doe bow and knocke their heads, as I haue before said, that some will haue knobbes vpon their foreheads with knocking, as great as egges. Their seruice in their mother tongue.

All their seruice is in the Russe tongue, and they and the common people haue no other prayers but this, Ghospodi Iesus Christos esine voze ponuloi nashe. That is to say, O Lord Jesus Christ, sonne of God haue mercy vpon vs: and this is their prayer, so that the most part of the vnlearned know neither Pater noster, nor the Beliefe, nor Ten commandements, nor scarcely vnderstand the one halfe of the seruice which is read in their churches.

Of their Baptisme.

When any childe is borne, it is not baptised vntill the next Sunday, and if it chance that it be not baptised then, it must tary vntill the second Sunday after the byrth, and it is lawfull for them to take as many Godfathers and Godmothers as they will, the more the better.

When they go to the Church, the midwife goeth formost, carying the childe, and the Godfathers and Godmothers follow into the midst of the Church, where there is a small table ready set, and on it an earthen pot full of warme water, about the which the Godfathers and Godmothers, with the childe, settle themselues: then the clearke giueth vnto euery of them a small waxe candle burning, then commeth the priest, and beginneth to say certeine words, which the Godfathers and Godmothers must answere word for word, among which, one is, that the childe shall forsake the deuill, and as that name is pronounced, they must all spit at the word as often as it is repeated. Then he blesseth the water which is in the pot, and doth breath ouer it: then he taketh all the candles which the gossips haue, and holding them all in one hand letteth part of them droppe into the water, and then giueth euery one his candle againe, and when the water is sanctified, he taketh the childe and holdeth it in a small tubbe, and one of the Godfathers taketh the pot with warme water, and powreth it all vpon the childes head.

After this he hath many more ceremonies, as annointing eares and eyes with spittle, and making certeine crosses with oyle vpon the backe, head, and brests of the childe: then taking the childe in his armes, carieth it to the images of S. Nicholas, and our Lady, &c. and speaketh vnto the images, desiring them to take charge of the childe, that he may liue, and beleeue as a Christian man or woman ought to doe, with many other words. Then comming backe from the images, he taketh a payre of sheeres and clippeth the yoong and tender hayres of the childes head, in three or foure places, and then deliuereth the childe, whereunto euery of the Godfathers and Godmothers lay a hand: then the priest chargeth them, that the childe be brought vp in the faith & feare of God or Christ, and that it be instructed to clinege and bow to the images, and so they make an end: then one of the Godfathers must hang a crosse about the necke of the childe, which he must alwayes weare, for that Russe which hath not a crosse about his necke, they esteeme as no Christian man, and thereupon they say that we are no Christians, because we do not weare crosses as they do.

Of their Matrimonie.

Their matrimony is nothing solemnized, but rather in most points abhominable, and as neere as I can learne, in this wise following.

First, when there is loue betweene the parties, the man sendeth vnto the woman a small chest or boxe, wherein is a whippe, needles, thred, silke, linnen cloth, sheeres, & such necessaries as she shall occupy when she is a wife, and perhaps sendeth therewithall rosins, figges or some such thinges, giuing her to vnderstand, that if she doe offend she must be beaten with the whippe, whip, & by the needles, thred, cloth, &c. that she should apply her selfe diligently to sowe, and do such things as she could best doe, and by the raisins or fruites he meaneth if she doe well, no good thing shalbe withdrawen from her, nor be too dere for her: and she sendeth vnto him a shirt, handkerchers, and some such things of her owne making. And now to the effect.

When they are agreed, and the day of marriage appointed, when they shall go towardes the church, the bride will in no wise consent to go out of the house, but resisteth and striueth with them that would haue her out, and faineth her selfe to weepe, yet in the end, two women get her out, and lead her towards the church, her face being couered close, because of her dissimulation, that it should not be openly perceiued: for she maketh a great noyce, as though she were sobbing and weeping, vntill she come at the church, and then her face is vncouered. The man commeth after among other of his friends, and they cary with them to the church a great pot with wine or meade: then the priest coupleth them together much after our order, one promising to loue and serue the other during they liues together, &c. which being done they beginne to drinke, and first the woman bringeth to the man, and when he hath drunke he letteth the cuppe fall to the ground, hasting immediatly to tread vpon it, and so doth she, and whether of them tread first vpon it must haue the victory and be maister at all times after, which commonly happeneth to the man, for he is readiest to set his foot on it, because he letteth it fall himselfe, then they go home againe, the womans face being vncouered. The boyes in the streets cry out and make a noyce in the meane time, with very dishonest words.

When they come home, the wife is set at the vpper end of the table, and the husband next vnto her: they fall then to drinking till they be all drunke, they perchance haue a minstrell or two, and two naked men, whiche led her from the churche, dance naked a long time before all the company. When they are weary of drinking, the bride and the bridegrome get them to bed, for it is in the euening alwayes when any of them are marryed: and when they are going to bed, the bridegrome putteth certeine money both golde and siluer, if he haue it, into one of his boots, and then letteth downe in the chamber, crossing his legges, and then the bride must plucke off one of his boots, which she will, and if she happen on the boot wherein the money is, she hath not onely the more in her labor, but is also at such choyce, as she need not euer from that day forth to pull of his boots, but if she misse the boot wherein the mony is, she doth not onely loose the mony, but is also bound from that day forwards to pull off his boots continually.

Then they continue in drinking and making good cheere three dayes following, being accompanyed with certaine of their friends, and during the same three dayes he is called a duke, and the dutches, although they be very poore persons, and this is as much as I haue learned of their matrimony: but one common rule is amongst them, if the woman be not beaten with the whip once a weeke, she will not be good, and therefore they looke for it orderly, and the women say, that if their husbands did not beat them, they should not loue them.

They vse to marry there very yoong, they sonnes at 16 and 18 yeeres olde, and the daughters at 12 or 13 yeeres or yonger: they vse to keepe their wiues very closely, I meane those that be of any reputation, so that a man shall not see one of them but at a chance, when she goeth to church at Christmas or at Easter or els going to visit some of her friends.

The most part of the women vse to ride a stride in saddles with stirrups, as men do, and some of them on sleds, which in summer is not commendable.

The women of Russia paint their faces.

The husband is bound to finde the wife coulers to paint her withall, for they vse ordinarily to paint themselues: it is such a common practise among them, that it is counted for no shame: they grease their faces with such coulers, that a man may discerne them hanging on their facts almost a flight shoot off: I can not so well liken them as to a millers wife, for they looke as though they were beaten about the face with a bag of meale, but their eye browes they couler as blacke as iet.

The best property that the women haue, is that they can sowe well, and imbroder with silke and golde excellently.

Of their Buriall.

When any man or woman dyeth, they stretch him out, and put a new payre of shoes on his feet, because he hath a great iourney to goe: then do they winde him in a sheet as we do, but they forget not to put a testimony in his right hand, which the priest giueth him, to testifie vnto S. Nicholas that he dyed a Christian man or woman. And they put the coarse alwayes in a coffin of wood, although the partie be very poore: and when they go towards the church, the friends and kinsemen of the party departed carry in their hands small ware candles, and they weepe and howle, and make much lamentation.

They

They that be hanged or beheaded, or ſuch like, haue no teſtimony with them: how they are receiued into heauen, it is a wonder, without their paſport.

There are a great number of poore people among them which die daily for lacke of ſuſtenance, which is a pitifull caſe to beholde: for there hath beene buried in a ſmall time, within theſe two yeers, about 80 perſons yoong and olde, which haue dyed onely for lacke of ſuſtenance: for if they had had ſtraw and water enough, they would make ſhift to liue: for a great many are forced in the winter to dry ſtraw and ſtampe it, and to make bread thereof, or at the leaſt they eat it in ſtead of bread. In the ſummer they make good ſhift with graſſe, herbs, and roots: barks of trees is good meat with them at all times. There is no people in the world, as I ſuppoſe, that liue ſo miſerably as do the pouertie in thoſe parts: and the moſt part of them that haue ſufficient for themſelues, and alſo to relieue others that need, are ſo vnmercifull that they care not how many they ſee die of famine or hunger in the ſtreets.

Bread made of ſtraw.

The vnmercifulneſſe of the Ruſſes toward the poore.

It is a countrey full of diſeaſes, diuers, and euill, and the beſt remedy is for any of them, as they holde opinion, to go often vnto the hot houſes, as in a manner euery man hath one of his owne, which he heateth commonly twiſe euery weeke, and all the houſholde ſweat, and waſh themſelues therein.

Stooues or baths vſuall with the Moſcouites.

The names of certaine ſortes of drinkes vſed in Ruſſia, and commonly drunke in the Emperours Court.

Reported by Tho. Bullep.

THe firſt and principall meade is made of the iuyce or licor taken from a berry called in Ruſſia, Malieno, which is of a marueilous ſweet taſte, and of a carmoſant couler, which berry I haue ſeene in Paris.

The ſecond meade is called Viſnoua, becauſe it is made of a berry ſo called, and is like a blacke gooſe berry: but it is like in couler and taſte to the red wine of France.

The third meade is called Amarodina, or Smorodina, ſhort, of a ſmall berry much like to the ſmall rezon, and groweth in great plenty in Ruſſia.

The fourth meade is called Chereunikyna, which is made of the wilde blacke cherry.

The fift meade is made of hony and water, with other mixtures.

There is alſo a delicate drinke drawne from the root of the Birch tree, called in the Ruſſe toong Berozeuites, which drinke the noble men and others vſe in Aprill, May, and June, which are the three moneths of the ſpring time: for after thoſe moneths, the ſappe of the tree dryeth, and then they cannot haue it.

The voyage of M. Anthony Ienkinſon, made from the citie of Moſco in Ruſſia, to the citie of Boghar in Bactria, in the yere 1558: written by himſelfe to the Merchants of London of the Moſcouie companie.

THe 23 day of Aprill, in the yeere 1558 (hauing obteined the Emperour of Ruſſia his letters, directed vnto ſundry kings and princes, by whoſe dominions I ſhould paſſe) I departed from Moſco by water, hauing with me two of your ſeruants, namely, Richard Johnſon and Robert Johnſon, and a Tartar Tolmach, with diuers parcels of wares, as by the inuentory appeareth: and the 28 day we came to a towne called Collom, diſtant from the Moſco 20 leagues, & paſſing one league beyond the ſaid Collom, we came vnto a riuer called Occa, into the which the riuer Moſco falleth, and looſeth his name: and paſſing downe the ſaid riuer Occa 8 leagues, we came vnto a caſtle called Terreuettisko, which we left vpon our right hand, and proceeding forward, the ſecond day of May, we came vnto another caſtle called Peroſlaue, diſtant 8 leagues, leauing it alſo on our right hand. The third day we came vnto the place where Olde Rezan was ſituate, being now moſt of it ruined and ouergrowen, and diſtant from the ſaid Peroſlaue 6 leagues: the 4 day we paſſed by a caſtle called Terecouia, from Rezan 12 leagues, and the 6 day we came to another caſtle called Caſſim, vnder the gouernment of a Tartar prince named Vtzar Zegoline, ſometime Emperor of the worthy citie of Cazan, and now ſubiect vnto the Emperor of Ruſſia. But leauing Caſſim on our left hand, the 8 day we came vnto a faire towne called Morom, from Caſſim 20 leagues, where we tooke the ſonne, and found the latitude 56 degrees: and proceeding forward the 11 day, we came vnto another fayre towne and castle called Nyse Nouogrod, situated at the falling of the foresaid riuer Occa into the worthy riuer of Volga, distant from the said Moron 25 leagues, in the latitude of 56 degrees 18 minuts. From Rezan to this Nyse Nouogrod on both sides the said riuer of Occa, is raised the greatest store of ware and hony in all the land of Russia. We tarryed at the foresayd Nyse Nouogrod, vntill the 19 day, for the comming of a captaine which was sent by the Emperour to rule at Astracan, who being arriued, and hauing the number of 500 great boates vnder his conduct, some laden with victuailes, souldiers, and munition: and other some with merchandize, departed altogether the said 19 day from the said Nyse Nouogrod, and the 22 we came vnto a castle called Vasiliagorod, distant 25 leagues, which we left vpon our right hand. This towne or castle had his name of this Emperours father, who was called Vasilius, and gorod in the Russe tongue, is as much to say as a castle, so that Vasiliagorod, is to say, Vasilius castle: and it was the furthest place that the sayd Emperor conquered from the Tartares. But this present Emperour his sonne, called Iuan Vasiliwich, hath had great good successe in his warres, both against the Christians and also the Mahometists and Gentils, but especially against the Tartarres, inlarging his Empyre euen to the Caspian sea, hauing conquerred the famous riuer of Volga, with all the countryes thereabout adiacent. Thus proceeding on our iourney the 25 day of May aforesaid, we came to another castle called Sabowshare, which we left on our right hand, distant from Vasiliagorod 16 leagues. The country hereabout is called Mardouits, and the habitantes did profesle the law of the Gentils: but now being conquerred by this Emperour of Russia, most of them are Christened, but lie in the woods and wildernesse, without towne or habitation.

11 day

Cazan. The 27 day we passed by another castle called Swyasko, distant from Shabowshare aforesaid 25 leagues: we left it on our right hand, and the 29 came vnto an Island one league from the citie of Cazan, from which falleth downe a riuer called Cazanka reca, & entreth into the foresaid Volga. Cazan is a fayre towne, after the Russe or Tartar fashion, with a strong castle, situated vpon a high hill, and was walled round about with timber and earth, but now the Emperour of Russia hath giuen order to plucke downe the olde walles, and to build them againe of free stone. It hath bene a citie of great wealth and riches, and being in the hands of the Tartarres, it was a kingdome of it selfe, and did more hurt the Russes in their warres, then any other nation: but 9 yeeres past, this Emperour of Russia conquered it, and tooke the king captiue, who being but young is now baptised, and brought vp in his court with two other princes, which were also kings of the said Cazan, and being ech of them in time of their raignes in danger of their subiects through ciuil discord, came and rendred themselues at seuerall times vnto the said Emperor, so that at this present there are three princes in the court of Russia, which had bene Emperours of the said Cazan, whom the Emperour vseth with great honor.

We remained at Cazan till the 13 day of June, and then departed from thence: and the same day passed by an Island called the Island of merchants, because it was woont to be a place where all merchants, as well Russes and Cazanits, as Nagayans and Crymmes, and diuers other nations did resort to keepe mart for buying and selling, but now it is forsaken, and standeth without any such resort thither, or at Cazan, or at any place about it, from Mosco vnto Mare Caspium.

Thus proceeding forward the 14 day, we passed by a goodly riuer called Cama, which we left on our left hand. This riuer falleth out of the countrey of Perania into the riuer of Volga, and is from Cazan 15 leagues, and the countrey lying betwixt the said Cazan and the said riuer Cama on the left hand of Volga is called Vachen, and the inhabitantes be Gentils, and liue in the wildernesse without house or habitation: and the countrey on the other side of Volga ouer against the said riuer Cama is called the land of Cheremizes, halfe Gentils, halfe Tartarres, and all the land on the left hand of the said Volga from the said riuer vnto Astracan, and so following the North and Northeast side of the Caspian sea, to a land of the Tartarres called Turkemen, is called the countrey of Mangat or Nagay, whose inhabitantes are of the law of Mahomet, and were all destroyed in the yeere 1558, at my being at Astracan, though ciuill warres among them, accompanyed with famine, pestilence, and such plagues, in such sort, that in the sayd yeere there was consumed of the people, in one sort and another, about one hundred thousand: the like plague was neuer seene in those parts, so that the said countrey of Nagay being a countrey of great pasture, remaineth now vnreplenished to the great contentation of the Russes, who haue had cruell warres a long time together.

The Nagayans when they florished, liued in this maner: they were diuided into diuers companies called Hoyds, and euery Hoyd had a ruler, whom they obeyed as their king, and was called a Murse. Towne or house they had none, but liued in the open fieldes, euery Murse or King hauing hauing his Hoyds or people about him, with their wiues, children and cattell, who hauing conſumed the paſture in one place, remooued vnto another: and when they remoeue they haue houſes like tents ſet vpon wagons or carts, which are drawen from place to place with camels, and therin they haue their wiues, children, and all their riches, which is very little, is caried about, and euery man hath at the leaſt foure or fiue wiues beſides concubines. Vſe of money they haue none, but doe barter their cattell for apparell and other neceſſaries. They delight in no arte nor ſcience, except the warres, wherein they are expert, but for the moſt part they be paſturing people, and haue great ſtore of cattell, which is all their riches. They eate much fleſh, and eſpecially the horſe, and they drinke mares milke, wherewith they be oftentimes drunke: they are ſeditious and inclined to theft and murther. Corne they ſowe not, neither doe eate any bread, mocking the Chriſtians for the ſame, and diſabling our ſtrengths, ſaying we liue by eating the toppe of a weede, and drinke a drinke made of the ſame, allowing their great deuouring of fleſh, and drinking of milke to be the increaſe of their ſtrength. But now to proceed forward to my iourney. Hoyds.

All the countrey vpon our right hand the riuer Volga, from ouer againſt the riuer Cama vnto the towne of Aſtracan, is the land of Crimme, whoſe inhabitantes be alſo of the law of Mahomet, and liue for the moſt part according to the faſhions of the Nagayes, hauing continuall warres with the Emperour of Ruſſia, and are valiant in the field, hauing countenance, and ſupport from the great Turke.

The 16 day of June we paſſed by certaine fiſhermens houſes called Petowſe twentie leagues from the riuer Cama, where is great fiſhing for ſturgion, and ſo continuing our way vntill the 22 day, and paſſing by another great riuer called Samar, which falleth out of the aforeſayd countrey, and runneth through Nagay, and entreth into the ſayd riuer of Volga. The 28 day we came vnto a great hill, where was in times paſt a caſtle made by the Crimmes, but now it is ruined, being the iuſt midway betweene the ſayd Cazan and Aſtrachan, which is 200 leagues or therabout, in the latitude of 51 degrees 47 minuts. Vpon all this ſhore groweth abundance of licoriſh, whoſe root runneth within the ground like a vine. Licoriſh in great plenty.

Thus going forward the firſt day of Julie we came to a place called Perouolog, ſo named becauſe in times paſt the Tartarres carryed their boates from Volga vnto the riuer Tanais, otherwiſe called Don, by land, when they would robbe ſuch as paſſed downe the ſayd Volga to Aſtracan, and alſo ſuch as paſſed downe by the riuer Tanais, to Aſophe, Caffa, or any other towne ſituated vpon Mare Euxinum, into which ſea Tanais falleth, who hath his ſpringes in the countrey of Rezan, out of a plaine ground. It is at this ſtreight of Perouolog from the one riuer to the other two leagues by land, and is a dangerous place for theeues and robbers, but now it is not ſo euill as it hath beene, by reaſon of the Emperour of Ruſſia his conqueſts.

Departing from Perouolog, hauing the wildernеſſe on both ſides, we ſaw a great heard of Nagayans, paſturing, as is aboueſayd, by eſtimation aboue a thouſand cammels drawing of carts with houſes vpon them like tentes, of a ſtrange faſhion, ſeeming to be a farre off a towne: that Hoyd was belonging to a great Murſe called Smille, the greateſt prince in all Nagay, who hath ſlaine and driuen away all the reſt, not ſparing his owne brethren and children, and hauing peace with this Emperour of Ruſſia he hath what he needeth, and ruleth alone, ſo that now the Ruſſes liue in peace with the Nagayans, who were woont to haue mortall warres together.

The 14 day of July paſſing by an olde caſtle, which was Olde Aſtracan, and leauing it vpon our right hand, we arriued at New Aſtracan, which this Emperour of Ruſſia conquered ſixe yeeres paſt, in the yeere 1552. It is from the Moſco vnto Aſtracan ſixe hundreth leagues, or there about. The towne of Aſtracan is ſituated in an Iſland vpon a hill ſide, hauing a caſtle within the ſame, walled about with earth and timber, neither fayre nor ſtrong, the towne is alſo walled about with earth: the buildinges and houſes (except it be the captaines lodging, and certeine other gentlemens) moſt baſe and ſimple. The Iſland is moſt deſtitute and barren of wood and paſture, and the ground will beare no corne: the ayre is there moſt infected, by reaſon (as I ſuppoſe) of much fiſhe, and ſpecially ſturgion, by which onely the inhabitantes liue, hauing great ſcarſitie of fleſh and bread. They hang vp their fiſh in their ſtreetes and houſes to dry for their proviſion, which cauſeth ſuch abundance of flyes to increaſe there, as the like was neuer ſeene in any land, to their great plague. And at my being at the ſayd Aſtracan, there was a great famine and plague among the people, and ſpecially among the Tartarres called Nagayans, who the ſame time came thither in great numbers to render themſelues to the Ruſſes their enemies, and to ſeeke ſuccour at their hands, their countrey being deſtroyed, as I ſaid before: but they were but ill intertained or relieued, for there dyed a great number of them for hunger, which lay all the Iſlande through in heapes dead, and like to beaſtes, vnburyed, very pitifull to beholde: many of them Aſtracan.

were

were also solde by the Russes, and the rest were banished from the Island. At that time it had been an easie thing to haue conuerted that wicked Nation to the Christian faith, if the Russes themselues had beene good Christians: but how should they shew compassion vnto other Nations, when they are not mercifull vnto their owne. At my being there I could haue bought many goodly Tartars children, if I would haue had a thousande, of their owne fathers and mothers, to say, a boy or a wench for a loafe of bread worth fiue pence in England, but we had more need of victualles at that time then of any such merchandize. This Astracan is the furthest holde that this Emperour of Russia hath conquered of the Tartars towardes the Caspian sea, which hee keepeth very strong, sending thither euery yeere prouision of men, and victualles, and timber to builde the castle.

There is a certaine trade of merchandize there vsed, but as yet so small and beggerly, that it is not worth the making mention, and yet there come merchantes thither from diuers places. The chiefest commodities that the Russes bring thither are redde hides, redde sheepe skinnes, woodden vessels, bridles, and saddles, kniues, and other trifles, with corne, bacon, and other victualles. The Tartars bring thither diuers kindes of warres made of cotten wooll, with diuers kindes of wrought silkes: and they that come out of Persia, namely from Shamackie do bring sowing silke, which is the coursest that they vse in Russeland, Craska, diuers kindes of pide silkes for girdles, shirts of male, bowes, swoords, and such like things: and some yeeres corne, and walnuts, but all such thinges in such small quantitie, the merchantes being so beggerly and poore that bring the same, that it is not worth the writing, neither is there any hope of trade in all those parts worth the following.

The length of the Island of Astracan.

This foresaid Island of Astracan is in length twelue leagues, and in breadth three, and lieth East and West in the latitude of fortie seuen degrees nine minuts: we tarryed there vntill the first day of August, and hauing bought and prouided a boate in companye with certaine Tartars and Persians, we laded our goods, and imbarked our selues, and the same day departed I, with the said two Johnsons hauing the whole charge of the Nauigation downe the said riuer Volga, being very crooked, and full of flats toward the mouth thereof. We entred into the Caspian sea the tenth day of August at the Easterly side of the said riuer, being twentie leagues from Astracan aforesaid, in the latitude of fortie fiue degrees twentie seuen minuts.

Volga.

Volga hath seuentie mouthes or falles into the sea: and we hauing a large winde, kept the Northeast shoare, and the eleuenth day we sailed seuen leagues Eastnortheast, and came vnto an Island hauing an high hill thereon, called Accurgar, a good marke in the sea. From thence Eastten leagues, we fell with another Island called Bawhyata, much higher then the other. Within these two Islands to the Northwards, is a great bay called the Blew sea. From thence we sayled East and by North tenne leagues, and hauing a contrary winde, we came to an anker in a fathom water, and so ridde vntill the fifteenth day, hauing a great storme at Southeast, being a most contrary winde, which we ridde out. Then the winde came to the North, and we weyed, and set our course Southeast, and that day sayled eight leagues.

Thus proceeding forwards, the seuenteenth day we lost sight of land, and the same day sayled thirtie leagues, and the eightеenth day twentie leagues winding East, and fell with a land called Baughleata, being seuentie foure leagues from the mouth of the foresayd Volga, in the latitude of fortie fiue degrees fiftie foure minuts, the coast lying neerest East and by South, and West and by North. At the poynt of this land lyeth buryed a holye Prophet, as the Tartars call him, of theyr lawe, where great deuotion is vsed of all such Mahometistes as doe passe that waye.

The nineteenth day the winde being West, and we winding Eastsoutheast, we sailed tenne leagues, and passed by a great riuer called Yake, which hath his spring in the lande of Siberia, nigh vnto the foresayd riuer Cama, and runneth through the land of Nagay, falling into this Serachike.

Mare Caspium. And vp this riuer one dayes iourney is a towne called Serachicke, subiect to the aforesayd Tartar prince called Murse Smille, which is now in friendshippe with the Emperour of Russia. Heere is no trade of merchandize vsed, for that the people haue no vse of money, and are all men of warre, and pasturers of cattell, and giuen much to theft and murther. This being at an anker against this riuer Yake, and all our men being on lande, sauing I, who lay sore sicke, and fiue Tartars, whereof one was reputed a holy man, because hee came from Mecka, there came vnto vs a boate with thirtie men well armed and appoynted, who boorded vs, and beganne to enter into our barke, and our holy Tartar called Azy, perceiuing that, asked them what they would haue, and withall made a prayer: with that these rouers stayed, declaring that they were Gentlemen, banished from theyr countrey, and out of liuing, and came to seeke

there were any Russes or other Christians (which they call Caphars) in our barke: to whom this Azie most stoutly answered, that there were none, auowing the same by great othes of their lawe, (which lightly they will not breake) whom the rouers beleeued, and vpon his wordes departed. And so through the fidelitie of that Tartar, I with all my companie and goods were saued, and our men being come on boorde, and the winde faire, wee departed from that place, and winding East and Southeast, that day being the second of August sailed 16. leagues.

The 2. day wee passed ouer a bay of 6. leagues broade, and fell with a Cape of land, hauing two Ilands at the Southeast part thereof, being a good marke in the sea: and doubling that Cape the land trended Northeast, and maketh another bay, into which falleth the great riuer Yem, springing out of the land of Colmacke.

The Countrie of Colmacke.

The 22. 23. and 24. dayes, we were at an ancre.

The 25. the winde came faire, and we sailed that day 20. leagues, and passed by an Iland of low land, and there about are many flats and sands: and to the Northward of this Iland there goeth in a great bay, but wee set off from this Iland, and winded South to come into deepe water, being much troubled with shoalds and flats, and ranne that course 10. leagues, then East Southeast 20. leagues, and fel with the maine land, being full of copped hils, and passing along the coast 20. leagues, the further we sailed, the higher was the land.

The 27. day we crossed ouer a bay, the Southshoare being the higher land, and fell with a high point of land: and being ouerthwart the Cape, there rose such a storme at the East, that we thought verily we should haue perished: this storme continued 3. dayes. From this Cape we passed to a port called Mangoslaue. The place where wee should haue arriued at the Southermost part of the Caspian sea, is 12. leagues within a bay: but wee being sore tormented, and tossed with this foresaid storme, were driuen vnto another land on the other side the bay, ouerthwart the said Mangoslaue being very lowe land, and a place as well for the ill commoditie of the hauen, as of those brute fielde people where neuer barke nor boate had before arriued, not liked of vs.

But yet here we sent certaine of our men to lande to talke with the gouernour and people, as well for our good vsage at their handes, as also for prouision of camels to carry our goods from the saide sea side to a place called Sellyzure, being from the place of our landing fiue and twentie dayes iourney. Our messengers returned with comfortable wordes and faire promises of all things.

Wherefore the 3. day of September 1558. wee discharged our barke, and I with my companie were gently intertained of the Prince, and of his people. But before our departure from thence, wee founde them to bee very badde and brutish people, for they ceased not dayly to molest vs, either by fighting, stealing or begging, rayling the price of horse and camels, and victuals double, that the wont was there to bee, and forced vs to buy the water that wee did drinke: which caused vs to hasten away, and to conclude with them as well for the hier of camels, as for the price of such as wee bought, with other prouision, according to their owne demaunde: So that for euery camels lading being but 400. waight of ours, wee agreed to giue three hides of Russia, and foure wodden dishes, and to the Prince or gouernour of the saide people one ninth and two seuenths, Namely, 9. seuerall things, and twise 7. seuerall things: for money they vse none.

And thus being readie, the fourteenth of September wee departed from that place, being a Caruan of 1000. camels. And hauing trauailed fiue dayes iourney, wee came to another Princes Dominion, and vpon the way there came vnto vs certaine Tartars a horsebacke, being well armed, and seruants vnto the said Prince called Timor Soltan, gouernour of the said Countrey of Mangoslaue, where we ment to haue arriued and discharged our barke if the great storme aforesaid had not disappointed. These foresaid Tartars stayed our Caruan in the name of their prince, and opened our wares, and tooke such things as they thought best for their said prince without money, but for such things as they tooke from me, which was a ninth, (after much dissension) I rode vnto the same Prince, and presented my selfe before him, requesting his fauour, and passport to trauaile through his countrey, and not to be robbed nor spoiled of his people: which request he graunted me, and intertained me very gently, commanding mee to be well feasted with flesh and mares milke: for bread they vse none, nor other drinke except water: but money he had none to giue mee for such things as hee tooke of mee, which might bee of value in Russe money, fifteene rubbles, but hee gaue mee his letter, and a horse worth seuen rubbles. And so I departed from him being glad that I was gone: for hee was reported to bee a very tyrant, and if I had not gone vnto him, I vnderstoode his commaundement was, that I should haue bene robbed and destroyed.

This Soltan liued in the fieldes without Castle or towne, and sate at my being with him, in a litle rounde house made of reedes couered without with felt, and within with Carpets. There was with him the great Metropolitan of that wilde Countrey, esteemed of the people, as the Bishop of Rome is in most parts of Europe, with diuers other of his chiefe men: the Soltan with this Metropolitan, demanded of me many questions, as wel touching our kingdoms, lawes, and Religion, as also the cause of my comming into those parts, with my further pretence. To whom I answered concerning all things, as vnto me seemed best, which they tooke in good part. So leauing leaue I departed and ouertooke our Caraman, and proceeded on our iourney, and trauailed 20. dayes in the wildernes from the sea side without seeing towne or habitation, carying prouision of victuals with vs for the same time, and were driuen by necessitie to eate one of my camels and a horse for our part, as other did the like, and during the said 20. dayes we found no water, but such as we dre we out of olde deepe wells, being very brackish and salt, and yet sometimes passed two or three dayes without the same. And the 5. day of October ensuing, we came vnto a gulphe of the Caspian sea againe, where wee founde the water very fresh and sweete: at this gulphe the customers of the king of Turkeman met vs, who tooke custome of euery 25. one, and 7. ninthes for the saide king and his brethren, which being receiued they departed, and we remained there a day after to refresh our selues.

Note that in times past there did fal into this gulfe þ great riuer Oxus, which hath his springs in the mountaines of Paraponisus in India, and now commeth not so farre, but falleth into another riuer called Ardocke, which runneth towarde the North, and consumeth himselfe in the ground, passing vnder ground aboue 1000. miles, and then issueth out againe and falleth into the lake of Kithay.

Sellizure, or Shapsure.

We hauing refreshed our selues at the foresaide gulfe, departed thence the 4. day of October, and the 7. day arriued at a Castle called Sellizure, where the king (called Azim Can) remained with 3. other of his brethren, and the 9. day I was commaunded to come before his presence, whome I deliuered the Emperours letters of Russia: and I also gaue him a present of a ninche, who entertained me very well, and caused mee to eate in his presence as his brethren did, feasting me with flesh of a wilde horse, and mares milke without bread. And the next day sent for me againe, and asked of me diuers questions, as well touching the affaires of the Emperour of Russia, as of our Countrey and lawes, to which I answered as I thought good: so that at my departure he gaue me his letters of safe conduct.

This Castle of Sellizure is situated vpon an high hill, where the king called the Canbeth, whose palace is built of earth very basely, and not strong: the people are but poore, and litle trade of marchandise among them. The South part of this Castle is lowe lande, but very fruitfull, where growe many good fruites, among which there is one called a Dynie of a great bignesse and full of moysture, which the people doe eate after meate in steade of drinke. Also there growes another fruite called a Carbuse of the bignesse of a great cucumber, yellow and sweet as sugar: also a certaine corne called Iegur, whose stalke is much like a sugar cane, and as high, and the graine like rice, which groweth at the toppe of the cane like a cluster of grapes; the water that serueth all that Countrey is drawen by diches out of the riuer Oxus, vnto the great destruction of the said riuer, for which cause it falleth not into the Caspian sea as it hath done in times past, and in short time all that lande is like to be destroyed, and to become a wildernes for want of water, when the riuer of Oxus shall faile.

The 14. day of the moneth we departed from this Castle of Sellizure, and the 16. of the same we arriued at a citie called Vrgense, where we payde custome as well for our owne heads as for our camels and horse. And hauing there soiourned one moneth, attending the time of our further trauaile, the king of that Countrey called Aly Soltan, brother to the forenamed Azym Can, returned from a towne called Corozan within the borders of Persia, which hee lately had conquered from the Persians, with whome hee and the rest of the kings of Tartaria haue continuall warres. Before this king also I was commaunded to come, to whome I likewise presented the Emperours letters of Russia, and he intertained me well, and demaunded of me diuers questions, and at my departure gaue me his letters of safe conduct.

This Citie or towne of Vrgence standeth in a plaine ground, with walles of earth, by estimation 4. miles about it. The buildings within it are also of earth, but ruined and out of good order: it hath one long streete that is couered aboue, which is the place of their market. It hath been wonne and lost 4. times within 7. yeeres by ciuill warres, by meanes whereof there are but few marchants in it, and they very poore, and in all that towne I could not sell aboue 4. carseis. The chiefest commodities there solde, are such wares as come from Boghar, and out of Persia, but in most small quantitie not worth the writing. All the land from the Caspian sea to this Citie of Vrgence, gence, is called the lande of Turkeman, and is ſubiect to the ſaide Azim Can, and his brethren which be 5. in number, and one of them hath the name of the chiefe king called Can, but he is litle obeyed ſauing in his owne Dominion, and where hee dwelleth: for euery one will be king of his owne portion, and one brother ſeeketh alwayes to deſtroy another, hauing no naturall loue among them, by reaſon that they are begotten of diuers women, and commonly they are the children of ſlaues, either Chriſtians or Gentiles, which the father doeth keepe as concubines, and euery Can or Sultan, hath at the leaſt 4. or 5. wiues, beſides yong maydens and boyes, liuing moſt viciouſly: and when there are warres betwixt theſe brethren, (as they are ſeldome without) hee that is ouercome if hee be not ſlaine, flieth to the fielde with ſuch companie of men as will followe him, and there liueth in the wildernes reſorting to watering places, and ſo robbeth and ſpoyleth as many Caruans of Marchants and others as they be able to ouercome, continuing in this ſort his wicked life, vntill ſuch time as hee may get power and ayde to inuade ſome of his brethren againe. From the Caſpian ſea vnto the Caſtle of Sellizure aforeſaid, and all the Countreis about the ſaid ſea, the people liue without towne or habitation in the wilde fieldes, remouing from one place to another in great companies with their cattle, whereof they haue great ſtore, as camels, horſes, and ſheepe both tame and wilde. Their ſheepe are of great ſtature with great buttockes, waying 60. or 80. pound in waight. There are many wilde horſes, which the Tartars doe many times kill with their haukes, and that in this order.

The haukes are lured to ſeaſe vpon the beaſtes neckes or heads, which with chafing of themſelues and ſore beating of the haukes are tired: then the hunter following his game, doeth ſlay the horſe with his arrowe or ſword. In all this lande there groweth no graſſe, but a certaine buſh or heath whereon the cattell feeding, become very fat.

The Tartars neuer ride without their bowe, arrowes, and ſword, although it be on hauking, or at any other pleaſure, and they are good archers both on horſebacke, and on foote alſo. Theſe people haue not the vſe of golde, ſiluer, or any other coyne, but when they lacke apparell or other neceſſaries, they barter their cattell for the ſame. Bread they haue none, for they neither till nor ſow, they be great deuourers of fleſh, which they cut in ſmall pieces, and eate it by handfuls moſt greedily, eſpecially the horſefleſh. Their chiefeſt drinke is mares milke ſowred, as I haue ſaid before of the Nagayans, and they wilbe drunke with the ſame: they haue no riuers nor places of water in this countrey, vntil you come to the foreſaid gulfe, diſtant from the place of our lading 20. dayes iourney, except it be in wels, the water whereof is ſaltiſh, & yet diſtant the one from the other two dayes iourney and more. They eate their meate vpon the ground, ſitting with their leggs double vnder them, and ſo alſo when they pray. Arte or ſcience they haue none, but liue moſt idlely, ſitting round in great companies in the fields, deuiſing, and talking moſt vainely.

The 26. day of Nouember, wee departed from the towne of Vrgence, and hauing trauailed by the riuer Oxus 100. mile, we paſſed ouer another great riuer called Ardocke, where we paid a certaine petie cuſtome. This riuer Ardocke is great, and very ſwift, falling out of the foreſaid Oxus, and paſſing about 1000. mile to the Northward, it then conſumeth it ſelfe in the ground, and paſſing vnder the ſame about 500. mile, iſſueth out againe, and falleth into the lake of Kitay, as I haue before declared.

The 7. of December following, wee arriued at a Caſtle called Kait, ſubiect to a Soltan called Saramet Soltan, who ment to haue robbed all the Chriſtians in the Caruan, had it not bene for feare of his brother the king of Vrgence, as we were informed by one of his chiefeſt counſailers, who willed vs to make him a preſent, which he tooke, and deliuered: beſides we paide at the ſaide Caſtle for cuſtome, of euery camel one red hide of Ruſſia, beſides petie gifts to his officers.

Thus proceeding in our iourney, the tenth day at night being at reſt, and our watche ſet, there came vnto vs foure horſemen, which we tooke as ſpies, from whome wee tooke their weapons and bound them, and hauing well examined them, they confeſſed that they had ſeene the tract of many horſemen, and no footing of camels, and gaue vs to vnderſtande, that there were rouers and theeues abroade: for there trauaile ſtwe people that are true and peaceable in that Countrey, but in companie of Caruan, where there be many camels, and horſefeeting ne we without camels were to be doubted. Whereupon we conſulted & determined amongſt our ſelues, and ſent a poſte to the ſaide Soltan of Kayre, who immediatly came himſelfe with 300. men, and met theſe foure ſuſpected men which we ſent vnto him, and examined them ſo ſtraightly, and threatened them in ſuch ſort, that they confeſſed, there was a baniſhed Prince with 40. men 3. dayes iourney forward, who lay in waite to deſtroy vs, if he could, and that they themſelues were of his companie.

The Soltan therefore vnderſtanding that the theeues were not many, appointed vs 80. men well armed with a Capeaine to goe with vs, and conduct vs in our way. And the Soltan himſelfe returned backe againe, taking the 4. theeues with him. These souldiers trauailed with vs two dayes, consuming much of our victuals. And the 3. day in the morning very earely, they sent one before our Caruan, and hauing ranged the wildernes for the space of foure houres, they mette vs comming towardes vs, as fast as their horse could runne, and declared that they had found the tract of horses not farre from vs, perceiuing well that wee should meete with enemies, and therfore willed vs to appoint our selues for them, and asked vs what we would giue them to conduct vs further, or els they would returne. To whome we offered as we thought good, but they refused our offer, and would haue more, and so we not agreeing they departed from vs, and went backe to their Soltane, who (as wee coniectured) was priuie to the conspiracie. But they being gone, certaine Tartars of our companie called holy men, (because they had bene at Mecha) caused the whole Caruan to stay, and would make their prayers, and deuine howe wee should prosper in our iourney, and whether we should meete with any ill companie or no, to which, our whole Caruan did agree, and they tooke certaine sheepe and killed them, and tooke the blade bones of the same, and first sodde them, and then burnt them, and tooke of the blood of the saide sheepe, and mingled it with the powder of the saide bones, and wrote certaine Characters with the saide blood, vsing many other ceremonies and wordes, and by the same deuined and founde, that wee should meete with enemies and theeues (to our great trouble) but should ouercome them, to which sorcerie, I and my companie gaue no credite, but we found it true: for within 3. houres after that the souldiers departed from vs, which was the 15. day of December in the morning, we espied farre off diuers horsemen which made towards vs, and we (perceiuing them to be rouers) gathered our selues together, being 40. of vs well appointed, and able to fight, and wee made our prayers together euery one after his lawe, professing to liue and die one with another, and so prepared our selues. When the theeues were nigh vnto vs, we perceiued them to be in nomber 37. men well armed, and appointed with bowes, arrowes and swords, and the Captaine a prince banished from his Countrey. They willed vs to yeelde our selues, or els to bee slaine, but wee defied them, wherewith they shotte at vs all at once, and wee at them very hotly, and so continued our fight from morning vntill two houres within night, diuers men, horses and camels being wounded and slaine on both partes: and had it not bene for 4. handgunnes which I and my companie had and vsed, we had bene ouercome and destroyed: for the theeues were better armed, and were also better archers then we; But after wee had slaine diuers of their men and horses with our gunnes, they durst not approche so nigh, which caused them to come to a truce with vs vntill the next morning, which we accepted, and encamped our selues vpon a hill, and made the fashion of a Castle, walling it about with packes of wares, and layde our horses and camels within the same to saue them from the shotte of arrowes: and the theeues also incamped within an arrowe shotte also of vs, but they were betwixt vs and the water, which was to our great discomfort, because neither we nor our camels had drunke in 2. dayes before.

Thus keeping good watche, when halfe the night was spent, the Prince of the theeues sent a messenger halfe way vnto vs, requiring to talke with our Captaine in their tongue, the Caruan Bassa, who answered the messenger, I will not depart from my companie to goe into the halfe way to talke with thee: but if that thy Prince with all his companie will sweare by our Lawe to keepe the truce, then will I sende a man to talke with thee, or els not. Which the Prince vnderstanding as well himselfe as his companie, swore so lowde that wee might all heare. And then wee sent one of our companie (reputed a holy man) to talke with the same messenger. The message was pronounced aloude in this order, Our Prince demaundeth of the Caruan Bassa, and of all you that be Bussarmans, (that is to say circumcised) not destroy your bloods, that you deliuer into his handes as many Caphars, that is, vnbeleeuers (meaning vs the Christians) as are among you with their goods, and in so doing, hee will suffer you to depart with your goods in quietnesse, and to the contrary, you shall be handled with no lesse crueltie then the Caphars, if he ouercome you, as he doubteth not. To the which our Caruan Bassa answered, that hee had no Christians in his companie, nor other strangers, but two Turkes which were of their Lawe, and although hee had, hee would rather die then deliuer them, and that wee were not afraide of his threatnings, and that should hee knowe when day appeared. And so passing in talke, the theeues (contrary to their othe) carried our holy man away to their Prince, crying with a lowde voyce in token of victorie, Ollo, ollo. Wherewith we were much discomforted, fearing that that holy man would betray vs: but hee being cruelly handled and much examined, would not to death confesse any thing which was to vs preiudiciall, neither touching vs, nor yet what men they had slaine and wounded of ours the day before. When the night was spent, in the morning we prepared our selues to battel againe, which the theeues perceiuing, required to fall to agreement & assented much of vs: And to be briefe, the most part of our companie being loth to go to battel againe, and hauing litle to loose, & safe conduct to passe, we were compelled to agree, & to giue the theeues 20. ninthes (that is to say) 20. times 9. seuerall things, and a camell to carie away the same, which being receiued, the thieues departed into the wildernes to their olde habitation, and we went on our way forward. And that night came to the riuer Oxus, where wee refreshed our selues, hauing bene 3. dayes without water, and drinke, and tarried there all the next day, making merry with our slaine horses and camels, and then departed from that place, & for feare of meeting with the said theeues againe or such like, wee left the high way which went along the saide riuer, and passed through a wildernes of sand, and trauailed 4. dayes in the same before we came to water: and then came to a well the water being very brackish, and we then as before were in neede of water, and of other victuals, being forced to kill our horses and camels to eate. The riuer of Oxus.

In this wildernes also we had almost fallen into the handes of theeues: for one night being at rest, there came certaine scoutes, and caried away certaine of our men which lay a little separated from the Caruan, wherewith there was a great shoute and cry, and we immediatly laded our camels, and departed being about midnight and very darke, and drone fore till wee came to the riuer Oxus againe, and then we feared nothing being walled with the said riuer: and whether it was for that we had gotten the water, or for that the same theeues were farre from vs when the scoutes discouered vs, we know not, but we escaped that danger.

So vpon the 23. day of December wee arriued at the citie of Boghar in the lande of Bactria. This Boghar is situated in the lowest part of all the land, walled about with a high wall of earth, with diuers gates into the same: it is deuided into 3. partitions, whereof two parts are the kings, and the 3. part is for Marchants and markets, and euery science hath their dwelling and market by themselues. The Citie is very great, and the houses for the most part of earth, but there are also many houses, temples and monuments of stone sumptuously builded, and gilt, and specially bathstones so artificially built, that the like thereof is not in the worlde: the maner whereof is to long to rehearse. There is a little Riuer running through the middes of the saide Citie, but the water thereof is most vnholsome, for it breedeth sometimes in men that drinke thereof, and especially in them that be not there borne, a worme of an ell long, which lieth commonly in the legge betwixt the flesh and the skinne, and is pluckt out about the ancle with great art and cunning, the Surgeons being much practised therein, and if shee breake in plucking out, the partie dieth, and euery day she commeth out about an inche, which is rolled vp, and so worketh till shee be all out. And yet it is there forbidden to drinke any other thing then water, & mares milke, and whosoeuer is found to breake that lawe is whipped and beaten most cruelly through the open markets, and there are officers appointed for the same, who haue authoritie to goe into any mans house, to searche if hee haue either Aquauitæ, wine, or brage, and finding the same, doe breake the vessels, spoyle the drinke, and punish the masters of the house most cruelly, yea, and many times if they perceiue but by the breath of a man that he hath drunke, without further examination hee shall not escape their handes. Boghar a citie of Bactria.

There is a Metropolitane in this Boghar, who causeth this lawe to be so streighely kept, and he is more obeyed then the king, and will depose the king, and place another at his will and pleasure, as hee did by this king that raigned at our being there, and his predecessour, by the meanes of the saide Metropolitan: for hee betrayed him, and in the night slewe him in his chamber, who was a Prince that loued all Christians well.

This Countrey of Boghar was sometime subiect to the Persians, and doe now speake the Persian tongue, but yet now it is a kingdome of it selfe, and hath most cruel warres continually with the saide Persians about their religion, although they be all Mahometists. One occasion of their warres is, for that the Persians will not cut the haire of their vpper lippes, as the Bogharians and all other Tartars doe, which they accompt great sinne, and cal them Caphars, that is, vnbeleeuers, as they doe the Christians.

The king of Boghar hath no great power or riches, his reuenues are but small, and he is most maintained by the Citie: for he taketh the tenth penie of all things that are there solde, as wel by the craftes men, as by the Marchants, to the great impouerishment of the people, whome her keepeth in great subiection, and when he lacketh money, hee sendeth his officers to the shoppes of the saide Marchants to take their wares to pay his debts, and will haue credite of force, as the like he did to pay mee certaine money that hee owed me for 19. pieces of carsey. Their money is siluer and copper, for golde there is none currant: they haue but one piece of siluer, & that is worth 12. peace English, and the copper money are called Pooles, and 120. of them goeth to the value of the said 12. d. and is more cõmon paiment then the siluer, which the king causeth to rise and fall to his most aduantage euery other moneth, and sometimes twise in a moneth, not caring to oppresse his people, for that hee looketh not to raigne aboue 2. or 3. yeeres before hee be either slaine or driuen away to the great destruction of the Countrey and marchants.

The 26. day of the moneth I was commanded to come before the said king, to whom I presented the Emperour of Russia his letters, who interteined vs most gently, and caused vs to eate in his presence, and diuers times he sent for me, and deuised with me familiarly in his secret chamber, as well of the power of the Emperour, and the great Turke, as also of our countrey, lawes, and religion, and caused vs to shoote in handgunnes before him, and did himselfe practise the vse thereof. But after all this great intertainement before my departure he shewed himselfe a very Tartar: for he went to the warres owing me money, and sawe mee not paide before his departure; And although in deede hee gaue order for the same, yet was I very ill satisfied, and forced to rebate part, and to take wares as paiment for the rest contrary to my expectation, but of a beggar, better paiment I could not haue, and glad I was so to be paide and dispatched.

But yet I must needes praise and commende this barbarous king, who immediatly after my arriuall at Boghar, hauing vnderstoode our trouble with the theeues, sent 100. men well armed, and gaue them great charge not to returne before they had either slaine or taken the saide theeues. Who according to their commission ranged the wildernes in such sort, that they met with the said companie of theeues, and slewe part, and part fledde, and foure they tooke and brought vnto the king, and two of them were sore wounded in our skirmish with our gunners: And after the king had sent for me to come to see them, hee caused them all 4. to be hanged at his palace gate, because they were Gentlemen to the example of others. And of such goods as were gotten againe, I had part restored me, and this good iustice I found at his handes.

There is yeerely great resort of Marchants to this Citie of Boghar, which trauaile in great Carauant from the Countries thereabout adioyning, as India, Persia, Balke, Russia, with diuers others, and in times past from Cathay, when there was passage, but these Marchants are so beggerly and poore, and bring so little quantitie of wares, lying two or 3. yeeres to sell the same, that there is no hope of any good trade there to be had worthy the following.

The chiefe commodities that are brought thither out of these foresaide Countreys, are these following.

The Indians doe bring fine whites, which the Tartars doe roll about their heads, and all other kinds of whites, which serue for apparell made of cotton wooll and crasko, but golde, siluer, pretious stones, and spices they bring none. I enquired and perceiued that all such trade passeth to the Ocean sea, and the vaines where all such things are gotten, are in the subiection of the Portingals. The Indians carie from Boghar againe, wrought silkes, redde hides, slaues and horses, with such like, but of carseis and other clothe, they make litle accompt. I offered to barter with Marchants of those Countreis, which came from the furthest parts of India, euen from the Countrey of Bengala, & the Riuer Ganges, to giue them carseis for their commodities, but they would not barter for such commoditie as cloth.

The Persians doe bring thither Craska, wollen cloth, linnen clothe, diuers kindes of wrought pide silkes, Argomacks, with such like, and doe carrie from thence redde hides with other Russe wares, and slaues which are of diuers Countreis, but cloth they will buy none, for that they bring thither themselues, and is brought vnto them as I haue enquired from Aleppo in Syria, and the parts of Turkie. The Russes doe carrie vnto Boghar, redde hides, sheepes kinnes, wollen cloth of diuers sorts, wodden vessels, bridles, saddles, with such like, and doe carrie away from thence, diuers kindes of wares made of cotton woll, diuers kindes of silkes, Crasca, with other things, but there is but small veterance. From the Countreis of Cathay is brought thither in time of peace, and when the way is open, muske, rubarbe, satton, damaske, with diuers other things: at my being at Boghare, there came Carauans out of all these foresaid Countreis, except from Cathay, and the cause why there came none from thence, was the great warres that had dured 3. yeeres before my comming thither, and yet dured betwixt 2. great Countreis and cities of Tartars, that are directly in the way betwixt the said Boghar and the said Cathay, and certaine barbarous fielde people, as well Gentiles as Mahometists bordering to the saide Cities. The cities are called Taskent and Caskayre, and the people that warre against Taskent are called Cassaks of the law of Mahomet, and they which warre with the said countrey of Caskayre, are called Kings, Gentiles & idolaters. These 2. barbarous nations are of great force liuing in the fieldes without house or towne, & haue almost subdued the foresaide cities, & so stopped vp the way, that it is impossible for any Carauan to passe vnspoiled, so that 3. yeeres before our being there, no Carauan had gone, or vsed trade betwixt the Countreis of Cathay, and Boghare, & when the way is cleare, it is 9. moneths iourney.

To

To speake of the said Countrey of Cathay, and of such newes as I haue heard therof, I haue thought it best to reserue it to our meeting. I hauing made my solace at Boghar, in the Winter time, and hauing learned by much inquisition, the trade thereof, as also of all the other Countries thereto adioyning, and the time of the yeere being come, for all Caruans to depart, and also the king being gone to the warres, and newes came, that he was fled, and I aduertised by the Metropolitan himselfe, that I should depart, because the Towne was like to be besieged: I thought it good and meete, to take my iourney some way, and determined to haue gone from thence into Persia, and to haue seene the trade of that Countrey, although I had enformed my selfe sufficiently thereof, as well at Astracan, as at Boghar: and perceaued well the trades, not to be much vnlike the trades of Tartaria: but when I should haue taken my iourney that way, it was let by diuers occasions: the one was, the great warres that did newly begin betwixt the Sophie, and the kings of Tartaria, where by the waies they were destroied: and there was a Carrauan destroyed with rouers, and theeues, which came out of India, and Persia, by safe conduct: and about ten daies iourney from Boghar, they were robbed, and a great part slaine. Also the Metropolitane of Boghar, who is greater then the king, tooke the Emperours letters of Russia from me, without which I should haue bene taken slaue in euery place: also all such wares as I had receaued in barter for cloth, and as I tooke perforce of the king, and other his Nobles, in paiment of monie due vnto me, were not vendible in Persia: for which causes, and diuers others, I was constrained to come backe againe to Mare Caspium, the same way I went: so that the eight of March, 1559. we departed out of the said Citie of Boghar, being a Carauan of 600. Camels, and if we had not departed when we did, I and my companie had bene in danger to haue lost life and goods. For ten daies after our departure, the king of Samarc and came with an armie, & besieged the said Citie of Boghar, the king being absent, and gone to the warres against another prince, his kinsman, as the like chanceth in those Countries, once in two or three yeeres. For it is maruell, if a king raigne there aboue three or foure yeeres, to the great destruction of the Countrey, and marchants.

The 25. of March, we came to the foresaid towne of Vrgence, and escaped the danger of 400. theeues, which lay in waite for vs backe againe, being the most of them of kindred to that companie of theeues, which we met with going fourth, as we perceaued by foure spies, which were taken. There were in my companie, and committed to my charge, two Ambassadours, the one from the king of Boghar, the other from the king of Balke, and were sent vnto the Emperour of Russia: and after hauing taried at Vrgence, and the Castle of Zellysure, eight daies for the assembling, and making ready of our Caruan: the second of Aprill we departed from thence, hauing foure moe Ambassadors in our company, sent from the king of Vrgence, and other Soltans, his brethren, vnto the Emperour of Russia, with answere of such letters as I brought them: and the same Ambassadors were also committed vnto my charge, by the said kings, and princes: to whome I promised most faithfully, and swore by our lawe, that they should be well vsed in Rusland, and suffered to depart from thence againe in safetie, according as the Emperour had written also in his letters: for they somwhat doubted, because there had none gone out of Tartaria into Russia, of long time before. Vrgence.

The 23. of Aprill, we arriued at the Mare Caspium againe, where we founde our barke which we came in, but neither anker, cable, cocke nor saile: neuertheless we brought hempe with vs, and spunne a cable our selues, with the rest of our tackling, and made vs a saile of cloth of cotton woll, and rigged our barke, as well as we could, but boate or anker we had none. In the meane time, being deuising to make an anker of wood of a cart wheele, there arriued a barke, which came from Astracan, with Tartars, and Russes, which had two ankers, with whom I agreed for the one: and thus being in a readines, we set saile, and departed, I, and the two Iohnsons being Master and Purriners our selues, hauing in our barke the said fiue Ambassadors, and 25. Russes, which had bene slaues a long time in Tartaria, nor euer had before my comming, libertie, or meanes to get home, and these slaues serued to rowe when neede was. Thus sailing sometimes along the coast, and sometimes out of sight of land, the 13. day of May, hauing a contrarie winde, we came to an anker, being three leagues from the shoare, & there rose a sore storme, which continued 44. houres, and our cable being of our owne spinning, brake, and lost our anker, and being off a lee shoare, and hauing no boate to helpe vs, we hoised our saile, and bare roomer with the said shoare, looking for present death: but as God prouided for vs, we came into a creeke full of ooze, and so saued our selues with our barke, we liued in great discomfort for a time. For although we should haue escaped with our liues the danger of the sea, yet if our barke had perished, we knew we should haue bene, either destroied, or taken slaues by the people of that Countrey, who liue wildly in the field, like beastes, without house or habitation. Thus when the storme was ceased, we went out of the creeke again:

and

and hauing sette the lande with our Compasse, and taken certaine markes of the same, during the time of the tempest, whilest we ridde at our anker, wee went directly to the place where we ridde, with our barke againe, and founde our anker which wee lost: whereat the Tartars much maruelled, howe wee did it. While wee were in the creeke, wee made an anker of woode of Cart wheeles, which wee had in our barke, which we threwe away, when wee had founde our owne anker againe. Within two daies after, there arose another great storme, at the Northeast, and we lay a trie, being driuen farre into the sea, and much adoe to keepe our barke from sinking, the billowe was so great: but at the last, hauing faire weather, wee tooke the Sunne, and knowing howe the lande laye from vs, wee fell with the Riuer Yake, according to our desire, whereof the Tartars were very glad, fearing that wee shoulde haue bene driuen to the coast of Persia, whose people were vnto them great enemies.

The English flagge in the Caspian sea.

Note, that during the time of our nauigation, wee sette vppe the redde crosse of S. George in our flagges, for honour of the Christians, which I suppose was neuer seene in the Caspian sea before. We passed in this voyage diuers fortunes, notwithstanding the 28. of Maye, wee arriued in safetie at Astracan, and there remained till the tenth of June following, as well to prepare vs small boates, to goe vp against the streame of Volga, with our goods, as also for the companie of the Ambassadors of Tartarie, committed vnto me, to be brought to the presence of the Emperour of Russia.

This Caspian sea (to say some thing of it) is in length about two hundred leagues, and in breath 150. without any issue to other seas, to the East parte whereof, ioyneth the great desert Countrey of the Tartars, called Turkemen: to the West, the Countreyes of the Chyrcasses, the mountaines of Caucasus, and the Mare Euxinum, which is from the saide Caspian sea a hundred leagues. To the North is the riuer Volga, and the land of Nagay, and to the South part, ioyne the Countries of Media, and Persia. This sea is fresh water in many places, and in other places as salt as our great Ocean. It hath many goodly riuers falling into it, and it auoideth not it selfe, except it be vnder ground. The notable riuers that fall into it, are first the great riuer of Volga, called in the Tartar tongue Edell, which springeth out of a lake in a marrish, or plaine ground, not farre from the Citie of Nouogrode, in Russia, and it is from that springe, to the sea, about two thousand English miles. It hath diuers other goodly riuers falling into it, as out of Sebaria, Yaick, and Yeim: Also out of the mountaines of Caucasus, the riuers of Cyrus, and Arash, and diuers others.

As touching the trade of Shamakye in Media, and Tebris, with other townes in Persia, I haue enquired, and doe well vnderstande, that it is euen like to the trades of Tartaria, that is little vtterance, and small profite: and I haue bene aduertised that the chiefe trade of Persia is into Syria, and so transported into the Leuant seas. The fewe shippes vpon the Caspian Sea, the want of Parte and port Townes, the pouertie of the people, and the ice, maketh that trade naught.

At Astracan, there were Marchants of Shamakye, with whome I offered to barter, and to giue them kersies for their wares, but they would not, saying, they had them as good cheape in their Countrey, as I offered them, which was sixe rubbles for a kersie, that I asked: and while I was at Boghar, there were there brought thither out of Persia, cloth, and diuers commodities of our Countreies, which were solde as good cheape, as I might sell ours.

The tenth daye of June, wee departed from Astracan, towardes the Musko, hauing a hundred Gunners in our companie, at the Emperours charges, for the safe conduct of the Tartarre Ambassadors, and me. And the eight and twentieth daye of July following, we arriued at the Citie of Cazan, hauing beene vppon the waye from Astracan thither, sixe weekes, and more, without any refreshing of victuals: for in all that waye there is no habitation.

His arrinal at Mosco the 2. of September.

The seuenth of August following, we departed from Cazan, and transported our goods by water, as farre as the Citie of Morons, and then by land: so that the second of September, we arriued at the Citie of Musko, and the fourth day I came before the Emperours Maiestie, killed his hand, and presented him a white Cowes taile of Cathay, and a drumme of Tartaria, which he well accepted. Also I brought before him all the Ambassadors that were committed to my charge, with all the Russe slaues: and that day I dined in his Maiesties presence, and at dinner, his Grace sent me meate by a Duke, & asked me diuers questions, touching the lands, & Countreis where I had bene. And thus I remained at the Musko about your affaires, vntill the 17. day of February, that your wares were sent downe: & then hauing licence of the Emperours Maiesty to depart, the 21. day I came to your house at Vologhda, and there remained vntill the breaking vp of the yeere:

and

and then hauing ſeene all your goods laden into your boates, I departed with the ſame, and arriued withall in ſafetie at Colmogro, the 9. of May, 1560. And here I ceaſe for this time, intreating you to beare with this my large diſcourſe, which by reaſon of the varietie of matter, I could make no ſhorter, and I beſeech God to proſper all your attempts.

The Queenes Maieſties letters to the Emperour of Ruſsia, requesting licence, and ſafe conduct for Maſter Anthony Ienkinſon, to paſſe through his kingdome of Ruſsia, into Perſia, to the Great Sophie.

ELizabetha Dei gratia, Angliæ, &c. Regina, Sereniſſimo & potentiſſimo principi, D. Ioanni Baſiliwiche, Imperatori totius Ruſſiæ, Magno Duci, &c. Salutem, & omnium rerum proſperarum fœliciſſimum incrementum. Potentiſſime Princeps, res eſt nobis ad memorandum longè gratiſſima, illa veſtræ Maieſtatis, erga nos & noſtros amicitia. Quæ tempore fœliciſſimæ memoriæ Regis Edwardi Sexti, fratris noſtri chariſsimi, Dei benignitate incepta, deinceps verò veſtra non ſolùm ſingulari humanitate alta atque fota, ſed incredibili etiam bonitate aucta atque cumulata, nunc autem omnibus beneuolentiæ veſtræ officijs ſic firmata eſt atque conſtabilita, vt iam minimè dubitemus, quin ea ad laudem Dei, ad gloriam vtriuſque noſtrum, ad publicam noſtrorum vtrobique regnorum immenſam commoditatem, ad priuatam ſingulorum vtrinque ſubditorum optatam ſpem, certámque fœlicitatem multis ſit deinceps ſeculis duratura. Et quanquam hæc veſtra bonitas, pleniſsimè ſeſe effudit in omnes noſtros ſubditos, qui ſeſe in vllas imperij veſtri partes vnquam receperunt, (pro qua ingentes noſtras, vt par eſt, gratias veſtræ Maieſtati habemus, veſtriſque viciſsim in omni opportunitatis loco libentiſsimè feremus,) tamen abundantia benignitatis veſtræ, in accipiendo, rámque humaniter tractando noſtrum fidelem & perdilectum famulum Antonium Ienkinſon, qui has perfert literas, ſeorſim nobis gratiſsima exiſtit. Nam prętereſquam quòd nullis non locis veſtri Imperij & magna libertate, & ſumma humanitate veſtræ ſerenitatis non permiſſu ſolùm, ſed iuſſu etiam frueretur, veſtra bonitas tamen non in hac domeſtica benigne faciendi ratione conquieuit, ſed perlibenter & vltrò eundem noſtrum hunc perdilectum famulum, variis exteris principibus, quoquouerſus ipſe iter ſuum inſtituerat, literis ſuis, ſuo magno Imperiali ſigillo conſignatis commendauit. Quod beneficium illi vbiuis gentium, & viam ſine vllo periculo, propter publicam veſtram fidem, & aduentum cum magno fauore, propter veſtram commendationem, optatè quidem, & fœliciter è communiit. Itaq; quemadmodum gemina hæc veſtra beneuolentia, cum illa generalis exhibita in veſtro regno negotiantibus ſubditis noſtris vniuerſis, tum iſta ſeorſim præſtita huic Antonio Ienkinſon, perfidelí noſtro famulo, nobis

nobis in mente, non solùm ad gratam perpetuámque memoriam, verùm etiam ad mutuam, vel opportunam compensationem, firmissimè defixa est: ita, petimus à vestra Maiestate vt vtramque beneuolentiæ vestrę rationem & communem nostris vniuersis, & priuatam huic nostro dilecto famulo, vtrisque deinceps dignetur tueri, atque conseruare. Neque nos quidem diffidimus, quin quem fauorem vestra Maiestas anteà sua sponte Antonio Ienkinson, tum quidem priuato ostendit, eundem nunc nostro rogatu eidem Antonio in nostrum iam famulatum cooptato benignè velit denuò declarare. Et propterea à petimus à vestra Maiestate, vt dignetur iterum concedere eidem nostro famulo, literas suas commeatus, publicæ fidei, ac saluiconductus, quarum tenore, authoritate, atque præsidio, sit illi, familiaribus suis, & seruis, tutum, liberúmque, cum mercibus, sarcinis, equis, & bonis suis vniuersis, inuehendi euehendisque, per vestra regna, domicilia, atque prouincias, proficisci, ire, transire, redire, abire, & istic morari, quámdiu placuerit, & inde recedere quandocunque illi aut suis libitum fuerit. Et sicut non dubitamus, quin vestra Maiestas hęc omnia humanitatis grata officia, pro immensa bonitate suæ naturę benignè & largiter huic famulo nostro sit concessura, ita valdè optamus, adeóque petimus, vt vestra Maiestas eodem modo eundem nostrum famulum, vnà cum omnibus suis familiaribus, ac bonis, exteris alijs principibus literis suis dignetur commendare, præsertim verò atque seorsim, Magno Sophi, Persarum Imperatori, in cuius etiam imperia & ditiones idem noster famulus gratia potissimè experiundi peregrina commercia, proficisci vnà cum suis constituit.

Confidimus igitur hæc omnia nostræ postulata pro famuli spe, pro nostra expectatione, pro vestra bonitate, pro nostrorum vtrinque subditorum commoditate, fausta illi grata nobis, accepta etiam vestræ Maiestati, & nostris vtrobique perquam vtilia euasura. ¶ The same in English.

ELizabeth by the grace of God, Queene of England, &c. to the right excellent, and right mightie Prince, Lorde Iohn Vasiliwiche, Emperour of all Russia, &c. greeting, and most happie increase in all prosperitie. Right Mightie Prince, the amitie of your Maiestie towards vs, and our Subiects, is very pleasant to vs to be remembred, which being begunne by the goodnes of God, in the raigne of our most deere brother of happie memorie, King Edward the first, and afterwardes, though your not onely singular humanitie, fosde, and nourished, but also though your incredible goodnes increased, and augmented, is nowe so firmed, and established, with all manner of tokens of your beneuolence, that nowe wee doubt not, but that from hence forth, during many ages, the same shall endure to the praise of God, to both our glories, to the publike great commoditie of our Realmes on either part, and to the priuate vtter hope, and certaine felicitie of all our Subiects.

And although that this your goodnes hath bene aboundantly extended to all our Subiects, that haue at any time repaired into any part of your Empire, for the which wee giue (as reason is) your Maiestie right hartie thankes, and will againe shewe the like vnto yours, right willingly, whensoeuer opportunitie shall require: yet the aboundance of your benignitie both in receauing, and also in entertayning our faithfull, and beloued seruant, Anthonie Ienkinson, the bringer of these our letters, is vnto vs for him priuately very thankefull. For besides this, that in all places of your Empire, he not onely by your Maiesties sufferance, but also by your commandement, enioyed much libertie, and great friendshippe, your goodnes not ceasing in this your domesticall disposition of clemencie, did right willingly, and of your aboundant grace, commende the same our welbeloued seruant, by your letters, sealed with your Imperiall seale, to sundry forren Princes, vnto whome he was minded to iourney: which your magnificence did purchase vnto him happily, and according to his desire, both passage without all perill, though your notable credite, and also archieuing of his iourney though your commendation.

Therefore like as these your duplicated beneuolences, both that one generally exhibited to all our Subiectes, frequenting that your Realme, and also this the other extended apart to this our right faithfull seruant, Anthonie Ienkinson, is right assuredly fastened in our remembrance, not onely for a perpetuall, and gratefull memoriall, but also for a mutuall, and meete meere compensation: so wee desire of your Maiestie, to vouchsafe from hence forth to conserue and continue the geminate disposition of your beneuolences, both generally to all our Subiects, and also priuately to this our beloued seruant. And we doubt not, but that at our request, you will againe graciously shewe vnto the same Anthonie, nowe admitted into our seruice, the like fauour as heretofore your Maiestie of your meere motion, did exhibite vnto him, being then a priuate person. And therefore wee desire your Maiestie ctrsoones to graunt to the same our seruant, your letters of licence, passport, and safe conduct, through the tenor, authoritie, and helpe whereof, he, his seruants, together with their marchandizes, baggages, horses, and goods whatsoeuer, that shall be brought in, or carried out, by or through all your Empire, kingdome, dominions, and prouinces, may surely, and freely iourney, goe, passe, repasse, depart, and there tarry so long, as it shall please him: and from thence returne, whensoeuer it shall seeme good to him, or his: and as wee doubt not, but that your Maiestie in the goodnes of your nature, will graciously and abundantly grant all these good offices of humanitie, so wee doe hartely desire, that your Maiestie will likewise vouchsafe to commende the same our seruant, together with all his goods, by your letters, to other forren Princes, and specially to the Great Sophie, and Emperour of Persia, into whose Empire, and Iurisdictions, the same our seruant purposeth with his for to iourney, chiefly for triall of forreine marchandizes.

We therefore doe trust, that all these our demands shall tende, and haue effect, according to the hope of our seruant, and to our expectation, for your wealth, for the commoditie of both our Subiects, luckie to him, thankefull to vs, acceptable to your Maiestie, and very profitable to our Subiects on either part. God grant vnto your Maiestie, long and happie felicitie in earth, and euerlasting in heauen. The Queenes Maiesties letters to the Great Sophie of Persia, sent by Master Anthony Ienkinson.

ELizabetha Dei gratia, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Regina, &c. Potentissimo & inuictissimo Principi, Magno Sophi, Persarum, Medorum, Parthorum, Hyrcanorum, Carmanorum, Margianorum, populorum cis & vltrà Tygrim fluuium, & omnium intra Mare Caspium, & Persicum sinum nationum atque Gentium Imperatori salutem, & rerum prosperarum fœlicissimum incrementum. Summi Dei benignitate factum est, vt quas gentes, non solùm immensa terrarum spacia, & insuperabiles marium vastitates, sed & ipsi etiam cœlorum cardines longissimè disiunxerunt, ipsæ tamen literarum bono & mentis certa cogitata, & humanitatis grata officia, & intelligentiæ mutuæ multa commoda facilè inter se & opportunè possint communicare. Itaque cùm perdilectus, & fidelis noster famulus Antonius Ienkinson, qui has literas nostras perfert, cum bona venia, fauore, & gratia nostra hoc Angliæ nostræ regnum excedere, & in Persiam vsque, vestráque alias ditiones Dei benignitate penetrare constituerit, hoc illius institutum perlaudabile quidem, grato nostro fauore prosequi, & promouere studuimus: id quod eo nos libentiùs facimus, quoniam hoc eius propositum ex honesto studio commercij constituendi potissimùm cum vestris subditis, alijsque peregrinis hominibus, ad vestra regna confluentibus, omninò exortum sit. Propterea nobis & scribendum ad vestram Maiestatem, ab eaque petendum esse duximus, vt nostro rogatu dignetur concedere huic famulo nostro Antonio Ienkinson, literas publicæ fidei, & salui conductus, quarum authoritate atque præsidio, licitum, liberúmque sit illi, vnà cum suis familiaribus, seruis, sarcinis, mercibus & bonis vniuersis, per vestra regna, domicilia, ditiones, atque prouincias liberè, & sine impedimento proficiscí, ire, transire, redire, abire, & istic morari, quamdiu placuerit, & inde recedere, quandocunque illi vel suis lubitum fuerit. Si hæc sancta hospitalitatis iura & dulcia communis humanitatis officia, inter nos, nostra regna, nostrósque subditos libentèr constitui, sincerè coli, & constantèr conseruari queant, speramus nos, Deum Optimum Maximum effecturum, vt ab hijs paruis initijs, grandiora rerum momenta, nobis ad magna ornamenta atque decus, nostris ad summa commoda atque vsus, aliquando sint oritura: si quidem, vt non terra, non mare, non cœlum, ad nos longissimè separandos, quàm diuina ratio communis humanitatis, & mutuæ beneuolentiæ ad nos firmissimè missimè coniungendos plus virium habuisse videatur. Deus salutem omnem, & fœlicem in terris, & perpetuam in cœlis, vestræ concedat Maiestati. ¶ The same in English.

This letter was also written in Hebrue, and Italian.

ELizabeth, by the grace of God, Queene of England, &c. To the right mightie, and right victorious Prince, the Great Sophie, Emperour of the Persians, Medes, Parthians, Hyreanes, Carmanarians, Margians, of the people on this side, and beyond the River of Tygris, and of all men, and nations, betweene the Caspian Sea, and the gulph of Persia, greeting, and most happie increase in all prosperitie. By the goodnes of the Almightie God, it is ordayned, that those people, which not onely the huge distance of landes, and the inuincible wildernes of Seas, but also the very quarters of the heauens doe most farre separate, and seuer asunder, may neuertheless through good commendation by writing, both ease, and also communicate betweene them, not onely the conceaued thoughes, or deliberations, and gratefull offices of humanitie, but also many commodities of mutuall intelligence. Therefore whereas our faithfull, and right welbeloued seruant, Anthonie Ienkinson, bearer of these our letters, is determined with our license, fauour, and grace, to passe out of this our Realme, and by Gods sufferance to trauell euen into Persia, and other your Iurisdictions: wee minde truely with our good fauour, to sette forward, and aduance, that his right laudable purpose: and that the more willingly, for that this his enterprise is onely grounded vpon an honest intent, to establish trade of marchandize with your Subiects, and with other strangers trafficking your Realmes. Wherefore we haue thought good, both to write to your Maiestie, and also to desire the same, to vouchsafe at our request, to grant to our saide seruant, Anthonie Ienkinson, good passports, and safe conducts, by meanes, and authoritie whereof, it may be free, and lawfull for him, together with his familiars, seruants, cariage, marchandize, and goods whatsoeuer, through your Realmes, Dominions, Iurisdictions, and Prouinces, freely, and without impeachment, to iourney, goe, passe, repasse, depart, and tarry so long as he shall please, and from thence to returne, whensoeuer he or they shall thinke good. If these holye duties of entertainment, and sweete offices of naturall humanitie, may be willingly concluded, sincerely embraced, and firmely obserued betweene vs, and our Realmes, and Subiects, then we doe hope, that the Almightie God will bring it to passe, that of these small beginnings, greater moments of things shall hereafter spring, both to our furniture, and honors, and also to the great commodities, and vse of our peoples: so it will be knowen, that neither the earth, the seas, nor the heauens, haue so much force to separate vs, as the godly disposition of naturall humanitie, and mutuall beneuolence, haue to ioyne vs strongly together. God grant vnto your Maiestie, long, and happie felicitie in earth, and perpetuall in heauen. Dated in England, in our famous Citie of London, the 25. day of the moneth of Aprill, in the yeere of the creation of the world, 5523. and of our Lord Iesus Christ, 1561. and of our Raigne the third.

A remembrance giuen by vs the Gouernours, Consuls, and Assistants of the companie of Marchants, trading into Russia, the eight day of May, 1561. to our trustie friende Anthonie Ienkinson, at his departure towards Russia, and so to Persia, in this our eight iourney.

FIrst you shall vnderstand, that we haue laden in our good shippe, called the Swallowe, one Chest, the keyes whereof wee doe here deliuer you, and also a bill, wherein are written particularly the contents in the saide Chest, and what euery thing did coste: and because, as you knowe, the saide Chest is of charge, wee desire you, to haue a speciall regarde vnto it, and when God shall sende you vnto Musko, our minde and will is, that you, with the aduise of our Agents there, doe appoynt some such presents for the Emperour, and his sonne, either wrought clothe of golde, scarlet, or plate, as to your good discretion shall be thought thought meet, and when you haue deliuered vnto him the Queenes Maiesties letters, & our said present in the name of the company, we thinke it good that you make your humble suite vnto his highnesse in our name, to get his licence or safeconduct for you and all other our seruants or Agents at all times hereafter, with such wares and merchandize as you at this time, or they hereafter at all other times shall thinke good, to passe out of his dominions towards Tartaria, Persia, or other places, and also to returne vnto Mosco with such wares and merchandizes as you shall bring or send from any land or countrey that is not in his dominions, and if it be thought good by you and our Agents there to make composition with the Emperor or his officers for some certaine custome or tole vpon such goods as we shall passe that way, to the intent we might be the better fauoured, we referre it to your discretion, foreseeing that the opening of this matter be not preiudiciall vnto our former priuileges.

And for the sale of our cloth of golde, plate, pearles, saphyres, and other iewels, we put our trust and confidence in you principally to sell them for ready money, time to good debters, or in barter for good wares, so that you make our other Agents priuy how & for what price you sell any of the premises, and also deliuer such summes of money, billes or wares as you shall receiue, vnto our said Agents: thinking good, further, that if you perceiue that the plate or other iewels, or any part thereof will not be solde for profit before your departure from the Mosco, that then you cause them to be safe packed, and set order they may be sent hither againe in our shippes the nert peere, except you perceiue that there may be some profit in carrying some part of them into Persia, which we would not to be of any great value.

We haue also laden in the said Swallow and the other two ships, 80 fardles, conteining 400 karsies, as by the cunnoys do appeare, which fardles be packed, and appointed to be carryed into Persia: neuertheless if you chance to finde good sales for them in the Mosco, we thinke it were good to sell part of them there, and to carry the lesse quantity with you, because we be vncertaine what vent or sale you shall finde in Persia or other places where you shall come.

If you obtaine the Emperours licence to passe out of his dominions, and to returne, as aforesaid, and that you perceiue you may safely do the | me, our minde is, that at such time as you thinke best and most conuenient for that purpose, you | appoint so many, & such of our hyred seruants or apprentises as you thinke necessary & meet for our affayres, and may best be spared to go with you in your said voyage, whereof we would one to be such as you might make priuie of all your doings for diuers considerations and causes that may happen: which seruants & apprentises, we wil and command, by this our remembrance, to be obedient vnto you as vnto vs, not onely to go with you, and to do such things as you command them in your presence, but also to go vnto such countries or places as you shall appoint them vnto, either with wares or without wares, and there to remaine and continue so long as you shall thinke good, and if they or any of them will refuse to do such things as you do appoint them, as aforesaid, or that any of them (be he hyred seruant or apprentise) do misuse himselfe by any maner of disobedience or disorder, and will not by gentle and fayre meanes be reformed, we will that you send him backe to the Mosco, with straight order that he may be sent from thence hither, and let vs haue knowledge of his euill behauior, to the intent that if he be a hyred seruant we may pay him his wages according to his seruice, and if he be an apprentise we may vse him according to his deserts.

We will also that you take with you such karsies, scarlet, & other clothes, or any other such wares of ours, as you shall thinke good, and so in the name of God to take your iourney towardes Persia, either by the way of Astracan and Mare Caspium, or otherwise, as you shall see cause: and when God sendeth you into Persia, our minde is, that you repayre vnto the great Sophie with the Queenes Maiesties letters, if he be not too farre from the Caspian sea for you to trauell, and that you make him such a present as you shall thinke meete, and if you passe by any other kinges, princes, or gouernours, before or after you come to the presence of the Sophie, likewise to make them some present, as you see cause according to their estate and dignitie, and withall to procure letters of priuilege or safeconduct of the said Sophie or other princes in as large and ample maner as you can, for the sure establishing of further trade in merchandize by vs hereafter to be made, frequented and continued in those parts, not onely that we may freely sell in all places within his dominions such wares as we cary thither, but also buy and bring away any maner of wares or merchandizes whatsoeuer it be, that is for our purpose and commoditie within his dominions, with free passage also for vs at all times, to passe as often as we will with our goods and merchandize into any part of Iudia or other countryes thereunto adioyning, and in like maner to returne through his dominions into Russia or els where.

And for the sale of our karsies or other wares that you shall haue with you, as our trust is that you will doe for our most profite and commoditie: euen so we referre all vnto your good discretion, as well in the sale of our sayd goodes, as to make our returne in such thinges as you shall finde there, and thinke best for our profite. But if passage can not be had into Persia by Astracan, or otherwise, the next Summer, which shall be in the yeere 1562, then our minde is, that you procure to sell our karsies, and other such wares as are appointed for Persia, in the Mosco, or other the Emperours dominions, if you may sell them for any reasonable price, and then to employ your selfe with such other of our seruantes, as you shall thinke meete for the search of the passage by Noua Zembla, or els you to returne for England as you thinke good. Prouided alwayes, that if you doe perceiue or vnderstand, that passage is like to be had into Persia the Summer following, which shall be in the yeere 1563, and that you can not sell our karsies in the Emperours dominions, as aforesayd, at a reasonable price: then we will rather they may be kept till the sayd Summer in the yeere 1563, and then you to proceed forwards vpon your iourney towards Persia, as aforesayd. If passage into Persia can not be obteined the next yeere, neither good hope of passage in the yeere 1563, neither yet in the meane time, good sale of our karsies in the Emperours dominions, then we thinke good for you to see if you can practise to cary your sayd wares by safe conduct through Polonia, or any other wayes vnto Constantinople, or els where you thinke better sale may be had, then in Russia.

The passage of Noua Zembla.

Thus haue we giuen you to vnderstand our meanings in this intended aduenture: but forasmuch as we do consider and know, that if we should prescribe vnto you any certaine way, or direct order what you should doe, we might so worke cleane contrary to our purpose and intent: therefore knowing your approued wisedome with your experience, and also your carefull and diligent minde in the atchieuing and bringing to good successe (by the helpe of almighty God) all things that you take in hand, we doe commit our whole affayres concerning the sayd aduenture wholly vnto your good discretion, praying God so to prosper you, as may be first for his glory, secondly for the honour and commoditie of this realme, and next for our profit, with the increase of your good name for euer.

And yet further desiring, and also most earnestly requiring you as you tender the state of our company, that you will haue a speciall regard vnto the order of our houses & our seruants, aswell at Colmogro and Vologda, as at Mosco, and to see and consider if any misorder be amongst our seruants or apprentises, whereby you thinke we might hereafter be put to hinderance or losse of any part of our goods or priuiledge there, that you do not onely see the same reformed, but also to certifie vs thereof by your letter at large, as our trust is in you.

And for the better knowledge to be had in the prices and goodnesse of such things as we do partly suppose you shall finde in the parties of Russia, we doe herewith deliuer you a quantitie of certaine drugges, whereby you may perceiue how to know the best, and also there is noted the prices of such wares and drugges as be heere most vendible: also we deliuer you herewith one pound and one ounce weight in brasse, to the end, that you may thereby, and with the bill of prices of wares, know what things be worth heere. As for the knowledge of silks, we need not to giue you any instructions therof, other then you know.

Waights and drugs deliuered to M. Jenkinson.

Also if you vnderstand that any commoditie in Russia, be profitable for vs to haue with you into Persia or other places, our minde is that our Agents shall either prouide it for you, or deliuer you money to make prouision your selfe. And because the Russes say that in trauelling Eastwards from Colmogro thirtie or fortie dayes iourney, there is the maine sea to be found, we thinke that Richard Johnson might implay his time that way by land, and to be at Mosco time enough to go with you into Persia: for if it be true that he may trauell to the sea that way, and that he may know how many miles it is towards the East from Colmogro, it will be a great helpe for vs to finde out the straight and passage that way, if any be there to be had.

The maine sea within thirtie dayes East ward of Colmogro.

A compendious and briefe declaration of the iourney of M. Anthonie Ienkinſon, from the famous citie of London into the lande of Perſia, paſſing in this ſame iourney through Ruſſia, Moſcouia, and Mare Caſpium, aliàs Hircanum, ſent and imployed therein by the right worſhipfull Societie of the Merchants Aduenturers, for the diſcouerie of Lands, Iſlands, &c. Being begunne the foureteenth day of May, Ann. 1561: and in the third yeere of the raigne of the Queenes Maieſtie that now is: this preſent declaration being directed and written to the foreſayd Societie.

FIrſt imbarking my ſelfe in a good ſhippe of yours, named the Swallow, at Grauelend, hauing a fayre and good winde, our anker then weyed, and committing all to the protection of our God, hauing in our ſailing diuerſitie of windes, and thereby forced to direct and obſerue ſundry courſes (not here rehearſed, becauſe you haue beene thereof heeretofore amply informed) on the foureteenth day of July, the yeere aforeſaid, I arriued in the bay of S. Nicholas in Ruſſia: and the ſixe and twentith day of the ſame moneth, after conference then had with your Agents there, concerning your worſhippes affayres, I departed from thence, paſſing through the countrey of Vago, and on the eight day of Auguſt then following, I came to Vologda, which is diſtant from Colmogro ſeuen hundred miles, where I remained foure dayes, attending the arriuall of one of your boates, wherein was laden a cheſt of iewels with the preſent, by your worſhippes appointed for the Emperours Maieſtie: which being arriued, and the cheſt receiued, I therewith departed toward the citie of Moſcouia, and came thither the twentith day of the ſame moneth, where I immediatly cauſed my comming to be ſignified vnto the Secretarie of the Imperiall Maieſtie, with the Queenes highneſſe letters addreſſed vnto the ſame his Maieſtie, who informed the Emperour thereof. But his highneſſe hauing great affayres, and being at that preſent ready to be marryed vnto a Lady of Chirchaſſi, of the Mahometicall law, commanded that no ſtranger, Ambaſſadour, nor other, ſhould come before him for a time, with further ſtraight charge, that during the ſpace of three dayes that the ſame ſolemne feaſt was celebrating, the gates of the citie ſhould be ſhutte, and that no perſon, ſtranger or natiue (certeine of his houſholde reſerued) ſhould come out of theyr ſayd houſes during the ſayd triumph, the cauſe thereof vnto this day not being knowne.

The Queenes letters to the Emperor of Ruſſia.

The firſt of September following, the Emperour made a great feaſt, whereunto were called all Ambaſſadours and ſtrangers being of reputation, and hauing affayres: amongſt whom I was one, but being willed by the Secretarie firſt to come, and to ſhew him the Queenes Maieſties letters, I refuſed ſo to doe, ſaying I would deliuer the ſame vnto the Emperours owne hands, and not otherwiſe: which heard, the Secretarie anſwered, that vnleſſe he might firſt peruſe the ſaid letters, I ſhould not come into the Emperours preſence, ſo that I was not at the feaſt. Neuertheleſſe, I was aduertiſed by a noble man that I was inquired for by the Emperours Maieſtie, although the cauſe of my abſence was to his Maieſtie vnknowne. The next day following, I cauſed a ſupplication to be made, and preſented it to his highneſſe owne handes, and thereby declared the cauſe of my comming, ſignified by the Queenes Maieſties letters, and the anſwere of his ſayd Secretary, moſt humbly beſeeching his Grace that he would receiue and accept the ſame her highneſſe letters, with ſuch honor and friendſhippe, as his letters ſent by Oſepp Napeya, were receiued by the handes of our late Souereigne lady Queene Mary, or els that it would pleaſe his highneſſe to diſmiſſe me, ſaying that I would not deliuer the ſaid letters but vnto his owne handes, for that it is ſo vſed in our countrey. Thus the matter being pondered, and the effect of my ſuplication well digeſted, I was forthwith commanded to come with the ſayd letters before his Maieſtie, and ſo deliuered the ſame into his owne handes, (with ſuch preſents as by you were appointed) according to my requeſt, which were gratefully accepted, and the ſame day I dined in his Graces preſence, with great intertainment. Shortly after, I deſired to know whether I ſhould be licenced to paſſe through his highneſſe dominions into the land of Perſia, according to the Queenes Maieſties requeſt: hereunto it was anſwered, that I ſhould not paſſe thither, for that his Maieſtie ment to ſend an armie of men that way into the land of Chircaſſi, whereby my iourney ſhould should be both dangerous and troublesome, and that if I should perish therein, it would be much to his Graces dishonour, but he doubted other matters although they were not expressed. Thus hauing receiued his answere, neither to my expectation, nor yet contentation, and there remaining a good part of the yeere, hauing in that time solde the most part of your karsies and other wares appointed for Persia, when the time of the yeere required to returne for England, I desired passport, and post horses for money, which was granted: but hauing receiued my passport, ready to depart, there came vnto our house there Osip Nepeya, who perswaded me that I should not depart that day, saying that the Emperour was not truely informed, imputing great fault to the frowardnesse of the Secretary, who was not my friend: before whom comming againe the next day, and finding the same Secretary and Osip Nepeya together, after many allegations and obiections of things, and perceiuing that I would depart, I was willed to remaine vntill the Emperours Maiestie were spoken with againe touching my passage: wherewith I was content, and within three dayes after sending for me, he declared that the Emperors pleasure was, that I should not onely passe thorow his dominions into Persia, but also haue his Graces letters of commendations to foreyn princes, with certaine his affayres committed to my charge, too long here to rehearse: whereupon I appointed my selfe for the voyage, and the 15 day of March, the yeere aforesaid, I dined againe in his Maiesties presence in company of an Ambassadour of Persia and others, and receiuing a cuppe of drinke at his Maiesties hands, I tooke my leaue of his highnesse, who did not only giue me letters, as aforesaid, but also committed matter of importance & charge vnto me, to be done when I should arriue in those countries whither I intended to go, and hauing all things in readinesse for the same voyage, I departed from the citie of Mosco the 27 day of April 1562, downe by the great riuer of Volga, in company of the said Ambassador of Persia, with whom I had great friendship and conference all the way downe the same riuer vnto Astracan, where we arriued all in health the 10 day of June.

Requeſt to paſſe into Perſia through Moſcouia.

Osippe Nepeya Embassador from the Emperour of Russia to Q. Mary.

Astracan.

And as touching the situations of the cities, townes, castles and countreys, as well of Mahometans as also of Gentils adioyning to the same, whereby I passed from Mosco vnto Astracan, I omit in this treatie to rehearse, for that I heretofore haue declared the same most amply vnto you in my voyage to Boghar. Thus being arriued at Astracan, as is aforesaid, I repayred vnto the captaine there, vnto whom I was commended from the Emperours Maiesty, with great charge that he not only should ayd and succor me with all things needfull during my abode there, but also to safeconduct me with 50 gunners well appointed in two strooges or brigantines into the Caspian sea, vntill I had passed certaine dangerous places which pirats & rouers do accustome to haunt, & hauing prepared my barke for the sea, the Ambassador of Persia being before departed in a barke of his owne, the 15 day of July, the yeere aforesaid, I and my company tooke our voyage from the said Astracan, and the next day at a West sunne, passed the mouth of the said riuer being twentie miles distant, lying nere Southeast. The 18 at a Southwest sunne, we passed by three Ilands being distant nine miles from the said mouth of Volga, and Southsouthwest from thence, sailing Southsouthwest the next day, at a West by North sunne we fell with the land called Challica Ostriua, being foure round Ilands together, distant from the said three Ilands fortie miles. From thence sailing the said course the next day, we had sight of a land called Tuke, in the countrey of Tywmen, where pirats and rouers doe vse: for feare of whom we haled off into the sea due East fortie miles, and fell vpon shallowes out of the sight of land, and there were like to haue perished, escaping most hardly: then the 22 day we had sight of a goodly Iland called Chatalet, distant from the said Challica Ostriua a hundred miles, the winde being contrary, and a stiffe gale, we were not able to seize it: but were forced to come to an anker to the lee ward of the same six miles off in three or foure fathom water, being distant from the maine land to the West ward of vs, which was called Skafcayll or Connyke, a countrey of Mahometans, about miles, and so riding at two ankers a head, hauing no other prouision, we lost one of them, the storme and sea being growne very sore, and thereby our barke was so full of leakes, that with continuall pumping, we had much a doe to keepe her aboue water, although we threw much of our goods ouerboord, with losse of our boate, and our selues thereby in great danger like to haue perished either in the sea, or els vpon the lee shoare, where we should haue fallen into the handes of those wicked infidels, who attended our shipwracke: and surely it was very vnlike that we should haue escaped both the extremities, but onely by the power and mercy of God, for the storme continued seuen dayes, to wit, vntill the thirtith day of the same moneth: and then the winde comming vp at the West with faire weather, our anker weyed, and our saile displayed, lying South, the next day hailing to the shore with a West sunne, we were nigh a lande called by the inhabitantes Shyruansha, and there became againe to an anker, hauing the winde contrarie being distant from the sayd Shirake

150 miles, and there we continued vntill the third day of August, then hauing a faire winde, winding Southsoutheast, and sailing threescore miles, the next day at a Southeast sunne we arriued at a citie called Derbent in the king of Hyrcans dominion, where comming to land, and saluting the captaine there with a present, he made to me and my company a dinner, and there taking fresh water I departed. Derbent.

This citie of Derbent is an ancient towne, hauing an olde castle therein, being situated vpon an hill called Castowe, builded all of freestone much after our building, the walles very high and thicke, and was first erected by king Alexander the great, when he warred against the Persians and Medians, and then he made a wall of a woonderfull height and thickenesse, extending from the same citie to the Georgians, yea vnto the principall citie thereof named Tewflish, which wall though it be now raced, or otherwise decayed, yet the foundation remayneth, and the wall was made to the intent that the inhabitants of that countrey then newly conquered by the said Alexander should not lightly flee, nor his enemies easily inuade. A mighty wall. Of Typhis.

This citie of Derbent being now vnder the power of the Sophie of Persia, bordereth vpon the sea, adioyning to the foresaid land of Shalfeall, in the latitude of fortie one degrees. Fortie one degrees.

From thence sailing Southeast & Southsoutheast about 80 miles, the sixth day of August, the yeere aforesaid, we arriued at our landing place called Shabran, where my barke discharged: the goods layd on shore, and there being in my tent keeping great watch for feare of rouers, whereof there is great plenty, being field people, the gouernor of the sayd countrey named Alcan Murcy, comming vnto me, intertayned me very gently, vnto whom giuing a present, he appointed for my safegard fortie armed men to watch and ward me, vntil he might haue newes from the king of Shyruan. Shabran. Alcan Murcy the gouernor.

The 12 day of the same moneth newes did come from the king, with order that I should repayre vnto him with all speed: and for expedition, aswell camels to the number of fiue and fortie to carry my goodes, as also horses for me and my company were in readinesse, so that the goods laden, and taking my iourney from thence the said twelfth day, on the 18 of the same moneth, I came to a citie called Shamackye, in the said countrey of Hyrcan, otherwise called Shyruan, and there the king hath a fayre place, where my lodging being appointed, the goods were discharged: the next day being the 19 day, I was sent for to come to the king named Obdolowcan, who kept his court at that time in the high mountaines in tents, distant from the said Shamackye twentie miles, to auoid the iniury of the heat: and the 20 day I came before his presence, who gently intertayned me, and hauing kissed his handes, he bad me to dinner, and commanded me to sit downe not farre from him. King Obdolowcan.

This king did sit in a very rich pauilion, wrought with silke and golde placed very pleasantly, vpon a hill side, of sixteene fathom long, and sixe fathom broad, hauing before him a goodly fountaine of faire water: wherof he and his nobilitie did drinke, he being a prince of a meane stature, and of a fierce countenance, richly apparelled with long garments of silke, and cloth of golde, imbrodered with pearles and stone: vpon his head was a tolipane with a sharpe end standing vpwards halfe a yard long, of rich cloth of golde, wrapped about with a piece of India silke of twentie yards long, wrought with golde, and on the left side of his tolipane stood a plume of fethers, set in a trunke of golde richly inameled, and set with precious stones: his eareings had pendants of golde a handfull long, with two great rubies of great value, set in the ends thereof: all the ground within his pauilion was couered with rich carpets, and vnder himselfe was spred a square carpet wrought with siluer & gold, & therupon was laid two suitable cushions. Thus the king with his nobilitie sitting in his pauillion with his legs a crosse, and perceiuing that it was painefull for me so to sit, his highnesse caused a stoole to be brought in, and did will me to sit thereupon, after my fashion. The maiestie & attyre of king Obdolowcan.

Dinner time then approching, diuers clothes were spred vpon the ground, and sundry dishes serued, and set in a ranke with diuers kindes of meats, to the number of 140 dishes, as I numbred them, which being taken away with the table clothes, and others spred, a banket of fruites of sundry kindes, with other banketting meates, to the number of 150 dishes, were brought in: so that two seruices occupyed 290 dishes, and at the end of the said dinner & banket, the king said vnto me Quoshe quelde, that is to say, welcome: and called for a cup of water to be drawen at a fountaine, and tasting thereof, did deliuer me the rest, demanding how I did like the same, and whether there were so good in our countrey or not: vnto whom I answered in such sort, that he was therewith contented: then he proponed vnto me sundry questions, both touching religion, and also the state of our countryes, and further questioned whether the Emperour of Almaine, the Emperour of Russia, or the great Turke, were of most power, with many other things too long heere to rehearse, to whom I answered as I thought most meet. Then he demanded whether I intended to goe any further, and the cause of my comming: vnto that I answered, that I was sent with letters from the Queenes most excellent Maiesty of England, vnto the great Sophie, to intreat friendshippe and free passage, and for his safeconduct to be granted vnto The Queenes letters to the Sophie.

English merchants to trade into his Seignories, with the like also to be granted to his subiectes, when they should come into our countreys, to the honour and wealth of both realmes, and commoditie of both theyr subiects, with diuers other words, which I omit to rehearse. This said king much allowing this declaration, said that he would not onely giue me passage, but also men to safeconduct me vnto the sayd Sophie, lying from the foresaid citie of Shamakye thirtie dayes iourney, vp into the land of Persia, at a castle called Casbin: so departing from the king at that time, within three dayes after, being the foure and twentie day of August the yeere aforesayd, he sent for me againe: vnto whom I repayred in the morning, and the king not being risen out of his bedde (for his maner is, that watching in the night, and then banketting with his women, being a hundred and fortie in number, he sleepeth most in the day) did giue one commandement that I should ride an hawking with many Gentlemen of his Court: and that they should shew me so much game and pastime as might be, which was done, and many cranes killed: we returned from hawking about three of the clocke at the afternoone. The king then risen, and ready to dinner, I was inuited thereunto, and approching nigh to the entring in of his tent, and being in his sight two gentlemen incountred me with two garmentes of that countrey fashion, side downe to the ground, the one of silke, and the other of silke and golde, sent vnto me from the king, and, after that they caused me to put off my vpper garment, being a gowne of blacke veluet furred with Sables, they put the sayd two garments vpon my backe, and so conducted me vnto the king, before whom doing reuerence, and kissing his hand, he commanded me to sit not farre from him, and so I dined in his presence, he at that time being very merry, and demanding of me many questions, and amongst other, how I like the maner of theyr hawking. Dinner so ended, I required his highnesse safeconduct for to depart towards the Sophie, who dismissing me with great fauour, and appointing his Ambassadour (which returned out of Russia) and others, to safeconduct me, he gaue me at my departure a fayre horse with all furniture, and custome free from thence with all my goods. So I returned to Shamakye againe, where I remayned vntill the first of October, to prouide camels, horses, and other necessaries for my sayd intended iourney.

Casbin.

Multitude of concubines.

But now before I proceed further, I purpose to write something of this countrey of Hyrcan, now called Shyruan, with the townes and commodities of the same. This countrey of Hyrcan in times past was of great renowme, hauing many cities, townes, and castles in it: and the kings thereof in time of antiquitie were of great power, able to make warres with the Sophies of Persia: but now it is not onely otherwise (for that the cities, townes and castles be decayed) but also the king is subiect to the sayd Sophie, (although they haue theyr proper king) and be at the commandement of the sayd Sophie, who conquered them not many yeeres passed, for theyr diuersitie in religion, and caused not onely all the nobilitie and gentlemen of that countrey to be put to death, but also ouer and besides, rased the walles of the cities, townes, and castles of the said realme, to the intent that there should be no rebellion, & for theyr great terrour, caused a turret of free stone and flints to be erected in the sayd citie called Shamakye, and in a ranke of flints of the sayd turret, did set the heads of the sayd nobilitie and gentlemen, then executed: this citie is distant from the sea side, with camels seuen dayes iourney, but now the same being much decayed, and chiefly inhabited with Armenians, another citie called Arrash, bordering vpon the Georgians, is the chiefest and most opulent in the trade of merchandize, and thereabouts is nourished the most abundant growth of raw silke, and thither the Turkes, Syrians, and other strangers do resort and traffike. There be also diuers good and necessarie commodities to be prouided and had in this said realme: videlizet, galles, rough and smooth, cotten wooll, allome, and raw silke of the naturall growth of that countrey. Besides, there all kinde of spices and drugges, and some other commodities, which are brought thither from out of East India, but in the lesse quantitie, for that they be not assured to haue vent or veterance of the same: but the chiefest commodities be there, raw silkes of all sortes, whereof there is great plenty. Not farre from the sayd citie of Shamakye, there was an olde castle called Gullistone, now beaten downe by this Sophie, which was esteemed to be one of the strongest castles in the world, and was besieged by Alexander the great, long time before he could winne it. And not farre from the said castle was a Nunnery of sumptuous building, wherein was buried a kinges daughter, named Amalecke Channa, who slew her selfe with a knife, for that her father would haue forced her (the professing chastitie) to haue married with a king of Tartary, vpon which occasion the maidens of that countrey doe resort thither once euery yeere to lament her death.

Also in the said countrey there is a high hill called Quiquiffs, vpon the toppe whereof (as it is commonly reported) did dwell a great Giant, named Arneoste, hauing vpon his head two great hornes, and eares, and eyes like a horse, and a tayle like a cowe. It is further said, that this this monſter kept a paſſage thereby, vntill there came an holy man (termed Haucoire Hamſhe) a kinſman to one of the Sophies, who mounted the ſaid hil, and combatting with the ſaid Giant, did bind not onely him in chaines, but alſo his woman called Lamiſache, with his ſonne named After: for which victorie they of that countrey haue this holy man in great reputation, and the hill at this day (as it is byuited) ſauoureth ſo ill, that no perſon may come nigh vnto it. But whether it be true or not, I referre it to further knowledge.

Now to returne to the diſcourſe of the proceeding in my voiage towards the great Sophie. The 6. of October in the yeere aforeſayd, I with my company departed from Shamachie aforeſayd, and hauing iourneied three ſcore miles, came to a towne called Yauate, wherein the king hath a faire houſe, with orchards and gardens, well repleniſhed with fruites of all ſorts. By this towne palleth a great riuer called Curre, which ſpringeth in the mountains of the Georgians, and paſſing through the countrey of Hircania aforeſaid, falleth in to the Caſpian or Hircan ſea, at a place betweene two ancient townes called Shabran and Bacowe, ſituate within the realme of Hircane, and from thence iſſueth further, paſſing through a fruitfull countrey, inhabited with paſturing people, which dwell in the Summer ſeaſon vpon mountaines, and in Winter they remoue into the valleys without reſorting to townes or any other habitation: and when they remoue, they do iourney in Carrauans or troopes of people and cattell, carrying all their wiues, children and baggage vpon bullocks. Now paſſing this wild people ten dayes iourney comming into no towne or houſe, the 16. day of October we arriued at a citie called Ordowill, where we were lodged in a hoſpitall builded with faire ſtone, and erected by this Sophies father named Iſmael, onely for the ſuccour and lodging of ſtrangers and other trauellers, wherein all men haue victuals and feeding for man and horſe, for 3. dayes, and no longer. This foreſayd late prince Iſmael, lieth buried in a faire Meskit, with a ſumptuous ſepulchre in the ſame, which he cauſed to be made in his life time. This towne Ordowill is in the latitude of 38. degrees, an ancient citie in the prouince of Aderraugan, wherein the princes of Perſia are commonly buried, and there Alexander the great did keepe his court when he inuaded the Perſians. Foure daies iourney to the Weſtward is the Citie Tebris, in old time called Tauris, the greateſt citie in Perſia, but not of ſuch trade of merchandize as it hath bene, or as others be at this time, by meane of the great inuaſion of the Turke, who hath conquered from the Sophie almoſt to the ſayd Citie of Tauris, which the ſayd Turke once ſacked, and thereby cauſed the Sophie to forſake the ſame, and to keepe his court ten dayes iourney from thence, at the ſayd Citie of Casbin.

The 21. day wee departed from Ordowil aforeſaid, trauelling for the moſt part ouer mountaines all in the night ſeaſon, and reſting in the day being deſtitute of wood, and therefore were forced to vſe for fewell the dung of horſes and camels, which we bought deare of the paſturing people. Thus paſſing ten dayes iourney the yeare aforeſayd, the ſecond day of Nouember we arriued at the foreſayd Citie of Casben, where the ſayd Sophie keepeth his court, and were appointed to a lodging not farre from the kings pallace, and within two dayes after the Sophie commaunded a prince called Shallie Murzey ſonne to Obdolowcan king of Shiruan aforeſayd, to ſend for me to his houſe, who aſked me in the name of the ſayd Sophie how I did, and whither I were in health, and after did welcome me, and inuited me to dinner, whereat I had great entertainment, and ſo from thence I returned to my lodging. The next day after I ſent my interpreter vnto the Sophies Secretarie, declaring that I had letters directed from our moſt gracious Soueraigne ladie the Queenes moſt excellent maieſtie of the Realme of England, vnto the ſayd Sophie, and that the cauſe of my comming was expreſſed in the ſame letters, deſiring that at conuenient time I might come into his maieſties preſence, who aduertiſing the Sophie thereof, ſhortly after anſwered mee that there were great affaires in hand: Which being finiſhed, I ſhould come before his preſence, willing mee in the meane time to make readie my preſent if I had any to deliuer.

M. Jenkinſons arrual at the Sophies court. 2. Nouember, 1562.

At this time the great Turkes Amballadour arriued foure dayes before my comming, who was ſent thither to conclude a perpetuall peace betwixt the ſame great Turke and the Sophie, and brought with him a preſent in gold and faire horſes, with rich furnitures and other gifts eſteemed to be worth fortie thouſand pound. And thereupon a peace was concluded with ioyfull feaſtes, triumphs and ſolemnities, corroborated with ſtrong othes, by their lawe of Alkaron, for either to obſerue the ſame, and to liue alwayes after as ſworne brethren, ayding the one the other againſt all princes that ſhould warre againſt them, or either of them. And vpon this concluſion the Sophie cauſed the great Turkes ſonne named Baiſet Soltan, a valiaunt prince, (who beyng fled from his father vnto the Sophie, had remayned in his court the ſpace of foure yeeres) to bee put to death. In which time the ſayd Turkes ſonne had cauſed mortall warres betwixt the ſayd princes, princes, and much preuailed therein: The Turke demaunded therefore his sonne to bee sent vnto him, and the Sophie refused thereunto to consent. But now being slaine according to the Turkes will, the Sophie sent him his head for a present, not a little desired, and acceptable to the vnnaturall father. Discoursing at my first arriuall with the king of Shiruan of sundry matters, and being intertained as hath bene before declared, the sayd king named Obdolocan, demaunding whether that wee of England had friendship with the Turkes or not, I answered that we neuer had friendship with them, and that therefore they would not suffer vs to passe through their countrie into the Sophie his dominions, and that there is a nation named the Venetians, not farre distant from vs, which are in great league with the sayd Turkes, who trade into his dominions with our commodities, chiefly to barter the same for rawe silkes, which (as wee vnderstand) come from thence: and that if it would please the sayde Sophie and other princes of the countrey, to suffer our merchaunts to trade into those dominions, and to giue vs passeport and safe conduct for the same, as the sayde Turke hath graunted to the sayde Venetians, I doubted not but that it should growe to such a trade to the profite of them as neuer before had bene the like, and that they should bee both furnished with our commodities, and also haue vtterance of theirs, although there neuer came Turke into their land, perswading with many other woordes for a trade to be had. This king vnderstanding the matter liked it maruellously, saying, that he would write vnto the Sophie concerning the same: as he did in very deede, assuring me that the Sophie would graunt my request, & that at my returne vnto him he would giue me letters of safe conduct, and priuiledges. The Turkes Ambassadour was not then come into the land, neither any peace hoped to be concluded, but great preparation was made for warre which was like much to haue furthered my purpose, but it chaunced otherwise. For the Turkes Ambassadour being arriued, and the peace concluded, the Turkish merchants there at that time present, declared to the same Ambassadour, that my comming thither (naming mee by the name of Franke) would in great part destroy their trade, and that it should bee good for him to perswade the Sophie not to fauour me, as his highnesse ment to obserue the league and friendship with the great Turke his master, which request of the Turkish merchants, the same Ambassadour earnestly preferred, and being afterwards dismissed with great honour hee departed out of the Realme with the Turkes sonnes head as aforesayd, and other presents.

The Turkes Amballadour to the Sophie.

Shaw Thomas the Sophies name.

The 20. day of Nouember aforesayd, I was sent for to come before the sayd Sophie, otherwise called Shaw Thomas, and about three of the clocke at after noone I came to the court, and in lighting from my horse at the court gate before my feete touched the ground, a paire of the Sophies owne shoes termed in the Persian tongue (Basmackes) such as her himselfe weareth when he ariseth in the night to pray (as his maner is) were put vpon my feete, for without the same shoes I might not be suffered to tread vpon his holy ground, being a Christian, and called amongst them Gower, that is, vnbeleeuer, and vncleane: esteeming all to bee infidels and Pagans which be not beleeue as they doe, in their false filthie prophets, Mahomet and Murtezallie. At the first court gate the things that I brought to present his maiestie with, were deuided by sundry parcels to sundry seruitors of the court, to carry before me, for none of my companie or seruaunts might be suffered to enter into the court with me, my interpreter only excepted. Thus comming before his maiestie with such reuerence as I thought meete to bee vsed, I deliuered the Queenes maiesties letters with my present, which he accepting, demaunded of me of what country of Franke I was, and what affaires I had there to do: vnto whom I answered that I was of the famous Citie of London within the noble realme of England, and that I was sent thither from the most excellent and gracious soueraigne Ladie Elizabeth, Queene of the sayd Realme for to treate of friendship, and free passage of our merchaunts and people, to repaire and traffique within his dominions, for to bring in our commodities, and to carrie away theirs to the honour of both princes, the mutuall commoditie of both realmes, and wealth of the subiects, with other woords here omitted. He then demaunded me in what language the letters were written. I answered, in the Latine, Italian and Hebrew: well sayd he, we haue none within our realme that vnderstand those tongues. Whereunto I answered that such a famous and woorthie Prince (as hee was) ought not people of all nations within his large dominions to interprete the same. Then he questioned with me of the state of our countries, and of the power of the Emperour of Almaine, King Philip, and the great Turke, and which of them was of most power: whom I answered to his contemplation, not dispraysing the great Turke, their late concluded friendship considered. Then he reasoned with me much of religion, demaunding whether I were a Gower, that is to say, an vnbeleeuer or a Muselman, that is, of Mahomets lawe. Unto whom I answered, that I was neither no beleeuer nor Mahometan, but a Christian. What is that sayd hee vnto the king of Georgiana

The Sophies questions.

sonne, who being a Christian was fled vnto the sayd Sophie, and hee answered that a Christian was he that beleeueth in Iesus Christus, affirming him to bee the sonne of God, and the greatest prophet: Doest thou beleeue so sayd the Sophie vnto me? Yea that I doe, sayd I: Oh thou vnbeleeuer sayd he, we haue no neede to haue friendship with the vnbeleeuers, and so willed mee to depart. I being glad thereof did reuerence and went my way, being accompanied with many of his gentlemen and others, and after mee followed a man with a Basanet of sand, sifting all the way that I had gone within the said pallace, euen from the sayd Sophies sight vnto the court gate.

The entresse of Shally Murzey.

Thus I repaired againe vnto my lodging, and the sayd night Shally Murzey sonne to the king of Hircane aforesayd, who fauoured mee very much for that I was commended vnto him from his father, willed me not to doubt of any thing, putting me in hope that I should haue good successe with the Sophie, and good intertainment.

Thus I continued for a time, daily resorting vnto me diuers gentlemen sent by the Sophie to conferre with me, especially touching the affaires of the Emperour of Russia, and to know by what way I intended to returne into my countrey, either by the way that I came, or by the way of Ormus, and so with the Portingals shippes. Vnto whom I answered, that I durst not returne by the way of Ormus, the Portingals and wee not being friends, fully perceiuing their meaning: for I was aduertised that the sayde Sophie meant to haue warres with the Portingals, and would haue charged me that I had bene come for a spie to passe through his dominions vnto the said Portingals, thinking them and vs to bee all one people, and calling all by the name of Franks, but by the prouidence of God this was preuented.

Warres intended against the Portingals.

After this the sayd Sophie conferred with his nobilitie and counsell concerning me, who perswaded, that he should not entertaine me well, neither dismisse mee with letters or gifts, considering that I was a Franke, and of that nation that was enemie to the great Turke his brother, perswading that if hee did otherwise, and that the newes thereof should come to the knowledge of the Turke, it should be a meane to breake their new league and friendship lately concluded: dissuading further because hee had no neede, neither that it was requisite for him to haue friendship with vnbeleeuers, whose countreys lay farre from him, and that it was best for him to send mee with my letters vnto the sayde great Turke for a present, which he was fully determined to haue done at some meete time, meaning to send his Ambassadour vnto the sayd great Turke very shortly after.

The king of Hircanes second letters in M. Jenkinsons behalfe.

But the king of Hircanes sonne aforesayd, vnderstanding this deliberation, sent a man in post vnto his father, for to declare and impart the purpose vnto him, who as a gracious prince, considering that I had passed through his dominions, and that I had iourneyed for a good intent, did write to the Sophie all that which hee vnderstood of his sayd determination, and that it should not stand with his maiesties honour to doe me any harme or displeasure, but rather to giue mee good entertainment, seeing I was come into his land of my free will, and not by constraint, and that if hee vsed me euill, there would few straungers resort into his countrey, which would be greatly vnto his hinderance, with many other perswasions: which after that the sayd Sophie had well and throughly pondered and digested (much esteeming the same king of Hircane, being one of the valiantest princes vnder him and his nigh kinseman) changed his determined purpose, and the 20. day of March, 1562. he sent to me a rich garment of cloth of gold, and so dismissed me without any harme.

Conference with Indian merchants.

During the time that I soiourned at the sayd citie of Casbin, diuers merchaunts out of India came thither vnto mee, with whom I conferred for a trade of spices: whereunto they answered that they would bring of all sortes so much as wee would haue, if they were sure of vent, whereof I did promise to assure them, so that I doubt not but that great abundance thereof may from time to time be there prouided and had.

M. Jenkinsons returne.

The same twentith day of March I returned from the sayd citie of Casbin where I remayned all the Winter, hauing sent away all my cammels before, and the thirteth day I came to the sayde Citie of Ordowill, and the fifteenth of Aprill vnto Zauant aforesayde, where king Obdolowcan was at that present, who immediately sent for mee, and demaunding of mee many questions, declared that if it had not bene for him, I had bene vtterly cast away, and sent to the great Turke for a present by the Sophie, though the euill perswasion of his wicked counsell, and that the Zieties and holy men were the chiefe and principall procurers and mouers thereof: but the Sophie himselfe meant mee much good at the first, and thought to haue giuen me good entertainement, and so had done, had not the peace and league fortuned to

haue bene concluded betweene them and the great Turke. Neuertheleſſe, ſayd he, the Sophie hath written vnto me to entertaine you well, and you are welcome into my countrey, and ſo he intreated mee very gently, in whoſe court I remayned ſeuen dayes, and obteined of him letters of ſafe conductes and priuiledges in your names to be free from paying cuſtome, which I deliuered vnto your ſeruaunts Thomas Alcocke and George Wyen, at their departure towards Perſia for your affaires: and his highneſſe did giue mee two garmentes of ſilke, and ſo diſmiſſed me with great fauour, ſending with me his Ambaſſadour againe vnto the Emperour of Ruſſia, and committed the chiefeſt ſecrete of his affayres vnto mee, to declare the ſame vnto the Emperours maieſtie at my returne: and thus departing the tenth day of Aprill, I came to the Citie of Shamachie, and there remayning certaine dayes for prouiſion of cammels downe to the Sea ſide, I ſent from thence before, men to repayre my barke, and to make her in a readineſſe. And during my abode in Shamachie, there came vnto me an Armenian ſent from the king of Georgia, who declared the lamentable eſtate of the ſame king, that being encloſed betwixt thoſe two cruell tyrants and mighty princes, the ſayd great Turke and the Sophie, he had continuall warres with them, requiring for the loue of Chriſt and as I was a Chriſtian, that I would ſend him comfort by the ſayd Armenian, and aduiſe how hee might ſend his Ambaſſadour to the ſayd Emperour of Ruſſia, and whether I thought that hee would ſupport him or no: and with many other words requited mee to declare his neceſſitie vnto the ſame Emperour at my returne: adding further that the ſayd king would haue written vnto mee his minde, but that he doubted the ſafe paſſage of his meſſenger. Vnto whom I did likewiſe anſwere by word of mouth, not onely perſwading him to ſend his Ambaſſadour to Ruſſia, not doubting but that hee ſhould finde him moſt honourable and inclined to helpe him, but alſo I directed him his way how the ſayde king might ſend by the countrey of Chircaſſi, through the fauour of Teneruke king of the ſayd countrey, whoſe daughter the ſayd king had lately married. And thus diſmiſſing the ſayd Armenian, within two dayes after I ſent Edward Clearke your ſeruaunt vnto the Citie of Arraſh, where the moſt ſtore of ſilkes is to bee had, giuing him Commiſſion to haue paſſed further into the ſayd countrey of Georgia, and there to haue repaired vnto the ſayde king. And after my commendations premiſed, and my minde declared to haue purſued for ſafeconduct of the ſame prince for our merchaunts to trade into his dominions, and that obtained to haue returned againe with ſpeede. The ſame your ſeruaunt iourneying to the ſayde Citie of Arraſh, and there finding certaine merchants Armenians, which promiſed to goe to the ſayde citie of Georgia, comming to the borders there, was perceiued by a Captaine there, that he was a Chriſtian, and thereupon demaunded whither he went, and vnderſtanding that hee could not paſſe further without great ſuſpicion, anſwered that hee came thither to buie ſilkes, and ſhewed the king of Hircanes letters which hee had with him, and ſo returned backe againe, and the 15. of Aprill came to Shamachie: from whence I departed the ſixteene of the ſame moneth, and the one and twentie thereof comming to the Sea ſide, and finding my barke in a readineſſe, I cauſed your goods to bee laden, and there attended a faire wind.

Priuiledges obtained of Abdolowcan, which are hereafter annexed.

An Armenian ſent to maſter Ienkinſon frõ the king of Georgia.

Teneruke king of Chircaſſi.

But before I proceede any further to ſpeake of my returne, I intend with your fauours ſomewhat to treate of the countrey of Perſia, of the great Sophie, and of his countrey, lawes and religion.

The deſcription of Perſia.

This land of Perſia is great and ample, deuided into many kingdomes and prouinces as Gilan, Coraſan, Shiruan, and many others hauing diuers Cities, Townes and Caſtles in the ſame. Euery prouince hath his ſeuerall king, or Sultane, all in obedience to the great Sophie.

The chiefe cities of Perſia.

The names of the chiefeſt Cities be theſe: Teueris, Casbin, Keſhan, Yeſſe, Meskit, Heirin, Ordowill, Shamachie, Arraſh with many others. The countrey for the moſt part toward the Sea ſide plaine and full of paſture, but into the land, high, ful of mountaines, and ſharpe. To the South it bordereth vpon Arabia and the Eaſt Ocean. To the North vpon the Caſpian ſea and the lands of Tartaria. To the Eaſt vpon the prouinces of India, and to the Weſt vpon the confines of Chaldæa, Syria, and other the Turkes landes. All within theſe dominions be of the Sophies, named Shaw Thamas, ſonne to Iſmael Sophie. This Sophie that now raigneth, is nothing valiant, although his power bee great, and his people martiall: and though his puſillanimitie the Turke hath much inuaded his countries, euen nigh vnto the citie of Teueris, wherein he was woont to keepe his chiefe court. And now hauing forſaken the ſame, is chiefly reſident at Casbin afore ſayd, and alwayes as the ſayd Turke purſueth him, hee not being able to withſtand the Turke in the field, truſting rather to the mountaines for his ſafegard, then to his fortes and caſtles, hee hath cauſed the ſame to be raſed within his dominions, and his ordinaunce to bee molten, to the intent that his enemies purſuing him, they ſhould not ſtrengthen themſelues with the ſame.

This

This prince is of the age of fiftie yeeres, and of a reasonable stature, hauing fiue children. His eldest sonne he keepeth captiue in prison, for that hee feareth him for his valiantnesse and actiuitie: he professeth a kind of holynesse, and saith that he is descended of the blood of Mahomet and Murtezallie: and although these Persians bee Mahometans, as the Turkes and Tartares bee, yet honour they this falsefained Murtezallie, saying that he was the chiefest disciple that Mahomet had, curling and chiding daily three other disciples that Mahomet had called Ouear, Vsiran, and Abebecke, and these three did slay the sayd Murtezallie, for which cause and other differences of holy men and lawes, they haue had and haue with the Turkes and Tartares mortall warres. To intreat of their religion at large, being more or lesse, Mahomets lawe and the Alkaron, I shall not need at this present. These persons are comely and of good complexion, proude and of good courage, esteeming themselues to bee best of all nations, both for their religion and holines, which is most erroneous, and also for all other their fashions. They be martiall delighting in faire horses and good harnesse, soone angrie, craftie and hard people. Thus much I haue thought good to treate of this nation, and now I returne to discourse the proceeding of the rest of my voyage. The difference of religion.

My Barke being readie at the Caspian Sea side as afore sayd, hauing a faire winde, and committing our selues vnto God the 30. day of May, one thousand fiue hundred sixtie three, wee arriued at Astracan, hauing passed no lesse dangers vpon the Sea in our returne, then we sustained in our going foorth, and remayning at the sayd Astracan, vntill the tenth day of June, one hundred gunners being there admitted vnto me for my safegard vp the riuer Volga, the fifteenth of Julie I arriued at the Citie of Cazan, where the captaine entertained me well, and so dismissing mee, I was conducted from place to place vnto the citie of Mosko, where I arriued the 20. day of August 1563. in safetie, thankes be to God, with all such goods, merchandizes, and iewels, as I had prouided as well for the Emperours stocke and account, as also of yours, all which goods I was commaunded to bring into the Emperours treasurie before it was opened, which I did, and deliuered those parcels of wares which were for his maiesties account, videlicet, precious stones, and wrought silkes of sundry colours and sortes, much to his highnesse contentation, and the residue belonging to you, viz. Craskoe, and raw silkes, with other merchandizes (as by account appeareth) were brought vnto your house, whereof part there remained, and the rest was laden in your ships lately returned. The 30. of May 1563.

Shortly after my comming to the Mosko, I came before the Emperours maiestie, and presented vnto him the apparell giuen vnto me by the Sophie, whose highnesse conferred with mee touching the princes affaires which he had committed to my charge, and my proceedings therein it pleased him so to accept, that they were much to his contentation, saying vnto me, I haue perceiued your good seruice, for the which I doe thanke you, and will recompence you for the same, wishing that I would trauell againe in such his other affaires, wherein he was minded to employ me: to whom I answered, that it was to my heartie reioycing that my seruice was so acceptable vnto his highnesse, acknowledging all that I had done, to bee but of duetie, humblie beseeching his grace to continue his goodnesse vnto your worships, and euen at that instant I humbly requested his maiestie to vouchsafe to graunt vnto you a new priuiledge more ample then the first, which immediately was graunted, and so I departed. And afterwards hauing penned a briefe note how I meant to haue the same priuiledges made, I repaired daily to the Secretarie for the perfecting of the same, & obtained it vnder his maiesties broad seale, which at my departure from thence, I deliuered vnto the custodie of Thomas Glouer your Agent there. The copie whereof, and also of the other priuiledges graunted and giuen by the king of Hircan, I haue alreadie deliuered vnto you. Sojourning all that Winter at Mosko, and in the meane time hauing bargained with the Emperours maiestie, I sent away your seruaunt Edward Clearke hither ouerland with aduise, and also made preparation for sending agayne into Persia in meete time of the yeere. And committing the charge thereof vnto your seruaunts Thomas Alcocke, George Wrenne, and Richard Cheinie, the 28. of June last, I departed in poste from the sayd Mosko, and comming to Colmogro and so downe to the Sea side, I found your ships laden and readie to depart, where I embarked my selfe in your good ship called the Swallow, the 9. of July, one thousand fiue hundred sixtie foure, and hauing passed the Seas with great and extreme daungers of losse of shippe, goods and life, the 28. day of September last (God bee praysed) wee arriued here at London in safetie. New priuiledges obtained hereafter following. 28. Sept. 1564

Thus knowing that the couragious and valiaunt souldier, which aduenturеth both fame, member and life, to serue faithfully his soueraigne, esteemeth not the perils and daungers passed (the victorie once obtained) neither for his guerdon desireth any thing more, then that his seruice bee

well taken of him for whom he enterprised it: So I perceiuing your fauourable beneuolence to me extended in accepting my trauels in good part to your contentations, doe thinke my selfe therewith in great part recompensed: beseeching almightie God so to prosper your aduentures, from time to time hereafter to be made for reaping the fruits of my trauels (at your great charges, and to my no small dangers) that ye may plentifully gather in and enioy the same to the illustrating of the Queenes most excellent maiestie, the honour and commoditie of this her highnesse realme, and to the ample benefite and abundant enriching of you and your succession, & posteritie for euer.

A copie of the priuiledges giuen by Obdolowcan king of Hircania to the companie of Englishmen Aduenturers for Russia, Persia, and Mare Caspium, with all the landes and countries adioyning to the same, obtained by M. Anthonie Ienkinson at his being there about the affaires of the sayd company, April 14. Anno 1563.

WE Obdolowcan by the mightie power of God maker of heauen and of earth, appointed and now raigning king of Shiruan and Hircan, of our meere motion and great goodnes, at the earnest suite and request of our fauored and welbeloued Anthonie Ienkinson Ambassadour, haue giuen and granted vnto the right worshipfull sir William Garret, sir William Chester, sir Thomas Lodge, M. Richard Mallarie, and M. Richard Chamberlaine, with all their companie of merchants Aduenturers of the Citie of London in England, free libertie, safe conduct, and licence to come or send their factors in trade of merchandize into our countries, and to buy and sell with our merchants and others, either for readie money or barter, and to tarrie and abide in our countrey, so long as they will, and to goe away when they list, without impediment, let, or hinderance, either of bodie or goods.

And further our commandement and pleasure is, that the said English merchaunts with their company, shal pay no maner of custome for wares, which they or their factors shal buy or sell within our dominions. And if at any time our customers or other officers, or any of the, do disturbe, molest, force or constraine the said English merchants or any of them, or their factors, to pay any maner of custome or dutie for any wares they bring in or carie out of our dominiõs contrary to this our commandement, and the same be knowen vnto vs, then wee will that the said customers and officers shall loose and be put out of their said offices, with our further displeasure, and the sayd English merchants to haue restored all such mony and wares as our customers haue taken of them for our said custome. And whensoeuer the said English merchants or their factors shall bring any maner of wares meet for our treasurie, then our treasurer shal take the sayd wares into our treasurie, and shal giue vnto the said English merchaunts, either ready money or raw silkes, to the value of their said wares. And wheresoeuer this our letter of priuiledges shall be seene and read within our dominion, wee straightly will and commaund that it take effect, and be obeied in all points. Dated at our place of Iauat, the day and yeere aboue written, and sealed with our princely seale, and signed by our secretarie in the 12. yeere of our raigne.

The 2. voyage into Persia made by Tho. Alcocke who was slaine there, & by George Wrenne, and Rich. Cheinie seruants to the worshipful companie of Moscouie merchants in An. 1563. written by the said Richard Cheinie.

IT may please your worships to vnderstand, that in the yeere 1563. I was appointed by M. Anthonie Jenkinson, and M. Thomas Glouer your Agent in Russia, to go for Persia in your worships affaires, one Thomas Alcocke hauing the charge of the voyage committed to him, and I one of your worships seruants being ioined with him in your businesse, hauing with vs, as they said, fiftéene rubbles. And if it shall please you I cannot tel certainly what summe of money we had then of the Emperours: for I receiued none, nor disbursed any of it in wares for the voyage. Also, God I take to record, I could not tell what stocke your worships had there, for the bookes were kept so priuilie, that a man could neuer see them. The 10. of May, anno 1563. we departed from a towne called Yeraslaue vpon our voyage towards Persia. The 24. of July we arriued at Astracan: and the second of August we departed from Astracan, and the 4. of the same moneth we came to the Caspian sea, and the 11. day of the said moneth we arriued at our port in Media: and the 21. of the said August we arriued at Shammakie, where as the king Obdolowcan lay in the field. We were well entertained of heathen people, for the third day after our our arriuall at Shammakie wee were called before the king: wee gaue him a preſent, and hee entertained vs very well.

At our comming to the Court we were commaunted to come before the king, who ſate in his tent vpon the ground with his legs a croſſe, and all his dukes round about his tent, the ground being couered with carpets: wee were commaunded to ſit downe, the king appointing euery man his place to ſit. And the king commaunded the Emperour of Ruſſelands Marchants to riſe vp, and to giue vs the vpper hande. The 20. of October Thomas Alcocke departed from Shammakie towards Casbin, leauing me at Shammakie to recouer ſuch debts as the dukes of Shammakie ought for wares which they tooke of him at his going to Casbin. In the time I lay there, I could recouer but litle. And at Thomas Alcocks comming from Casbin, who arriued at a towne called Leuuacta, wheras the king Obdolocan lay, a day and a halfes iourney from the towne whereas I lay, I hearing of his arriuing there, departed from Sammakie, finding him there in ſafetie with all ſuch goods as hee had with him. During his abode there for ſeuen dayes hee made ſuite to the king for ſuch money as the dukes ought him. But the king was diſpleaſed for that the Emperour of Ruſſelands Marchant had ſlaine a Boſer man at his going to Casbin. Thomas Alcocke ſeeing the king would ſhewe vs no fauour, and alſo hearing from Shammakie, that the Ruſſes ſent their goods to the ſea ſide, for that they feared that the king of Perſia ſhould haue knowledge of the death of the Boſerman, willed mee to depart to Shammakie with all ſuch goods as he had brought with him from Casbin, I leauing him at the Court.

Casbin.

Leuuacta.

A Boſerman is a Renegado.

The third day after mine arriuall at Shammakie, I had newes that Thomas Alcocke was ſlaine comming on his way towards me. Then the king Obdolocan vnderſtanding of his death, demaunded whether he had euer a brother. Some ſaid I was, ſome ſaide I was not his brother. When this fell out, your worſhips had no other ſeruant there but mee among thoſe heathen people. Who hauing ſuch a ſumme of goods lying vnder my handes, and ſeeing how the Ruſſes ſent their goods with as much haſt as they might to the ſea ſide, and hauing but foure men to ſende our wares to the ſea ſide, I vſed ſuch diligence, that within two dayes after Thomas Alcocke was ſlaine, I ſent in company with the Ruſſes goods, all your worſhips goods with a Mariner, William Auguſt, and a Swethen, for that they might the ſafer arriue at the ſeaſide, being ſafely lyde in. All which goods afterwards arriued in Ruſſeland in good condition, M. Glouer hauing the receipt of all things which I ſent then out of thoſe parties into Ruſſeland. Concerning my ſelfe, I remained after I had ſent the goods into Ruſſeland ſixe weekes in Shammakie, for the recouerie of ſuch debts as were owing, and at laſt with much trouble recouered to the ſumme of ſixteene hundreth robles or there about, which M. Glouer receiued of mee at my comming to Moſco, and all ſuch goods as I brought with mee out of Keſelbaſh, as by a note of my hande that hee hath ſhall appeare. Alſo hee hauing the receipt of all ſuch goods as I ſent into Ruſſeland by theſe two aboue named, hee then had that voyage in venter of his owne better then an hundreth rubles, one Richard Iohnſon twentie rubles, one Thomas Petre fiftie rubbles, one Euan Chermiſin a Tartar ſeuentie rubles. All theſe had their returne. M. Glouer allowed himſelfe God knoweth howe, I then being in Perſia in your worſhips affaires.

Thomas Alcocke ſlaine in the way betweene Leuuacta and Shammakie.

Keſelbaſh. or Jeſelbaſh.

And whereas he ſaith, the Emperour had but for his part a dobble, as farre as I can ſee, knowing what the wares coſt in thoſe parties, hee had treble. If they gaue him ſo much wares, all charges turned to your worſhips, as well of the Emperours as of their owne returnes. I haue ſowen the ſeede, and other men haue gathered the harueſt: I haue trauailed both by land and by water, full many a time with a ſorowfull heart, aſwell for the ſafegarde of their goods as yours, how to frame all things to the beſt, and they haue reaped the fruites of my trauaile. But euer my prayer was to God, to deliuer mee out of thoſe miſeries which I ſuffered for your ſeruice among thoſe heathen people. Therefore knowing my duetie which I haue done, as a true ſeruant ought to doe, I beſeech your worſhips, (although I haue but ſmall recompence for my ſeruice,) yet let me haue no wrong, and God will proſper you the better.

Alſo, to informe your worſhips of your Perſian voyage what I iudge: it is a voyage to be followed. The king of Gillan, where, as yet, you haue had no traffique, liueth all by marchandiſe: and it is neere Casbin, and not paſt ſix weekes trauaile from Ormus, whereas all the ſpices be brought: and here, (I meane at Gillan) a trade may bee eſtabliſhed: But your worſhips muſt ſende ſuch men as are no riotous liuers, nor drunkerds. For if ſuch men goe, it will bee to your diſhonour and great hinderance, as appeared by experience the yeere 1565. when as Richard Iohnſon went to Perſia, whoſe iourney had bene better ſtayed then ſet forward. For whereas before we had the name among thoſe heathen people to be ſuch marchants as they thought none like in al reſpects, his vicious liuing there hath made vs to be compted worſe then the Ruſſes.

Gillan in Perſia.

Againe, if such men trauaile in your affaires in such a voyage, you shall neuer knowe whe gaine is to be gotten. For how can such men imploy themselues to seeke the trade, that are inclined to such vices? or how can God prosper them in your affaires. But when a trade is stablished by wise and discreete men, then will it be for your worships to trafique there, and not before: for a voyage or market made euil at the first, is the occasion that your worships shal neuer vnderstand what gaines is to be gotten thereby hereafter.

The thirde voyage into Persia, begun in the yeere 1565. by Richard Iohnson, Alexander Kitchin, and Arthur Edwards.

¶ A letter of Arthur Edwards to M. Thomas Nicols, secretarie to the worshipfull companie trading into Russia and other the North parts, concerning the preparation of their voyage into Persia.

Ieraslaue a towne vpon the Riuer of Volga.

MAster Nicols, my bounden duetie remembred, with desire of God for the preseruation of you and yours: you shall vnderstande that the second of March I was sent by M. Thomas Glouer (your Agent) vnto Ieraslaue, appointed to receiue such goods as should come frō Vologhda, as also such kinde of wares as should be bought and sent from Mosco by your Agent, & M. Edward Clarke, thought meete for your voyage of Persia. And further, I was to prouide for biscuit, beere, beefe, and other victuals, and things otherwayes needefull according to aduise. Thus I remained here vntill the comming of your Agent, which was the 12. of May, who tarried here three dayes, to see vs set forwards on our voyage, and then hee departed towardes Colmogro, hauing appointed (as chiefe for your voyage of Persia) Richard Iohnson. For my part I am willing, as also haue bene and shall be content, to submit my selfe vnder him, whome the Agent shall appoint, although hee were such a one as you shoulde thinke in some respects vnmeete. Three two packes of carseis are all of that kinde of cloth that wee shall haue with vs. The other 11. packes that should haue gone, were solde in Mosco. What other goods are shipped for our voyage, you shall vnderstand by your Agents letters. Whereas Edward Clarke (being an honest man) was appointed Agent for Persia, as one for those parts more fit then any I doe knowe here, God hath taken him vnto his mercie, who departed this present life the 16. of March last past. I wished of God for my part he had liued: for my desire was in his companie to haue trauailed into Persia. Your barke or craer made here for the riuer of Volga and the Caspian sea is very little, of the burthen of 30. tunnes at the most. It is handsomly made after the English fashion: but I thinke it to litle for your goods and prouision of victuals. If the worshipfull companie would sende hither a Shipwright, being skilfull to make one of the burden of 60. tunnes or more, drawing but 6. foote water at the most when it is laden, I thinke it should bee profitable. For if your owne goods would not lade the same, here be Marchants that would bee glad and faine to giue great fraight to lade their goods with vs, whereby your charges would be much lessened: and so it may happen, the wages of your men hired here may be saued, and your seruants and goods in farre greater assurance: for their boates here are dangerous to saile with and to passe the Caspian sea. There be Carpenters here that will doe well enough hauing one to instruct them. Your wares bought here, and orders taken for those that goe for your voyage of Persia, are yet vnknowen vnto mee: wherefore I can not (as I would at this present) write to you thereof, for (as you doe knowe) it was the Gouernours minde I should be acquainted with greater affaires then these. Howbeit I doubt not but I shalbe informed of them that are appointed, and all things shall be bought when they shall see time and haue more leasure.

Richard Johnson chiefe of the third voyage into Persia.

A barke of 30. tunnes made at Ieraslaue 1564. to passe the Caspian seas.

Thus (in hast as appeareth) I commit you and yours into the hands of Almightie God, who preserue you in perfect health with increase of worship.

From Ieraslaue the 15. of May 1565.

By yours to commaunde here or els where during life,
Arthur Edwards.

An other

An other letter of the ſaid M. Arthur Edwards, written the 26. of April 1566. in Shamakie in Media to the right worſhipfull ſir Thomas Lodge knight and Alderman: And in his abſence to M. Thomas Nicols, Secretarie to the right worſhipfull companie trading into Ruſſia, Perſia, and other the North and Eaſt parts, touching the ſucceſſe of Richard Iohnſon in the thirde voyage into Perſia.

WOrſhipfull ſir, my bounden duetie remembred, with heartie prayer vnto God for the preſeruation of you and and yours in perfect health with increaſe of worſhip. It may pleaſe you that my laſt letter I ſent you was from Aſtracan the 26. of July 1565. From whence Richard Iohnſon, my ſelfe, and Alexander Kitchin, departed as the 30. of the ſame. And by meanes of contrary windes, it was the 23. of Auguſt before wee came to our deſired porte named Nazauoc. There, after wee had gotten your goods on lande, with much labour and ſtrength of men, as alſo windleſſes deuiſed and made, wee haled your barke ouer a barre of beach or peeble ſtones into a ſmall Riuer, ſending your ſhippes apparell with other things to an houſe hired in a village thereby. And aſſoone as wee might get camels, being the firſt of September wee departed thence, and came to this towne of Shamakie the 11. of the ſame: and the 17. day following wee preſented vnto Abdollocan the King of this Countrey one timber of ſables, one tunne or neſt of ſiluer cuppes parfill gilt, three moſſes teeth, 4. arſhines of ſkarlet, three pieces of carſeis, with 40. redde foxes.

They departed from Aſtracan the 3. of July 1565.

September.

Preſents to the king Abdolowcan.

He receiued our preſents with giuing vs thankes for our good wills, demaunding if M. Ienkinſon were in good health, and whether he would returne into theſe parts againe. Hee willed vs alſo himſelfe to ſit downe before him the diſtance of a quoits caſt from his tent, where hee ſate with diuers of his counſaile and nobilitie, ſending vs from his table ſuch meate as was before him: And after certaine talke had with vs, hee ſaide if hee might perceiue or knowe any maner of perſon to doe vs any wrong, hee woulde puniſh them in example of others, whereby wee ſhould liue in quietneſſe, and haue no cauſe to complaine, giuing vs a litle houſe for the time, vntill a better might be prouided in ſuch place as wee ſhould thinke moſt meete, neuer willing vs to riſe or depart, vntill ſuch time as wee of our ſelues thought it conuenient. At the taking of our leaue, he willed vs to put our whole mindes and requeſts in writing, that hee might further vnderſtand our deſires. But while we were about to doe ſo, God tooke this good king our friende out of this preſent life the 2. of October paſt. The want of him hath bene the cauſe that as yet wee cannot receiue certaine debts. Howbeit, we doubt not but wee ſhall recouer all ſuch ſummes of money as are owing vs for this voyage. As for Thomas Alcocks debts they are paſt hope of recouerie, which had not bene loſt if the king had liued. Wee truſt in the place of him, God will ſende as friendly a king towards vs: who by report (and as wee be credibly informed,) ſhall be his ſonne named the Murſay: who ſince the death of his father, at our being with him, promiſed to ſhewe vs more friendſhip then euer we found: God graunt the ſame.

A houſe giuen our men in Shamakie by the King.

The death of Abdollocan the 2. of October 1565.

Murſay the newe king of Media.

Great troubles haue chaunced in theſe parts. Of thoſe which were of the olde kings counſaile or bare any rule about him in theſe quarters, ſome are in priſon, ſome are pinched by the purſe, and other ſent for vnto the Shaugh. Theſe troubles haue partly bene the let that wares were not ſolde, as they might to more profite. Your Agent Richard Iohnſon bought foure hoyſes, minding to haue ſent to Casbin, Alexander Kitchin, whome God tooke to his mercie the 23. of October laſt: and before him departed Richard Dauis one of your Mariners; whoſe ſoules I truſt the Lord hath receiued to his mercie. We are now deſtitute of others to ſupply their roomes. Foure Mariners were fewe ynough to ſaile your barke, whereof at this preſent wee haue but one, whoſe name is William Smith, an honeſt yong man, and one that doeth good ſeruice here. For want and lacke of Mariners that ſhould knowe their labours, wee all were like to bee caſt away in a ſtorme. For all the broad ſide of our barke laye in the water, and wee had much a doe to recouer it: but God of his mercie deliuered vs. Mariners here, may doe you good ſeruice all the winter otherwayes: and Marchants here will be the gladder to ſhippe their goods in vs giuing good fraighte. One Marchant at this preſent is content to pay twentie robles for twentie camels lading fraighte to Aſtracan. Such barkes as muſt paſſe theſe ſeas, may not drawe about fiue foote of water, becauſe that in many places are very ſhallowe waters. Wee minde hereafter to make the Ruſſian boates more ſtrong, and they ſhall ſerue our turnes very well.

The death of Alexander Kitchin the 23. of October 1565.

The Caſpian ſea very ſhoald in diuers places.

And whereas some in times past tooke great paines, trauaile, and care, and could not haue their desire in the getting of the Shaughes letters or priuiledge, Nowe, I trust (with Gods helpe) they may bee obtained: which being had, will bee beneficiall to the companie, and great quietnesse to those that shall remaine here, although heretofore thinges haue chaunced ill, as the like in other Countreis hath bene. But I doubt not, this priuiledge once gotten and obtained, wee shall liue in quietnesse and rest, and shall shortly growe into a great trade for silkes both raw and wrought, with all kinde of spices and drugs, and other commodities here, as to master Anthonie Ienkinson is well knowen; Who (I doubt not) hath long agoe throughly aduertised the Companie thereof.

The murthering of Thomas Alcocks.

The trueth of the slaughter of Thomas Alcocks your seruant is not certainly knowen. Some thinke it was by the meanes of a noble man, with whome your saide seruant was earnest in demaunding of your debts: vpon whose wordes he was so offended, that he procured his death. Other doe thinke verily, that in riding from the Court without companie, false knaues layde waite, thinking hee had much about him, and so slewe him. I doubt not though this misfortune hath chaunced, that things shall come well to passe, and that we shall be better beloued when we shall be more knowen.

Honest Marchants are glad of our being here, and seeke to growe in acquaintance with vs, being glad to further vs in that they may, & haue spoken in our fauours to the chiefest of this Countrey: one being a noble man, with whome your Agent and I are entred into friendship, who is at this time in great fauour with the Shaugh. Hee hath here and in other places of these parts great stay in things since the kings death: he is well knowen to M. Ienkinson, his name is Cozamomet. Also another duke named Ameddin-becke is our great friende: And his sister is the Shaughes wife. These two haue promised your Agent by their lawe, not onely to procure vnto the Shaughes priuiledge, but also that I shall haue the debts paide mee of those that went from hence to Casbin, if we would send one with them. In consideration whereof, I was vpon their warning (for want of a better) appointed by your Agent M. Richard Iohnson, all crafts layde apart, presently to put my selfe in readinesse, and to depart in company with these noblemen: with charge, when God should send me to Casbin, to vse my discretion with their aduise, for the recouering of your debts and priuiledge. I shall haue with mee one interpretour and two bought seruants: one of which partly vnderstandeth this tongue, and may be put in trust whatsoeuer should become of me.

Cozamomet a noble man that fauoured our nation.

The value of a tumen.

I haue receiued 6. tumens in readie money: 200. shaughes is a tumen, reckoning euery shaugh for 6. pence Russe. I haue further receiued two timbers of sables, one to be solde, the other to bee giuen to Thomas the Shaugh: and haue order further to giue as I shall see good vnto those that shall further my suite, and as occasion serueth. And for as much as I am commanded to goe, I shall willingly doe my best, putting my trust in God that hee will sende mee well speede in this iourney.

For all kinde of wares bought or solde, you shall throughly be aduertised by your Agent Richard Iohnson, whose reckonings or accompts at no hande I might see or be priuie vnto. Your carsels were good and well sorted, they are and will be solde from 150. shaughs to 160. the piece. Two hundreth pieces were solde vnder, that needed not: one 100. pieces at 146. and 147. the piece: but more would haue bene giuen, if circumspection had bene vsed. They were solde to those noblemen aforesaid, when as yet it was not knowen that I should haue gone with them. They may stande vs much in steade, as they haue promised vs their good wils in that they may doe. Here is at this time bought for England, 11. packes of rawe silke, 25. and 26. batmans being in euery packe: The batman being 7. li. which may be 6. li. and a halfe of English waight: being bought here for 66. to 70. shaughes the batman. It is fine and good: little course at this time was to be had. And where course silke might be had being at Grousin, we could not send thither for that time was neglected at the first. When wee shall haue lodgers here to remaine in Summer, we may bye it at the first hand of the Countrey people that bring it to sel hither, and to other places. I would to God the companie could finde the meanes to haue a vent to make sales for the one halfe that wee may bye here. The Companie may haue for 30. or 40. thousande pounds yeerely.

What a batman is.

Varas a great mart for silke.

And as appeareth by your Agents wordes being at Varas, hee and others saw there great abundance, that by report of diuers, you may bestowe (if it were not for the Turkes) in two hundred thousande pounds: besides silke of all colours died in graine, bounde vp in round waights, I thinke 15. of our ounces to their pound waight, and here solde for 23. shaughes, at 6. the shaugh may be 11. s. 6. pence.

Gilan 7. dayes saying from Astracan. Niam.

From Astracan in 7. or 8. dayes, wee may saile with our barke to a place named Gilan: the which place in time to come, (I thinke) shall serue our purpose best to goe vnto. Niam is there great good cheape, being brought from thence hither to Shamakie, and solde here for 2. bists their batman, which may be 5. pence in our money: and so I haue bought to be sent home 223. batmans for example. And at Gilan there is rawe silke enough for the companies stocke. I beleeue, if any great store of wares be sent from you, that must be the place: and frō thence a man may trauaile in 4. dayes to Casbin, and there make quicke and better sales, at which place your commodities are to be solde. For there be the chiefe and best marchants, and diuers other cities round about, to wit, Teueris, Ardaoulle, and Cayshan, being the heart of the Countrey, where there is more ciuilitie and marchants are better vsed. Concerning this point I haue inquired of diuers marchants both Russes and others that haue bene in those parts, and found them all agreeing in one tale, and perceiue the same to be true, and that all kinde of wares come from thence into these parts. And from Casbin to Ormus is about 30. dayes trauailing with camels. I haue written the prices of wares in my letter to the gouernour both for spices and some drugs, which I doe know.

Gilan 4. dayes iourney from Casbin.

From Casbin to Ormus a moneths trauaile with camels.

Also you shall vnderstand here is plentie of yew for bowstaues. I caused three horse loades to be bought vs for to knowe the trueth: but they were cut out of season this month of April the sappe being in them. Three moneths I neuer left speaking to the Countrey men to bring some. Your Agent will send some home for example.

This day being the 26. of April I departed towards Casbin: God giue mee a good houre and well to speede, with a merrie heart in returning againe, as my hope is I shall. I haue written my minde to M. Glouer your Agent what Russian wares I thinke best to be bought for this Countrey: and to sende some one hither that hath the Russe tongue: for we haue neede. And the companie shall doe well hereafter in taking of seruants to be sent hither, to see that they be such as haue discretion and be something broken in the world, and seene in the trade of Marchandise: and one, (if they can get some such) as can speake the Portingall tongue, may doe them as good seruice, as those that shall be here two yeeres before him: for then wee may bye a slaue that can speake this language and the Portingal tongue also, which shall then interprete vnto vs in all your secret doings, not making the Russes priuie: for they are sorie that we doe trade into these parts. For wee are better beloued then they are: because they are giuen to be drunkards they are much hated of these people. It is to be wished that none should serue your worships in these parts that be giuen to that kinde of vice: And that your chiefe Agent and Factor should be able to rule and gouerne himselfe, that no dishonestie should be imputed to him and vs. By his euill vsage hee payd here 24. robles, being in this Countrey 4. tumens for a boy that hee was charged to haue conuayde away from a Tesicke one of this countrey men, who willed him to sweare that he knew not where the boy was become, and he should not pay it. If he were honest he might doe your worships good seruice because of his Russian tongue.

The secret doings of the Moscouie companie.

Your London reds are not to be sent hither: for they will not giue aboue 18. shaughes their arshine. Here be reds of more orient colour being Venice die. The people are giuen much to weare cloth: the common people specially were carsets: and the Marchants of more wealth weare broad cloth. You shall doe well to sende fiue or sixe broad clothes, some blackes, pukes, or other sadde colours, that may be affoarded at 20. shaughes the ashine and not aboue. It is here reported that King Philip hath giuen the Turkes a great ouerthowe at Malta, and taken 70. or 80. of his chiefe Captaines.

Orient reds of Venice die.

Thus wishing I had more time to write, I pray you to beare with this my scribled letter, and after you haue red it that M. Nicols may haue a sight thereof.

By your seruant to commaund,
Arthur Edwards.

A letter of M. Arthur Edwards, written the 8. of August 1566. from the towne of Shamakie in Media, to the right worshipfull the Gouernours, Consuls, assistants, and generalitie of the companie of Russia, &c. Shewing his accesse vnto the Emperour of Persia, his conference with him, his obteining of a priuiledge: with diuers other good obseruations.

His arriuall at Caldin the 25. of May.

Right worshipfull (sirs) my bounden duetie remembred, with most humble commendations and like request to God for the preseruation of your good healthes with the rest of the companie, &c. It may please you to vnderstand, that the last letter which I sent you from hence was of the 26. of Aprill of this present yeere by Richard Iohnson at my departure towards Casbin: to which Citie I came the 25. of May following, not slacking any day, houre, nor moment, to procure and make friends for the speedie bringing me before the presence of the Shaugh, being the 29. day of the same moneth brought before him, with whose Maiestie I was in talke (as I thinke) two houres. He willed me twise to come neerer him, demaunding what were my requests: and hauing heard them, he promised me his gratious letters. Afterwardes he called me twise againe to come neerer him, and talked with me of our Queenes Maiestie and Countrey, and what commodities we had, and what other commodities we desired: And then of other Countreis adioyning vnto vs and their commodities, as also of K. Philip, what ouerthrow he gaue the Turkes at the siege of Malta. And how long we had traded into Russeland and Moscouia, and in what space wee might saile out of England into Russeland, & how many weekes trauaile it is from Colmogro to Astracan: And then came to discourse of Russeland, and what townes the Emperour had wonne, declaring vnto me himselfe most of our commodities. In the end he willed that your worships should send him of all sorts of clothes, but of one especially, which maydens doe make (as he saide:) He named it Karengi, I thinke it is Westerne dosens died into scarlets. Time will not permit me to write at large the cõference which I had with his Maiestie. It was strange to his people (knowing our religion) to see me so long in talke with him, willing his Secretarie before mee to write what he was desirous of: to wit of London clothes, three or foure of all sorts for example being well shorne and drest. Violets in graine and fine reds be most worne: but other good colours will away, when they shall see them. I wore a garment of London russet, being much esteemed. You shall doe well to send such sorts as be liuely to the sight, and some blackes for womens garments, with some Orenge colours and tawneis. Here is much broad cloth worne. They talke much of London clothes: and they that know the wearing are desirous of them before the cloth of the women making: for they finde it nothing durable. For when it commeth to weare on the cheere it renteth like paper. Here is much Venice cloth worne, being crompliffed, a yard and a halfe broad, and solde here from 24. to 30. shaughes their arshine, being longer by two inches then the Russe arshine is. I wish also that you send some good chamlets & veluets died in graine, with purple colours & fine reds: because these are most worne. Also some blacks with other colours: some cloth of gold, tissue & botky, some veluets wrought with gold, with sattens and damaskes, most purple and reds of all sorts. You may not forget to send some Westerne carsies, to wit, dosens, which be thicked well, and close shutte in the weauing, being died into fine reds, and some skarlets: for I thinke

Conference and demands of the Shaugh.

All sorts of cloth to be sent specially Westerne dosens died into scarlet.

Odon clothes much talked of in Persia.

Much Venice cloth worne in Persia.

thinke there is no ſuch cloth for their cappes.

Your Worſhips ſhall underſtand, that after my firſt departure from the preſence of the Prince, I neglected no time in daily attendance on them, who had my priuiledge in writing, that I might haue it in readines, at ſuch time as I ſhould againe be called before the preſence of the Shaugh, which was the 29. of June laſt. I was in apparell that he gaue vnto me, with other garments to mine Interpretour, and one of your ſeruants. And then I receaued your letters, or priuiledge, according to my deſire, ſeaſed and firmed with the Shaughes owne hand. Praiſed be God, who hath wrought with me, and for me, in all my doings.

The ſecond admiſſion to the Shaughes preſence, the 29. of June, 1566. at which time he receaued the priuiledge.

The 29. of June, is one of their chiefe feſtiuall daies, ſo that all his Nobilitie was there preſent, with two Ambaſſadors in companie with his Maieſtie, who ſaid vnto me, that if my letters were not to my minde, in time to come they ſhould be mended. Wherupon I made my reuerence, and gaue his Highnes moſt humble & hartie thankes, ſaying, that with as much ſpeede as might be, our Queenes Maieſtie ſhould vnderſtand of his goodnes towards her Marchants, which I thought would write their letters of requeſt vnto his Highnes, in ſuch forme & order, as by them ſhould be thought meete and requiſite for their good aſſurance, in the trade of marchandizes: who replied with theſe wordes: when we ſhall ſee their reaſonable requeſts, we will ſhewe them our farther good will, and ſo I departed.

The Shaughs promiſe to increaſe the priuiledge.

Since the receauing of the Shaughes letters, I haue eaten in companie of good Dukes, and others, who before would not come neere me. And euery day ſome would come to my ſhoppe, and eate and drinke with me, out of mine owne diſhe. Likewiſe in riding from Casbin hither, on the way when I ſate downe to dinner, they would come and eate with me vnbidden, when I wiſhed them further off: for I ſpared them that, which gladly I would haue eaten my ſelfe. I doubt not but we ſhall liue here from henceforth in quietnes: for now in all places where I come, I am friendly vſed with the beſt.

I was aſked by the Shaugh, if you were able to bring him yeerely one hundred thouſand peeces of kerſies, and clothes. And I anſwered him, ſaying, your Worſhips were able to furniſh his countrey with two hundred thouſand. Whereat his Highnes reioyced: for the Turkes Ambaſſador the laſt yeere, as diuerſe haue tolde mee, did put the Shaugh in deſpaire, ſaying, that the Turke would not permit any cloth to be brought into his Countrey.

Aleppo a Cit of great trade.

There is a Citie in Turkie, named Aleppo, wherein continually are many Venetians dwelling, beſides other that come yeerely, & there buy wools, gals, tallow, ſaffron, ſkinnes, cotton wooll, and other wares, and great ſtore of ſpices. Alſo the Armenians yeerely receaue at the Venetians hands, kerſies in barter for raw ſilkes, giuing ſometimes 60. peeces of kerſies for 70. batmans of ſilke of this Countrey, and 40. peeces for Grouſine ſilke. And kerſies ſolde commonly for ready monie in Aleppo, at 11. and 12. duckets the peece, (the ducket being here worth 12. ſhillings) may coſt the firſt peny 132. and 144. Shaughes a kerſie. By report it is one moneths trauell from this towne of Shamakye to Aleppo, and from thence to Tripolis, fiue daies iourney: and from Tripolis to Venice, by water, a moneths or fiue weekes ſailing. As I learne, from hence to Venice, may eaſily be trauelled in leſſe then three moneths. Therefore I wiſh your Worſhips to procure ſome truſtie and aſſured friend there, to whome from hence letters may be ſent. For I can haue them here to put in ſuerties to deliuer my letters, and to bring anſwere. If I had any other here with mee, I would nothing haue doubted to haue brought you the Shaughs letters that way.

Armenians barter with the Venetians

The diſtance from Shamakye to Aleppo.

The Armenians and other, are deſirous to barter with vs, giuing ſilke for kerſies, and alſo will ſerue vs of all kinde of ſpices, we giuing them ſufficient warning to fetch it in the Indias, and will deliuer it vs in Shamakye, at theſe prices.

Armenians & other, deſirous to barter ſilke and ſpices for kerſies.

Pepper this townes batman for 18. Shaughes: euery Shaugh is fiue pence.

Maces large for 40. Shaughes, and 45. the batman.

Cloues for 40. Shaughes the batman.

Nutmegs for 16. and 18. Shaughes the batman.

Cinamon for 40. Shaughes the batman.

I doubt not but there will be profite and good done in ſpices, with druggs, and other like, in time.

From Casbin to Ormus, is fiue weekes trauell, and from hence to Casbin is 16. daies with camels laden: but if one trauell with a good Mule vnladen, it may be gone in ſeuen or eight daies. And I thinke to Ormus, and other places, may be trauelled in like order and proportion, with cattell vnladen. But here in all places as men trauell, they muſt carry their owne prouiſion on horſes, which they are to buy: and thus they trauell but a footepaſe.

The

The Shaugh desirous to bargaine for our commodities.

The Shaugh himselfe is desirous to bargaine with you, who will giue monie, silke, and other wares as we will, and take our wares as we may affoord them, willing me himselfe to bring such wares as we might gaine by him. The Armenians by report, and as I perceaue, bring from Aleppo yeerely foure, fiue, and sixe thousand peeces of kersies and clothes, besides those which other men bringe. If your Worships might procure and finde vent or sales for rawe silke, and silke died in graine, besides other silkes wrought and made here, by which, profite may be made, then you might sende a great substance of wares hither. But I feare you shall be hindred by the Venetians, if they may: for I knowe it will grieue them, that you doe trade into these partes: for in time it shall cleane alter their trade, and hinder the sales of their clothes in Aleppo, and other places adioyning. You shall vnderstand that 60. batmans of silke is a Mules lading: and as it is reported, one village of the Armenians, yeerely carrieth 400. and 500. Mules lading of silke to Aleppo, and bringeth thence 800. or a thousand Mules laden with kersies, and Venice clothes. And 18. peeces of kersies, are a Mules lading. But I wish you not to sende aboue 2000. peeces of kersies, although I haue bene willed to write for more. If I might haue had any vnderstanding what your Worships had written for in your letters sent this yeere, I should in this my letter haue bene better able to haue answered you. They which be now in Astracan, might haue written some thing vnto me hither, if it had pleased them, or else haue sent me such letters of mine, as I hope some of my friendes haue written to me: for here are arriued 8. weekes past, two boates with wares, and Russes, by whome they might haue written, had it bene but 3. or 4. lines. They promised the Russes to write, but promise was not kept. I would be sorie that any boate should depart out of these parts, and not write vnto them, waying how all things stande. I heare they haue bought a boate, which cost 40. robbles, and shipped certaine wares to come hither. God send them in safetie. I doe tary their comming, or els I had thought to haue come to Astracan in those boates which departed hence lately.

2000. peeces of kersies to be sent into Persia.

He departed from Casbin the 15. of July.

The fifteenth of July last, I departed from Casbin, and came to this Towne the 29. of the same. And the fourth of August, I founde meanes to arrest the falsest knaue in this Countrey, to wit, the Customer, for 22. tumens, and 100. shaughes, (200. shaughes is a tumen.) I haue caused him to put in suerties for his sooth comming at all times: what end I shall haue with him God knoweth: the debt wil be recouered, but not yet: for he must pay the Shaugh 1000. robbles. These parts as yet are in no stay, for lacke of a Gouernour or head to rule, which I thinke shall be the Mursey. Within 5. or 6. daies, we shal know, for it is time, because men are in feare to trauell for being robbed. If there were a prince placed, I should soone get in your debts, for they dare not disobey the Shaughes letters, or priuiledge: wherein he hath not onely written that our debts shal be paid, but also that we shall be taken heede to, so as we need not to doubt, God willing, in time to come, to be here as wel vsed as we are in Russeland. The bils of debts that Richard Iohnson left with me, had neither the parties name, nor summe of money in two of them, and in other bils, but his owne name. If I had not vsed discretion, in causing to be written in our priuiledge, that such debts as are owing, should be paide any of vs in the absence of the other, some men would not haue paid one penny, but onely to Richard Iohnson, who hath written but his owne name onely in the bils. I receaued in Casbin of Forackan, in part of 29. tumens, 300. shaughes in money: the rest he will deliuer me here in silke, and this is all that I haue receaued to this day. And as for Hawrambecks twelue tumens, I make accompt, that if I could ride to speake with him, I should be paid in money and wares. Touching Ackones money, by meanes of Duke Amedenbecke, who first owed the debt, because they meant not to pay a penny, he did rather seeke to hinder my suit, then to farther mee: but I founde out a present remedie: for God sent me friendes that were alwaies about the Shaugh, and daily put on his apparell, who opened all my sute, and brought me to the presence of the Shaugh, before that Cosomomet sawe the Shaughes eies. But Cosomomet in the ende was my friende: for he was sent for, and declared vnto the Shaugh, what good Marchants we were, vsing trueth in all our doings, and howe wee were in great fauour with the Emperour of Russia, and what good commodities we might bring into his Countrey, with other talke. And daily he was sent for to the Shaugh, about the affaires in those partes: for no man was able to aduise the Shaugh of the state and affaires of those Countries, so much as he was. He owed your Worships seuen tumens, and 48. shaughes, which was not all this time to be gotten at his hands: for he was at great charges in riding to Casbin, and giuing great gifts since his comming, which he twise declared vnto mee. I feeling his griefe, became Phisicion, to ease his paine, and forgaue him his debt aboue saide, in recompence of tenne peeces of kersies, that were promised him by Richard Iohnson, and mee, to giue him at the comming of our goods, in consideration that hee shoulde with speede doe what laye in him, to dispatche mee my way:

Richard Johnsons great negligence.

way: for I perceaued he procured other, that did helpe me in my ſute, to delay me of, till time he had his purpoſe. I neuer was in quiet, till I had the Princes priuiledge, & had got me out of Casbin: for victuals, and all other things are very deere there, becauſe they are brought thither from far off. As for all other ſmal debts (which may be about 7. tumens) when our Marchants are come hither, we ſhal ſeeke to get them in as we may. I wiſh your Worſhips to ſend ſome bullion to be coined here, it will pleaſe the prince there, & be profitable to you. Silke is better cheape by 2. and 3. ſhaughes the batman, then it was the laſt yeere. You ſhal vnderſtand that I haue written 2. letters of all my proceedings, which I ſent from Casbin long ſince, to wit, the 24. and 29. of June laſt, by one of your ſeruants to Gilan, there to take ſhip and to goe to Aſtracan, and to deliuer the ſame vnto your factors, which might haue bene to their quietnes and mine, long ago. But I am right ſorie to heare ſince my comming hither, that he hath plaied the loitering marchant in Gilan, not going in thoſe boates that went firſt, but taried for the laſt boates. But I will teach him, to the example of other, how he ſhal make haſte hereafter in ſuch affaires. The kerſies which you ſent laſt, being bought of Maſter Quarles, were good and full lengths, and well ſorted. The Princes Ambaſſador of Gilan was in Casbin, at my being there. I hope in God, if I remaine here, and may go to Gilan to obtaine for your Worſhips the like priuiledge at the kings hand there alſo. For I haue ſomething moued the matter, being put in ſuch comfort, that I doubt not the getting thereof with ſmall charges: which I had done at this time, if I had had other here with me to put in truſt: for from Casbin to Gilan, is but 5. daies riding, which Contrey may be profitable to your Worſhips. There is in that Prouince, good ſtore of ſilke, better cheape, and better in goodnes, then this Countrey ſilke is. Alſo great ſtore of Allam, being there ſold this townes batman, for one buſt and a halfe. I haue made reckoning, al charges borne from hence to Colmogro, & from thence ſtraight into England, at three pounds the tunne, all charges accompted, will not ſtand you in aboue 18. and 20. ſhillings the hundreth. You may haue yeerely by report, two or three hundred tunnes lading. Other commodities there for England, I beare not of. As for gals here to be bought, there is no profit to be done by them. They be brought from Aleppo, & ſold here not vnder 3. or 4. ſhaughs their batman, being ſixe pounds Engliſh weight. Graine that you dye ſcarlet withall, is worth the batman ready money, 200. ſhaughes, reckoning the ſhaugh for 6. pence Ruſſe, it may be 6. robbles their batman. Your Worſhips may ſend ſome portion of money, if you may buy, as I thinke you may, for 12. and 13. ſhillings a pound the berries, ſo you ſhall gaine both in the price, and waight. If one Engliſhman more had bene here with me, to whome I might haue deliuered our bils of debts, and other things, whatſoeuer ſhould haue chanced of me, I would then haue become ſeruant to mine Interpretor, and ſo haue gone to Ormus, and Aleppo, which both ioyne on the borders of this Countrey, being the chiefe Parte Townes, whereunto from all places Marchants reſort. And thus would I haue ſpent 4. or 5. moneths in trauelling for farther knowledge of things, for to haue certified your Worſhip of. I hope in God to vſe things in ſuch order, that yeerely you ſhall haue returne of your goods from hence, as you haue foorth of Ruſſeland, and in thoſe ſhippes. For if we may, as I doubt not with diligence, prouide to make ſales in time, and with ſpeede receaue ſilke at the Shaughes hand, and other mens, that it may be ſent from hence to be in Aſtracan at the beginning of Aprill, from whence it may be ſent to Colmogro in three moneths and leſſe, & there to be ready with the reſt of your goods, by the ende of June, for your ſhippes to receaue, that will be time inough. This I doubt not to bring to paſſe within a yeere or two, when we are throughly ſetled in theſe parts, and better knowen. Moreouer, you ſhall vnderſtand, that at my laſt being in the preſence of the Shaugh, it was ſaide to me, that Maſter Anthonie Ienkinſon did proffer to take all the rawe ſilke in thoſe parties, deliuering cloth, and other commodities for the ſame. I aſſure you, there is in thoſe parts to be had three or fowre thouſand horſes lading, euery horſe loade being 50. or 60. batmans, beſide ſilke of Groſine. Great aboundance of ſilke at times is ſent out of theſe parts, to wit, 4. or 5. hundred horſe loades at a time, by the Turkes, who bring great ſtore of ſiluer to be coyned, to wit, Dollars at ten ſhaughes the peece. The Hungarie Ducket is at 12. ſhaughs. And hauing monie in readines at the time of the yeere, they buy ſilke the better cheape, when the Countrey men bring it firſt to be ſolde. If your Worſhips may bargaine with the Venetians, to take ſilke at your hands, or otherwiſe deale with them, I do not miſtruſt but to haue at ỹ Shaughs hand, ſixe batmans of ſilke for two peeces and a halfe of kerſies. Your good aduiſe herein, and in other matters, I truſt you will write with conuenient ſpeede. Maſter Anthony Ienkinſon hath deſerued great commendation at all your Worſhips hands: for the good report of his well and wiſe doings in thoſe parts, was oftentimes a comfort to me to heare thereof, and ſome good helpe to me in my proceedings. To this day I neuer heard from any of our Marchants. God grant me in health to ſee your Worſhips: for I haue had a carefull trauell, with many a ſorrowfull day, and vnquiet

Another letter of Arthur Edwards, written in Astracan, the 16. of Iune, 1567. at his returne in his first voyage out of Persia, to the right Worshipfull companie, trading into Russia, Persia, and other the North and Northeast partes.

The Shaughs letters to the Moscouie company.

IT may please your Worships, that herein I haue written not onely certaine articles of your priuiledge, but also the Gouernours names, with the Consuls, Assistants, and generallitie. Also such commodities as the Prince or Emperour of the Countrey hath written in one of his letters, directed to your Worships, to be sent him, with other notes, which I thought good to be remembred, as may appeare hereafter following. Your priuiledge is written, granted, and giuen in the names of these fiue persons following, to wit, sir William Garrard, sir William Chester, gouernours, sir Thomas Lodge, Master Anthony Ienkinson, Master Thomas Nichols, and Arthur Edwards.

1. First it is granted, that you shall pay no manner of customes, or tolles, any kind of wayes, now, nor in time comming, vnto his heires after him. And that all English Marchants, such as you shall appoint nowe, and hereafter, shall and may passe and repasse into all places of his dominions, and other Countreyes adioyning, in the trade of marchandise, to buy and sell all manner of commodities, with all manner of persons.

2. Item that in all places where any of our Marchants shall haue their resort, or abiding, his chiefe Gouernours, Rulers, and Iustices shall take heede vnto vs, being our aide and defence gainst all euill persons, punishing those that shall doe vs any wrong.

3. Item that for all such debts as shall be owing by any manner of person, iustice shall be done on the partie, and we paid at the day.

4. Item that no manner of person, of whatsoeuer estate or degree they be of, shall be so hardie as to take any kind of wares, or any guifts, without any leaue and good will.

5. Item if by chance medley any of our Marchants or seruants, as God forbid, should kill any of his subiects, that no part of your goods shall be touched or medled withall, neither any parte but the offendour, and true iustice to be ministred, and being any of vs, not to suffer without the Princes knowledge, and aduise.

6. Item that all such debts as are nowe owing, or hereafter shall be, are to be paide vnto any of vs, in the absence of the other, be the partie dead, or aliue.

7. Item that no person returne any kinde of wares backe againe, being once bought or solde.

8. Item that when God shall send your goods to shoare, presently his people shall helpe vs a land with them.

These articles before written, I trust in God, will content your mindes, vntill your farther letters be hitherto written vnto the Prince: who I am assured will grant your farther reasonable requests, which his Maiestie hath promised. For I moued the question, declaring vnto him, that I thought your Worships would write your letters of requests, to craue his farther good will, as should be thought meete for your better assurance in the trade of marchandize: you will hardly beleeue what long and gratious talke he had with me, which I assure you continued two houres, which was strange vnto the people, and other Marchant strangers. For betwixt euery question that his Maiestie moued, when I had answered him, he would talke with his Nobles, and other his seruants, hauing some knowledge of our Westerne partes and commodities, and then againe would demand other questions. He caused his Secretarie to write the articles before named, in all of his foure letters giuen me (whereof two as I required, are in the Turkish tongue to be sent you.) On the backe side of one, he hath written what wares his Maiestie would haue you to send him. He held me one houre within night, before I departed from him.

These be the names of the wares or commodities which on the

backeside of one of his letters, the Shaugh hath written to you to be sent him.

FIrst some clothe of golde, with cloth of tyssue, and cloth of botky, as Uelluets wrought with golde.

Item good velluets, to wit, cremosins, purples, reds, greenes, and blackes. These colours his Maiestie requireth: for they are most worne. And though there be some of these wares made in his Citie of Cassan, yet nothing like in goodnes, to those that you may procure for him. Small profite I thinke will be in these wares: yet for diuers considerations, as also to satisfie the Princes minde, I wish you to send some, and those that be especiall good.

Item good damasks and satins, of all sortes, with an hundred peeces of good chamlets, which are worth here 80. shaughes the peece, at fiue pence the shaugh, and those silkes to be of those colours aboue written, to wit, cremosins, purples, reds, greenes, blackes, with some light watchet colours.

Item three or foure complete harnesses that will abide the shot of a handgunne, with tenne or twelue targets of steele, being good.

Item ten or twelue good shirts of male, being very good, or else none, that may abide the shot of an arrowe, and two buffe ierkins.

Item ten or twelue peeces of Westerne kersies, being thickers well and close shut in the weauing, and died into scarlets, and fine reds. I thinke there wil be no such cloth for Noblemens caps. The Prince named them "karangies, saying, that maidens did make them, and is desirous of them.

" By the word Karangies, I thinke they meane kersies.

Item fiue peeces of fine Holland cloth for the Prince, with some other for Noblemen, of a lower price.

Item twentie handguns being good, some of them with fire lockes, and also fiue good dags, with lockes to trauell withall.

Item 100. bushes for garments, (none made of swines haire,) for guifts, and other wise to be solde.

Item fiue stone bowes that shoote lead pellets.

Item a mill to grinde corne in the field as they goe, finely deuised: for Cozomomet willed me to write for one to be sent, to giue the Prince.

Item the Prince requireth of all sortes and colours of London clothes. I wish you to sende no lesse then 40. or 50. for I knowe they will be solde to profite, especially such cloth as may be afforded for 20. shaughes the arshine, which is longer by two of mine ynches then Russia arshine is. Let there be fine scarlets, violets in graine, fine reds, blackes, browne blewes, foure or fiue of euery sort, for the Prince, and other Lordes: the rest of other colours liuely to the sight, as London russets, tawnies, Lion colours, good liuely greenes, with other, as you shall thinke good: for the Prince desireth to see of all sortes, which will be an occasion, that the Venetians and Turkes shall be in lesse estimation then they are: for they themselues doe feare, and secretly say the same. And truely the Princes subiects intend to enter into trade with vs for spices, and other commodities, that they were woont to sell vnto the Venetians, and Turkes.

Thus I committe you all to God, who send you health, with increase of Worship. Written in Astracan, the 16. of June, 1567.

The

There paſſe downe Volga euery Sommer, 500. boates great & ſmall, from all the vpper parts of the riuer, whereof ſome be of 500. tunne. They goe for minerall ſalt and for Sturgion.

The ſalt lieth in rocks (and is whitiſh red, and in fine ſand) as it were 30. miles from Aſtracan vpward the Caſpian ſea. They dig it themſelues and pay nothing for it, but to the prince a penie a poode, viz. 40. pound waight.

The Sturgion which they call Ocetera, is taken fiftie miles on this ſide Aſtracan. Along the riuer the ſpace of 20. miles, they make their booties in plaine grounds, and fiſh for the ſpace of three moneths, viz. from the end of May till the end of Auguſt, and hauing ſalt they vſe to ſalt them. Fiſhing for Sturgion for 3. moneths.

The riuer there is 5. or 6. miles broad, but with ſome Iſlands.

The riuer below Yeraſlaue where it is moſt narrow, is a mile broad from ſide to ſide.

The riuer runneth vpon red clay, all woods of birch and oke on the riuer ſides, ſaue about the townes of the fiſhing places.

Of this hempe, they bring in Winter to Vologda and Colmogro, and we ſet in worke in making of cables aboue 100. men.

The Ruſſians doe ſpinne and hachell it, and the Engliſhe tarre it in threed and lay the cable. And one cable of thoſe is worth two of Danzicke, becauſe the Danzickers put in old cable and rotten ſtuffe, which in foule weather is found of no ſtrength. The Engliſhmen in making of cables ſet on worke a 100. men in Ruſſia.

Beyond this land of Cathay which they praise to be ciuil and vnspeakably rich, is the country named in the Tartarian tongue Cara-calmack inhabited with blacke people: but in Cathay the most part thereof stretching to the sunne rising, are people white and of faire complexion. Their religion also as the Tartares report, is christian, or after the maner of christians, and their language peculiar, differing from the Tartarian tongue.

There are no great and furious Beares in trauelling through the waies aforesaid, but wolues white and blacke. And because that woods are not of such quantitie there, as in these partes of Russia, but in maner rather skant then plentifull, as is reported, the Beares breed not that way, but some other beasts, (as namely one in Russe called Barse) are in those coasts. This Barse appeareth by a skinne of one seene here to sell, to be neere so great as a big lion spotted very faire, and therefore we here take it to be a Leopard or Tiger.

Note, 20. dayes iourney from Cathay is a country named Angrim, where liueth the beast that beareth the best muske, & the principal therof is cut out of the knee of the male. The people are tawnie, & for that the men are not bearded nor differ in complexion frō women, they haue certaine

The instructions of one of Permia, who reporteth he had bene at Cathay the way before written, and also another way neere the sea coast, as followeth, which note was sent out of Russia from Giles Holmes.

Pechora but six dayes iourney by land or water frō Ob. FIrst from the prouince of Dwina is knowen the way to Pechora, and from Pechora trauelling with olens or harts, is sixe dayes iourney by land, and in the Sommer as much by water to the riuer of Ob.

The Ob is a riuer full of flats, the mouth of it is 70. Russe miles ouer. And from thence three dayes iourney on the right hand is a place called Chorno-lese, to say in English, Blacke woode, and from thence neere hand is a people called Pechey-cony, wearing their haire by his description after the Irish fashion.

From Pechey-cony to Ioulc Calmachey 3. dayes iourney, and from thence to Chorno Callachay 3. dayes tending to the Southeast.

These two people are of the Tartarian faith, and tributaries to the great Can.

Here follow certaine countreys of the Samoeds which dwell vpon the riuer Ob, and vpon the sea coasts beyond the same, taken out of the Russe tongue word by word, and trauelled by a Russe borne in Colmogro, whose name was Pheother Towtigin, who, by report, was slaine in his second voyage in one of the sayd countreys.

VPon the East part beyond the countrey of Vgori, the riuer Ob is the most Westermost part thereof. Upon the sea coast dwell Samoeds, and their countrey is called Molgomzey, whose meat is flesh of olens or harts, and fishe, and doe eate one another sometimes among themselues. And if any merchants come vnto them, then they kill one of their children for their sakes to feast them withall. And if a merchant chance to die with them, they burie him not, but eate him, and so doe they eate them of their owne countrey likewise. They be euill of sight, and haue small noses, but they be swift and shoote very wel, and they trauaile on harts and on dogges, and their apparell is Sables and Harts skinnes. They haue no merchandise but sables onely. Trauelling on harts & dogs.

2 Item, on the same coast or quarter beyond those people, and by the sea side also doeth dwell another kind of Samoeds in like maner, hatting another language. One moneth in the yeere they liue in the sea, and do not come or dwell on the dry land for that moneth.

3 Item beyond these people, on the sea coast, there is another kind of Samoeds, their meate is flesh and fish, and their merchaundise are Sables, white and blacke Foxes (which the Russes call Pseits) and harts skins and fawnes skins.

The way discouered by water by vs Thomas Sowtham, and Iohn Sparke, from the towne of Colmogro, vnto the citie of Nouogrode in Russia, conteining many particulers of the way, and distance of miles, as hereafter foloweth. Anno 1566.

WE departed from Colmogro about 10. of the clocke afore noone in a Lodia or Barke, which we hired to bring vs along the coast to a place called Soroka, & in the said barke we hired 6. mariners, and a boy to conduct vs to the place before rehearsed.

The Lodia or barke was of the burden of 25. tunnes or thereabout, wherewith we haled downe the riuer of Dwina, the wind being then calme, vnto a monasterie called S. Michael where we were constrained to anker because of a contrary wind which there met vs.

A uerst is but 3. quarters of an English mile.

From Colmogro to this monasterie are 50. uersts or miles of Russia, at which place we tarried till the 21. day in the morning, and then hauing the wind somewhat faire, we set saile and departed thence.

21 We departed from the monasterie of S. Michael, hauing the wind somewhat faire, and arriued at Rose Island, outer and against the monasterie of S. Nicholas, the 22. day at 2. of the clocke in the morning, which is 35. miles distant from the monasterie of S. Michael. By reason of contrary wind and tide we were constrained to tarie there all that day.

23 We departed from the monasterie of S. Nicholas at 7. of the clocke in the euening, and came to an anker at the beacons, and continued there vntil halfe an hower past 10. of the clocke, and then set from thence, the wind being South: our course was West until 5. of the clocke in the morning, when as we came to an anker against Newnox towne, where we continued vntil the 25. day.

At this towne of Newnox Richard Chancelor in his first voyage, with his company a ships boord were relieued.

The said towne of Newnox is from the monasterie of S. Nicholas 35. miles.

25 We departed from Newnox haue at one of the clocke in the after noone, the wind at South and Southeast, and our course Northwest and by West.

The point of Tolsticke which is the headland before the entrance of Newnox hauen, and the headland of Seusemskie, lie next Southeast and by South, Northwest and by North. We came to an anker there this day at 4. of the clock in the afternoone, being from Newnox hauen 15. miles, where we continued in harbour til the 27. day of the moneth by reason of contrary winds.

27 We departed from Seusemskie in the morning at 5. of the clocke, the wind next at East and by North, and our course Northwest and by West.

The said land of Seusemskie and the headland going into Owna riuer, lieth East & by South west, and by North, and betweene them is 25. miles.

This day at Sunne set we came to an Island called Sogisney passing betwixt it and the maine, with the wind at South and by East, our course was West and by South, being 85. miles from Owna riuer.

Being past the said Island 10. miles, the wind came contrary, whereupon we returned to the Island of Sogisney, where we remained vntil the 29. day.

29 The 29. day we departed from Sogisney aforesaid at 5. of the clocke in the afternoone, the wind at East northeast, and our course was Southwest & by west, passing by an Island called Anger, being 30. miles from Sogisney, and keeping on our course, wee came by the headland of an Island called Abdon, being from the Island of Anger 15. miles, where we found many rockes: and if the great prouidence of God had not preserued vs, wee had there perished, being fallen amongst them in the night time, and our pilot none of the perfectest, which was contrary to his profession as we found it.

But whosoeuer will trauell that way, must either keepe hard aboord the shore, for that there is a chanell which goeth along the coast within the rockes, or els giue the headland a birth of 6. miles at the least, and so goe a seaboord all: for there are ledges of rockes that lie fiue miles from the headland.

We gaue the headland a birth of 3. miles, notwithstanding there lay two rocks two miles in sea boord of vs, so that we were inclosed with them, and sate vpon the highest of them: but it pleased God to make it calme, and giue vs the day allo, or els we had miscaried.

30 We departed from the headland of the Island of Abdon, at 4. of the clocke in the morning, directing our course West, and at 10. of the clocke before noone, wee arriued at a monasterie named Soloffekay, which is 15. miles from Abdon.

At this monasterie we continued vntill the 31. day of this moneth. Wee had here deliuered vs by the chiefe monkes of the monasterie, their letter and house seale, and a seruaunt of theirs to conduct vs safely through the dangerous riuer of Owiga.

Ex

The people of all those partes are wilde, and speake another kind of language, and are for the most part all tenants to the monasterie. The effect of the letter was, that they should bee readie to helpe and assist vs in all dangerous places, and carie our boats and goods ouer land in places needfull, as in deed they did, as hereafter shall appeare.

Note, that at our being at the monasterie, there was no Abbot for the place as then chosen: for 15. dayes before our arriuall there, the Abbot was sent for by the Emperour, and made Metropolitane of the realme, as he now is: The number of monkes belonging to the monasterie are at the least 200.

31 Wee departed from the monasterie of Soloffekay, as is aforesayd, to a faire stone house of theirs, which is 5. miles from the monasterie, lying from it South and by West.

1 We departed from the Stone house at 3. of the clocke in the morning: our course was West for 60. versts, and then passing betwixt diuers and sundry rocks, with many small Islands round about vs for the space of 20. miles, keeping most commonly the same course still, wee then shaped a new course, and yet sundry times shifting, but we alwayes kept the Southwest, and neerest of all South southwest, vntill we came within two miles of the entrance of the riuer Owiga, where we were to beare in, West and by North. August.

From the riuer Owiga, to the Islands and rocks before mentioned, are 20. miles.

The riuer Owiga.

We arriued about 4. of the clocke in the after noone within the riuer of Owiga, at a place named Soroka, at which place we forsooke our barke or Lodia, and continued there in making prouision for small boates to carie vs vp the riuer vntill the 3. day of the same.

3 We departed from Soroka at two of the clocke in the afternoone, with 3. boates and 12. men to rowe, and set the foresaid boates vp the riuer of Owiga, which we hired.

We went this day 7. miles to a place called Ostroue, where we lay all night, but in the way 4. miles from Soroka at a place where the water falleth from the rockes, as if it came steepe downe from a mountaine, we were constrained to take out our goods and wares out of the said boats, and caused thē to be caried a mile ouer land, & afterwards also had our boats in like sort caried or drawn ouer land by force of men which there dwelled, being tenants to the monasterie aforesaid.

The fall of a riuer.

And when our boates were come to the place where our wares were laied, wee launched our boates and laded our wares againe, and went to the place before named, where wee continued and remained that night.

We departed from Ostroue in the morning before Sunne rising, rowing, and setting vp the riuer 5. miles, where wee came to a place, whereas wee were againe constrained to take out our wares and to carie them and our boates three miles ouer land, so that with rowing, drawing, and setting wee went this day 7. mile more to a place called Sloboday, where we lay all night.

5 We departed from Sloboday in the morning at Sunne rising, and at 6. of the clocke in the afternoone we came to a village called Paranda, which is from Sloboday, 30. miles, where wee remained all that night.

6 We departed from Paranda at 6. of the clocke in the morning, and all that day what with setting and drawing our boats, we went but 11. miles, for twise vnladed our wares, and drew our boats ouerland, in one place a mile & an halfe, in an other place as it were the eight part of a mile, and so we came to a place called Voyets, where we caried all that night.

7 We departed from Voyets at 4. of the clocke in the morning, and so came to an Ozora or lake called after the name of the riuer, and vnto a place called Quequenich, we rowed all this day, and came thither by one of the clocke in the afternoone, which is 25. miles from Voyets, and there wee remained all night to hire men and boates to carie vs forward on our iourney.

Here departed backe from vs the seruant which wee had at the monasterie, being sent by the monkes to goe thus farre with vs. And after that he had hired the boats and taken the mens names that should conduct vs, and giuen them charge to deliuer vs with all things in safetie, at a place being a litle towne called Pouensa, then hee departed from vs without taking any reward for his paines, for so he was charged and commanded by the monkes.

8 We departed from Quequenich at Sunne rising, and all that day rowed vpon the lake amongst many Islands. The inhabitants doe there report that there are as many Islands in their lake, as there are dayes in the yeere. In the euening wee came to a village named Tellekina, which is 60. miles from Quequenich.

A lake very full of Islands.

9 We departed from Tellekina in the morning at 5. of the clocke, and so entring into a riuer, we went that day 13. miles. In one place we caried our boates and goods ouer land 3. miles. At euening we came to a place called Oreiche na maelay, where we lay all night.

10 We departed thence at 5. of the clocke in the morning, & so rowing, came to a place where ṕ riuer ended, being 20. miles distant from the place where we lay all night, at which place we forsooke our boates and vnladed our wares, and sent a man to the towne of Pouensa, which was seuen mile off for horses to carie vs and our wares to the sayd place. The horses came, and we laded our goods, and at 6. of the clocke in the afternoone wee arriued at the towne of Pouensa, with all things in safetie.

The famous lake of Onega.

This towne of Pouensa standeth within one mile of the famous lake or Ozera of Onega, which is 320. miles long, and in some places 70. miles ouer. But where it is narowest, it is 25. miles ouer, being fed with many goodly riuers which fall into it. Hard aboord the shore within 6. miles, you shall haue 40. and 45. fathoms of depth.

Here it is to be noted that from this place of Pouensa vnto the village of Soroka downe those dangerous riuers which we came thorough, at no time of the yeere can or may any man carrie or transport any goods that come from Nouogrode, or the Narue, and such other places: for in the Sommer it is impossible to carie downe any wares by reason of the great fals of water that doe descend from the rockes. Likewise in the Winter by reason of the great force and fall of waters which make so terrible raises, that in those places it neuer freezeth, but all such wares as come frō Nouogrode to Pouensa, are transported by land to a place called Some in the Winter which Some standeth on the sea side, as doth Soroka. The ready way from Pouensa by land to this place of Some, with the distance of miles I will shew hereafter.

12 We departed from Pouensa at 9. of the clocke in the morning, with 2. small boates which we hired to carie vs to a place called Toluo vpon the lake of Onega, being 50. miles from Pouensa, where we arriued the 13. day in the morning, where we bought a boate that caried vs and all our wares from thence to the citie of Nouogrode.

14 We departed from Toluo at 3. of the clocke in the afternoone, and at the euening arriued at a certaine Iland named Salasalma, vpon the said lake 7. miles from Toluo, and by reason of contrary windes we there taried vntil the 16. day of this moneth.

16 We departed from Salasalma, at 8. of the clocke in the morning, and came to an Iland the 17. day in the morning, named Vorronia, where we continued by reason of contrary windes, vntill the 21. day of the said moneth, and it is 60. miles from Salasalma.

S. Clement his monasterie

21 We departed from Vorronia Iland two howers before day, and arriued at S. Clements monasterie, at 2. of the clocke in the after noone, being from Vorronia 48. miles.

22 We departed from S. Clements monasterie at the breake of the day, hauing a faire wind all along the lake: wee sailed without striking of saile vntil 2. howers within night, and then entred into a riuer called Swire, at a monasterie called Vosnessino Christo, 5. miles from the entrance of the riuer, where we taried all night. It is from S. Clements monasterie 160. miles: the stream of that riuer went with vs.

23 We departed from Vosnessino Christo before sunne rising, and haled down the riuer sometime sailing, and sometime rowing, so that this day wee went 90. miles and lay at night at a place called Vassian.

Or, Sermarx.

24 We departed from Vassian at the breake of the day, & came to a place called ‡Selucaxe, where we lay all night, and is 10. miles from Vassian.

25 We departed from Selucaxe at 4. of the clocke in the morning, and entred vpon the Lake of Ladiskaie, the wind being calme all that day sauing 3. howers, and then it was with vs, so that we sailed and rowed that day 10. miles, along vpon the said lake, and entred into the riuer of Volhuskie, which riuer hath his beginning 20. miles aboue Nouogrode, and runneth thorough the midst of the citie, and so falleth into this lake, which is farre longer then the lake of Onega but it is not so broad. This lake falleth into the sea that commeth from the Sound: where any vessell or boat, hauing a good pilot, may go thorough the Sound into England.

The riuer of Volhuskie. The lake of Ladeskaie.

As soone as we were entred into the riuer, wee came to a monasterie called S. Nicholas Medued, where we lay all that night.

The monasterie of Colnespoli.

26 Wee departed from S. Nicholas Medued, at 5. of the clocke in the morning, rowing and hawing our boates all day, and came at night to another monasterie called Gosnopolie, which is 30. miles from S. Nicholas Medued, where we lay all that night.

27 We departed from Gosnopolie at 6. of the clocke in the morning, and at euening came to a place called Moislaue, where we lay all night, being 46. miles from the monasterie of Gosnopolie.

28 We departed from Moislaue, and the said day at night came to a place called Grussina, 35. miles from Moislaue where we lodged.

29 We departed from Grussina in the morning, & the same day at euening came to a place called Petroe Suetoe, where we lay all night, being 40. miles from Grussina.

30 We

30 We departed from Petroe Suetoe in the morning, & at two of the clocke in the afternoone we arriued at the citie of Nouogrod, being twentie miles from Petroe Suetoe. Here we found William Rowlie Agent to the company, who was there stayed with all his company, and was not licenced to depart thence for the Mosco, by reason that the plague was thē in the citie of Nouogrod. Vnto him we deliuered all the wares that we brought from Colmogro, for by the way we sold not a peny worth, the people of the countrey euery where be so miserable. The citie of Nouogrod.

The right way to bring and transport wares from Nouogrod to Rose illand into S. Nicholas bay, where our shippes yeerely lade, with the distance of miles from place to place, is as followeth:

20 Miles from Nouogrod to Petroe Suetoe.
40 Miles from thence to Grusina.
35 Miles from thence to Moislaue.
46 Miles from thence to the monasterie Gosnopolie.
15 Miles from thence to Ladega towne.
15 Miles from thence to Selunax ouer the lake of Ladega, albeit there be many villages all along the lake.
180 Miles from Ladega towne vp the riuer of Swire, vnto the monasterie of Vosnessino Christo, albeit there are many villages vpon the riuer: for within euery fiue or sixe miles you shall haue villages or small townes.
160 Miles from Vosnessino Christo to S. Clements monastery, albeit there be many villages all along the lake of Onega.
48 Miles from thence to Voronia.
67 Miles from thence to Toluo towne: & there are diuers villages all along the lake where the carryers may lie, and haue meat for man and horse.
50 Miles from thence to Pouensa, where Onega lake endeth.

The way from Pouensa to Some towne is this:

30 Miles from Pouensa to Mastellina.
10 Miles from thence to Tellekina.
30 Miles from thence to Toluich.
35 Miles from thence to Carraich.
20 Miles from thence to Varnich.
10 Miles from thence to Oxtrouo.
15 Miles from thence to Lapina.
20 Miles from thence to Some it selfe.

Note that from the citie of Nouogrod vnto the towne of Some is 936 miles, & from the towne of Some vnto the monasterie of S. Nicholas or Rose illand, ouer and against where our shippes do ride, is full as many miles as is Soroka village from S. Nicholas, as the Russes do account it, as also we do iudge it, namely 325 miles. So that from Nouogrod to S. Nicholas road, is by our account 1261 miles or verstes.

Furthermore it is to be noted that all such wares as shall be bought at Nouogrod, and sent to Some towne, must be sent by sled way in the winter: for if any ware should be sent from Nouogrod by water in the spring of the yeere, after the yce is gone, then must the sayd wares remaine at Pouensa towne all that summer, by reason that in the summer there is no way to go from Pouensa vnto Some towne. Trauell by sleds.

At Pouensa there are many warehouses to be hyred, so that if there were as much goods as ten ships could carry away, you might haue warehouses to put it in: but if there should remaine much ware all the summer, to be caryed in the winter to Some towne, then horses are not easily to be goten at that place to cary it thither: so that your wares once bought at Nouogrod, you must haue caryers there to cary it to the towne of Some by sledges, whereof you may there haue 2000 if you will, by the report of the Russes. 2000 sleds belonging to one towne.

For from Nouogrod yeerely there go many sledges in the winter to fetch salt from Some, with caryers and empty sledges there to buy it, and to bring it to Nouogrod to sell it in the market or otherwise.

From Nouogrod vnto Some towne you may haue a pood of wares caryed for eight pence or nine pence: but in any wise your wares must be sent from Nouogrod by the first of January, so that the wares may be at Some by Candlemas, or soone after: for if your wares should cary by the

A good cause for seasonable trauell.

the way vntill the 15 of February when the sunne is of some power, then is it dangerous: for the heat of the sunne in the day causeth the deepe lakes of Ladega, and specially of Onega to cleare, and if there should come then a sudden thaw, as oftentimes in that time of the yeere doth, then doe these lakes open and breake, whereby many men are lost, and both men and horse drowned, although other riuers do remaine frozen a long time after.

In the towne of Some also there are many warehouses, whereof we can not be destitute for the reposing of our wares, as also as many barks as you will to transport your wares from thence to S. Nicholas road, and that for three pence a poods carpage: so that from the citie of Nouogrod vnto S. Nicholas road you may haue wares caryed for two altines. The pood commeth vnto 23 altines the tunne.

Nouogrod within 180 miles of the Narue.

Prouided alwayes, that you buy your wares there your selfe, and send it thence: for there is no hope that the natiues will bring their wares from Nouogrod to Some, in hope to sell vnto vs, considering the great trade that they haue at the Narue, which is within 180 miles off them.

Written by Thomas Sowtham a seruant to the company.

An Act for the corporation of Merchants aduenturers for the discouering of new trades, made in the eight yere of Queene Elizabeth. Anno 1560.

WHeras diuers very good subiects of this realme of England in the latter end of the reigne of the late right high and mighty prince our soueregne Lord king Edward the first, at the gracious incouragement, & right good liking of the said king, & by his Maiesties liberall example, did at their aduenture, and to their exceeding great charges, for the glory of God, the honor and increase of the reuenues of the crowne, and the common vtilitie of the whole realme of England, set forth their shippes for the discouery by sea, of iles, lands, territories, dominions, and seignories vnknowne, and by the subiects of the said late king, not commonly by seas frequented: and after that almighty God had called to his mercy the said king, who dyed before the finishing, and sealing of his most ample and gracious letters of priuileges promised to the said subiects, as well in consideration of the said enterprise, as for diuers other respects, it pleased our late soueregne Quene Mary, at the humble sutes of the same subiects, to grant by her letters patents vnder the great seale of England, bearing date at Westminster the 26 day of February, in the second yeere of her raigne, for the considerations mentioned in the said letters patents, to the said subiects being specially named in the said letters patents, and to their successours, that they by the name of Merchants aduenturers of England, for the discouerie of lands, territories, iles, dominions, and seignories vnknowne, and not before their late aduenture or enterprise, by seas or nauigations commonly frequented, should be from thencefoorth one body, and perpetuall fellowshippe and communaltie of themselues, both in deed and in name, and that the same fellowshippe and communaltie from thencefoorth should and might haue one or two gouernours, foure consuls, and foure and twentie assistants, of the said fellowshippe and communaltie of Merchants aduenturers, and that they by the name of the Gouernour, Consuls, Assistants, Fellowshippe, and Communaltie of Merchants aduenturers, for the discouery of lands, territories, iles, dominions, and seignories vnknowne, by the seas and nauigations, and not before their sayd late aduenture or enterprise, by seas frequented, should or might be able in the law to implead and to be impleaded, to answere and to be answered, to defend and to be defended, before what soeuer iudge or iustice temporall or spirituall, or other persons whatsoeuer, in whatsoeuer court or courts, and in all actions, reall, personall, and mixt, and in euery of them, and in all plaints of Nouel desseisen, and also in all plaints, sutes, quarels, affayres, businesse, and demands whatsoeuer they be, touching and concerning the said fellowshippe and communaltie, and the affayres and businesse of the same, onely in as ample maner and forme, as any other corporation of this realme might doe, giuing also, and granting vnto them by the sayd letters patents, diuers authorities, powers, iurisdictions, prehemmences, franchises, liberties, and priuileges, as by the same letters patenes more at large will appeare. And among other things mentioned in the said letters patents, whereas one of the three shippes, by the said fellowshippe being that time set forth for the voyage of discouerie aforesayd, named the Edward Bonauenture, had arriued within the Empyre and dominion of the high and mighty prince Lord Iohn Vasilowich, Emperour of all Russia, Vologda, Marskye, great Duke of Musky, &c. who receiued the

captaine and merchants of the sayd shippe very graciously, granting vnto them freelie to traffike with his subiects in all kinde of merchandizes, with diuers other gracious priuileges and liberties: therefore the said late Queene by the same letters patents, for her, her heyres & successors, did grant that all the maine lands, iles, ports, hauens, creeks and riuers of the said mightie Emperour of all Russia, and great duke of Mosco, &c. and all and singular other lands, dominions, territories, iles, ports, hauens, creeks, riuers, armes of the seas, of all and euery other Emperour, king, prince, ruler, or gouernor whatsoeuer he or they be, before the said late aduenture or enterprise not knowne, or by the aforesaid merchants and subiects of the said king and queene, by the seas not commonly frequented, nor any part or parcell thereof, and lying Northwards, Northeastwards, or Northwestwards, as in the said letters patents is mentioned, should not be visited, frequented nor haunted by any the subiects of the said late Queene, other then of the said company and fellowship, and their successors, without expresse licence, agreement, and consent of the Gouernor, Consuls, and Assistants of the said fellowship, and communaltie, or the more part of them, in maner and forme, as is expressed in the said letters patents, vpon paine of forfeiture and losse aswell of the ship and ships, with the appurtenances, as also of the goods, merchandizes, and things whatsoeuer they be, of those the subiects of the said late Queene not being of the said fellowship and communaltie, which should attempt or presume to saile to any of those places, which then were, or after should happen to be found and traffiked vnto, the one halfe of the same forfeiture to be to the vse of the said late queene, her heyres and successors, and the other halfe to be to the vse of the said fellowship and communaltie, as by the same letters patents more plainely will appeare.

Since the making of which letters patents, the said fellowship haue, to their exceeding great costes, losses and expences, not onely by their trading into the said dominions of the said mightie prince of Russia, &c. found out conuenient way to saile into the said dominions: but also passing thorow the same, and ouer the Caspian sea, haue discouered very commodious trades into Armenia, Media, Hyrcania, Persia, and other dominions in Asia maior, hoping by Gods grace to discouer also the countrey of Cathaia, and other regions very conuenient to be traded into by merchants of this realme, for the great benefit and commodities of the same.

And forasmuch as diuers subiects of this realme, vnderstanding the premises, and perceiuing that now after the charge and trauell aforesaid, diuers wares and merchandizes are brought by the said fellowshippe into this realme, out of the dominions already discouered, which be within this realme of good estimation, minding for their peculiar gaine, vtterly to decay the trade of the said fellowshippe, haue contrary to the tenor of the same letters patents, in great disorder traded into the dominions of the sayd mightie prince of Russia, &c. to the great detriment of this common wealth: And for that the name by which the said fellowshippe is incorporated by the letters patentes aforesaid, is long, and consisteth of very many words: Therfore be it enacted by the queenes most excellent Maiestie, the lords spirituall and temporall, and the commons in this present parlement assembled, and by authority of the same, that the said fellowship, company, society and corporation made or created by the said letters patents, shall at all time & times from henceforth be incorporated, named and called onely by the name of the fellowship of English merchants, for discouery of new trades, and by the same name for euer, shall and may continue a perpetuall body incorporate in deed and name, and onely by the same name from henceforth, shall implead, and be impleaded, answere and be answered, defend and be defended, sue and be sued, in whatsoeuer courts and places, and shall and may by the same name be inabled to purchase, haue, holde, possesse, reteine, and inioy whatsoeuer manors, lands, tenements, rents, reuersions, seruices, and hereditaments not exceeding a hundred marks yerely, not being holden of the Queenes maiestie, her heyres, or successors by knights seruice in Capite, and all goods, merchandizes, chattels, and other things whatsoeuer, and shall and may by the same name make and do all things as any other corporation may do, and also shall haue and inioy all and singular the liberties, priuileges, iurisdictions, franchises, preheminences, powers, authorities, and things, and may doe and execute all other matters and thinges in the sayd letters patents mentioned, or in any wise conteined. And that no part nor parcell of the mayne landes, iles, portes, hauens, roades, creekes, riuers, armes of the seas of any Emperour, king, prince, ruler or gouernour whatsoeuer he or they be, before the said first enterprise made by the merchantes of the sayd corporation, not knowen by the merchantes and subiectes of this realme, or by them not commonly by seas frequented, and lying from the citie of London Northwards, Northwestwards or Northeastwards, nor any part or parcell of the maine landes, dominions, iles, portes, roades, hauens, creekes, armes of the seas, that now be subiect to the said high and mightie prince Lord Iohn Vasiliwich, his heyres or successours, or to the Emperour, chiefe gouernour or ruler of the said country of Russia for the time being, his heyres or successors, nor the countries of Armenia maior

maior or minor, Media, Hyrcania, Persia, or the Caspian sea, nor any part of them shall be sayled or traffiked vnto, visited, frequented, or haunted by any person, being or that shall be a subiect or denizen of this realme, by themselues, theyr factor or factors, or any other to theyr vse or commodity, by any wayes or meanes, directly or indirectly, other then by the order, agreement, consent, or ratification of the gouernor, consuls, and assistants of the said fellowshippe and communaltie, or the more part of them, and their successors for the time being: vpon paine that euery person and persons offending in this behalfe, shall forfeit and loose, Ipso facto, euery such shippe and shippes, with the appurtenances, and all such goodes, merchandizes, and thinges whatsoeuer, as by any such person or persons shalbe by any wayes or meanes, directly or indirectly, prouided, caryed, conducted, brought or exchanged, in, at, to, through or from any of the places prohibited, as is aforesaid, contrary to the true intent of this statute: the one moity of all which forfeitures to be to our said soueraigne lady the Queenes Maiesty, her heyres and successors, and the other moity thereof to the said fellowshippe of English merchants for discouery of new trades, and theyr successors, to be seized and taken whersoeuer they may be found, by any person or persons, to the vse of our said soueraigne lady, her heyres and successors, and of the said fellowshippe of English merchants for discouery of new trades, and of theyr successors, or the same or the value thereof to be demanded or sued for by the Queenes highnesse, her heyres and successors, or by the sayd fellowshippe of English merchants for discouery of new trades, or their successors, or their attornie or attornies, or by any person or persons being of the same fellowshippe of English merchants for discouery of new trades, or theyr successors in any court of record, or in any other court or courts within this realme, or els where by action of debt, action of detinue, bill, plaint, information, or otherwise: in which suit no essoine, protection, wager of law, our iniunctio shall be allowed, for, or on the behalfe of the partie or parties defendant.

Prouided alwayes, that whereas diuers subiects of this realme being not of the fellowshippe aforesayd, haue heretofore made aduentures to and from some of the places prohibited by the said letters patents, that the said subiects, theyr heyres, executors, administrators and assignes, or any of them shall not be impeached, impleaded, troubled, sued, nor molested for the same in their goods or persons in any maner of wise, either by our said soueraigne lady, her heyrs or successors, or the sayd fellowshippe, or theyr successors.

Prouided also, that it shall be lawfull for any subiect of this realme, hauing presently any shipping, goods, wares, or ready money, remayning at or in any place, of or within the dominion of the said mighty prince of Russia, or in any other of the places prohibited to be visited or traffiked vnto by this statute or the said letters patents, to fetch, bring, and conuey the same, or cause the same to be brought or conueyed from thence by sea or otherwise, before the feast of S. Iohn Baptist, which shalbe in the yeere of our Lord God 1568, any thing conteined in this statute, or in the said letters patents to the contrary notwithstanding.

Prouided also, that it shall be lawfull for any of the subiects of this realme, to saile to the port, towne, territory, or castle of Wardhouse, or to any of the coastes, townes, hauens, creekes, riuers, islands, and land of Norway for trade of fishing, or any other trade there vsed by the subiects of this realme, any thing in this statute to the contrary notwithstanding.

And for the better mainteinance of the naue and mariners of this realme, be it prouided and inacted, that it shall not be lawfull to the said fellowshippe and company, nor to any of them to carry and transport, or cause to be carryed and transported any commodity of this realme to theyr new trade, but onely in English shippes, and to be sailed for the most part with English mariners, nor also to bring into this realme nor into Flanders from their sayd new trade, any merchandizes, or other commodities but in English shippes, and sailed for the most part by the English mariners, on paine to forfeit for euery such offence two hundred poundes, whereof the one moity shall be to the Queenes maiestie, her heyres and successors, the other moity to the head officers of any port towne, hauing any hauen, or harborough decayed, by what name soeuer they be incorporate, to the reparation of such harborough, that will sue for the same in any court of record, by action, bill, plaint or information, wherein no essoine, protection, or wager of law for the defendant shall be admitted or allowed.

Prouided also, and be it enacted, that no maner of person or persons shall from henceforth carrie or transport, or cause to be carryed or transported out of this realme of England, any maner of clothes or karsies into anie of the partes where the sayde fellowshippe and society is priuiledged to trade by this act, before the same clothes and karsies shall be all dressed, and for the most part dyed within this realme, vpon payne of forfeiture for euery such cloth and karsie, otherwise carryed and transported, fiue pounds: the one halfe thereof to the Queenes Maiestie, her heyres and successors,

ſucceſſors, the other halfe to the Maiſter and Wardens of the cloth workers in the city of London for the time being, by what name ſoeuer they be incorporate, that will ſue for the ſame.

Prouided alſo, that whenſoeuer the ſayd ſociety or company ſhall willingly withdraw, and diſcontinue wholly by the ſpace of three yeeres in time of peace, the diſcharging of their merchandizes at the road of S. Nicholas bay in Ruſſia, and doe not diſcharge their ſayd merchandizes at ſome other port or roade lying on that North coaſt of Ruſſia, or other territory, now ſubiect to the ſayd mighty prince of Ruſſia, &c. hetherto by the ſubiects of this realme not commonly frequented, that then during the time of any ſuch diſcontinuance and withdrawing, as is aforeſaid, it ſhalbe lawfull to all the ſubiects of this realme to trade to the Narue onely in Engliſh bottoms, any thing in this Act to the contrary notwithſtanding.

Prouided alſo, that euery of the Queenes Maieſties ſubiectes inhabiting within the citie of Yorke, the townes of Newcaſtle vpon Tyne, Hull, and of Boſton, hauing continually traded the courſe of merchandize by the ſpace of ten yeeres, and which before the 25 of December, that ſhalbe in Ann. Dom. 1567, ſhall contribute, ioyne, and put in ſtocke to, with, and amongſt the ſaid company, ſuch ſumme and ſummes of money, as any of the ſaid company, which hath thoroughly continued and contributed to the ſaid new trade, from the yeere 1552, hath done, & before the ſaid 25 of December 1567 ſhall do for the furniture of one ordinary, full and intyre portion, or ſhare, and do in all things behaue himſelfe as others of the ſaid ſociety be bound to doe, and hereafter ſhall be bound to do by the priuileges, ordinances & ſtatutes of the ſayd company, ſhall from the ſame 25 day of December 1567, be, and be accounted free, and as one of the ſayd ſociety and company, and ſubiect to the priuileges, ordinances and ſtatutes of the ſaid company, reaſonably made and to be made, any thing in this preſent Act to the contrary notwithſtanding.

A very briefe remembrance of a voyage made by M. Anthony Ienkinſon, from London to Moſcouia, ſent from the Queenes Maieſtie to the Emperour, in the yeere 1566.

THe fourth day of May in the yeere aforeſaid, I imbarked my ſelfe at Grauelend in the good ſhip called the Harry of London, and hauing had a proſperous voyage arriued at the bay of S. Nicholas in Ruſſia the tenth day of July following, and immediatly I ſent in poſt to the Emperor to aduertiſe of my comming and trauelling then thorow the country, I with my company came to the Moſco where the Emperor kept his court, the 23 of Auguſt, and forthwith gaue the Secretarie to vnderſtand of my arriuall, who aduertiſed the Emperours Maieſty of it, and the firſt day of September, being a ſolemne feaſt among the Ruſſes, I came before the Emperors Maieſty, ſitting in his ſeat of honour, and hauing kiſſed his hand, & done the Queenes Maieſties commendations, & deliuered her Graces letters & preſent, he bad me to dinner, which I accepted, and had much honor done vnto me both then & all the time of my abode in Ruſſia.

The Priuileges granted by the Emperour of Ruſsia to the Engliſh merchants of that company: obteined the 22 of September Ann. 1567, by M. Anthony Ienkinſon.

ONe onely ſtrengthener of all things, and God without beginning, which was before the world, the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy ghoſt, our one lie God in Trinitie, and maker of all things, whom we worſhip in all things, and in all places, the doer and fulfiller of all things, which is the perfect knowledge giuer of the true God, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, with the comforter the Holy ſpirit, & thou which art the ſtrengthener of our faith, keepe vs together, and giue vs health to preſerue our kingdome, thou giuer of all good fruites, and helper of all Chriſtian beleeuers.

We great lord by the grace of God, and great duke Iohn Vaſiliwich, of all Ruſſia, Vollodimar, Moſco, Nouogrod, Caſſan, Aſtracan, Plaſco, Smollensko, Twire, Vgorie, Vateque, Bulgar, Sybir and others, Emperor, and great duke of Nouogrod of the lower land, of Chirnygo, Kaſſan, Pollotskie, Rotſcoue, Yereſlaue, Bellozer, Vdar, Obdar, Condine, and lord of many other lands, and of all the North parts, commander and lord of Liffe land.

Whereas our ſiſter Queene Elizabeth, by the grace of God, Queene of Engiland, France and Ireland, hath written to vs her letters, that we would grant her merchants, William Gerrard, William Cheſter, Rowland Heyward, Lawrence Huſſie, John March, Anthony Ienkinſon, William
